Nun means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

She knows means: either she knows by herself or others tell her or she³ tells (her).

Has fallen into a matter involving defeat means: of the eight offences involving defeat⁴ (she) has fallen into a certain offence involving defeat.

Should neither herself⁵ reprove her means: should neither herself reprimand her.

Nor should speak to a group means: nor should speak to other nuns.

3.167 ¹ avasaṭā. See Old Commentary, below. Critical Pali Dictionary gives "having entered, having arrived"; Pali-English Dictionary "withdrawn, gone away, one who has left a community and, gone over to another sect." ² vajjapaṭicchādikā, not explained in the Old Commentary. Vin-a 903 says it is merely the name of this Pārājika offence. Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 64. ³ I.e., the nun who has committed the Pārājika offence, Vin-a 903. Cf. Vin 3.265 = BD 2.161. ⁴ Vin-a 903 says, a certain one of the four in common with monks and of the four not in common with monks. The nuns had to observe the Pārājika of the Bhikkhu-Pātimokkha, as well as their own. ⁵ attanā ... sayam.

But when she may be remaining or deceased means: Remaining means she is called remaining in her own characteristic.¹ Deceased means she is called one who has passed away. Expelled means she herself comes to be leaving the Order or she is expelled by others. Withdrawn means she is called one who has gone over to the fold of a sect.²

Should afterwards speak thus: ‘Ladies, before I knew this nun, she was a sister like this and like that,’ and should neither herself reprove her means: should neither herself reprimand her; nor speak to a group means: nor should speak to other nuns.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Becomes one who is defeated means: as a withered leaf freed from the stalk cannot become green again,³ so a nun, knowing that a nun has fallen into a matter involving defeat (and) thinking, ‘I will neither myself reprove her, nor speak to a group,’ in throwing off the responsibility,⁴ becomes one who is not a recluse, not a daughter of the Sakyans; therefore she is called, she becomes one who is defeated.

Is not in communion means: communion ... is therefore called not in communion.

There is no offence if she does not speak, thinking ‘There will come to be quarrel or dispute or strife or contention for the Order’; if she does not speak, thinking ‘There will come to be a schism in the Order or dissension in the Order’⁵; if she does not speak, thinking ‘This one, harsh, rough, will bring⁶ danger to life or danger to the Brahma-life if she does not speak not seeing other suitable nuns; if she does not speak (though) not desiring to conceal; if she does not speaking, thinking: 'It will be evident from her own action'; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

¹ ñhitā nāma salinṅe ñhitā vuccati. ² titthāyatanam saṅkantā. Cf. Vin 1.60, Vin 1.69, referring to one who formerly a member of another sect, titthiya, has gone back to it; Vin 2.279, where it is laid down that nuns who have joined the titthiyas, coming back to the Order of nuns, are not to be ordained again. Titthāyatana occurs at MN i.483, AN i.173, Ds 381, Ds 1003 See Buddhist Psychological Ethics, 2nd. edition p.93, n. 9, and LEDI SAYADAW, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1913, p.117. ³ Cf. Vin 1.96, Vin 3.47. ⁴ Cf. BD 1.82. ⁵ = Vin 4.37, Vin 4.128, Vin 4.153. ⁶ karissati, literally will do or make.

Told is the Second Offence involving Defeat in the Nuns' Analysis

¹ Cf. Vin 4.128 = above, BD 3.9.

NUNS' DEFEAT (PĀRĀJIKĀ) 7

¹... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā imitated the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer,² and who was suspended by a complete Order.³ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā imitate the monk ... suspended by a complete Order?” ... “It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā imitate the monk ... suspended by a complete Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should imitate him—a monk suspended by a complete Order, one who is disrespectful towards, who does not make amends towards,⁴ one who is unfriendly towards⁵ the rule,⁶ the discipline, the teacher's instruction—that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: ‘Lady, this monk, suspended by a complete Order, is disrespectful towards, he does not make amends towards, he is unfriendly towards the rule, the discipline, the teacher's instruction. Do not imitate this monk, lady.’ And if this

¹ Note by Sujato: Pārājika 3 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² See Monks' Bu-Pc 68, Bu-Pc 69. ³ See Monks' Bu-Pc 69. ⁴ apaṭikāra. Cf. Vin 1.97, appaṭikamma and paṭikaroti used with āpatti, an offence. Also AN ii.241ff., yathādhammaṃ paṭikarissati, he (or she) will make amends according to the rule, for having fallen into a pārājika, saṅghādisesa, pācittiya or pāṭidesaniya(ka) offence (dhamma). Paṭikaroti is also “to confess.” ⁵ akatasahāya. Critical Pali Dictionary's “who has not taken an advocate” cannot be accepted here. ⁶ dhamma.

3.170 nun, being spoken to thus by these nuns, should persist as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to the third time for giving up this (course). If, being admonished up to the third time, she should give it up, that is good. But if she should not give it up, she also becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion, she is an imitator of one who is suspended.”¹ j7.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Complete Order means: belonging to the same communion, staying within the same boundary.²

Suspended means: suspended for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up an offence.³

Towards the rule, the discipline means: towards whatever is the rule, whatever is the discipline.⁴

Towards the teacher's instruction means: towards the conqueror's instruction, the enlightened one's instruction.⁵

Disrespectful means: he does not heed an Order or a group or an individual or a (formal) act.

Does not make amends towards means: he is suspended, not restored.⁶

4.219 Unfriendly towards means: monks belonging to the same communion are called friends. He who is not together with these is therefore called unfriendly.

Should imitate him means: if he becomes one of such views, of such indulgence, of such pleasures, she too becomes one of those views, of that indulgence, of those pleasures.

That nun means: whatever nun is an imitator of one who is suspended.

3.171 By the nuns⁷ means: by other nuns: these see, these hear; she should be told by these saying: ‘Lady, this monk, suspended by a complete Order, ... do not imitate this monk, lady.' And a second time she should be told ... And a third time she should be told ... If she gives it up, that is good; if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having heard, they do not speak, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun, having been pulled into the midst of the Order, should be told: 'Lady, this monk, suspended by a complete Order, ... do not imitate this monk, lady.' And a second time ... And a third time she should be told ... If she gives it up, that is good; if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ As in Monks' Bu-Pc 68, this is more like Saṅghādisesa method and material than Pārājika. ² = above, BD 3.65, below, BD 3.193, and Vin 3.173. ³ = below, BD 3.193.

⁴ = below, BD 3.193. ⁵ = below, BD 3.193. ⁶ = above, BD 3.28, in definition of akaṭānudhamma, “has not acted according to the rule.” ⁷ Cf. Vin 3.178f., Vin 3.185.

That nun should be admonished. And thus, monks, should she be admonished: the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so imitated a monk suspended by a complete Order, one who is disrespectful towards, who does not make amends towards, who is unfriendly towards the rule, the discipline, the teacher's instruction. She does not give up this course. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order admonish the nun so and so in order that she may give up this course. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so ... She does not give up this course. The Order admonishes the nun so and so in order that she may give up this course. If the admonishing of the nun so and so in order that she may give up this course is pleasing to the ladies, let them be silent; if it is not pleasing, then you should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The nun so and so is admonished by the Order for giving up this course. It is pleasing to the Order ... So do I understand this.'

As a result of the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing; as a result of two proclamations there are grave offences; at the end of the proclamations, there is an offence involving defeat.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

She becomes one who is defeated means: as a flat stone broken in half cannot be put together again,¹ so a nun, being admonished up to the third time, not giving it up, becomes one who is not a (true) recluse, not a daughter of the Sakyans; therefore she is called she becomes one who is defeated.

¹ Cf. Vin 1.97, Vin 3.74.

Not in communion means: communion ... is therefore called not in communion.

j7.2.2
If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence involving defeat. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence involving defeat. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence involving defeat. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

j7.2.3
There is no offence if she is not admonished; if she gives it up, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

Told is the Third Offence involving Defeat

¹ Cf. Vin 3.174, Vin 3.177, Vin 3.179, Vin 3.186; Vin 4.136, where last clause of Bi-Pj 7.2.2 ends anāpatti instead of, as on these other occasions, āpatti dukkaṭassa. ² Cf. Vin 3.174, Vin 3.177, Vin 3.179, Vin 3.186; Vin 4.136, where last clause of Bi-Pj 7.2.2 ends anāpatti instead of, as on these other occasions, āpatti dukkaṭassa.

NUNS' DEFEAT (PĀRĀJIKĀ) 8

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns, filled with desire, for the sake of following what was verily not the rule,² consented to taking hold of the hand of a male person who was filled with desire, and they consented to taking hold of the edge of (his) outer robe, and they stood and they talked and they went to a rendezvous and they consented to a man's approaching (them) and they entered into a covered place and they disposed the body for such a purpose.³ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the group of six nuns, filled with desire, for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, consent to ... and stand and talk and go to a rendezvous ... and enter ... and dispose ...?” “It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: “Monks, how can the group of six nuns ... consent to ... dispose the body for such a purpose? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, filled with desire, for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, should consent to taking hold of the hand of a male person who is filled with desire or should consent to taking hold of the edge of (his) outer cloak or should stand or should talk or should go to a rendezvous or should consent to a man's approaching (her) or should enter into a covered place or should dispose the body for such a purpose, she also becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion, she is a doer of eight things."¹

¹ Note by Sujato: Pārājika 4 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² asaddhamma—i.e., Bu-Pj 1. Vin-a 904 calls asaddhamma “physical contact, not sexual intercourse.” Not explained in Old Commentary. ³ kāyam pi tadatthāya upasamharanti.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Filled with desire means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.²

Filled with desire means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.³

A male person means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal; he is learned, competent to come into physical contact.⁴

Should consent to taking hold of the hand means: hand means, going up from the tip of the nail as far as the elbow.⁵ If for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she consents to taking hold below the collarbone, above the circles of the knees, there is a grave offence.

Or should consent to taking hold of the edge of (his) outer cloak means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she consents to take hold of what he is clothed in⁶ or of what he has put on,⁷ there is a grave offence.

Or should stand means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she stands within the reach of a man's hand, there is a grave offence.

Or should talk means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she talks standing within the reach of a man's hand, there is a grave offence.

Or should go to a rendezvous means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she, being told by a man, 'Come to such and such a place,' goes (there), for every step there is an offence of wrong-doing. In merely approaching the reach of a man's hand, there is a grave offence.

¹ aṭṭhavattukā, not explained in the Old Commentary, but it means the eight actions here referred to. ² = above, BD 3.161. ³ = above, BD 3.161. ⁴ = above, BD 3.161.

⁵ = Vin 3.121 (BD 1.203). ⁶ nivattha, referring to his inner robe. ⁷ pāruta, referring to his upper robe and outer cloak.

Or should consent to a man's approaching means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she consents to a man's approaching, there is an offence of wrong-doing. In merely approaching a reach of his hand, there is a grave offence.

Or should enter into a covered place means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, in merely entering any concealed place whatever, there is a grave offence.

Or should dispose the body for such a purpose means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, standing within the reach of a man's hand, she disposes the body, there is a grave offence.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

She becomes one who is defeated means: as a palmyra tree cut off at the crown cannot become one for new growth,¹ so a nun, completing² the eight courses,³ becomes one who is not a (true) recluse, not a daughter of the Sakyans; therefore she is called she becomes one who is defeated.

Not in communion means: communion ... is therefore called not in communion.

There is no offence if it is not intentional; if she is not thinking; if she does not know; if she does not consent: if she is mad, her mind unhinged, afflicted with pain, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Told is the Fourth Offence involving Defeat

Recited, ladies, are the eight offences⁴ involving defeat; a nun having fallen into one or other of these does not receive communion together with the nuns; as before, so after, she becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion. Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.¹

¹ = Vin 1.97, Vin 3.92. ² paripūrentī, accomplishing. ³ vatthu, mode or course—i.e., the eight above specified. ⁴ According to Vin-a 906, four laid down for monks which are also to be followed by nuns, and these (above) four for nuns only; thus eight Pārājika rules are recited for the ladies at the joint recital the Pātimokkha. See BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxii.

Told is the Portion on Defeat

4.223

¹ Cf. Vin 3.109 = BD 1.190.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

1

These seventeen¹ things, venerable ones, entailing formal meetings of the Order, come for exposition.

At one time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain lay-follower, having given a store-room² to an Order of nuns, passed away. He had two sons, one of no faith, not believing,³ the other with faith, believing. Then he of no faith, not believing, spoke thus to him with faith, believing: "The store-room is ours, let us deal it out."⁴ When he had spoken thus, the one with faith, believing, spoke thus to him of no faith, not believing: "Do not, sir, speak thus; it was given to the Order of nuns by our father." And a second time he of no faith, not believing, spoke thus to him with faith, believing: "The storeroom is ours, let us deal it out." Then the one with faith, believing, spoke thus to him of no faith, not believing: "Do not, sir, speak thus; it was given to the Order of nuns by our father." And a third time he of no faith ... "... let us deal it out." Then the one with faith, believing, thinking, "If it became mine, I also would give it to an Order of nuns," spoke thus to the one of no faith, not believing: "Let us deal it out." Then that store-room being dealt

¹ Ten are given in this section; but seven are the same as those already given in the Saṅghādisesas for monks; see below, BD 3.212, n. 1, and BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxiii.

² uddosita = bhaṇḍasālā (Vin-a 906). Uddosita is sometimes a stable; cf. Vin 3.200, and Vinaya Texts iii.363, n. 2. At Vin 2.278 uddosita is "allowed," a lay-follower again being recorded to give one to an Order of nuns. ³ appasanna, or not pleased (with the master's teaching). ⁴ bhājāma; Sinhalese edition reads bhājema.

3.178 out by these, fell to¹ him of no faith, not believing. Then the one of no faith, not believing, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: “You must depart, ladies, the store-room is ours.” When he had spoken thus, the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that man:

“Do not, sir, speak thus; the store-room was given to the Order of nuns by your father.”

Saying: “Was it given² (or) not given?” they asked the chief ministers of justice. The chief ministers spoke thus:

4.224 “Who knows, ladies, if it was given to the Order of nuns?” When they had spoken thus, the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to these chief ministers:

“But, masters, was not the gift seen or heard of by you as it was being given, eye-witnesses having been arranged?” Then the chief ministers, saying: “What the lady says is true,” made over the store-room to the Order of nuns. Then that man, defeated, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

3.179 “These shaven-headed (women) are not (true) recluses, they are strumpets.³ How can they have the store-room taken away from us?” The nun Thullanandā told this matter to the chief ministers. The chief ministers had that man punished.⁴ Then that man, punished,⁵ having had a sleeping-place made for Naked Ascetics not far from the nunnery, instigated the Naked Ascetics, saying: “Talk down⁶ these nuns.” The nun Thullanandā told this matter to the chief ministers. The chief ministers had that man fettered. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns have a store-room taken away (from him) and secondly have him punished and thirdly have him fettered? Now they will have him killed.”

Nuns heard these people as they ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Thullanandā be one who speaks in envy?”⁷ Then these nuns told this matter to the monks ...

¹ pāpuruṇāti, to reach, attain, arrive at, to obtain to. ² Square brackets in text, but Sinhalese edition reads dinno na dinno. ³ Cf. below, BD 3.257, BD 3.275. The word translated as “strumpets” is bandhakiniyo; cf. Ja 5.425. ⁴ daṇḍāpesum, perhaps beaten with a stick. ⁵ daṇḍika. ⁶ accāvadatha. Vin-a 906 says atikkamitvā vadatha, akkosatha, having surpassed them, talk, swear at them. ⁷ ussayavādikā.

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā is one who speaks in envy?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā be one who speaks in envy? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should be one who speaks in envy concerning a householder or a householder’s sons (or brothers¹) or a slave or a workman² and even concerning a wanderer who is a recluse,³ that nun has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once,⁴ entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”⁵

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

One who speaks in envy means: she is called a bringer of law-suits.⁶

Householder means: he who lives in a house.⁷

Householder’s sons (or brothers) means: whoever are sons and brothers.⁸

Slave means: born within, bought for money, taken in a raid.⁹

Workman¹⁰ means: a hireling, a worker.¹¹

Wanderer who is a recluse means: setting aside monk and nun and probationer and novice and female novice, he who is endowed with (the status of) wanderer.¹²

¹ See Old Commentary below. ² kammakāra, or servant. ³ samaṇaparibbājaka.

⁴ paṭhamāpattikaṃ, which in Bi-Ss 1–Bi-Ss 6 is in opposition to yāvataṭṭhāyaka, that which is not an offence until a nun has been admonished up to the third time (see Bu-Ss 7–Bu-Ss 10). Cf. Vin 3.186 (=BD 1.328). ⁵ nissāraṇiyaṃ saṅghādisesaṃ; cf. the similar construction, nissaggiyaṃ pācittiyaṃ, and see BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxvi.

⁶ aṭṭakārikā, a maker of law-suits, cases, causes. ⁷ Cf. BD 2.47, BD 2.55, BD 2.148.

⁸ yo koci puttabhātaro. ⁹ =MN-a 3.8. These three are explained at Vin-a 361; four “slaves” mentioned at Mnd 11; cf. DN-a 1.168, DN-a 1.300. The last two, dhanakkīta and karamarānīta (feminine) come into the description of the ten kinds of wife at Vin 3.140. ¹⁰ Cf. MN-a 3.8, DN-a 300. ¹¹ āhataka, “one who is beaten,” so Pali-English Dictionary. ¹² Cf. Vin 4.92, Vin 4.285.

If she thinks, “I will bring a law-suit,” or looks about for a companion or goes herself,¹ there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she announces it to one (person), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she announces it to a second, there is a grave offence. At the end of the law-suit, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

An offence at once means: she falls through transgression of a course,² not after admonition.³

Involving being sent away means: she is caused to be sent away from the Order.⁴

Offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order means: the Order inflicts the mānatta discipline on account of her offence, it sends back to the beginning, it rehabilitates; it is not several (nuns), it is not one nun, therefore it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. A synonym for this class of offence is (formal) act, therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.⁵

There is no offence if she goes being dragged along by people; if she asks for protection; if she explains without reference (to a particular person); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Vin 3.47 (= BD 1.76). Above it means, according to Vin-a 907, if she looks about for a witness or friend; and if standing where there is a nunnery, or alms-road, she thinks, “I will bring a law-suit,” going from there to the magistrates, there is an offence of wrong-doing for every step that she takes. ² saha vatthujjhācārā.

³ Cf. below, BD 3.203. ⁴ saṅghamhā nissāriyati, explained by Vin-a 908 as saṅghato nissāreti. The -sār- causative, “she is made or caused to be sent away.” See BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxvi. ⁵ Cf. Vin 3.112 (BD 1.196).

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

2

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time in Vesālī, the wife of a certain Licchavi came to be an adulteress. Then that Licchavi spoke thus to that woman: "Please desist, else will we do you harm." But being spoken to thus, she paid no heed. Now at that time a group of Licchavis were assembled in Vesālī on some business. Then that Licchavi spoke thus to those Licchavis: "Let the masters allow me power over one woman."¹

"What is her name?"

"My wife commits adultery, I will kill her."

"Take your right,"² they said. Then that woman heard: "My husband wants to kill me," and taking precious belongings, having gone to Sāvattthī, having approached members of other sects, she asked for the going forth.³ The members of other sects did not wish to let her go forth.⁴ Having approached nuns, she asked for the going forth. Neither did the nuns wish to let her go forth. Having approached the nun Thullanandā, having shown (her) the belongings, she asked for the going forth. The nun Thullanandā, having taken the belongings, let her go forth. Then that Licchavi, searching for that woman, having gone to Sāvattthī, seeing her gone forth among the nuns, approached King Pasenadi of Kosala; having approached, he spoke thus to King Pasenadi of Kosala:

"Sire, my wife, taking precious belongings, has reached Sāvattthī; let the king⁵ allow me power over her."

¹ ekaṃ me ayyo itthiṃ anujānātha. ² jānāhi. ³ pabbajjaraṃ yāci. ⁴ pabbājetuṃ.

⁵ devo

“Well now, good sir, having examined¹ (her), explain.”

“Sire, she was seen gone forth among the nuns.”

3.183 “If, good sir, she has gone forth among the nuns, there is nothing to do against her.² Well preached by the lord is dhamma; let her lead the Brahma-life for the utter ending of ill.”³

Then that Licchavi, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns let a woman thief go forth?”⁴

Nuns heard that Licchavi who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Thullanandā let a woman thief go forth?” Then these nuns told this matter to the monks ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā let a thief go forth?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: “Monks, how can the nun Thullanandā let a woman thief go forth? It is not monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

3.184 “Whatever nun should knowingly receive⁵ a woman thief who is found to merit death,⁶ without having obtained permission⁷ from a king or an Order or a group⁸ or a guild⁹ or a company,¹⁰ unless she is allowable,¹¹ that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order

¹ vicinitvā. ² na sā labbhā kiñci kāṭum, she is not a receiver of anything there is to do. ³ Cf. Vin 1.74-75. ⁴ The Licchavi appears to lose sight of his wife's original sin in his effort to recover the property. ⁵ vuṭṭhāpeti; cf. below, BD 3.361, and Introduction, p. xlvff. ⁶ vajjhā. ⁷ anapaloketvā, explained by anāpucchā, Old Commentary, below, and anāpucchitvā at Vin-a 910. ⁸ Vin-a 910 makes out that this means a group of wrestlers and so on. But, preceded by saṅgha, it might have the usual Vinaya meaning of a group (of two to four monks or nuns). On the other hand, it is followed by two words that have no religious significance, and which denote associations of people “in the world.” ⁹ pūga = dhammapūga, “a guild under dhamma” (?), Vin-a 910. Probably a guild governed by some rule or law. ¹⁰ seṇi, a corporation, company or guild of artisans or traders following the same business or dealing in the same articles. Vin-a 910 says here it is a seṇi of perfumers, of cloth merchants. Number given as eighteen at Ja 6.22. ¹¹ kappā.

involving being sent away.”

Bi-Ss 2

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood.

She knows means: either she knows by herself or others tell her or she tells her.

Woman thief¹ means: she who takes by means of theft (anything) having the value of five māsakas or more than five māsakas that has not been given—she is called a woman thief.

To merit death means: having done that for which she is condemned to death.

Found² means: she becomes known³ by other people, thinking, ‘This one merits death.’

Without having obtained permission means: not asking (for permission).⁴

King means: where a king governs,⁵ the king’s permission should be obtained.⁶

Order means: it is called an Order of nuns; the permission of the Order of nuns should be obtained.

Group means: where a group governs, the group’s permission should be obtained.

Company means: where a company governs, the company’s permission should be obtained.

Vin 4.2

Unless she is allowable means: having set aside one who is allowable. Allowable means: there are two who are allowable: either she who has gone forth among members of other sects, or she who has gone forth among other nuns.⁷

If she thinks, “I will receive one, unless she is allowable,” and looks about for a group or for a female teacher or for a bowl or for a robe or if she determines a boundary,⁸ there is an offence of wrong-

BD 3.18

¹ Here feminine = Vin 3.47 (masculine). ² viditā. ³ ñātā. ⁴ =below, BD 3.360.

⁵ anusāsati, to govern, rule, advise, give instruction. ⁶ rājā apaloketabbo, or “the king should be asked for permission. But in spite of this grammatical construction, I think the two words, apaloketi and āpucchati, should be differently rendered.

⁷ These may be ordained without asking for permission. ⁸ See Vin 1.106 for prescribed method of determining a boundary.

doing. As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of two proclamations, there are grave offences. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence involving a formal meeting of the Order for the female preceptor, an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the female teacher.¹

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

2.2.2

If she thinks that she is a thief when she is a thief (and) receives her, unless she is allowable, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is in doubt ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not a thief when she is a thief ... no offence. If she thinks that she is a thief when she is not a thief, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not a thief, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not a thief when she is not a thief, there is no offence.

2.2.3

There is no offence if she receives her, not knowing; if she receives one, she having obtained permission; if she receives one who is made allowable; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ With this passage, cf. above, BD 3.13, and below, BD 3.362.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

3

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,¹ having quarrelled with nuns, went to a family of (her) relations² in a village. Bhaddā Kāpilānī, not seeing that nun, asked the nuns, saying: "Where is so and so? She is not to be seen."

"Lady, she is not to be seen (because) she has quarrelled with nuns."

"My dears,³ a family of her relations are in such and such a village; having gone there, look for her."

The nuns, having gone there, having seen that nun, spoke thus: "Why did you, lady, come alone? We hope that you were not violated?"

"I was not violated, ladies," she said. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can a nun go among villages⁴ alone?"

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun went among villages alone?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun go among villages alone? It is not, monks,

¹ A pupil (or pupils) of hers mentioned also at Vin 4.268ff. Bhaddā Kāpilānī mentioned with Thullanandā at Vin 4.290, Vin 4.292. Her verses are at Thig.63–Thig.66. Thig-a 68–69 says that, having gone forth under Mahāpajāpati, she soon won arahanship. Called foremost of the nuns able to remember previous lives, AN i.25. N.B. that, although nuns address her as "lady," she otherwise lacks a descriptive title.

² Vism 91 distinguishes between nātikula (as above), a family of relatives, and upattḥākakula, a family of supporters. ³ amma. ⁴ gāmantaram, defined at Vin 4.63 = Vin 4.133.

for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

3.187 Whatever nun should go among villages alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

3.187 At that time two nuns were going along the high-road from Sāketa to Sāvathī. On the way there was a river to be crossed.¹ Then these nuns, having approached a boatman, spoke thus:

“Please, sir, take us across.”

Saying, “I am not able, ladies, to take both across at once,” he made one cross alone with him²; one who was across seduced the one who was across, one who was not across seduced the one who was not across. These, having met afterwards, asked (one another): “I hope that you, lady, were not violated?”

“I was violated, lady. But were you violated, lady?”

“I was violated, lady.” Then these nuns, having arrived at Sāvathī, told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying :

“How can a nun go to the other side of a river alone?” Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun went to the other side of a river alone?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can a nun go to the other side of a river alone? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

¹ Cf. Vin 4.65. ² eko ekam uttāresi. Cf. eko ekāya in the Aniyatas, Vin 3.187ff. meaning, the one (a monk) with the other (a woman); here meaning a man (eko) and a nun (ekam). They crossed alone together. In Monks' Bu-Pc 28 it is evidently thought safer to allow a nun to cross a river with a monk than to wait behind on the bank.

“Whatever nun should go among villages alone, or should go to the other side of a river alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

At that time several nuns, going to Sāvattthī through the country of Kosala, arrived in the evening at a certain village. A certain nun there was beautiful, good to look upon, charming. A certain man came to be in love with that nun on account of her appearance. Then that man, appointing a sleeping-place for those nuns, appointed a sleeping-place at one side for this nun. Then this nun, having realised, “This man is obsessed¹; if I come at night there will be trouble for me,”² not asking the nuns (for permission), having gone to a certain family, lay down in the sleeping-place. Then that man, having come during the night, searching for that nun, knocked against the nuns. The nuns, not seeing this nun, spoke thus: “Doubtless this nun has gone out together with the man.”

Then this nun, at the end of that night, approached those nuns. The nuns spoke thus to that nun: “Why did you, lady, go out together with the man?”

Saying: “Ladies, I did not go out together with the man,” she told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can a nun be away for a night alone ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun was away for a night alone? ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should go among villages alone, or should go to the other side of a river alone, or should be away for a night alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

¹ = Vin 4.94. ² = Vin 4.212.

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

At that time several nuns were going along the highroad to Sāvathī through the country of Kosala. A certain nun there, wanting to relieve herself, having stayed behind alone, went on afterwards. People, having seen that nun, seduced her. Then that nun approached those nuns. The nuns spoke thus to that nun: “Why did you, lady, stay behind alone? We hope that you were not violated?”

“I was violated, ladies.”

Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can a nun stay behind a group alone?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun stayed behind a group alone?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: “Monks, how can a nun stay behind a group alone? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not” (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should go among villages alone, or should go to the other side of a river alone, or should be away for a night alone, or should stay behind a group alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should go among villages alone means: in making the first foot cross¹ the enclosure of a village that is fenced in, there is a grave offence. In making the second foot cross, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.² In making the first foot cross the precincts of a village that is not fenced in, there is a grave offence. In making the second foot cross, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

¹ atikkāmentiyā. Atikkamati is to go beyond, to pass over. ² Cf. Vin 3.52.

Or should go to the other side of a river alone means: having covered up the three circles,¹ it is called a river wherever, as a nun is crossing over, the inner robe is made wet. In making the first foot cross over,² there is a grave offence. In making the second foot cross, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Or should be away for a night alone means: at sunrise, if leaving a hand's reach of a nun who is a companion, there is a grave offence. When she has left it, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Or should stay behind a group alone means: if she, in what is not a village, in what is jungle, is leaving the range³ of sight or the range of hearing of a nun who is a companion, there is a grave offence. When she has left it, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

There is no offence if the nun who is the companion has gone away or has left the Order or has passed away or has gone over to (another) side⁴; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.⁵

¹ I.e., the navel and the two knees. ² uttarantiyā. ³ upacāra, literally precincts; cf. Vin 4.93. ⁴ Cf. Vin 4.313 below, and Vin 1.60, where these four words occur. Of the last, pakkhasaṃkanta, Vinaya Texts i.178, n. 1 says, "Buddhaghosa can scarcely be right in explaining it by titthiyapakkhasaṃkanta." The commentarial explanation on the above passage is titthāyatānaṃ saṃkantā, gone over to members of another sect (Vin-a 913), a phrase which also occurs at Vin 4.217 (=above, BD 3.167). At the same time, I do not think that pakkha necessarily means "a (schismatic) faction," as translated at Vinaya Texts i.178, although it undoubtedly has this meaning at Vin 3.173, Vin 3.175. For it can also mean another side or part of the Order, one of its sub-divisions, and in such cases does not imply any hostility, schism or dissension. At Vin 1.307f., we hear of people giving water and robes to one and the same pakkha or to different pakkha. In the former case the pakkha is said to be the owner, in the latter the saṅgha. Had the pakkha been regarded as schismatic, it would hardly have been considered entitled to receive these gifts. ⁵ Cf. below, BD 3.353.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

4

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ the nun Caṇḍakālī² was one who made strife, who made quarrels, who made contention, who made brawls, who made disputes in the Order.³ The nun Thullanandā protested when a (formal) act was being carried out against her.⁴ At that time the nun Thullanandā went to a village on some business. Then the Order of nuns, thinking: "The nun Thullanandā has gone away," suspended⁵ the nun Caṇḍakālī for not seeing an offence. The nun Thullanandā having concluded that business in the village, returned again to Sāvattḥī. When the nun Thullanandā was coming, the nun Caṇḍakālī neither made ready a seat, nor put out⁶ water for washing her feet, a foot-stool,⁷ a foot-stand,⁸ nor having gone out to meet her did she take her bowl and robe, nor did she offer her drinking-water. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to the nun Caṇḍakālī:

"Why did you, lady, when I was coming, neither make ready a seat for me nor put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand, nor having gone out to meet me, take my howl and robe, nor offer me drinking-water?”

¹ Cf. Nuns' Bi-Pc 53 below. ² An obstreperous nun, mentioned at Vin 4.276, Vin 4.277, Vin 4.293, Vin 4.309, Vin 4.331, Vin 4.333. ³ Cf. Vin 4.12, Vin 4.150, Vin 4.309. At AN iii.252 it is said that five disadvantages are to be expected for such a monk—also probably for such a nun. ⁴ Cf. above, BD 3.58. ⁵ ukkipi. On ukkhitta, past participle of ukkipati, see above, BD 3.28, n. 4. ⁶ upanikkhipati, to lay down near, to store. ⁷ pādapīṭha. Vin-a 913 says a stool (ṭhapanaka) to put the washed feet on. ⁸ pādakathalika. According to Vin-a 913, "a stool to put the unwashed feet on"—i.e., probably another kind of foot-stool. Buddhaghosa on Kd 12.1.1 says that pādakathalika alternatively means a towel to rub the feet with. This word and the two preceding occur also at Vin 1.9, Vin 1.312; Vin 2.22, Vin 2.31; see Vinaya Texts i.92, n., Vinaya Texts ii.373, n. 5.

“Surely it is this, lady, that I am without a mistress¹ in regard to this.”

“But why are you, lady, without a mistress?”

“Lady, these nuns, saying of me, ‘She is without a mistress, she is not esteemed, there is no one who can answer for² her,’ suspended me for not seeing an offence.”

The nun Thullanandā, saying, “These are ignorant, these are inexperienced, they do not (even) know a (formal) act or the defect of a (formal) act³ or the failure of a (formal) act⁴ or the success of a (formal) act⁵; but we know a (formal) act and the defect of a (formal) act and the failure of a (formal) act and the success of a (formal) act, and we may make them carry out a (formal) act that was not carried out or we may find fault with⁶ a (formal) act that was carried out,” and having very quickly convened an Order of nuns, she restored⁷ the nun Caṇḍakalī. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā, without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings⁸ in accordance with the rule, the discipline, the teacher’s instruction,⁹ not having learnt the desire¹⁰ of a group, restore a nun suspended by a complete Order?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, without having obtained permission ... restored a nun suspended by a complete Order?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

¹ anāthā, or helpless, deserted, without a protector. ² pativattar. Word occurs also at SN i.222. ³ kammadosa. ⁴ kammavipatti. ⁵ kammasampatti. ⁶ kopeyyāma. Cf. above, BD 3.63, kopetukāma. ⁷ osāreti. Cf. Vin 4.137 = above, BD 3.28, q.v. and note. ⁸ kāraṣaṅgha. ⁹ Cf. Vin 4.126, Vin 4.152, Vin 4.218. ¹⁰ chanda, desire or partiality, as in the four agatis; consent of an absentee, as in Monks’ Bu-Pc 79, Bu-Pc 80.

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, without having obtained permission ... restore a nun suspended by a complete Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings in accordance with the rule, the discipline, the teacher’s instruction, not having learnt the group’s desire, should restore a nun suspended by a complete Order, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

54.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

4.232

Complete Order means: belonging to the same communion, staying within the same boundary.¹

Suspended means: suspended for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up an offence.²

In accordance with the rule, the discipline means: according to whatever is the rule, according to whatever is the discipline.³

(In accordance with) the teacher’s instruction means: in accordance with the conqueror’s instruction, the enlightened one’s instruction.⁴

Without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings means: not having asked (the permission) of the Order which carried out the (formal) act.

Not having learnt⁵ the desire means: not having known the desire of a group.

If she thinks, “I will restore (her),” (and) looks about for a group or determines a boundary, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of two proclamations, there are grave offences. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

3.194

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.65, BD 3.170, and Vin 3.173. ² Cf. above, BD 3.170. ³ Cf. above, BD 3.170. ⁴ Cf. above, BD 3.170. ⁵ anaññāya ... ajānitvā.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) restores her, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) restores her, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if, having obtained permission from, the Order which carried out the (formal) act, she restores (her); if she restores (her) having known that it is the desire of the group; if she restores one who is behaving so as to get rid of the fault¹; if she restores (her), there being no Order which carried out the (formal) act; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ vatte vattantiṃ osāreti, one taking steps about, proceeding in regard to, what has been done.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

5

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Sundarīnanda was beautiful, good to look upon, charming.¹ People, having seen the nun Sundarīnanda in the refectory, were filled with desire (and) gave the very best meals to the nun Sundarīnanda² who was filled with desire. The nun Sundarīnanda ate as much as she pleased; other nuns did not obtain as much as expected. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Sundarīnanda, filled with desire, having accepted with her own hand from the hand of a man who is filled with desire, solid food, soft food, eat it, partake of it?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Sundarīnanda, filled with desire ... ate it, partook of it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the nun Sundarīnanda, filled with desire, having accepted with her own hand ... solid food or soft food, eat it, partake of it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, filled with desire, having accepted with her own hand from the hand of a man who is filled with desire, solid food or soft food, should eat it or partake of it, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

¹ Cf. Vin 4.211 (=above, BD 3.156), Vin 4.234 (=below, BD 3.198). ² To here from beginning = Bi-Ss 6.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Filled with desire¹ means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.

Filled with desire² means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal³; he is learned, competent to be infatuated.

Solid food means: having set aside the five (kinds of) meals⁴ (and) water for cleansing the teeth,⁵ the rest is called solid food.

Soft food means: the five kinds (of) meals: conjei, barley-meal, food made with flour, fish, meat.⁶

If, thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” she accepts, there is a grave offence. For every mouthful there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If one is filled with desire (and) she accepts, thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is a grave offence. If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If both are filled with desire (and) thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” she accepts from the hand of a yakkha or of a departed one or of a eunuch or of an animal in human form, there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful there is a grave offence. If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ = above, BD 3.161. ² = above, BD 3.161. ³ = above, BD 3.161. ⁴ Cf. Vin 4.83. ⁵ See Monks' Bu-Pc 40. ⁶ = Vin 4.83.

3.197
4.234
5.2.3

If one is filled with desire (and) she accepts, thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if neither comes to be filled with desire; if she accepts, knowing, “He is not filled with desire”; if he is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

6

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Sundarīnandā was beautiful, good to look upon, charming. People, having seen the nun Sundarīnandā in the refectory, were filled with desire (and) gave the very best meals to the nun Sundarīnandā.¹ The nun Sundarīnandā, being scrupulous, did not accept. The nun immediately following her² spoke thus to the nun Sundarīnandā: "Why do you, lady, not accept?"

"He is filled with desire, lady."

"But are you, lady, filled with desire?"

"I am not filled with desire."

"What can this man,³ whether he is filled with desire or not filled with desire, do to you, lady, since you are not filled with desire? Please, lady, eat or partake of the solid food or the soft food which this man is giving to you, you having accepted it with your own hand."

Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun speak thus: 'What can this man ... Please, lady, eat or partake of ... having accepted it with your own hand'?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun spoke thus: 'What can this man ... Please, lady, eat or partake of ... having accepted it with your own hand'?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

¹ = opening of Bi-Ss 5, above. ² I.e., in the procession for alms. ³ purisapuggala, as at Vin 4.212.

“How, monks, can a nun speak thus: ‘What can this man ... Please, lady, eat or partake of ... having accepted it with your own hand’? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should speak thus: ‘What can this man, whether he is filled with desire or not filled with desire, do to you, lady, since you are not filled with desire? Please, lady, eat or partake of the solid food or the soft food which this man is giving to you, you having accepted it with your own hand,’ that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should speak thus: ‘What can this man ... with your own hand’ (and) instigates¹ her, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, at her bidding she accepts, thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is a grave offence. At the end of the meal, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

If she instigates her, saying: “Accept water for cleansing the teeth,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, at her bidding she accepts, thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If one is filled with desire (and) she instigates her saying: “Eat or partake of solid food or soft food from the hand of a yakkha or of a departed one or of a eunuch or of an animal in human form,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, at her bidding she accepts, thinking: “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of wrong-doing. At the end of the meal, there is a grave offence. If she instigates her, saying: "Accept water for cleansing the teeth," there is an offence of wrong-doing. If at her bidding she accepts, thinking: "I will eat, I will partake of," there is an offence of wrong-doing,

¹ uyyojeti.

There is no offence if she instigates her knowing that he is not filled with desire; if she instigates her, thinking: "Being angry, she does not accept"; if she instigates her, thinking: "She does not accept out of compassion for a family"; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

10

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakālī, having quarrelled with nuns,² angry, displeased, spoke thus: "I repudiate³ the enlightened one, I repudiate dhamma, I repudiate the Order, I repudiate the training. What indeed are these recluses who are recluses, daughters of the Sakyans? For there are other recluses, conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training; I will lead the Brahma-life among these." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Caṇḍakālī, a nun, angry, displeased, speak thus: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these?'" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakālī, angry, displeased, spoke thus: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these?'"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakālī, angry, displeased, speak thus: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these'? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, angry, displeased, should speak thus: 'I repudiate the enlightened one ... I repudiate the training. What indeed are these recluses who are recluses, daughters of the Sakyans? For there are other recluses, conscientious, scrupulous, 'desirous of training; I will lead the Brahma-life among these,' that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Do not, lady, angry, displeased, speak thus: "I repudiate the enlightened one ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these." Be satisfied, lady, dhamma is well preached, lead the Brahma-life for the utter ending of ill.' And if that nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, persists as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to a third time¹ for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to a third time, she should give it up, that is good. If she should not give it up, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition),² entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away."

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 7 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² See Bi-Ss 4, where she is again shown as quarrelsome. ³ paccācikkhati, intensive of paccakkhāti, on which see BD 1.40, n. 2.

BD 3.2

Bi-Ss 10

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Angry, displeased means: dissatisfied, the mind worsened, stubborn.³

Should speak thus means: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these.'

That nun means: whatever nun speaks thus.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these⁴: "Do not, lady, angry, displeased ... for the utter ending of ill." And a second time she should be told, and a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. If she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having heard, they do not speak, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And that nun, having been pulled into the midst of the Order, should be told: "Do not, lady, angry, displeased, speak thus: 'I repudiate the enlightened one, I repudiate, dhamma, I repudiate the Order, I repudiate the training ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these.' Be satisfied, lady, ... lead the Brahma-life for the utter ending of ill." And a second time she should be told, and a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. If she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun should be admonished. And thus, monks should she be admonished: the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: “Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so, angry, displeased, spoke thus: ‘I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these.’ She does not give up this course. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order admonish the nun so and so for giving up this course. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so ... She does not give up this course. The Order admonishes the nun so and so for the giving up of this course. If the admonition of the mm so and so for the giving up of this course is pleasing to the ladies, let them be silent. If it is not pleasing, then you should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The nun so and so is admonished by the Order for the giving up of this course. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.”

¹ yāvataṭṭiyāṃ. ² yāvataṭṭiyakāṃ. Cf. BD 1.328, n. 2. ³ = Vin 3.255 (BD 2.140), Vin 4.146 (above, BD 3.47), Vin 4.238 (below, BD 3.206); cf. Vin 3.163 (BD 1.281). ⁴ Cf. Vin 3.178, Vin 3.185 (BD 1.312, BD 1.326).

As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing; as a result of two proclamations, there are grave offences. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is committing an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the offence of wrong-doing according to the motion and the grave offences according to the two proclamations, subside.¹

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Up to the third time means: she falls on the third admonition, not through transgression of a course.²

Involving being sent away means: she is caused to be sent away by the Order.

Offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

¹ Cf. BD 1.302, BD 1.307, BD 1.313, BD 1.327. ² Cf. above, BD 3.180.

There is no offence if she is not admonished, if she gives it up; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

Bi-5510

¹ Cf. BD 1.302, BD 1.307, BD 1.313, BD 1.327. ² Cf. BD 1.302, BD 1.307, BD 1.313, BD 1.327.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

11

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakālī,² overthrown³ in some legal question, angry, displeased, spoke thus: "The nuns are following a wrong course through desire and the nuns are following a wrong course through hatred and the nuns are following a wrong course through stupidity and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady, the nun Caṇḍakālī ... displeased, speak thus: '... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear'?" ...

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakālī, ... displeased, speak thus: '... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear'? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, overthrown in some legal question, angry and displeased, should speak thus: 'The nuns are following a wrong course through desire ... the nuns are following a wrong course through fear,' that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Do not, lady, overthrown in some legal question, angry, displeased, speak thus: "The nuns are following a wrong course through desire ... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear."

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 8 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² Cf. Bi-Ss 4, Bi-Ss 10.

³ paccākatā.

The lady herself¹ may go (wrong)² from desire, and she may go (wrong) from hatred and she may go (wrong) from stupidity and she may go (wrong) from fear.’ And if this nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, persists as before, she should be admonished up to a third time for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to a third time, she should give it up, that is good. If she should not give it up, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition), entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

BD 3.2

Bi-Ss 11

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

In some legal question means: legal question means, there are four (kinds of) legal questions: legal questions arising out of disputes legal questions arising out of censure, legal questions arising out of transgressions, legal questions arising out of obligations.³

Overthrown means: she is called defeated.⁴

Angry, displeased means: dissatisfied, the mind worsened, stubborn.⁵

Should speak thus means: saying, “The nuns are following a wrong course through desire ... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear.”

That nun means: whatever nun speaks thus.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these: “Do not, lady, overthrown ... and she may go (wrong) from fear.” And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told ... (see Bi-Ss 10.2.1–Bi-Ss 10.2.3. Instead of Do not, lady, angry, etc., read Do not, lady, overthrown, etc.; instead of this nun so and so, angry, etc., read this nun so and so, overthrown, etc.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin 4.2

¹ kho. ² gaccheyya. ³ = Vin 3.164 (BD 1.282), BD 4.126 (=above, BD 3.6). ⁴ parājitā.

⁵ See BD 3.47 above, for references.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

12

¹ ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns who were pupils of the nun Thullanandā lived in company,² they were of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living,³ vexing⁴ the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins.⁵ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns live in company ... concealing one another's sins?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns live in company ... concealing one another's sins?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns live in company ... concealing one another's sins? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"In case nuns live in company, of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins, those nuns should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Sisters are living in company ... concealing one another's sins. Let the ladies desist¹; the Order praises this detachment in sisters.' But if these nuns, being spoken to thus by the nuns, should persist as before, these nuns should be admonished by the nuns up to the third time for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to the third time they should give it up, that is good. If they should not give it up, these nuns also have fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition), entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away."

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 9 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² saṃsaṭṭhā viharati. Cf. Vin 4.293, saṃsaṭṭhā viharati gahapatināpi gahapatiputtēna pi, with householders and householders' sons; Vin 4.333, purisaṃsaṭṭhā kumārakaṃsaṭṭhā, in the company of men and youths; Vin 2.4, gihisaṃsaṭṭho, in the company of, or in association with, householders. Vin-a 915 says missībhūtā, become mixed up with (the world), and that in regard to the body they were pounding and cooking for householders, perfuming and adorning themselves, using garlands and chains, and in regard to their speech they were acting as go-betweens, carrying messages and replies. Saṃsaṭṭhā viharati occurs at AN iii.109. ³ pāpasiloka. ⁴ vihesikā. Cf. vihesā, vexation, at BD 3.41 above; and vihesaka, vexing, at Vin 4.36 (= BD 2.231f.), where it means keeping silence. ⁵ vajja. Cf. Vin 3.171 (= BD 1.297).

BD 3.2

Bi-Ss 11

Vin 4.2

BD 3.2

In case nuns means: they are called ordained.

Are living in company means: in company means that they are living in company unbecomingly in regard to body and speech.

Of evil habits means: they are possessed of depraved habits.

Of evil report means: they are notorious² because of (their)³ bad reputation.⁴

Of evil ways of living means: they lead life by means of an evil, wrong mode of livelihood.

Vexing the Order of nuns means: they protest when a (formal) act is being carried out against each other.

Concealing one another's sins means: they reciprocally conceal a sin.

Those nuns means: those nuns who live in company.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; they should be told by these: "Sisters are living in company ... detachment in sisters." And a second time they should be told. And a third time they should be told ... (see Bi-Ss 10.2.1. Instead of Do not, ladies, angry, etc., read Sisters are living in company, etc.; instead of that nun) ... does not give up that course read those nuns ... do not give up that course; instead of this nun so and so read these nuns so and so and so and so are living in company ... they do not give up that course ... the nuns so and so and so and so should be admonished ... are admonished for giving up that course ... If they are committing an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the offence of wrong-doing according to the motion and the grave offences according to the two proclamations, subside.

¹ viviccāti, separate themselves, be alone. Cf. below, BD 3.210. ² abbhuggatā, literally spread abroad. ³ Vin-a 915 says "the bad reputation of these, etāsāṃ, means 'evil report.' ⁴ pāpaka kittisadda.

Two or three should be admonished together. More than that should not be admonished together.

These nuns also means: they are so called in reference to the former.

Up to the third time means: they fall on the third admonition, not through transgression of a course.

Involving being sent away means: they are caused to be sent away¹ from the Order, Offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

12.2.2

If they think that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) do not give up ... (see Bi-Ss 10.2.2) ... If they think that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

12.2.3

There is no offence if they are not admonished; if they give it up; if they are mad, if they are the first wrong-doers.

¹ Oldenberg, Vin 4.366, says that the correct reading is nissāriyanti, as against text's nissāriyati.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA)

13

¹ ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, admonished by the Order, spoke thus to the nuns: "Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise. For there are in the Order other nuns of such habits, of such repute, of such ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins²; the Order does not say anything to these. It is to you yourselves that the Order, out of disrespect, out of contempt, out of impatience,³ in gossiping, on poor evidence,⁴ says this: 'Sisters are living in company, of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins. Let the ladies desist; the Order praises this detachment in sisters.'" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, admonished by the Order, speak thus to nuns: 'Ladies, live you as though in company ... detachment in sisters' ..."

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, admonished by the Order, spoke thus to nuns: 'Ladies, live you ... detachment in sisters'?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, admonished by the Order,

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 10 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² See Bi-Ss 12. ³ Five disadvantages of being "impatient" given at AN iii.254. ⁴ dubbalyatā. See Journal of the Pali Text Society 1886, p.129.

3.211 speak thus to nuns:’ Ladies, live you ... praises this detachment in sisters?’ It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should speak thus: ‘Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise. For there are in the Order other nuns of such habits, of such repute, of such ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another’s sins; the Order does not say anything to these. It is to you yourselves that the Order, out of disrespect, out of contempt, out of impatience, in gossiping, on poor evidence, says this: “Sisters are living in company, of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another’s sins. Let the ladies desist, the Order praises this detachment in sisters,”’ — that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: ‘Do not, lady, speak thus: “Sisters are living in company ... detachment in sisters.”’ And if that nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, should persist as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to a third time for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to a third time, she should give it up, that is good. If she should not give it up, this nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition), entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

13.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should speak thus means: ‘Ladies, live you as though in company ... It is to you yourselves that the Order, out of disrespect means: out of disesteem.

Out of contempt¹ means: out of disdain.

Out of impatience means: out of ill-temper.²

In gossiping means: made into talk.³

On poor evidence means: not having partisans.⁴

4.242 ¹ paribhavana ... pāribhavyatā. ² kopena. ³ vibhassikatā. ⁴ Text reads apakkhatā; Sinhalese edition apakkhatā = a + pakkha + tā, being without a faction, a side, thus without partisans (as Critical Pali Dictionary).

Says this means: it says, ‘Sisters are living in company ... detachment in sisters.’

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these: “Do not, lady, speak thus: ‘Ladies, live you as though in company ... detachment in sisters.’” And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told ... (see Bi-Ss 10.2.1–Bi-Ss 10.2.3). Instead of do not, lady, angry, etc. read do not, lady, speak thus, etc. Read: Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so, admonished by the Order, speaks thus to the nuns: ‘Ladies, live you as though in company,’ etc.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Recited, ladies, are the seventeen matters that are offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order—nine which are offences at once, eight¹ on the third (admonition). A nun having fallen into one or other of these shall spend a fortnight in mānatta discipline² before both Orders. If, when the nun has performed the mānatta discipline, the Order of nuns should number twenty, then that nun may be rehabilitated. But if the Order of nuns, numbering less than twenty even by one, should rehabilitate that nun, that nun is not rehabilitated, and those nuns are blameworthy; this is the proper course there. Concerning this, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.

Told are the Seventeen

¹ Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 915 brings the ten Saṅghādisesas here set out up to seventeen by saying that, besides these six that are offences at once, there are also three that are included in the Mahāvibhaṅga (Bu-Ss 5, Bu-Ss 8, Bu-Ss 9); and besides these four that are offences at the third admonition, there are also four that are included in the Mahāvibhaṅga (Bu-Ss 10, Bu-Ss 11, Bu-Ss 12, Bu-Ss 13). The nuns have four more Saṅghādisesas than the monks. See also BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxiii.

² pakkhamānatta. Buddhaghosa says that he will explain this phrase in detail in a Khandhaka. Pakkha here almost certainly has the meaning of one-half of the lunar month.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 1

P.1.1.1
3.213 These thirty rules, ladies, for offences of expiation involving forfeiture come up for recitation.

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattihī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ the group of six nuns made a hoard of many bowls. People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place and seeing (this hoard), looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns make a hoard of many bowls? Will these nuns do a trade in bowls or will they set up an earthenware shop?"

Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns make a hoard of bowls?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns made a hoard of bowls?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the group of six nuns make a hoard of bowls? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should make a hoard of bowls, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture."

P.1.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bowl² means: there are two (kinds of) bowls: an iron bowl, a clay bowl. There are three sizes for a bowl: a large bowl, a medium-sized bowl, a small bowl. A large bowl means that it takes half an ālḥaka measure of boiled rice, or¹ a quarter of that quantity of uncooked rice or a suitable curry. A medium-sized bowl means that it, takes a nālīka measure of boiled rice, a quarter of that quantity of uncooked rice, a suitable curry. A small bowl means that it takes a patṭha measure of boiled rice, a quarter of that quantity of uncooked rice, a suitable curry. (A bowl) greater than that is not a bowl, (a bowl) smaller (than that) is not a bowl.

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-NP 21 (BD 2.113f.) where, however, the offence is to keep an extra bowl; and also Monks' Bu-NP 1 (BD 2.1f.). ² = BD 2.115 (Vin 3.243) and cf. BD 2.415 (Vin 4.123).

Should make a hoard means: what is not allotted, not assigned.²

It is to be forfeited means: it should be forfeited at sunrise. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun.³ And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: That nun, having approached an Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior nuns, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: ‘Ladies, this bowl is to be forfeited by me, a night having elapsed. I forfeit it to the Order.’ Having forfeited it, the offence should be confessed. The offence should be acknowledged by an experienced, competent nun; the bowl forfeited should be given back (with the words): ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This bowl of the nun so and so which had to be forfeited is forfeited (by her) to the Order. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order give back this bowl to the nun so and so.’

That nun, having approached several⁴ nuns, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: ‘Ladies, this bowl is to be forfeited by me, a night having elapsed. I forfeit it to the ladies.’ Having forfeited it, the offence should be confessed. The offence should be acknowledged by an experienced, competent nun; the bowl forfeited should be given back (with the words): ‘Let the ladies listen to me. This bowl of the nun so and so which had to be forfeited is forfeited (by her) to the ladies. If it seems right to the ladies, let the ladies give back this bowl to the nun so and so.'

¹ Omitted, probably rightly, at Vin 3.243. It does not occur in the other cases either here or there. ² Cf. definition of “extra robe,” “extra bowl” at BD 2.7, BD 2.114.

³ ekabhikkhunī balancing puggala, individual, in the Monks’ Nissaggiyas. ⁴ sambahulā, meaning a gaṇa, group of two to four monks or nuns.

That nun, having approached one nun, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: 'Lady, this bowl is to be forfeited by me, a night having elapsed. I forfeit it to the lady.' Having forfeited it, the offence should be confessed. The offence should be acknowledged by this nun; the bowl forfeited should be given back (with the words): 'I will give back this bowl to the lady.'

^{P1.2.2} If she thinks that a night has elapsed when it has elapsed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether a night has elapsed ... If she thinks that a night has not elapsed when it has elapsed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she thinks that it is allotted when it is not allotted ... If she thinks that it is assigned when it is not assigned ... If she thinks that it is bestowed when it is not bestowed ... If she thinks that it is lost when it is not lost ... If she thinks that it is destroyed when it is not destroyed ... If she thinks that it is broken when it is not broken ... If she thinks that it is stolen when it is not stolen, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If, not having forfeited the bowl which had to be forfeited, she makes use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that a night has elapsed when it has not elapsed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether a night has not elapsed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that a night has not elapsed when it has not elapsed, there is no offence.

^{P1.2.3}
^{3.216} There is no offence if before sunrise it is allotted, assigned, bestowed, lost, destroyed, broken, if they tear it from her, if they take it on trust; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

^{P13.1} ¹ Cf. BD 2.116f., and BD 2.10f. (a robe).

Then the group of six nuns did not give back a bowl that was forfeited. They told this matter ... to the lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl that is forfeited is not to be given back. Whosoever should not give it back, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”¹

¹ Cf. BD 2.116f., and BD 2.10f. (a robe).

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 2

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns, having spent the rains in a village-residence, went to Sāvattḥī keeping the customs,¹ dignified in deportment, badly dressed, wearing shabby robes. Lay-followers having seen these nuns, thinking, "These nuns are keeping the customs ... wearing shabby robes, these nuns will have been robbed," gave robe-material to the Order of nuns not at the right time.² The nun Thullanandā, saying, "Our kaṭhina-cloth is (formally) made,³ it was robe-material given at the right time," having allotted it, had it distributed.⁴ The lay-followers having seen those nuns, spoke thus: "Was not the robe-material received by the ladies?"

"We did not receive robe-material, sirs. The lady Thullanandā, saying, 'Our kaṭhina-cloth is (formally) made; it was robe-material given at the right time,' having allotted it, had it distributed."

The lay-followers ... spread it about, saying:

¹ vattasampannā. Groups of vattāni enumerated at Vb-a 297. Here probably these nuns had not yet their new robes, as it was not the custom to get these during the rains. The village perhaps could not supply enough material and so the nuns proposed to get it in Sāvattḥī. ² See BD 2.26, BD 2.311, BD 2.366. ³ atthata. See BD 2.5, n. 1, BD 2.26, n. 3. The kaṭhina-cloth had to be made up after the rains, Vin 1.254. Robe-material accruing not at the right time might be accepted by a monk, but then should be made up quickly, Vin 3.203 (BD 2.25f.). It looks as if Thullanandā and her nuns had had their kaṭhina robes made up before these other nuns arrived at Sāvattḥī, and that she took possession of the material given by the laity, and in having it distributed, ignored these incoming nuns. ⁴ This seems to imply that she did not distribute it herself. At Vin 1.285 monks are allowed to agree upon a monk possessed of five qualities as distributor of robe-material; the way in which it should be distributed is then set forth.

“How can the lady Thullanandā, thinking that robe-material (given) not at the right time was robe-material (given) at the right time, having allotted it, have it distributed?”

Nuns heard these lay-followers who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Thullanandā thinking ... have it distributed?”

Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks ... to the lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... had it distributed?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... have it distributed? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, thinking that robe-material (given) not at the right time is robe-material (given) at the right time, having allotted it should have it distributed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Robe-material (given) not at the right time¹ means: some that has accrued during the eleven months when the kaṭhina cloth is not (formally) made; some that has accrued during the seven months when the kaṭhina cloth is (formally) made; a gift (of material) offered² even at the right time; this means robe-material (given) not at the right time.

If thinking, “It is robe-material (given) at the right time,” having allotted it, she has it distributed, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; on acquisition it is to be forfeited. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: “Ladies, I, thinking that this robe-material (given) not at the right time was robe-material (given) at the right time, having allotted it, caused it to be distributed; it is to be forfeited by me. I forfeit it to the Order.” ... “... let the Order give back ... they should give back ... I will give back (this robe-material) to the lady.”

¹ Cf. Monks’ Bu-NP 3, Vin 3.204 (BD 2.26, where see note), and cf. BD 2.311, BD 2.366, “time of giving robes.” ² ādiṣṣa. Vin-a 546 explains by apadisitvā, pointed out, indicated, designated; Vin-a 658 by uddisitvā, pointed out, proposed; while Vin-a 916 says, “she saying, ‘having obtained (sampattā), let them distribute,’ and then she says, ‘I will give this to a group and this to you.’”

2.2.2

If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) not at the right time when it is robe-material (given) not at the right, time, and saying, “It is robe-material (given) at the right time,” having allotted it she has it distributed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether it is robe-material (given) not at the right time ... there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) at the right time when it is robe-material (given) not at the right time ... there is no offence. If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) not at the right time when it is robe-material (given) at the right time, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is robe-material (given) at the right time, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) at the right time when it is robe-material (given) at the right time, there is no offence.

2.2.3

There is no offence if she thinks that it is robe-material (given) not at the right time when it is robe-material (given) not at the right time and has it distributed; if she thinks that it is robe-material (given) at the right time when it is robe-material (given) at the right time and has it distributed; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 3

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, having exchanged¹ a robe with a certain nun, made use of it. Then that nun, having folded up that robe, laid it aside.² The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, that robe which was exchanged by you with me, where is that robe?" Then that nun, having taken out that robe, showed it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, take back³ your robe, give⁴ me this robe. That which is yours is yours, that which is mine is mine. Give this to me, take away your own," and she tore it away.⁵ Then that nun told this matter to the nuns ... to the monks. The monks ... to the lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... tore it away?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the nun Thullanandā ... tear it away? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having exchanged a robe with a nun, should afterwards speak thus: 'Lady, take your robe, give this robe to me. That which is yours is yours, that which is mine is mine. Give this to me, take away your own,' (and) should tear it away or should cause (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”¹

¹ Or bartered, parivattetvā. In Bhikkhu Bu-NP 5 monks are allowed to accept robes in exchange from monks, nuns, probationers, male and female novices; while in Bhikkhu Bu-Pc 25 they are allowed to give robes in exchange to these same five classes of people. ² Cf. Vin 4.61 = BD 2.285. ³ handā. Vin-a 917 says gaṇha, take. ⁴ āharati here has sense of to give, as at Vin 3.206. ⁵ Cf. Vin 3.254 (= BD 2.139).

3.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

With a nun means: with another nun.

Robe means: any one robe of the six (kinds of) robes (including) the least one fit for assignment.²

Having exchanged means: something large for something small or something small for something large.

Should tear it away means³: if she tears it away herself, there is an offence of’ expiation involving forfeiture.

Should cause (another) to tear it away means: if she commands another, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If having commanded once, she then tears many away, it is to be forfeited. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: ‘Ladies, having exchanged this robe with a nun, it was torn away by me; it is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to the Order’ ... ‘the Order should give back ... let the ladies give back ... I will give back (this robe) to the lady.’

3.2.2

4.2.48

3.2.22

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained, (and) having exchanged a robe, tears it away or causes (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... involving forfeiture. Having exchanged another requisite, if she tears it away or causes (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Having exchanged a robe or another requisite with one who is not ordained, if she tears it away or causes (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ Cf. Monks’ Bu-NP 25 where a monk having himself given a Bu robe to a monk must not then tear it away from him. ² = Vin 3.210, Vin 3.213, Vin 4.122, Vin 4.123.

³ From here to end cf. Monks’ Bu-NP 25.

There is no offence if she gives it or takes it from her in a friendly manner; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 4

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā came to be ill. Then a certain lay-follower approached the nun Thullanandā, and having approached he spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "What, lady, is your discomfort? What may be brought (for you)?"

"Sir, I am in need of ghee."

Then that lay-follower, having for a kaḥāpaṇa brought ghee from the house of a certain shopkeeper, gave it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā said: "I am not in need of ghee, sir, I am in need of oil." Then that lay-follower approached that shopkeeper, and having approached he spoke thus to that shopkeeper:

"The lady says that she does not need ghee, master, she needs oil. You take¹ the ghee (and) give me the oil."

"If we, master, take back again goods that were bought, when will our goods be sold? Ghee was taken owing to the purchase of ghee; give for² the purchase of oil (and) you shall take oil"

Then that lay-follower ... spread it about, saying: "How can this lady Thullanandā, having had one thing asked for,³ then have another thing asked for?" Nuns heard this lay-follower who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about ... Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks ... to the lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thulla nandā, having had one thing asked for, had another thing asked for?"

¹ handā, as above, BD 3.220. ² āhara = yācitvā, Vin-a 917, but I think the above translation better shows that the shopkeeper was, as he states, unwilling to change goods once bought. ³ viññāpetvā.

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... have another thing asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, having had one thing asked for, should have another thing asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Nun means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Having had one thing asked for means: having had anything whatever asked for.

Should have another asked for means: excepting that (thing), if she has another asked for, in the request¹ there is an offence of wrong-doing. It is to be forfeited on acquisition. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: “Ladies, having had this thing asked for, the other thing asked for is to be forfeited by me. I forfeit it to the Order.” ... “... the Order should give back ... let the ladies give back ... I will give back (this thing) to the lady.”

If she thinks that one thing is another thing and has the other thing asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether one thing ... If she thinks that an identical thing² is another thing ... offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she thinks that another thing is an identical thing (and) has the identical thing asked for, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is an identical thing (and) has an identical thing asked for, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is an identical thing when it is an identical thing, there is no offence.

¹ payoge, action, doing. ² anañña.

There is no offence if she has that thing asked for and also has another thing asked for¹; if having pointed out the advantage, she has it asked for; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ According to Vin-a 917 this means that the little she first asked for does not suffice, so she asks for it again. If ghee was first asked for a watch of the night (i.e., to be used as a medicine) it may be boiled; but if the doctor prescribed oil and she says she needs this too, thus (it is said) she asks for another thing. The simultaneous asking for things is hence not an offence; it puts a shopkeeper to no embarrassment, and saves a lay-person from going to and fro. This “asking for” a thing when an offer has been made is different from the “asking for” in Bu-Pc 7 and in the Pāṭidesaniyas. For there, nuns appear to be asking for food and medicine on their own initiative.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 5

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā came to be ill. Then a certain lay-follower approached the nun Thullanandā; having approached, he spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "I hope, lady, that you are better, I hope that you are keeping going."

Bi-NP 9
BD 3.2

"Sir, I am not better, I am not keeping going."

"Lady, I will deposit a kahāpaṇa in the house of such and such a shopkeeper; you can have whatever you want brought from there."

The nun Thullanandā enjoined a certain probationer, saying: "Go, probationer, fetch oil for the kahāpaṇa from the house of such and such a shopkeeper."

Then that probationer, having for the kahāpaṇa fetched oil from the house of that shopkeeper, gave it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā said: "I do not need oil, probationer, I need ghee." Then that probationer approached that shopkeeper; having approached, she spoke thus to that shopkeeper:

Vin 4.2

"The lady says that she does not need oil, sir, she needs ghee. You take the oil (and) give me the ghee."

"If we, lady, take back again goods that were bought, when will our goods be sold? Oil was taken owing to the purchase of oil; give for the purchase of ghee (and) you shall take ghee."

Then that probationer stood crying. Nuns spoke thus to that probationer: "Why are you crying, probationer?" Then that probationer told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

3.227 “How can the lady Thullanandā, having got one thing in exchange,¹ get another thing in exchange?”

“Is it true, as is said, monks, ... (see Bi-NP 4.1. Instead of having had asked for, etc., read having got in exchange) ... rule of training:

“Whatever nun, having got one thing in exchange, should get another thing in exchange, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

5.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Having got one thing in exchange means: having got anything whatever in exchange ... (see Bi-NP 4.2). Instead of has asked for, having had asked for read gets in exchange, having got in exchange ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ cetāpetvā.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 6

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time lay-followers, having made a voluntary collection¹ for robe-material² for an Order of nuns, having laid aside what was necessary³ in a certain cloak-seller's⁴ house, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a cloak-seller's house what is necessary for robe-material is laid aside. Having had that robe-material brought from there, distribute it."

The nuns, having got medicine in exchange for what was necessary, made use of it. The lay-followers, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns get something⁵ in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing,⁶ belonging to an Order?" Nuns heard these lay-

¹ chandakam saṃharitvā. This is Pali-English Dictionary's suggestion. Vin-a 918 says, "saying, 'Let us do a dhamma-duty, give what you are able,' thus having produced desire and pleasure in others, it is a synonym for a requisite that is taken up" (gahitaparikkhāra). ² cīvararathāya, instrumental; it therefore looks as if they did not collect robe-material itself, but some medium of exchange with which the nuns could obtain the material. ³ parikkhāra, the usual technical term for the four, or eight, requisites allowed to a monk. But in view of the construction cīvararathāya, it is likely that parikkhāra here stands not for a "requisite" itself, but for the means, perhaps some deposit of a medium of exchange, for obtaining it. This hypothesis is strengthened by Bu-NP 8, where a voluntary collection for conje, yāgu, was to be made. Conje is not a specific "requisite" at all, at Vin 4.93 e.g., being mentioned separately and in addition to solid food and soft food. There is in English the vulgarism "the needful," which I think parikkhāra in this and the following Nissaggiyas most nearly means. ⁴ pāvārika. Pali-English Dictionary suggests above translation. Pāvāra as cloak or mantle occurs at Vin 1.281, Ja 5.409. ⁵ aññaṃ. ⁶ aññadatthikena parikkhārena aññuddisikena, literally for the good of another, for the advantage of another, Cf. attuddesaṃ at Vin 3.149.

4.251 followers who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can these nuns get something in exchange ... belonging to an Order?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns got something in exchange ... belonging to an Order?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can nuns get something in exchange ... belonging to an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should get something in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, (and) belonging to an Order, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

6.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing means: for what was given for another thing.

Belonging to an Order¹ means: it is for an Order, not for a group, not for one nun.

Should get something in exchange means: having set aside that for which it was given, if she gets another thing in exchange, there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; it is to be forfeited on acquisition. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: ‘Ladies, this thing got in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, (and) belonging to an Order, is to be forfeited by me. I forfeit it to the Order.’ ... “... the Order should give back, ... let the ladies give back ... I will give back (this thing) to the lady.”

6.2.2 ¹ Another definition occurs at Vin 3.266 and Vin 4.43.

If she thinks that it was appointed for another thing when it was appointed for another thing, and gets something else in exchange, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt ... If she thinks that it was not appointed for another thing ... there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. Having acquired what was forfeited, it may be taken as, so to speak, a gift.¹ If she thinks that it was appointed for another thing when it was not appointed for another thing, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it was not appointed for another thing, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it was not appointed for another thing when it was not appointed for another thing, there is no offence.

There is no offence if she takes² a remainder; if she takes having obtained the owner's permission³; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ yathādāne upanetaḥ. ² upaneti. ³ I.e., saying it was given for the sake of robe-material, but they have this and need oil, Vin-a 918.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 7

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ lay-followers, having made a voluntary collection for robe-material for the Order of nuns, having laid aside what was necessary in a certain cloak-seller's house, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a cloak-seller's house what is necessary for robe-material is laid aside. Having had the robe-material brought from there, distribute it."

And the nuns, although having themselves asked for² what was necessary, yet having got medicine in exchange, made use of it. The lay-followers, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an Order, (and) that they themselves asked for³?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns got something in exchange ... that they themselves asked for?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns get something in exchange ... that they themselves asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an Order, (and) that she herself asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture."

¹ Cf. Bu-NP 6. ² sayam yācitvā. Cf. Vin 3.144 (BD 1.246). ³ saṃyācikenā.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing ... Belonging to an Order ... That she herself asked for means: oneself having asked for.¹

Should get something in exchange means: ... (see Bi-NP 2.1-3.
After belonging to an Order insert that she herself asked for)
... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Vin 3.149 (BD 1.254).

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 8

8.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.233 at that time nuns dwelling in cells¹ belonging to a certain guild were going short of conje. Then that guild, having made a voluntary collection for conje for the nuns, having laid aside what was necessary in a certain shop-keeper's house, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a shopkeeper's house what is necessary for conje is laid aside. Having had husked rice brought from there, having had the conje boiled, make use of it."

The nuns, having got medicine in exchange for what was necessary, made use of it. Then that guild, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company²?"

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns got something in exchange ... belonging to a company?"

"It is true, lord."

4.253 The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks,

¹ pariveṇavāsikā. They were not a complete Order, merely a number of nuns.

² mahājanikena. Mahājana usually means "people, a crowd, the populace." Here it does not mean the guild regarded as a company, but the nuns for whom the conje was collected. The word is explained in the Old Commentary, and at Vin-a 918 by gaṇa, the technical term for "group" (two to four monks or nuns). This rule is in contrast on the one hand to Bu-NP 6 and Bu-NP 7, which speak of saṅghikena, belonging to an Order; and on the other to Bu-NP 10, which speaks of belonging to an individual, puggalikenā. It is because of this frequent triad, saṅgha, gaṇa, puggala (= ekā bhikkhuni) that mahājana must here be taken as equivalent to gaṇa, group, in its technical and monastic meaning.

how can nuns get something in exchange ... belonging to a company?
It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

BD 3,2

“Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Bi-NP 8

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing means: for what was given for another thing.

Belonging to a company means: it is for a group, not for an Order, not for one nun.

Should get something in exchange means: ... (see Bi-NP 6.2.1–Bi-NP 6.2.3. Instead of belonging to an Order read belonging to a company) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 9

9.1.1
3.235 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns dwelling in cells belonging to a certain guild ... (see Bi-NP 8.1) ... "... make use of it." And the nuns, although having themselves asked for what was necessary, yet having got medicine in exchange, made use of it. Then that guild, having found out ... (see Bi-NP 8.1. After belonging to a company insert (and) that they themselves asked for) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company, (and) that she herself asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture."

9.2.1
3.235 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing ... Belonging to a company ... That she herself asked for means: oneself having asked for.

Should get something in exchange means: ... (see Bi-NP 6.2.1-Bi-NP 6.2.2) Instead of belonging to an Order read belonging to a company, (and) that she herself asked for)

4.254 ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 10

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater, she was wise, she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk. Many people visited the nun Thullanandā. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā's cell was falling to pieces.¹ People spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Why is this cell of yours, lady, falling to pieces?"

"Sirs, there are neither benefactors, nor are there workmen."

Then these people, having made a voluntary collection for the nun Thullanandā's cell, gave what was necessary to the nun Thullanandā. And the nun Thullanandā, although having herself asked for what was necessary, yet having got medicine in exchange, made use of it. The people, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an individual, (and) that she herself asked for?"

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... (and) that she herself asked for?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... (and) that she herself asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an individual, (and) that she herself asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

¹ udriyati.

10.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing... Belonging to an individual means: it is for one nun, not for an Order, not for a group.

That she herself asked for means: oneself having asked for.

Should get something in exchange means: ... (as above, Bi-NP 6.2.1; read constantly belonging to an individual, (and) that she herself asked for.)

4.255

... if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 11

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater, she was wise, she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk.¹ Then King Pasenadi of Kosala having, in the cold weather, put on a costly woollen garment, approached the nun Thullanandā; having approached, having greeted the nun Thullanandā, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the nun Thullanandā roused ... gladdened King Pasenadi of Kosala with dhamma-talk. Then King Pasenadi of Kosala, having been roused ... gladdened with dhamma-talk by the nun Thullanandā, spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Do let me know, lady, what would be of use (to you)."²

"If, Sire, you are desirous of giving (something) to me, give me this woollen garment."

Then King Pasenadi of Kosala, having given the woollen garment to the nun Thullanandā, having risen from his seat, having greeted the nun Thullanandā, departed keeping his right side towards her. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

"These nuns have great desires, they are not contented. How can they ask the king for a woollen garment?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā ask the king for a woollen garment?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā asked the king for a woollen garment?"

¹ As in Bu-NP 10, Bu-Pc 33. Cf. Pasenadi's interview with the nun Khemā at SN iv.374.

² Cf. BD 1.222 = BD 2.43 for same expression.

3.239 “It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ask the king for a woollen garment? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“If a nun is bargaining for¹ a heavy cloth,² she may bargain for one (worth) at most four “bronzes.”³ If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

11.2.1 A heavy cloth means: whatever is a cloth for the cold weather.

Is bargaining for means: is asking for.

4.256 She may bargain for one (worth) at most four bronzes means: she may bargain for one worth sixteen kahāpaṇas.

3.240 If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that means: if she asks for one (worth) more than that, in the request there is an offence of wrong-doing. It is to be forfeited on acquisition. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: ‘Ladies, this heavy cloth (worth) at most more than four “bronzes,” bargained for by me, is to be forfeited. I forfeit

¹ cetāpentiyā, explained in Old Commentary, as viññāpentiyā, asking for, as at Vin 3.246 (BD 2.121). Cetāpeti is usually “to get in exchange,” see BD 2.54f., BD 2.120, and above Bu-NP 7-Bu-NP 10. Here Thullanandā certainly gets the cloth in exchange for her teaching. But, since for us, “to get in exchange “usually means the changing hands of tangible objects, I have thought it best, in order to avoid this implication, to use “to bargain.” Moreover, cetāpeti is not really synonymous with viññāpeti, although it may be said to contain, as does “to bargain,” this meaning.

² garupāvuraṇa. ³ kaṃsa. As Rhys Davids states, Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon, p. 7, this “as a measure of value is only found in this passage.” Here, according to the Old Commentary, four “bronzes” are worth sixteen kahāpaṇas; and so, as Buddhaghosa says, Vin-a 919, “here a kaṃsa is (worth) four kahāpaṇas”; and cf. Kankhāvitarāṇī (Simon Hewavitarne Bequest), p. 172, and Moggallāna, Abhidhānappadīpikā 905. The value being so small, Rhys Davids is against the notion that the kaṃsa was a bronze or brass cup, plate or vessel. It may possibly have been a bronze weight such as those used until recently in Burma. There is no commentarial support for Childers’ view that kaṃsa is “a coin,” or for Böhtlingroth’s that it is an equivalent of āḍhaka (Pali, āḷhaka).

it to the Order' ... "... the Order should give back ... let them give back ... I will give back this (heavy cloth) to the lady."

If she thinks that it is (worth) more when it is (worth) more than four "bronzes" (and) bargains for it, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether it is (worth) more than four "bronzes" ... If she thinks that it is (worth) less when it is (worth) more than four "bronzes" (and) bargains for it, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she thinks that it is (worth) more when it is (worth) less than four "bronzes," there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is (worth) less than four "bronzes," there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is (worth) less when it is (worth) less than four "bronzes," there is no offence.

There is no offence if she bargains for one (worth) at most four "bronzes"; if she bargains for one (worth) at most less than four "bronzes"; if they belong to relations; if they are offered; if it is for another; if it is by means of her own property; if she bargains for something of small value while (the other person) desires to bargain for something costly¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Vin 3.217 (BD 2.57) and where cetāpeti is in sense of "to get in exchange" rather than "to bargain."

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 12

12.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3:241 at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned ... (see Bi-NP 11.1.
Instead of in the cold weather read in the hot weather; instead of woollen garment read linen garment) ... “... this rule of training:

“If a nun is bargaining for a light cloth,¹ she may bargain for one (worth) at most two and a half ‘bronzes.’ If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

12.2.1 Light cloth means: whatever is a cloth for the hot weather.

Is bargaining for means: is asking for.

She may bargain for one (worth) at most two and a half “bronzes” means: she may bargain for one worth ten kahāpaṇas.

If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that means: ... (see Bi-NP 11.2. Read a light cloth (worth) at most more than two and a half “bronzes,” more than two and a half “bronzes,” less than two and a half “bronzes”) ... there is no offence.

12.2.2 There is no offence if she bargains for one (worth) at most two and a half “bronzes”; if she bargains for one (worth) at most less than two and a half “bronzes”; ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

12.3.1 ¹ lahupāvuraṇa.

Recited, ladies, are the thirty rules¹ for offences of expiation involving forfeiture. Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter; therefore are they silent. Thus do I understand this.

Told are the thirty offences of expiation involving forfeiture

¹ Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 919 says that eighteen (Nissaggiya Pācittiya) rules of training are laid down for both sides, that is for monks and nuns alike. As these have appeared already in the Mahāvibhaṅga, only twelve additional ones need to be included in the Bhikkhunī-Pātimokkha to bring the total of Nissaggiyas for nuns up to thirty. See BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxvii.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 1

These hundred and sixty-six matters, ladies, that are offences of expiation come up for recitation.

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Order of nuns was offered garlic by a certain lay-follower,¹ saying: "If these ladies need garlic, I (can supply them) with garlic."² And the keeper of the field was instructed (with the words): "If the nuns come, give two or three bundles³ to each nun." Now at that time there was a festival in Sāvattthī; the garlic was used up as soon as it was brought in.⁴ The nuns, having approached that lay-follower, spoke thus: "Sir, we have need of garlic." He said: "There is none, ladies; the garlic is used up as soon as it is brought in; go to the field." The nun Thullanandā, having gone to the field, not knowing moderation, had much garlic taken away. The keeper of the field looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, not knowing moderation, have much garlic taken away?" Nuns heard that keeper of the field who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, not knowing moderation, have much garlic taken away?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, not knowing moderation, had much garlic taken away?”

¹ Ja no.136 (Ja 1.474) is based on this story. ² Cf. Vin 3.244 (BD 2.118). ³ (This footnote proved troublesome to typeset due to its length, so it has been moved to an appendix with other long notes on page 2983.) ⁴ See Pali-English Dictionary under yathābhatam. Ja 1.475 makes out that the nuns went to the lay-follower's house where the garlic had been brought from the field. This would explain his injunction to them to go to the field.

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, not knowing moderation, have much garlic taken away? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Formerly, monks, the nun Thullanandā was the wife of a certain brahmin and there were three daughters, Nandā, Nandavatī, Sundarīnandā.¹ Then, monks, that brahmin, having passed away, was born in the womb of a certain goose² and his feathers were made all of gold. He gave a feather one by one to these. Then, monks, the nun Thullanandā, saying: ‘This goose is giving us a feather one by one,’ having taken hold of that king of the geese, plucked him. His feathers, on growing again, turned out white. So at that time, monks, the nun Thullanandā lost the gold through too much greed; now she will lose the garlic.”

“One should be pleased with what is received, for too much greed is bad.
By taking hold of the king of the geese, one may lose the gold.”

Then the lord having in many a figure rebuked the nun Thullanandā for her difficulty in maintaining herself ...” ... And thus, monks, the nuns should set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should eat garlic, there is an offence of expiation.”³

¹ Cf. Vin 4.211 where these appear as the sisters of Thullanandā. ² hamsa, or swan; “mallard” at Jātaka translation 1.293. ³ Ja 1.476 points out that this prohibition, affecting all the nuns, is due to Thullanandā’s greed. At Vin 2.140 it is made a dukkata offence for monks to eat garlic; nor should Jain monks accept it (Āyāraṅgasutta 2 1, 8.13).

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Garlic means: it is called the Magadha (plant).¹

If she says, 'I will eat,' and accepts, there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that it is garlic when it is garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is garlic ... If she thinks that it is not garlic when it is garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is garlic when it is not garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not garlic when it is not garlic (and) eats, there is no offence.

There is no offence if it is an onion, if it is a beetroot,² if it is yellow myrobalan,³ if it is bow-garlic,⁴ if it is in a concoction of broth,⁵ in a concoction of meat, in a concoction of oil; if it is in a salad⁶; if it is in a tit-bit⁷; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Vin-a 920 says that māgadhaka means that here it is a synonym for "garlic," for it is the garlic grown in the kingdom of Magadha. ² bhañjanaka. This, as a vegetable, is not given in Pali-English Dictionary. "Beetroot" is guess-work, based on remark at Vin-a 920 that it is red in colour. This, however, may suggest radish. Vin-a 920 also says that it has two bulbs (miñja); in this Vin-a resembles other early commentaries, which it cites. ³ haritaka. According to Pali-English Dictionary this is Terminalia citrina or chebula. Vin-a 920 says that it is the colour of vegetables (or greens) and has three "bulbs," or, according to another early commentary, one. Atthasālinī 320 uses haritaka in definition of kaśāva, an astringent decoction made from plants. At Vin 1.201 the fruit is allowed as a medicine. ⁴ cāpalasuṇa. Vin-a 920 says it has no bulb but only sprouts; cf. the bulbless onion, Allium fistulosum, grown for its leafy tops; and cf. another botanical name, cāpa-paṭa (Sanskrit), the tree Buchanania lalifolia. ⁵ This and the two following occur at Vin 4.110. They could contain the Magadha garlic. ⁶ sāḷave. Vin-a 920 says there is no offence if it is in a "hot" salad, or salad of jujube-fruits and so on, badarasāḷavādīsu, or if it is among astringent vegetables, ambilasākādīsu. Cf. BD 2.316, n. 2; Vin-a 817; Atthasālinī 320. ⁷ uttari-bhaṅga, or dainties; cf. BD 1.275, n. 5.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 2

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns, haying let the hair of the body grow, bathed naked together with prostitutes at the same ford of the river Aciravatī.¹ The prostitutes ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns let the hair of the body grow, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these prostitutes who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns let the hair of the body grow?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns let the hair of the body grow?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns let the hair of the body grow? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should let the hair of the body grow, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Hair of the body means: under both armpits and on the private parts.

Should let grow means: if she lets one hair grow, there is an offence of expiation. If she lets many hairs grow, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Cf. Vin 1.293; Vin 4.278.

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 3

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time two nuns, tormented by dissatisfaction, having entered an inner room, slapped with the palms of the hands. Nuns, having run up at the sound of this noise, spoke thus to these nuns: "Why do you, ladies, misbehave with a man?" Saying: "Ladies, we are not misbehaving with a man," they told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns slap with the palms of the hands?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns slapped with the palms of the hands?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns slap with the palms of the hands? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"In slapping with the palms of the hands, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Slapping with the palms of the hands means: if she, enjoying the contact, gives a blow to the private parts even with a lotus leaf,² there is an offence of expiation.

¹ On these "brief Pācittiyas" (cf. also the next), see BD 2, Introduction, p. xxxiv.

² Cf. the same expression at Vin 4.146 in definition of "should give a blow," and at Vin 4.147 in definition of "should raise the palm of the hand."

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 4

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain woman who had formerly been a king's concubine, had gone forth among the nuns. A certain nun, tormented by dissatisfaction, approached this nun, and having approached, she spoke thus to this nun: "The king, lady, constantly came to see you. How did you manage?"

"By means of an application of lac, lady."

"What is this application of lac, lady?"

Then this nun showed an application of lac to that nun. Then that nun, having taken the application of lac, having forgotten to wash it, put it to one side. The nuns, having seen it surrounded by flies, spoke thus: "Whose doing is this?" She spoke thus: "It is my doing." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can a nun take an application of lac?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun took an application of lac?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun take an application of lac? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"In an application of lac, there is an offence of expiation."

Application of lac means: it is made of lac, made of wood, made of flour, made of clay.

Should take¹ means: if she, enjoying the contact, makes even a lotus-leaf enter the private parts, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Note that a word is here defined which does not come into the rule, and that this, as it stands, is one of the "brief Pācittiya's."

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 5

... among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery. Then Mahāpajāpati the Gotamid approached the lord; having approached, having greeted the lord, she stood to windward, saying: "Lord, the women smell nasty." Then the lord, saying: "Then let the nuns take an ablution with water," roused ... delighted Mahāpajāpati the Gotamid with dhamma-talk. Then Mahāpajāpati the Gotamid, having been roused ... delighted with dhamma-talk by the lord, having greeted the lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "I allow, monks, an ablution with water for the nuns."

Bi-Pc 5
BD 3,2

Now at that time a certain nun, saying: "An ablution with water is allowed by the lord," taking a very deep ablution with water, got a sore on her private parts. Then this nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun take a very deep ablution with water?" ...

Bi-Pc 5

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun took a very deep ablution with water?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun take a very deep ablution with water? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"If a nun is taking an ablution with water, she may take at most (a measure of) two finger-joints. For whoever exceeds this, there is an offence of expiation.”

Ablution with water means: it is called washing the private parts.

Is taking means: is washing.

She may take at most (a measure of) two finger-joints means: she may take at most (a measure of) two joints of two fingers.

For whoever exceeds this means: if she, enjoying the contact, exceeds by even a hair's breadth, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that it is more when it is more than (a measure of) two finger-joints (and) takes it,¹ there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is more than (a measure of) two finger-joints ... If she thinks that it is less when it is more than (a measure of) two finger-joints (and) takes it, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is more when it is less than (a measure of) two finger-joints, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is less than (a measure of) two finger-joints, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is less when it is less than (a measure of) two finger-joints, there is no offence.

There is no offence if she takes at most (a measure of) two finger-joints; if she takes less than at most (a measure of) two finger-joints; if it is because of illness; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ I.e., the ablution.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 6

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Ārohanta, a chief minister,¹ had gone forth among the monks (and) his former wife had gone forth among the nuns. Now at that time that monk participated in a meal in the presence of that nun. Then that nun enticed² that monk, standing near him with drinking water and with a fan as he was eating.³ Then that monk upbraided that nun, saying: "Do not, sister, do this, it is not allowable."

"Formerly you did this and that to me, now you do not put up with this much," and having thrown down the drinking cup on his head, she struck him with the fan. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can this nun strike a monk?' ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun struck a monk?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun strike a monk? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should stand with drinking water or with a fan close to a monk while he is eating, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ Mentioned, I think, nowhere but here. ² accāvadati; in sense of "to talk down," at Vin 4.224. Here, according to Vin-a 922, she spoke to him as though they were still leading the household life, saying that she used to stand close to him thus while he ate. Note that nuns had access to the monks quarters. ³ bhuñjati is the verb used for partaking of soft foods, those which constitute the five kinds of meals (see Vin 4.83) referred to below. To stand close to a monk eating solid food is a dukkata offence (below).

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

To a monk means: to one who is ordained.

Is eating means: is eating any one meal of the five (kinds of) meals.¹

Drinking water means: whatever is drinkable.²

Fans means: whatever is a fan.³

Should stand close means: if she stands within a reach of the hand, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that he is ordained when he is ordained (and) stands close with drinking water or with a fan, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether he is ordained ... If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is ordained ... there is an offence of expiation. If she stands close having left a reach of the hand, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she stands close while he is eating solid food, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she stands close to one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that he is ordained when he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁴

There is no offence if she gives⁵; if she causes (another) to give; if she commands one who is not ordained⁶; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See Vin 4.83. ² For pāniya, drinking water, also has this meaning of a beverage. Vin-a 922 says that it may be pure water, or buttermilk, curds, milk and so on.

³ vidhūpana ... vījanī, Vin-a 922 saying, “even the corner of a robe.” Vidhūpana allowed to monks at Vin 2.130. Vv-a 147 calls it caturassavījanī, a four-cornered vījanī. Three kinds of vījanī allowed at Vin 2.130, in addition to the “mosquito-fan,” makasavījanī. Vinaya Texts iii.131f. translates as both fan and fly-whisk. ⁴ Cf. previous clause but two. ⁵ I.e., the curry or water to the monk to drink, or the fan for him to fan himself with, Vin-a 922. ⁶ Vin-a 922, if she commands a novice to stand near a monk (and minister to him as he is eating), there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 7

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns, having had raw grain asked for at harvest time, carried it towards the town. (Those) at the gateway, saying: "Ladies, give a portion," having obstructed (them) let (them) go. Then these nuns, having gone to a dwelling,¹ told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns have raw grain asked for?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nuns had raw grain asked for?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns have raw grain asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having asked for raw grain or having had it asked for, or having roasted it or having caused it to be roasted, or having pounded it or having caused it to be pounded, or having cooked it or having caused it to be cooked, should eat it, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Raw grain means: rice, paddy, barley, wheat, millet, beans, rye.²

Having asked for means: oneself having asked for.

Having had asked for means: having caused another to ask for.

Having roasted means: oneself having roasted.

¹ Probably meaning a nunnery. ² See BD 1.83, n. 4.

Having caused to be roasted means: having caused another to roast.

Having pounded means: ... Having caused to be pounded means ...

Having cooked means: ... Having caused to be cooked means: having caused another to cook.

If she says, “I will eat it” (and) accepts it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she has pulses¹ asked for; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ aparāṇṇa, or vegetables, or prepared cereals; cf. below, BD 3.259.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 8

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain brahmin who earned (his keep) as a hireling of a king,¹ saying, "I will ask for wages as before," having washed his head, went along beside a nunnery to the royal court. A certain nun, having relieved herself in a receptacle, in throwing it away over a wall, let it fall² on that brahmin's head. Then that brahmin ... spread it about, saying: "These shaven-headed strumpets are not true recluses.³ How can they let a pot fall on my head? I will set fire to their dwelling," and having taken up a fire-brand, he entered the dwelling. A certain lay follower as he was going out from the dwelling saw that brahmin who, having taken up the fire-brand, was entering the dwelling. Seeing him, he spoke thus to that brahmin: "Why do you, good sir, having taken up a fire-brand, enter the dwelling?"

"Good sir, these shaven-headed strumpets let a pot fall on my head. I will set fire to their dwelling."

"Go away, good brahmin, this is auspicious; you will receive a thousand, and this is (your) wage." Then that brahmin, having washed his head, having gone to the royal court, received a thousand, and this was the wage. Then that lay follower, having entered the dwelling, having told this matter to the nuns, scolded them. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns throw out excrement over a wall?" ...

Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns threw out excrement over a wall?"

¹ nibbiṭṭharājabhāṭa. Cf. Snp 25. ² āsumbhi. Cf. above, BD 3.252. ³ Cf. above, BD 3.178, below, BD 3.275.

3.258 “It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can nuns ... over a wall? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

4.266 “Whatever nun should throw out or should cause (another) to throw out excrement or urine or rubbish or remains of food over a wall or over a fence, there is an offence of expiation.”

8.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Excrement means: it is called faeces.

Urine means: it is called water.

Rubbish means: it is called sweepings.

Remains of food means: odd bits or bones or impure water.¹

Wall means: there are three (kinds of) walls, a wall of bricks, a wall of stones, a wall of wood.

Fence means: there are three (kinds of) fences, a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.

Over a wall means: beyond a wall.

Over a fence means: beyond a fence.

Should throw out means: if she herself throws out, there is an offence of expiation.

Should cause (another) to throw out means: if she commands another, there is an offence of expiation. When once commanded, if she throws out many times, there is an offence of expiation.

8.2.2 There is no offence if she throws out having looked over; if she throws out into what is not a track²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ This list occurs at Vin 2.115, monks there being forbidden to take these things out in their bowls, as though they were waste-tubs. ² avalañje—i.e., presumably meaning into a place where no one is likely to pass, avalañja meaning “impassable, out of use” (Critical Pali Dictionary), and valañja, meaning a “track” (Pali-English Dictionary). Commentary is of no help.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 9

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain brahmin's cornfield was beside a nunnery. The nuns threw out excrement and urine and rubbish and remains of food into the field. Then that brahmin ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nuns despoil our cornfield?"¹ Nuns heard that brahmin who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns throw out excrement ... and the remains of food on to the crops?"² ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns threw out ... on to the crops?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns throw out ... on to the crops? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should throw out or should cause (another) to throw out excrement or urine or rubbish or the remains of food on to the crops, there is an offence of expiation."³

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Excrement means: (see Bi-Pc 8.2.1) ... or impure water.

Crops means: grain and pulses⁴ planted as food for the use of human beings.

¹ Cf. Vin 4.47 (BD 2.257). ² harita. Cf. Vin 4.48. ³ Cf. Bu-Sk 74. ⁴ aparaṇṇa. Cf. BD 3.256, above. This definition of "crops" = Vin 4.48.

Should throw out means: if she herself throws out, there is an offence of expiation.

Should cause (another) to throw out means: ... (see Bi-Pc 8.2.1) ... offence of expiation.

9.2.2
If she thinks that they are crops when they are crops (and) throws out or causes (another) to throw out, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether they are crops ... If she thinks that they are not crops when they are crops ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that they are crops when they are not crops, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether they are not crops, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that they are not crops when they are not crops, there is no offence.

9.2.3
There is no offence if she throws out having looked round; if she throws out on to the edges of a field; if she throws out having asked the owner (for permission) and having obtained the permission¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ āpucchitvā apalokelvā. Cf. above, BD 3.184.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 10

... in Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding-place. Now at that time there was a festival on a mountain-top in Rājagaha.¹ The group of six nuns went to see the festival on the mountain-top. People ... spread it about saying: "How can nuns come to see dancing and singing and music, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the group of six nuns go to see ... music?" ...

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the group of six nuns go to see ... music? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should go to see dancing or singing or music, there is an offence of expiation."²

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Dancing means: whatever is dancing.³

Singing means: whatever is singing.⁴

Music means: whatever is music.⁵

¹ Cf. Vin 4.85 (BD 2.335 and note.) ² Made into a dukkata for monks at Vin 2.108.

³ Vin-a 925 says that if dancers and so on dance, or drunkards, and even peacocks, parrots and monkeys, all this is dancing. ⁴ Vin-a 925 says what is connected with the utter waning of the noble ones, or the singing on festive occasions, or the singing of dhamma-repeaters if they are monks lacking in restraint, all this is singing. Cf. Vin 2.108. ⁵ This may be music got by playing on a thong or the string of a lute or the music of the pitcher-drum and even of the water-drum, Vin-a 925.

If she goes to see, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees or hears, there is an offence of expiation. If having left the region of sight, she sees or hears again, there is an offence of expiation. If she goes to see one or the other, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees or hears, there is an offence of expiation. If having left the region of sight, she sees or hears again, there is an offence of expiation.¹

10.2.2

There is no offence if, standing in a monastery, she sees or hears; if, having come to where nuns are resting or sitting down or lying down, they dance or sing or play music; if, going along a path, she sees or hears; if, having gone as there is something to be done,² she sees or hears; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

The First Division: that on garlic

¹ Cf. Vin 4.108 (BD 2.380). ² Vin-a 926 says that if she has gone for ticket-food, or because there is anything else to be done, there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 11

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a man, a relative¹ of a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,² set out from a village for Sāvattḥī on some business. Then that nun stood together with and further talked with that man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there was no light. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun stand together with and further talk with a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... when there was no light?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun ... when there was no light? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with³ a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

In the dark of the night means: after the sun has gone down.⁴

When there is no light means: when it is dark.⁵

¹ Fact that he was a relative did not mitigate the offence. ² Mentioned at Vin 4.227, Vin 4.269, Vin 4.290, Vin 4.292. ³ Vin-a 926 "about worldly life." ⁴ Same phrase used in definition of atthamgate suriye, "after sunset," at Vin 4.55 (BD 2.275).

⁵ anāloke.

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal; one who is learned, competent to stand, to talk.

Together with means: together.¹

The one with the other means: there is a man as well as a nun.²

Should stand together with means: if she stands within a reach of a man's hand, there is an offence of expiation.

Or should talk with means: if she talks, standing within a reach of a man's hand, there is an offence of expiation. If she stands or talks, having left (the space of) a reach of the hand,³ there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she stands together with or talks with a yakkha or a departed one or a eunuch or an animal in human form, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

11.2.2

There is no offence if some learned friend comes to be (present); if she, not wishing for a private place, stands or talks thinking about something else⁴; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Vin 4.68 (BD 2.301). ² Cf. Vin 4.68 (BD 2.301). ³ Cf. Vin 4.95. ⁴ Cf. Vin 4.69, Vin 4.97 (BD 2.301, BD 2.358f.) and BD 3.268, below.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 12

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a man, a relative of a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,¹ set out from a village for Sāvattḥī on some business. Then that nun, thinking: "It is forbidden by the lord to stand together with (or) talk with a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light,"² stood together with and talked with that very man, the one with the other, in a secluded place. Those who were modest nuns ... (Bi-Pc 11.1. Instead of in the dark of the night when there is no light read in a secluded place) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with a man, the one with the other, in a secluded place, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.,

A secluded place means: it is secluded by a wall built of wattle and daub or by a door or by a screen or by a screen wall or by a tree or by a pillar or by a sack or it is secluded by anything whatever.³

Man means: a human man ... (Bi-Pc 11.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See above, BD 3.263, for references. ² Nuns' Bi-Pc 11. ³ Cf. Vin 3.188, Vin 3.192 (BD 1.332, BD 1.337).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 13

13.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.266 at that time a man, a relative of a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,¹ set out from a village for Sāvattḥī on some business. Then that nun, thinking: "It is forbidden by the lord to stand together with (or) talk with a man, the one with the other, in a secluded place,"² stood together with and talked with that very man in an open place.
Those who were modest nuns ... (Bi-Pc 11.1. Instead of in the dark of the night when there is no light read in an open place) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with a man, the one with the other, in an open place, there is an offence of expiation."

13.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Open place means: what is not secluded by a wall built of wattle and daub ... or by a sack or what is not secluded by anything whatever.

Man means: a human man ... (Bi-Pc 11.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See above, BD 3.263, for references. ² Nuns' Bi-Pc 12.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 14

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, stood together with and talked with a man, the one with the other, on a carriage road and in a cul-de-sac and at cross-roads,¹ and she whispered in his ear² and she dismissed the nun who was her companion. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā stand together with ... at cross-roads, and whisper in his ear and dismiss the nun who is her companion?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā stood together with ... and dismissed the nun who is her companion?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā stand together with ... and dismiss the nun who is her companion? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with a man, the one with the other, on a carriage road or in a cul-de-sac or at cross-roads³ or should whisper in his ear or should dismiss the nun who is her companion, there is an offence of expiation.”

¹ These three words occur above, BD 3.105 (Vin 4.176) in definition of “among the houses.” ² nikaṇṇikaṃ jappeti. ³ Curiously translated by B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature 1.74, in (12) “in the public street or cross roads where there are crows.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Carriage road means: it is called a carriage road.¹

Cul-de-sac means: they depart by that (way) by which they entered.

Cross-roads means: it is called a place where four roads meet.²

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal; one who is learned, competent to stand, to talk.³

Together with means: together.⁴

The one with the other means: there is a man as well as a nun.⁵

Should stand together with means: ... offence of expiation.⁶

Or should talk with means: ... offence of expiation.⁷

Or should whisper in his ear means: if she talks close into a man's ear,⁸ there is an offence of expiation.

Or should dismiss the nun who is her companion means: if, desiring to indulge in bad habits, she then⁹ dismisses the nun who is her companion, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹⁰ In leaving the region of sight or the region of hearing, there is an offence of wrong-doing. When she has left, there is an offence of expiation.¹¹ If she stands or talks, having left (the space of) a reach of the hand, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹² If she stands together with or talks with a yakkha or a departed one or a eunuch or an animal in human form, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if some learned friend comes to be (present); if, not wishing for a private place she stands or talks thinking about something else¹³; if, not wishing to indulge in bad habits, she dismisses the nun who is her companion if there is something to be done¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ rathiyā nāma racchā vuccati. Racchā is a contracted form of rathiyā; it occurs at Vin 2.194, Vin 3.151; Ja 1.346, Ja 1.425, and in definition of rathikā, at Vin-a 886.

² siṅghāṭako nāma caccaraṃ vuccati. Cf. explanation of siṅghāṭaka at Vin-a 886, quoted above, BD 3.105. The word caccara occurs at Vin 3.151 (BD 1.257); Mil 330; Ja 1.425. ³ = above, BD 3.264. ⁴ = above, BD 3.264. ⁵ = above, BD 3.264. ⁶ = above, BD 3.264. ⁷ = above, BD 3.264. ⁸ upakaṇṇake, or secretly; cf. Vin 2.99, Vin 4.20 (BD 2.203). ⁹ pi, which Oldenberg says, Vin 4.367, "we ought to expunge." ¹⁰ Cf. Vin 4.93 (BD 2.352) in definition of "should dismiss." ¹¹ Cf. Vin 4.93 (BD 2.352) in definition of "should dismiss." ¹² Cf. above, BD 3.264. ¹³ Cf. Vin 4.69, Vin 4.97 (BD 2.301, BD 2.358), BD 2.269 (above, BD 3.264).

¹ Cf. Vin 4.94 (BD 2.353). Vin-a 927 says on the above passage, “if it is for conveying ticket-food or for putting in order something badly arranged in the dwelling-place.”

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 15

15.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3.270 that time a certain nun frequented a certain family as a regular diner.
Then that nun, having dressed in the morning, taking her bowl and robe, approached that family; having approached, having sat down on a seat, she departed without asking the owner (for permission).
4.272 The family's slave-woman, while sweeping the house, placed that seat inside a dish.¹ The people, not seeing that seat, spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, where is that seat?"

"I, sirs, did not see that seat."

Saying, "Lady, give back that seat," having scolded her, they stopped (her as) a regular diner. Then these people, searching² the house, having seen that seat inside the dish, having apologised to that nun, (re-) established her as a regular diner. Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can this nun, having approached families before a meal, having sat down on a seat, depart without asking the owner (for permission)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... the owner (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

¹ This sounds odd, but we know little of the sizes of the dishes and vessels used. But if the āsana, the seat, defined below as "the place for sitting cross-legged," was only a rush- or padded-seat for sitting on on the floor, it could easily be mislaid in quite a moderate sized bowl. ² sodheti can also mean to clean.

“How, monks, can a nun ... depart without asking the owner (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, having approached families before a meal, having sat down on a seat, should depart without asking the owner (for permission), there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Before a meal means: from sunrise until midday.¹

Family means: there are four (kinds of) families: a noble family, a brahmin family, a merchant family, a low-caste family.²

Having approached means: having gone there.

A seat means: it is called a place for sitting cross-legged.³

Having sat down means: having sat down on this.

Should depart without asking the owner (for permission) means: whatever man in that family is learned, without asking him (for permission but) in letting herself pass a place that is sheltered from the rain,⁴ there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) and departs, there is an offence of ¹ This is the reverse of the definition of “wrong time” (for eating) at Vin 4.86 (BD 2.336). These two definitions together divide the day into two times for eating—the right and the wrong. ² = Vin 3.184, Vin 4.80, Vin 4.177. ³ pallaṅka must at some time have come to mean the thing sat upon, early on perhaps a simple mat. At Vin 1.192 pallaṅka is among various things which if used gives rise to a dukkata offence; while at Vin 2.280 nuns incur a similar offence if they sit on one, a half-pallaṅka being “allowed” instead. This may mean, however, sitting half cross-legged—so as to give more room. At Vin 2.169 a pallaṅka is allowed to be used by monks if the hair is destroyed (bhinditvā), while at Vin 4.299 this same proviso (here chinditvā, cut out) turns the nuns’ offence of using a pallaṅka into no offence.” It is defined here as “made by bringing (horse-) hair for it,” but at DN-a 86 as “made having put figures of wild animals on the legs.” See Dialogues of the Buddha 1.11, n. 5 for some interesting remarks. ⁴ anovassaka. Cf. deso anovassako at Vin 2.211. Vin-a 927 says that in making the first foot cross (or pass), there is an offence of wrong-doing; in making the second foot cross, one of expiation.

expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked (for permission) ... If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) ... there is an offence of expiation. If it is not for a place for sitting cross-legged, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is no offence.

15:23
4:273
There is no offence if she goes away asking (for permission); if it is one that is not movable¹; if she is ill; if there are accidents²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ asamhāṛime; presumably meaning that she can go away of her own accord if she has not been given a pallaṅka or other movable seat. ² Vin-a 927 says that if they depart (pakkamanti, variant reading °ati) without asking (for permission) should a fire have broken out in the house or if there are thieves or similar misfortunes, there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 16

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, having approached families after a meal, sat down on¹ a seat without having asked the owner (for permission) and moreover lay down on it. People, being shy of the nun Thullanandā, neither sat down on that seat nor lay down on it. The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nun Thullanandā, having approached families after a meal, sit down on a seat without asking the owner (for permission) and moreover lie down on it?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā ... and moreover lie down on it?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... and moreover lay down on it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... and moreover lie down on it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having approached families after a meal, should sit down on or should lie down on a seat without asking the owner (for permission), there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ abhi- ... abhi- may be intended to convey meaning of "loll" and "sprawl."

After a meal means: after midday has passed until the sun has set.

3.274

Family means: ...¹

Having approached means: having gone there.²

Without asking the owner (for permission) means: whatever man in that family is the owner, without asking him to give (permission).

A seat means:³

Should sit down on means: if she sits down on it, there is an offence of expiation.

Should lie down on means: if she lies down on it, there is an offence of expiation.

16.2.2

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) and sits down on or lies down on (a seat), there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked (for permission) ... (see Bi-Pc 15.2) ... there is no offence.

4.274

16.2.3

There is no offence if she, asking (for permission), sits down on or lies down on a seat; if it is a permanently appointed (seat); if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See Bi-Pc 15.2.1. ² See Bi-Pc 15.2.1. ³ See Bi-Pc 15.2.1.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 17

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns, going to Sāvattthī through the Kosalan districts, having arrived at a certain village in the evening, having approached a certain brahmin family, asked for accommodation.¹ Then that brahmin woman spoke thus to these nuns: "Wait, ladies, until the brahmin comes." The nuns, saying: "Until the brahmin comes!", having spread a sleeping-place, some sat down, others lay down. Then that brahmin having come during the night, spoke thus to that brahmin woman: "Who are these?"

"They are nuns, master."

Saying: "Throw out these shaven-headed strumpets,"² he threw them out from the house. Then these nuns, having arrived in Sāvattthī, told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, having approached families at the wrong time, having spread a sleeping-place without asking the owner (for permission), sit down on it³ and lie down on it?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... lay down on it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns, having approached families ... lie down on it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having approached families at the wrong time, having spread or having caused a sleeping- place to be spread without asking the owner (for permission), should sit down on it or should lie down on it, there is an offence of expiation.”

¹ okāsaṃ yācimsu. ² Cf. BD 3.178, BD 3.257, above. ³ Here and below abhinisidati, abhinipajjati; above merely nisidati, nipajjati. The stress of abhi- may mean, as in previous Pācittiya, to "loll" and "sprawl."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Wrong time means: from sunset until sunrise.¹

Family means: ... Having approached means: ... Without asking the owner (for permission) means: ... (see Bi-Pc 16.2.2) ...

Sleeping-place means: even a spreading of leaves.²

Having spread means: oneself having spread.

Having caused to be spread means: having caused another to spread.

Should sit down on means: Should lie down on means: ...

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) and having spread or having caused a sleeping-place to be spread, she sits down on it or lies down on it, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked (for permission) ... If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is no offence.

There is no offence if asking (for permission), having spread or having caused a sleeping-place to be spread, she sits down on it or lies down on it; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. other definitions of “wrong time” at BD 2.336 and above, BD 3.86. ² Other definitions of “sleeping-place” at BD 2.196 = BD 2.201, BD 2.244.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 18

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun who was the pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī¹ attended on Bhaddā Kāpilānī respectfully. Bhaddā Kāpilānī spoke thus to the nuns: "Ladies, this nun attends on me respectfully, I will give her this robe." Then that nun, because of a misapprehension,² because of a misunderstanding,³ saying: "Ladies, they say that I do not attend respectfully upon the lady, they do not say that she will give me a robe," made (someone) look down upon another. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding, make (someone) look down upon another?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... made (someone) look down upon another?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun, because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding, make (someone) look down upon another? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding, should make (someone) look down upon another, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ See Bi-Ss 3, Bi-Pc 11–Bi-Pc 13. ² duggahitena. I think here it does not mean that the robe was taken wrongly, but what Bhaddā said. ³ dūpadhāritena.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Because of a misapprehension means: because it was apprehended in a different manner.

Because of a misunderstanding means: because it was understood in a different manner.

Another means: one who is ordained. If she makes (someone) look down upon (her), there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) makes (someone) look down upon (her), there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she makes (someone) look down upon one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

There is no offence if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

¹ Surely should read anāpatti, no offence. ² This Pācittiya is unique in the nuns' group in having no more than these two regularly recurring instances where no offence is caused.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 19

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns, not seeing their own things, spoke thus to the nun Caṇḍakālī¹: "Has the lady not seen our things?" The nun Caṇḍakālī ... spread it about, saying:

"What, am I a thief then? What, am I just shameless? That these ladies, not seeing their own things, spoke thus to me: 'Has the lady not seen our things?' If indeed, ladies,² I take your things I am not a true recluse, I am falling away from the Brahma-life, I rise up in hell. But whoever speaks thus of me when it is not a fact, let her too be not a true recluse, let her fall away from the Brahma-life, let her rise up in hell."

Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Caṇḍakālī curse herself as well as another with hell as well as with the Brahma-life?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakālī cursed herself ... with the Brahma-life?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakālī curse herself as well as another with hell as well as with the Brahma-life? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should curse herself or another with hell or with the Brahma-life, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ See Bi-Ss 4, Bi-Ss 10, Bi-Ss 11. ² sacā h'ayye. Oldenberg says, Vin 4.367, that this may be sace aham ayye, and refers us to Vin 1.88, sacāca, with variant reading and interpretation given by Buddhaghosa, appearing at Vin 1.372.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Herself means: herself (individually).¹

Another means: one who is ordained.

If she curses with hell or with the Brahma-life, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) curses (her) with hell or with the Brahma-life, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she curses (her) with animal birth or with the realm of the departed or with human misfortune, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she curses one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.²

There is no offence if she is aiming at (explaining) the goal, if she is aiming at (explaining) a rule, if she is aiming at (explaining) the teaching³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ attānan ti paccattam = below, BD 3.281. This explanation will have been necessary if in early Buddhist thought attā was prevalently held to stand for Ātman, transcendental self. But here it has no such reference, meaning simply a person, an individual, pacca- = paṭi- throwing back the emphasis away from Ātman on to an individual or particular self X, as contrasted with Y. Paccattam at AN i.156 is explained by sāmaṃ at AN-a 2.256. ² This is the Sinhalese and Siamese reading. Oldenberg's edition reads: "if she thinks that she is ordained ...," as in sentence but one before. Offence of wrong-doing "should probably read no offence." ³ Vin 3.130 (BD 1.218, and see n. 2) = Vin 4.11 (BD 2.185) = Vin 4.309 (below, BD 3.345).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 20

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakalī, having quarrelled with the nuns, wept having struck¹ herself again and again. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Caṇḍakalī weep, having struck herself again and again?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakalī wept, having struck herself again and again?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakalī weep, having struck herself again and again? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should weep, having struck herself again and again, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Herself means: herself (individually).²

If she weeps, having struck herself again and again, there is an offence of expiation. If she strikes, (but) does not weep, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she weeps, (but) does not strike, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if, smitten by loss of relations or by loss of possessions¹ or by loss of health,² she weeps (but) does not strike; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ vadhivā, also meaning to punish. ² See above, BD 3.280.

The Second Division: that on the dark

4.278

¹ bhoga, usually translated in this sequence as “wealth,” must here refer either to the nun’s own few possessions or to her relatives’ wealth. ² Here three misfortunes or losses, vyasana, occur; five are given at AN iii.147, DN iii.235, where it is said that of these five, three (those mentioned above) do not cause beings to arise after death in painful states, while the other two do.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 21

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns bathed naked with prostitutes at the same ford of the river Aciravatī.¹ The prostitutes made fun of the nuns, saying: "Why in the world, ladies, is the Brahma-life led by you when you are young? Surely the pleasures of the senses should be enjoyed. When you are old, then you can lead the Brahma-life; thus will both extremes be experienced² by you." The nuns, being made fun of by these prostitutes, became ashamed.³ Then these nuns, having gone to a dwelling, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

"Because of this, monks, I will lay down a rule of training for nuns founded on ten reasons: for the excellence of the Order ... for following the discipline.⁴ And thus, monks, the nuns should set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should bathe naked, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ Cf. Vin 1.293 and above, BD 3.247. Other regulations as to the foods to be used by nuns when bathing given at Vin 2.280. ² pariggahita, literally taken up. ³ At Vin 1.293 this is the story said to have been told by Visākhā to the lord when she was asking him to confer the eight boons, and of which the giving of bathing cloths for the nuns was the last. ⁴ See BD 1.37f.; BD 2.87, BD 3.248, BD 2.323.

Should bathe naked means: if she bathes not clothed, not dressed,¹ there is an offence of expiation.

21.2.2

There is no offence if she is one whose robe is stolen² or if she is one whose robe is destroyed³; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ nivattha and pāruta, the words used above, are also those that together cover the putting on of the three robes; see BD 2.32, n. 2, n. 3. ² These words are defined (for monks) at BD 2.48—i.e., in Monks' Bu-NP 6 which, as is to be gathered from Vin-a 919, holds good for nuns as well as for monks. ³ See previous note.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 22

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time bathing cloths for the nuns were allowed by the lord.¹ The group of six nuns, saying: "Bathing cloths are allowed by the lord," wore bathing cloths that were not of a (proper) measure; they went about trailing (these) in front as well as behind.² Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the group of six nuns wear bathing cloths that are not of a (proper) measure?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns wear bathing cloths that are not of a (proper) measure?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns wear bathing cloths that are not of a (proper) measure? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"When a bathing cloth is being made for a nun, it must be made to a (proper) measure. This is the (proper) measure here: in length four spans according to the accepted span, in width two spans. For her who exceeds this (measure), there is an offence of expiation involving cutting down."³

Bathing cloth means: dressed in⁴ which, she bathes.

¹ At Vin 1.294. The giving of bathing cloths for the Order of nuns was the last of the eight boons which Visakha asked the lord to confer on her. The bathing cloth was the fifth robe to be pointed out to a nun at her ordination, Vin 2.272. ² Cf. above, BD 3.99. ³ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 87, Bu-Pc 89, Bu-Pc 90, Bu-Pc 91. ⁴ Here is another example of a garment to which nivattha refers; see BD 2.32, n. 2.

Is being made means: making or causing to be made.¹

It must be made to a (proper) measure. This is the (proper) measure here: in length four spans according to the accepted span, in width two spans means: if she makes it or causes it to be made exceeding this (measure), in the business there is an offence of wrong-doing; having cut it down on acquisition, an offence of expiation is to be confessed.

If what was incompletely executed by herself she has finished by herself, there is an offence of expiation. If she makes others finish what was incompletely executed by herself ... If what was incompletely executed by others she has finished by herself ... If she makes others finish what was incompletely executed by others, there is an offence of expiation. If she makes it or causes it to be made for another, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having acquired what was made for another, she makes use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.²

22.2.2

There is no offence if she makes it to the (proper) measure; if she makes it to less than the (proper) measure; if having acquired what was made for another (but) exceeding the (proper) measure, having cut it down, she makes use of it; if she makes a canopy or a ground-covering or a screen-wall or a mattress or a squatting-mat; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.³

¹ = Vin 3.226, Vin 4.168, Vin 4.171.

² = Vin 3.225, Vin 4.167, Vin 4.169, Vin 4.170, Vin 4.171.

³ = Vin 4.171.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 23

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun's robe of costly robe-cloth was badly made, badly sewn. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, this robe-cloth of yours is lovely, but the robe is badly made, badly sewn."

"If I unsew it, lady, will you sew it?"

"Yes, lady, I will sew it."

Then that nun, having unsewn that robe, gave it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā, thinking: "I will sew it, I will sew it," neither sewed it nor made an effort¹ to get it sewn. Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having had a nun's robe unsewn, neither sew it nor make an effort to get it sewn?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the Thullanandā, having had a nun's robe unsewn, neither sewed it nor made an effort to get it sewn?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor make an effort to get it sewn? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having unsewn or having made (another) unsew a nun's robe, if she is not afterwards prevented should neither sew it nor should make an effort to get it sewn, except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ ussukkaṃ karoti, or "to find energy." Cf. below, BD 3.309, BD 3.330.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

A nun's means: another nun's.

Robe means: any one robe of the six (kinds of) robes.

Having unsewn means: herself having unsewn.

Having made (another) unsew means: having made another unsew.

If she is not afterwards prevented means: if there is not an obstacle.¹

Should neither sew means: should not herself sew.

Nor should make an effort to get it sewn means: should not command another.²

Except on the fourth and fifth days means: having excluded the fourth and fifth days.

If she thinks, "I will neither sew it nor make an effort to get it sewn," in the mere throwing off of the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.³

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained, having unsewn or having made (another) unsew a robe, and if she is not afterwards prevented, neither sews it nor makes an effort to get it sewn, except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If, having unsewn or having made (another) unsew another requisite ... except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having unsewn or made (another) unsew a robe or another requisite of one who is not ordained ... except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ =below, BD 3.331. ² Cf. below, BD 3.310, BD 3.331. ³ Cf. below, BD 3.331.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle¹; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance²; if she, working,³ lets the fourth and fifth days pass; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc 2
BD 3.21

¹ antarāya; ten are enumerated at Vin 1.112, Vin 1.169. ² On analogy of Bi-Pc 34, Bi-Pc 45 below and following the Sinhalese version, I have adopted a different punctuation from that occurring in Oldenberg's text of Bi-Pc 23, hence altering the sense. Cf. also below, BD 3.310, BD 3.331. ³ Taking the Sinhalese and Siamese karontī as against Oldenberg's karontāṃ.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 24

24.1.1
3.290

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ nuns, having entrusted robes² to the hands of (other) nuns, set out on a tour of the country with (only) the inner and the upper robes. Those robes, deposited for a long time, became soiled; nuns dried them in the sun. Nuns spoke thus to these nuns: "Ladies, whose are these robes that are soiled?" Then these nuns told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns, having entrusted robes to the hands of (other) nuns, set out on a tour of the country with (only) the inner and the upper robes?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... with (only) the inner and the upper robes?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... with (only) the inner and the upper robes? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should miss going about in an outer cloak for five days,³ there is an offence of expiation."

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-NP 2 (BD 2.12). ² Merely called cīvara here. The sikkhāpada makes it clear that the saṅghāti, outer cloak, is meant; Vin-a 652 says that this is the case with the monks' cīvara mentioned in Bu-NP 2. At some time the nuns came to be allowed five robes, mentioned below. For these see BD 2, Introduction, p. xix. It is therefore quite possible to say here that the nuns went with "only" their inner and upper robes, if we think of these with the outer cloak as constituting the regular set of three robes, to which the other two were merely added as extras for the nuns.

³ pañcāhikam, what consists of five days

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should miss going about in an outer cloak for five days means: if on the fifth day she neither dresses in nor puts on nor dries in the sun the five robes, (but) lets the fifth day pass, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that five days are passed when they are passed, there is an offence of expiation.¹ If she is in doubt as to whether five days are passed, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that five days are not passed when they are passed, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that five days are passed when they are not passed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether five days are not passed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that five days are not passed when they are not passed, there is no offence.

There is no offence if, on the fifth day, she dresses in or puts on or dries the five robes in the sun; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Some material left out here. These clauses should state that the offence also depends on her not dressing in, putting on or drying the five robes. Vin-a 929 says that for each robe there is an offence, thus for the five (robes) there are five (offences).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 25

25.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.292 at that time a certain nun having walked for alms, having spread out a damp robe,¹ entered a dwelling-place. A certain nun, having put on that robe, entered a village for almsfood. She, having come out,² asked the nuns: "Ladies, have you not seen my robe?" The nuns told this matter to that nun. Then that nun ... spread it about, saying:

"How can this nun, without asking (for permission) put on my robe?" Then this nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun put on a nun's robe without asking (for permission)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... without asking (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can a nun ... without asking (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should wear a robe that should be handed back,³ there is an offence of expiation."

25.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

3.293 A robe that should be handed back means: if she dresses in or puts on any one robe of the five (kinds of) robes of one who is ordained, either if it was not given to her or without asking (permission) for it, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ allacīvara. Cf. Ja 6.51. Alla can mean wet, moist, and also fresh, new. ² This must refer to the first nun, meaning when she (later) came out of the dwelling-place.

³ cīvarasaṃkamanīyaṃ, explained at Vin-a 930 as paṭidātabbacīvara, a robe that should be restored, given back (to the rightful owner).

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) wears a robe that should be handed back, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she wears a robe of one who is not ordained and that should be handed back, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

There is no offence if she gives it or, if asking (permission) for it, she dresses in it or puts it on; if she is one whose robe is stolen,² if she is one whose robe is destroyed³; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Should doubtless read, "there is no offence." ² Cf. above, BD 3.284. ³ Cf. above, BD 3.284

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 26

26.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3:294 at that time the family who supported the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Lady, we will give robes for the Order of nuns." The nun Thullanandā saying: "You are very busy, there is much to be done," put an obstacle in the way.¹ Then that family's house was burnt down. They ... spread it about, saying: "How could the lady Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of our gift of faith?
We are down and out; all round,² both as to property and as to merit."
Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes?"³ ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

26.2.1
3:295 ¹ antarāyam akāsi, as we might, say, "made an objection." ² paribāhirā; the word also occurs at SN i.126. Vin 2.140. ³ Note how the interest is shifted from the laypeople to the nuns.

A group means: it is called an Order of nuns.¹

Robe means: any one robe of the six (kinds of) robes (including) the least one fit for assignment.²

Should put an obstacle in the way means: if, saying: “How can this robe be given?” she puts an obstacle in the way, there is an offence of expiation. If she puts an obstacle in the way of another requisite, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she puts an obstacle in the way of a robe or of another requisite for several nuns³ or for one nun or for a woman who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if she hinders having pointed out an advantage⁴; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ =below, BD 3.346. In the Vinaya, gaṇa is almost always a group of from one to four monks or nuns, while saṅgha is an Order—i.e., five or more monks or nuns. It is curious to find gaṇa and saṅgha identified, as above, but the wording of the introductory story appears to be responsible. ² =Vin 3.196, Vin 3.210, Vin 4.60, Vin 4.122, Vin 4.123, etc. ³ sambahula. With Old Commentary’s identification, above, of saṅgha and gaṇa, gaṇa a group, has moved from its normal second to the first place of that triad which is usually found as saṅgha gaṇa ekabhikkhūnī (Order, group, one nun). The second place has therefore to be filled by another word: sambahula is the obvious choice, for in Vinaya it is often virtually a synonym for gaṇa. “One nun” follows next in its usual order and form. Cf. below, BD 3.347.

⁴ Cf. below, BD 3.301.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 27

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time robe-material had accrued to an Order of nuns not at a right time.¹ Then that Order of nuns collected together wishing to distribute that robe-material. Now at that time the nuns who were pupils of the nun Thullanandā had gone out. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to those nuns²: "Ladies, nuns are gone out; the robe-material should not be distributed yet," (and) she held back the division of the robe-material. Nuns, saying: "The robe-material should not be distributed yet," parted company. When the nuns who were pupils returned, the nun Thullanandā had that robe-material distributed. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā hold back a legally valid division of robe-material?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, that the nun Thullanandā held back a legally valid division of robe-material?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā hold back a legally valid division of robe-material? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should hold back a legally valid division of robe

¹ See Nuns' Bu-NP 2, where also Thullanandā takes a hand in robe-distribution, and where robe- (material given) not at a right time is defined. Cf. also Monks' Bu-NP 3, where akālacivara may be accepted by a monk. It is to be gathered from Vin-a 919 that the Monks' Bu-NP 3 holds good for nuns as well as for monks. ² Presumably to those constituting the Order, for the pupils had not yet returned.

material, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Legally valid division of robe-material means: a complete Order of nuns, having collected together, distributes it.²

Should hold back means: if, saying: “How could one distribute this robe-material?”³ she holds it back, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that it is legally valid when it is legally valid (and) holds (the division) back, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is legally valid ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not legally valid when it is legally valid ... no offence. If she thinks that it is legally valid when it is not legally valid, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not legally valid, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not legally valid when it is not legally valid, there is no offence.

There is no offence if she holds it back having pointed out an advantage; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. below, Bi-Pc 30. ² “Pupils,” not being fully ordained, did not rank as nuns with administrative powers, although they were called antevāsibhikkhuniyo. Therefore their absence from a ceremony would not invalidate it, as would the absence of a fully ordained nun. “Complete” (samagga) interpreted at Vin-a 792 as meaning “all come”; see BD 2.267, and note 7. ³ Oldenberg Vin 4.368, proposes to read idam cīvaraṃ bhājiyeyya for text’s imam cīvaraṃ bhājeyya. Sinhalese edition has idam cīvaraṃ bhājeyya; Siamese edition same as text.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 28

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā gave¹ recluses' robe-material to players² and to dancers³ and to female tumblers⁴ and to female conjurers⁵ and to drummers,⁶ saying: "Do praise me in public."⁷ The players and the dancers and the tumblers and the conjurers and the drummers praised the nun Thullanandā in public, saying: "The lady Thullanandā is very learned, she is a repeater, she is wise, she is skilled in giving talk on dhamma."⁸ Give for the lady, make for the lady." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā give recluses' robe-material to a householder?" ...

¹ Cf. below, BD 3.332. ² naṭā, explained at Vin-a 931 as "those who play (or dance, nāṭenti) a pantomime (or dance, nāṭakaṃ)." This last is probably dance-drama. There was no hard-and-fast line in ancient India between dancing, acting and miming; all were needed together, with drumming, for the full production. At SN iv.306f. players, nāṭa, are said by Gotama, as recorded, to arouse wrong states of mind in their audience, and to be reborn in the Hell of Laughter. ³ nāṭaka, explained at Vin-a 931 as those who dance (naccanti). Word occurs at Mil 331, translated as "play actor," and at Mil 191. ⁴ laṅghikā, "those who do tumbling on bamboos and thongs," Vin-a 931. Laṅghakā (plural) occurs at Mil 34, Mil 191, Mil 331; Ja 2.142. ⁵ sokajjhāyikā. Vin-a 931 reads sokasāyikā, with variant readings as text and sokachāyī, and explains as "illusion-makers." Cf. Ja 6.580, explained thus here too, and with the further meaning of those who allay and dispel grief. ⁶ kumbhathūṇikā, explained at Vin-a 931 as players with a small jar (ghaṭaka?). Word also occurs at Ja 5.506, Ja 6.580 (not explained) and DN i.6; see Dialogues of the Buddha 1.8, n. 4. DN-a 84 says that kumbhathūṇa is the noise of a pot striking a four-cornered trough, which explanation Dialogues of the Buddha 1.8, n. 4 says is "obscure and probably corrupt." ⁷ parisati.

⁸ As in Nuns' Bu-NP 10, Bu-NP 11, Bu-Pc 33.

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā gave recluses’ robe-material to a householder?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā give recluses’ robe material to a householder? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should give recluses’ robe-material to a householder or to a wanderer or to a female wanderer, there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Householder means: he who inhabits a house.¹

Wanderer means: excluding monk and novice, he who has reached (the stage of a) wanderer.²

Female wanderer means: excluding nun and probationer and female novice, she who has reached (the stage of a) female wanderer.³

Recluses’ robe-material means: it is called made allowable.⁴ If she gives, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if she gives to (her) parents; if she gives for the time being⁵; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = Vin 3.212, Vin 3.219, Vin 3.259 (BD 2.47, BD 2.60, BD 2.148). ² = Vin 4.92 (BD 2.349)=below, BD 3.332, and cf. Vin 4.224. ³ = Vin 4.92 (BD 2.349)=below, BD 3.332, and cf. Vin 4.224. ⁴ kappakata. Cf. definition of “new (robe)” as akalakappa at Vin 4.120. See BD 2.407, n. 5, n. 6, and BD 2.409, n. 5. ⁵ Cf. BD 1.110, n. 7.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 29

29.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.300 at that time the family who supported the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "If we, lady, are able, we will give robe-material for the Order of nuns." Now at that time nuns, having kept the rains-retreat, collected together wishing to distribute robe-material. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to these nuns: "Wait, ladies, there is for the Order of nuns an expectation of robe-material." The nuns spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Do go, lady, and find out about this robe-material." The nun Thullanandā approached that family; having approached she spoke thus to the people: "Sirs, do give robe-material for the Order of nuns." They said: "Lady, we are not able to give robe-material for the Order of nuns." The nun Thullanandā told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, when an expectation of robe-material is not sure,¹ let the robe-season² pass?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... let the robe-season pass?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... let the robe-season pass? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, when an expectation of robe-material is not sure, should let the robe-season pass, there is an offence of expiation.”

¹ dubbala, not strong, weak; uncertain, not sure, low or poor. ² Cf. Vin 3.261 (BD 2.152f.).

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

When an expectation of robe-material is not sure means: if they say, “If we are able, we will give, we will make,” (but their) word becomes broken.

Robe-season means: the last month of the rainy season when the kaṭhina cloth is not (formally) made, the five months when it is (formally) made.¹

Should let the robe-season pass means: if she lets pass the last day of the rainy season when the kaṭhina cloth is not (formally) made, there is an offence of expiation. If she lets the day pass for removing the kaṭhina (privileges),² there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that the robe-material is not sure when it is not sure (and) lets the robe-season pass, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether the robe-material is not sure ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that the robe-material is sure³ when it is not sure ... no offence. If she thinks that the robe-material is not sure when it is sure, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether the robe-material is sure, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that the robe-material is sure when it is sure, there is no offence.

There is no offence if she hinders having pointed out an advantage⁴; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = definition of “time of giving robes” at Vin 4.74, Vin 4.100 (BD 2.311, BD 2.366), and cf. Vin 3.204. ² Cf. Vin 3.196 (BD 2.5 and notes). ³ adubbala. ⁴ = above, BD 3.295.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 30

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a dwelling-place had been erected by a certain lay-follower for the Order. He, at the festival for this dwelling-place, was desirous of giving robe-material at the wrong time for both the Orders. Now at that time the kaṭhina cloth for both the Orders was (formally) made. Then that lay-follower, having approached the Order,¹ asked for the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges).² They told this matter to the lord. Then the lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to remove the kaṭhina (privileges). And thus, monks, should the kaṭhina (privileges) be removed: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order remove the kaṭhina (privileges). This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order removes the kaṭhina (privileges). If the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent. If it is not pleasing, they should speak. The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed by the Order, and it is right ... So do I understand this.’”

Then that lay-follower, having approached the Order of nuns, asked for the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). The nun Thullanandā, thinking, “There will be robe-material for us,” held back the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). Then that lay-follower ... spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns not give a removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) for us?” Nuns heard that lay-follower who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the nun Thullanandā hold back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges)?” ...

¹ I.e., the Order of monks, as one gathers from the context. ² See BD 2.5, n. 3, BD 2.6, n. 5. Here the removal must depend on the ground of the robes being settled, or on that of the general removal of the privileges by a whole Order.

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā held back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges)?”

“It is true, lord “... (see Bi-Pc 27.1) “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should hold back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges), there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case. Bi-Pc 3

Legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) means a complete Order of nuns, having collected together, remove them.¹

Should hold back means: if, saying: “How can this kaṭhina (privilege) be removed?” she holds it back, there is an offence of expiation.²

If she thinks that it is legally valid when it is legally valid (and) holds it back ... (see Bi-Pc 27.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer. Bi-Pc 3

The Third Division: that on being naked

¹ Cf. Bi-Pc 27.2.1. ² Cf. Bi-Pc 27.2.1.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 31

31.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.304 at that time two nuns shared¹ one couch.² People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place, having seen (them) ... spread it about, saying: "How can two nuns share one couch, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can two nuns share one couch?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that two nuns shared one couch?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

4.289 "How, monks, can two nuns share one couch? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever two nuns should share one couch, there is an offence of expiation."

31.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Nuns mean: they are called ordained.

Two should share one couch means: if one is lying down and the other lies down, there is an offence of expiation. Or if both are lying down, there is an offence of expiation. If having got up, they lie down again, there is an offence of expiation.

31.2.2 ¹ tuvattenti, explained at Vin-a 932 as to lie down on. ² At Vin 2.124 it is made a dukkata offence for monks to share one couch. At Vin 2.10 one of the bad habits indulged in by lax monks was the sharing of one couch with women of respectable families.

There is no offence if one is lying down and the other sits down, or if both are sitting down; if they are mad, if they are the first wrongdoers.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 32

32.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.305 at that time two nuns shared one covering-cloth.¹ People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place ... (see Bi-Pc 31.1. Instead of one couch read one covering-cloth) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever two nuns should share one covering-cloth, there is an offence of expiation.”

32.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Nuns mean: they are called ordained.

Two should share one covering-cloth means: if having covered themselves with that,² they put that³ on, there is an offence of expiation.

32.2.2 If they think that it is one covering-cloth when it is one covering-cloth (and) share it, there is an offence of expiation. If they are in doubt as to whether it is one covering-cloth ... If they think they are different covering-cloths when it is one covering-cloth ... offence of expiation. If they think that they are different cloths when it is one covering, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they think that it is one covering-cloth when they are different coverings, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they think that it is one covering-cloth when they are different covering-cloths, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they are in doubt as to whether they are different covering-cloths, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they think that they are different covering-cloths when they are different covering-cloths, there is no offence.

¹ ekattharaṇapāvuraṇa. Vin-a 932 says that this means one covering as well as a cloth. At Vin 2.10, among the bad habits indulged in by lax monks were that they shared one covering, attharaṇa, that they shared one cloth, pāvuraṇā, and that they shared one covering-cloth, attharaṇapāvuraṇā with women of respectable families. At Vin 2.124 the group of six monks shared these articles, thereby incurring an offence of wrong-doing. The fact that the two words attharaṇa and pāvuraṇā appear both separately and then together (see also below), to my mind shows that, when joined, they stand for one article: a cloth used as a covering, therefore a covering-cloth. There is also the reference to it as taṃ (acc.), “that”; see next note. ² tañ ñeva ... tañ ñeva. ³ tañ ñeva ... tañ ñeva.

BD 3,3

There is no offence if they lie down having pointed out an arrangement¹; if they are mad, if they are the first wrong-doers.

Bi-Pc 3

Vin 4,2

¹ vavatthāna. Vin-a 932 says that for those who lie down having placed the “yellow robes” in the middle or a walking-staff or even a belt, there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 33

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater, she was wise, she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk.¹ Bhaddā Kāpilānī² also was very learned ... she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk, she was esteemed as being eminent.³ People, thinking: "Bhaddā Kāpilānī is very learned ... she is skilled in giving dhamma-talk, she is esteemed as being eminent," having first visited⁴ Bhaddā Kāpilānī afterwards visited the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā, overcome by envy,⁵ thinking: "Those who are said to have few wants, to be content, detached, not living in company, these are intent on convincing,⁶ intent on hinting," walked up and down and stood still and sat down and lay down on a sleeping-place and recited and made (another) recite and studied⁷ in front of Bhaddā Kāpilānī. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā intentionally cause discomfort to the lady Bhaddā Kāpilānī?"

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā intentionally caused discomfort to Bhaddā Kāpilānī?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā intentionally cause dis-

¹ As in Nuns' Bi-NP 10, Bi-NP 11, Bi-Pc 28. ² Cf. above, BD 3.186, n. 1.

³ uḷārasambhāvitā. ⁴ payirupāsati also means to honour. ⁵ issāpakatā, as at SN ii.260, Vin 3.107. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 932 takes it as issāya pakatā, envious by nature, with the variant reading apakatā, not having done away with envy.

⁶ saññattibahulā. ⁷ For these last two cf. BD 2.192 (Vin 4.15).

comfort to Bhaddā Kāpilānī? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should intentionally cause discomfort to a nun, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

To a nun means: to another nun.

Intentionally means: a transgression committed knowingly, consciously, deliberately.²

Should cause discomfort means: if thinking, “Because of this there will be discomfort for her,” she walks up and down or stands still or sits down or lies down on a sleeping-place or recites or makes (another) recite or studies in front of (her) without asking (for permission),³ there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) intentionally causes discomfort, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained (and) intentionally causes discomfort, there is an offence of expiation. If she intentionally causes discomfort to one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁴

There is no offence if she, not desiring to cause discomfort (and) having asked (for permission), walks up and down ... or studies in front of (her); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 77. ² = Vin 3.73; see BD 1.126, n. 3. ³ This appears to be a gloss, limiting the scope of the rule. ⁴ Should doubtless be “no offence.”

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 34

34.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.309 at that time the nun Thullanandā, when (the woman) who lived with her¹ was ailing, neither attended to her nor made an effort² to get her attended to. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, when (the woman) who lives with her is ailing, neither attend to her nor make an effort to get her attended to?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... neither attended to her nor ... attended to?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, when (the woman) who lives with her is ailing, neither attend to her nor make an effort to get her attended to? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should neither attend to an ailing (woman) who lives with her nor should make an effort to get her attended to, there is an offence of expiation."

34.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Ailing means: she is called ill.

¹ sahajīvinī. cf. below, BD 3.375, BD 3.379. Not necessarily a fully ordained nun, for the sahajīvinī might be a pupil or one not ordained (see Bi-Pc 34.2.1 below), while Bi-Pc 68 and Bi-Pc 70 speak of Thullanandā ordaining her sahajīvinī, which means that they had shared a cell before the latter was ordained. ² Cf. above, BD 3.287, below, BD 3.330.

(Woman) who lives with her means: she is called one who shares her cell.¹

Should neither attend to her means: should not herself attend to her.²

Nor should make effort to get her attended to means: should not command another.³

If she thinks, “I will neither attend to her nor make an effort to get her attended to,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.⁴ If she attends neither to a pupil nor to one who is not ordained nor makes an effort to get her attended to, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle⁵; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ saddhivihārīnī, co-resident. Also below, BD 3.375, BD 3.379. ² Cf. above, BD 3.288, below, BD 3.331. ³ Cf. above, BD 3.288, below, BD 3.331. ⁴ Cf. above, BD 3.288, below, BD 3.331. ⁵ Cf. above, BD 3.289, but where the text's punctuation is different, and below, BD 3.331. I prefer that obtaining in Bi-Pc.34 and Bi-Pc.45.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 35

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Bhaddā Kāpilānī had spent the rains in Saketa. As she had some business to do, she sent a messenger to the nun Thullanandā, saying: "If the lady Thullanandā would give me quarters, I would come to Sāvattthī." The nun Thullanandā spoke thus: "Let her come, I will give it." Then Bhaddā Kāpilānī went from Saketa to Sāvattthī. The nun Thullanandā gave quarters to Bhaddā Kāpilānī. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater ... (see Bi-Pc 33.1) ... she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk. The nun Thullanandā, thinking: "Those who are said to have few wants ... (see Bi-Pc 33.1) ... intent on hinting," angry, displeased threw Bhaddā Kāpilānī out of her quarters. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, angry, displeased, having given quarters to the lady Bhaddā Kāpilānī, throw her out?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... threw her out?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... throw her out? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having given quarters to a nun, should, angry, displeased, throw her out or have her thrown out, there is an offence of expiation."¹

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 17.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

A nun¹ means: another nun.

Quarters means: it is called fastened by a door.²

Having given means: oneself having given.

Angry, displeased means: dissatisfied, the mind worsened, stubborn.³

Should throw out means: if, having taken (her) in a room, she throws her out on to the verandah, there is an offence of expiation. If, having taken her on the verandah, she throws her outside, there is an offence of expiation. If, with one effort, she makes her pass through many doors, there is an offence of expiation.⁴ Should have her thrown out means: if she commands another, there is an offence of wrong-doing. When once commanded, if she makes her pass through many doors, there is an offence of expiation.⁵

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) having given her quarters, angry, displeased, throws her out or has her thrown out, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she throws out or has her requisites thrown out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she throws out or has her thrown out from what is not fastened by a door ... If she throws out or has her requisites thrown out ... If she throws out or has one who is not ordained thrown out from what is or from what is not fastened by a door ... If she throws out or has her requisites thrown out ... If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁶

¹ Accusative. ² = definition of "dwelling" at BD 3.336, below. ³ Cf. BD 1.281, BD 2.140, BD 2.251; Vin 4.146, Vin 4.236. ⁴ Cf. BD 2.251f. ⁵ Cf. BD 2.251f. ⁶ Last clause should probably read "no offence." Cf. whole paragraph with BD 2.252.

There is no offence if she throws out or has one who is shameless thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she throws out or has one who is mad thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she throws out or has one who makes strife ... quarrels ... contention ... brawls ... who makes disputes in the Order thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she throws out or has a pupil or one who shares a cell or one who is not proceeding fitly thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

¹ Cf. BD 2.253.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 36

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakalī kept company¹ with a householder and with a householder's son.² Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Caṇḍakalī keep company ...?"...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakalī kept company ...?"

"It is true, lord."

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakalī keep company with a householder and a householder's son? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should keep company with a householder or with a householder's son, that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Do not, lady, keep company with a householder and with a householder's son. Let the lady desist, the Order praises such detachment in a sister.' But if that nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, should persist as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to the third time for giving up that (course). If she should give it up, while being admonished up to the third time, that is good. If she should not give it up, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ This Pācittiya should be compared with the Nuns' Bi-Ss 12. The Pācittiya, partaking as it does of Saṅghādisesa material and character, seems out of place here. The main difference is that in the Pācittiya, a nun lived in society with a householder, while in the Saṅghādisesa, nuns who were pupils lived in society and were of evil habits and so on. Cf. also Bi-Pc 79. ² gahapatināpi gahapatiputtana pi. Cf. DN i.62; MN i.179, MN i.344.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Keeps company means: keeps company unbecomingly as to body and speech.

Householder means: he who inhabits a house. Householder's son means: he who is a son or brother.¹

That nun means: that nun who keeps company.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these: "Do not, lady, ... the Order praises such detachment in a sister." And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. But if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Having heard, if they do not speak, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun, having been pulled to the midst of the Order, should be told: "Do not, lady, ... the Order praises such detachment in a sister." And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. But if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun should be admonished. And thus, monks, should she be admonished: the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: "Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so keeps company with a householder and with a householder's son. She does not give up this course. If it seems right to the Order let the Order admonish the nun so and so for giving up this course. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so ..." And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The nun so and so is admonished by the Order for giving up this course. If it is pleasing ... So do I understand this.²

As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing; as a result of two proclamations, there are offences of wrong-doing. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

¹ yo koci puttabhātaro. ² Cf. Nuns' Bi-Ss 10.

There is no offence if she is not admonished; if she gives it up; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

Bi-Pc 3

¹ Should no doubt read “no offence.” ² Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Ss 10.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 37

37.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3.317 that time nuns walked without a weapon¹ on almstour within (their own) region² (when this was) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening.³ Bad men assaulted them. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ... dangerous, frightening?" ...
"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... dangerous, frightening?"
"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... dangerous, frightening? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should walk without a weapon on alms-tour within (her own) region (when this is) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening, there is an offence of expiation."

37.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

3.318 Within (her own) region means: in a region of that country⁴ in which she lives.

Dangerous means: if on this road a place where thieves are halt-

¹ asatthikā. As in Monks' Bu-Pc 27, translators differ as to whether this means "without a weapon" or not (having joined) a caravan. See BD 2.289, n. 3. I here follow B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature 1.75 (No.21), and not WALDSCHMIDT, Bruchstücke des Bhikṣuni-Prātimokṣa der Sarvāstivādins, p. 127, "ohne sich einer Karawane angeschlossen zu haben." ² antoraṭṭhe. Not given in Pali-English Dictionary or Critical Pali Dictionary, but cf. tiroraṭṭha in next Pācittiya. ³ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 27, where the only legal occasion where a monk might go along the same highroad with a nun was if the road was dangerous and frightening. ⁴ vijita, or kingdom, territory, conquered land.

ing is seen, a place where they are eating is seen, a place where they are resting is seen, a place where they are sitting down is seen, a place where they are lying down is seen.¹

Frightening means: if on this road people injured by thieves are seen, (people) plundered are seen, (people) beaten down are seen.²

Without a weapon³ means: without a weapon.⁴

Should walk on almstour means: in a village close enough for a cock (to walk), among every (such) village, there is an offence of expiation. For every half yojana in what is not a village, in a jungle, there is an offence of expiation.⁵

There is no offence if she goes with a weapon; if she goes in a place of security⁶ that is not frightening; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc 3

Vin 4.2

¹ = BD 2.158, BD 2.290. ² = BD 2.158, BD 2.290. ³ asatthikā, more literally “weaponless.” ⁴ vinā satthena. ⁵ Cf. BD 2.290 in definition of “even among villages”; BD 2.294; and above, BD 3.16. ⁶ khema; a word which at some time became important as being applied particularly to spiritual peace, nibbana.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 38

38.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3.319 that time nuns walked without a weapon on almstour outside (their own) region¹ (when this was) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening. Bad men ... (see Bi-Pc 37.1. Instead of within (her own) region read outside (her own) region) ...” ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should walk without a weapon outside (her own) region (when this is) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening, there is an offence of expiation.”

38.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Outside (her own) region means: setting aside that country in which she lives, in another's region.

Dangerous means: ... (see Bi-Pc 37.2) ... if she is the first wrongdoer.

¹ tīroratṭhe.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 39

... at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time nuns walked on alms-tour during the rains. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns walk on almstour during the rains, trampling down the crops and grasses, injuring life that is one-facultied, bringing many small creatures to destruction?"¹ Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can these nuns ... during the rains ... bringing many small creatures to destruction?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... during the rains ... bringing many small creatures to destruction?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns walk on almstour during the rains ... bringing many small creatures to destruction? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should walk on almstour during the rains, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ These three phrases occur at Vin 1.137, Vin 1.138, where rains-retreat is allowed to the monks, for lay-people had complained that by walking for alms in all seasons they did harm to crops and small living things, and where it is made a dukkata for monks to set out on almstour before they have kept the earlier or later three months of the rains. For "life that is one-facultied," cf. BD 2.223, BD 2.226, and for "small creatures to destruction," cf. BD 2.71.

During the rains means: not having spent the first three months or the last three months.¹

Should walk on almstour means: in a village close enough for a cock (to walk) ... (see Bi-Pc 37.2.1) ... in what is not a village, in the jungle, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if she goes away for seven days because there is something to be done; if she goes away because she is troubled about something; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ The rains were reckoned to occupy four months; three of these had to be spent in a rains-settlement, on which there were two times for entering, Vin 1.137. Cf. definition of “having spent the rains” below, BD 3.322, BD 3.354.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 40

... at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time nuns, as before,¹ spent the rains in Rājagaha, the cold weather there, the hot weather there. People ... spread it about, saying: "The (four) quarters are blocked,² confused with nuns; because of them the (four) quarters are not seen."³ Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

"Because of this, monks, I will lay down a rule of training founded on ten reasons: for the excellence of the Order⁴ ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having kept the rains, should not set out on almstour, even for (a distance of) five or six yojanas, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Having kept the rains means: having kept the first three months or the last three months.⁵

If she thinks "I will not set out on almstour, even for (the distance of) five or six yojanas,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ tatth'eva—i.e., as in Bi-Pc 39. ² āhundarika. See MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p. 73. ³ Cf. Vin 1.79 for a corresponding paragraph, and DN ii.99, AN iii.69 for the last phrase. The meaning clearly is that the nuns were too many for the place. It seems that the lay people were complaining on their own account and not on that of the nuns, as the dative (bhikkhunīnam, imāsam) might suggest.

⁴ As at BD 1.37, BD 2.87. ⁵ Cf. Vin 1.138, Vin 4.314.

40.2.2
3.323

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about for a nun as a companion,¹ she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

The Fourth Division: that on sharing

¹ It was an offence for a nun to go about singly. ² = BD 3.357, BD 3.380, below; and cf. BD 3.289, BD 3.310, BD 3.331, BD 3.336.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 41

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a bold design¹ was made in a picture gallery² in King Pase-nadi of Kosala's pleasure grove. Many people went to see the picture gallery. The group of six nuns also went to see the picture gallery. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns go to see the picture gallery, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns go to see a picture gallery?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns went to see a picture gallery?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can this group of six nuns go to see a picture gallery? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should go to see a king's pleasure house³ or a picture gallery or a park or a pleasure grove or a lotus pond,⁴ there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ paṭibhānacitta. See BD 2.285, n. 5. ² cittāgāra. ³ rājāgāra. Cf. DN i.1, °ka, which DN-a 42 explains as: "there they made a rest house (agāra) adorned with various designs (paṭibhānacitta) for the king's amusement. It was called a rājāgāra. ⁴ At Vin 2.123 a lay follower wanted to have a lotus pond built for the monks. The lord, as is said, allowed the lotus pond to the monks.

King's pleasure house means: wherever it is made for a king to amuse himself, to enjoy himself.

Picture gallery means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.

Park¹ means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.

Pleasure grove means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.²

Lotus pond means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.

If she goes to see, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees, there is an offence of expiation. Having left the region of sight, if she sees again, there is an offence of expiation. If she goes to see one or the other, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees, there is an offence of expiation. Having left the region of sight, if she sees again, there is an offence of expiation.³

4.299

41.2.2

There is no offence if, standing in a monastery, she sees;⁴ if she sees as she is going out or coming in⁵; if she sees, having gone out as there is something to be done;⁶ if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ ārāma, which I have usually translated as “monastery”; see BD 2.2, n. 2. ² uyyāna therefore here does not have the special meaning of “royal” pleasance, as is sometimes the case. ³ Cf. Vin 4.108 (BD 2.380). As Vin-a 934 points out, the last two clauses there, corresponding to the last two above, incur an offence of wrong-doing. It is sometimes the case that monks incur a lesser penalty than the nuns for a comparable offence. ⁴ According to Vin-a 934 this means that if she sees them building a king's pleasure house and so on when she is inside a monastery. ⁵ Vin-a 934 explains that if she sees when on the road for her almstour, there is no offence. ⁶ Vin-a 934, in the king's presence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 42

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns made use of a sofa¹ and of a divan.² People, engaged in touring the dwelling place, having seen (them) ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns make use of a sofa and of a divan, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns make use of a sofa and of a divan?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns made use of a ... divan?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns make use of a sofa and of a divan? It is not,

¹ āsandī. This is the first of the high seats, the large seats which the group of six monks used, thereby incurring a dukkata offence, Vin 1.192. The same list occurs at Vin 2.163, where monks are allowed to sit down on all but āsandī, pallaṅka (see next note) and tūlika, but to lie down on none; also at AN 1.181, and DN 1.7 as being among the seats which Gotama is said to refrain from using. At Vin 2.142-143 āsandī and pallaṅka, with bowls and shoes, are the only wooden articles not allowed to monks.

See Dialogues of the Buddha, 1.11, n. 4, where Rhys Davids is of the opinion that height and not length is referred to. The fact that in this Pācittiya it is "no offence" to use an āsandī if the legs have been cut down, also points this way, as does the allowance given monks at Vin 2.169-170 to use āsandī if the legs have been broken, bhinditvā. On the other hand, at DN 1.55 = MN 1.515 = SN iii.207 an āsandī is used as a bier—i.e., as something long, SN-a ii.339 = MN-a 3.227, calling it a couch for lying down on, with (MN-a) variant reading "for sitting down on." Old Commentary, below speaks of sitting down on and lying down on. CHALMERS Jātaka translation 1.10, translates as "couch" (in a cart); it is therefore not "clear from Ja 1.108" that āsandī is a "cushion" as stated at Vinaya Texts ii.27, n. 2. ² pallaṅka. See above, BD 3.271, n. 3.

monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should make use of a sofa or of a divan, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

42.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Sofa means: it is called of exceeding measure.

Divan means: it is made having brought hair (stuffing).²

Should make use of means: if she sits down on it or lies down on it, there is an offence of expiation.

42.2.2

There is no offence if, having cut down the legs of the sofa, she makes use of it; if, having cut out the hair (stuffing) from the divan, she makes use of it³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ A dukkāṭa for nuns to sit on a divan at Vin 2.280, a half-(aḍḍha-) pallaṅka being allowed instead. ² vāla at MN-a 2.45 is explained as assavāla, horse-hair. ³ Cf. Vin 2.169–70, where these articles are allowed to monks if the legs of the former are broken, bhīnditvā, and the horse-hair of the latter destroyed, bhīnditvā. Above the reading is in both cases chīnditvā, cut.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 43

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns spun yarn. People, engaged in touring the dwelling place, having seen (them) ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns spin yarn, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns spin yarn?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns spin yarn?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns spin yarn? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should spin yarn, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Yarn means: the six (kinds of) yarn: linen, cotton, silk, wool, coarse hempen cloth, canvas.¹

Should spin means: if she herself spins, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every running up² there is an offence of expiation.

¹ = Vin 3.256. The same as the six kinds of robe-material; see BD 2.143 for notes.

² ujjavujjave; a term used in spinning, found I think only here. Vin-a 935 seems to say "if whatever was rolled by hand (hatthena, Pali-English Dictionary giving the reading patthena, by measure) is twisted round on that spindle (? takka), there is one offence."

There is no offence if she spins spun yarn¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ kantitasutta; kantita can also mean “cut off.” Vin-a 935 explains by saying, “if she spins having bound together loose yarn (dasikasutta), or if she unspins what was badly spun, there is no offence.”

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 44

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns did household work. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns do household work?"

...
"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns do household work?"
"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:
"How, monks, can nuns do household work? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:
"Whatever nun should do household work, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Household work means: if she cooks conjei or rice or solid food for a layman,¹ if she washes a cloak or a turban, there is an offence of expiation

There is no offence if it is a drink of conjei,² if it is for the Order; if it is for worship at a shrine; if in doing household work for herself she cooks conjei or rice or solid food, washes a cloak or a turban; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ agārika. ² Vin-a 935 says that there is no offence in cooking a drink of conjei (yāgupāna, cf. Vin 1.84, Vin 1.339) or rice for the Order (given) for it by people.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 45

45.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.330 at that time a certain nun, having approached the nun Thullanandā, spoke thus: "Do come, lady, and settle this legal question." The nun Thullanandā, having answered, "Very good," neither settled it nor made an effort to get it settled.¹ Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:
"How can the lady Thullanandā, being spoken to by a nun, saying:
'Do come, lady, and settle this legal question,' and having answered,
'Very good,' neither settle it nor make an effort to get it settled?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... to get it settled?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor make an effort to get it settled? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, being spoken to by a nun, saying: 'Do come, lady, and settle this legal question,' and having answered: 'Very good,' (yet) if she is not afterwards prevented, should neither settle it nor should make an effort to get it settled, there is an offence of expiation."

45.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

By a nun means: by another nun.

Legal question means: there are four (kinds of) legal questions:

¹ Cf. Bi-Pc 23, Bi-Pc 34, Bi-Pc 77.

legal questions arising out of disputes legal questions arising out of censure, legal questions arising out of transgressions, legal questions arising out of obligations.¹

Do come, lady, and settle this legal question means: Do come, lady, and decide this legal question.

If she is not afterwards prevented means: if there is not an obstacle.²

Should neither settle it means: should not herself settle it.³

Nor should make an effort to get it settled means: should not command another.⁴

If she thinks, "I will neither settle it nor make an effort to get it settled," in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.⁵

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) neither settles a legal question nor makes an effort to get it settled, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she neither settles a legal question nor makes an effort to get it settled for one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrongdoing.⁶

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if having looked about, she does not get the chance⁷; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = Vin 3.164 (BD 1.282). ² = above, BD 3.288. ³ = above, BD 3.288, BD 3.310.

⁴ = above, BD 3.288, BD 3.310. ⁵ = above, BD 3.288, BD 3.310. ⁶ Last clause should probably read "no offence." ⁷ = above, BD 3.289, BD 3.310, and below, BD 3.336,
BD 3.355.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 46

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā gave with her own hand solid food and soft food to players and dancers ... (see Bi-Pc 28.1) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should give with her own hand solid food or soft food to a householder or to a wanderer or to a female wanderer, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Householder means: ... (see Bi-Pc 28.2) ... she who has reached (the stage of a) female wanderer.

Solid food means: excluding the five (kinds of) meals and water for cleansing the teeth, the rest is called solid food.²

Soft food means: the five (kinds of) meals: cooked rice, food made with flour, barley-meal, fish, meat.³

Should give means: if she gives by means of the body or by means of something attached to the body or by means of something that may be cast, there is an offence of expiation.⁴ If she gives water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if she gets (someone) to give (but) does not (herself) give; if she gives depositing it near; if she gives ointment for external (use); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.⁵

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 41. ² = Vin 4.92 (BD 2.349) and cf. Vin 4.83 (BD 2.330).

³ = Vin 4.83, Vin 4.92. For notes, see BD 2.330. ⁴ = Vin 4.92. ⁵ = Vin 4.92.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 47

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, not having given up her household robe,¹ made use of it. Other menstruating nuns did not obtain it. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, not having given up her household robe, make use of it?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... makes use of it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... make use of it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, not having given up her household robe, should make use of it, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Household robe means: it is given with the words: 'Let menstruating nuns make use of it.'

Not having given up, should make use of it means: if, having made use of it for two or three days, having washed it on the fourth day, she makes use of it, not having given it up to a nun or to a probationer or to a female novice, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ āvsathacīvara; allowed to nuns at Vin 2.271.

3:334 If she thinks that it is not given up when it is not given up (and) makes use of it, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not given up ... If she thinks that it is given up when it is not given up ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is not given up when it is given up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is given up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is given up when it is given up, there is no offence.

47:2-3 There is no offence if, having given it up, she makes use of it; if she makes use of it on a further occasion; if there are no other menstruating nuns; if she is one whose robe is stolen; if she is one whose robe is destroyed; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

4:304

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 48

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, not having given up her dwelling,¹ set out on almstour. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā's dwelling caught fire. Nuns spoke thus: "Come along, ladies, we are bringing out the things." Some spoke thus: "Ladies, we will not bring them out; she will make us responsible for² everything that is destroyed." The nun Thullanandā, having come back again to that dwelling, asked the nuns, saying: "Ladies, did you bring out my things?"

"We, lady, did not bring them out."

The nun Thullanandā ... spread it about, saying:

"How can these nuns, when a dwelling is on fire, not bring out the things?" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, not having given up her dwelling, set out on almstour?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... set out on almstour?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, not having given up her dwelling, set out on almstour? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, not having given up her dwelling, should set out on almstour, there is an offence of expiation."³

¹ āvasatha. ² amhe abhiyujjissati. ³ The offence is not in not saving property and helping one another, but in not making proper provision for the cure of property.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Dwelling means: it is called fastened by a door.¹

Not having given up, should set out on almstour means: if, not having given up to a nun or to a probationer or to a female novice, in passing beyond the enclosure of a dwelling that is fenced in, there is an offence of expiation. In passing beyond the precincts of a dwelling that is not fenced in, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that it is not given up when it is not given up (and) sets out, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not given up ... If she thinks that it is given up when it is not given up ... offence of expiation. If, not having given up what is not fastened by a door, she sets out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not given up when it is given up ... If she is in doubt as to whether it is given up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is given up when it is given up, there is no offence.

There is no offence if she sets out having given it up; if there is an obstacle; if having looked about she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. definition of “quarters,” upassaya, at BD 3.312, above. ² Cf. above, BD 3.289, BD 3.310, BD 3.323, BD 3.331.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 49

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns learnt worldly knowledge.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns learn worldly knowledge, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns learn worldly knowledge?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns learn worldly knowledge?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them saying:

"How, monks, can this group of six nuns learn worldly knowledge? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should learn worldly knowledge, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Worldly knowledge means: whatever is secular,² not connected with the goal.

¹ tiracchāna-vijjā, literally "animal wisdom." B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature 1. p.75 has "art for her livelihood," but Old Commentary, does not bear this out. At Vin 2.139 it is a dukkata for a monk to learn this. Cf. tiracchānakathā at Monks' Bu-Pc 85, "worldly talk"—i.e., talk on matters concerning life in the world. Vinaya Texts iii.152 renders by "the low arts"—those set out at DN i.9–DN i.12. ² bāhirakaṃ.

Should learn means: if she learns by line,¹ for every line there is an offence of expiation. If she learns by syllable, for every syllable there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if she learns writing²; if she learns what is memorised³; if she learns a spell⁴ for protection; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ padena; see BD 2.190, BD 2.191 and notes. ² lekham pariyāpuṇāti. See Vinaya Texts i. p. xxxiiff. and BD 1.131, n. ³ dhāraṇā, a memorising; cf. Mil 79, and dhammadhāraṇā at MN ii.175. ⁴ parittā. Cf. DN iii.206, where monks are enjoined to learn and master the Āṭānāṭiya rakkhā or ward rune. This is called atthasamhitā, connected with the goal; cf. foregoing definition of “worldly knowledge,” which therefore looks as if it does not include protective spells. See Dialogues of the Buddha 3.185ff. for discussion of position and use of the various named parittās in early Buddhism. The proximity of writing (late?) and protective spells (early?) points to a patchwork compilation of this Pācittiya.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 50

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns taught worldly knowledge.¹ People ... spread it about ... (Bi-Pc 44.1. Instead of learn read teach.) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should teach² worldly knowledge, there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Worldly knowledge means: ...

Should teach³ means: if she teaches by line ... (Bi-Pc 44.2. Instead of learns read teaches.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

The Fifth Division: that on a picture gallery

¹ At Vin 2.139 it is made a dukkāṭa for a monk to do so. ² vāceyya—i.e., should cause (someone) to repeat or speak. ³ Cf. Vin 4.15 (BD 2.192).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 51

51.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3:340 at that time several monks, (each) wearing (only) one robe, were making robes in a village residence. Nuns, having entered the monastery without asking (for permission), approached those monks. The monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns enter a monastery without asking (for permission)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... without asking (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns enter a monastery without asking (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should enter a monastery without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation."

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

51.2.1 Then these monks went out from that residence. The nuns, saying, 4:307 "The masters have gone out," did not go back to the monastery. Then these monks came back again to that residence. The nuns, saying, "The masters have come back," having entered the monastery asking (for permission), approached these monks, having approached, having greeted these monks, they stood at a respectful distance. As they were standing at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to these nuns: “Why do you, sisters, neither sweep the monastery nor provide drinking water and water for washing?”

“Masters, a rule of training came to be laid down by the lord that, without asking (for permission) a monastery should not be entered (by a nun), therefore we did not come.” They told this matter to the lord. He said:

“I allow, monks, (a nun) to enter a monastery asking (for permission) if a monk be there. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should enter a monastery without asking (for permission) if a monk be there,¹ there is an offence of expiation.”

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Then these monks, having gone out from that residence, came back again to that residence. The nuns, saying, “The masters have gone out,” entered the monastery without asking (for permission). These became remorseful and said: “A rule of training laid down by the lord for nuns says that a monastery should not be entered (by a nun) without asking (for permission) if a monk be there, and we, not asking (for permission) if a monk was there, entered the monastery. Is it now possible that we have fallen into an offence of expiation?” They told this matter to the lord. He said: “And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should knowingly enter a monastery with monks (in it) without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

She knows means: either she knows of herself or others tell her or these tell (her).²

A monastery with monks (in it) means: even where monks stay at the foot of a tree.

¹ Cf. Vin 4.100 (BD 2.365 and see n. 1). ² Cf. Vin 3.265 (BD 2.161), etc.

Should enter a monastery without asking (for permission) means: without asking a monk or a novice or a monastery attendant (for permission),¹ in passing beyond the enclosure of a monastery that is fenced in, there is an offence of expiation. In entering the precincts of a monastery that is not fenced in, there is an offence of expiation.²

If she thinks that there are monks (in it) when there are monks (in it) and enters a monastery without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether monks are (in it) ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that monks are not (in it) when monks are (in it) ... no offence. If she thinks that monks are (in it) when monks are not (in it), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether monks are not (in it), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that monks are not (in it) when monks are not (in it), there is no offence.

There is no offence if she enters asking (for permission) if a monk be there; if she enters not asking (for permission) if a monk be not there³; if she walks looking ahead⁴; if she goes where there are nuns gathered together; if (her) way is through a monastery; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Vin 4.40 (BD 2.241), and see Vin 2.211. ² Cf. Vin 4.166. ³ Cf. Vin 4.101 (BD 2.367). ⁴ Vin-a 937 says that there is no offence if she enters looking at the heads of the nuns who are entering first.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 52

... at Vesālī in the Great Grove at the Hall of the Gabled Pillars. Now at that time the venerable Kappitaka,¹ the venerable Upāli's preceptor,² lived in a cemetery. Now at that time an older³ nun of the group of six nuns had passed away. The group of six nuns, taking out that nun, having cremated her not far from the venerable Kappitaka's dwelling place, having made a tomb, having gone (there), wept at that tomb. Then the venerable Kappitaka, troubled by that noise, having destroyed that tomb, scattered (the materials). The group of six nuns took counsel,⁴ saying: "Our lady's tomb is destroyed by this Kappitaka, come, let us kill him." A certain nun told this matter to the venerable Upāli. The venerable Upāli told this matter to the venerable Kappitaka. Then the venerable Kappitaka, having gone out from that dwelling place, lay in hiding. Then the group of six nuns approached the venerable Kappitaka's dwelling place, having approached, having had the venerable Kappitaka's dwelling place covered over⁵ with stones and clods of earth, they departed, saying, "Kappitaka is dead." Then the venerable Kappitaka at the end of that night having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Vesālī for almsfood. The group of six nuns saw the venerable Kappitaka walking for almsfood; seeing him, they spoke thus: "This Kappitaka is alive, how ever did he foil our plan?"⁶ The group of six nuns heard it said: "Our plan was foiled by master Upāli."

¹ Cf. Pv 49–Pv 50. Vin-a 937, Pv-a 230 say that he was an elder among the thousand matted hair ascetics. ² Cf. Pv-a 230. ³ mahatarā, perhaps a leading nun. ⁴ man-tesum. Pali-English Dictionary says "perhaps 'plotted'" here. ⁵ ottharāpetvā; see BD 1.137, n. 4. ⁶ mantam samharati.

These reviled¹ the venerable Upāli, saying: “How can this barber,² a shampooing low-birth (person),³ foil our plan?” Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six nuns revile master Upāli?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns reviled Upāli?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the group of six nuns revile Upāli? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should revile or should abuse a monk,⁴ there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Monk means: one who is ordained.

Should revile means: if she reviles with the ten ways of reviling⁵ or with any one of these, there is an offence of expiation.

Or should abuse means: if she makes him afraid,⁶ there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that he is ordained when he is ordained (and) reviles or abuses him, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether he is ordained ... If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she reviles or abuses one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that he is ordained when he is not ordained ... If she is in doubt as to whether he is not ordained ... If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ akkosiṃsu; see BD 2.269 and BD 2.171, n. 3. ² kasāvaṭa; see Psalms of the Brethren. 168, Tha-ap 37ff., and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names 410 for view that Upāli was born a barber in this Buddha age. ³ kasāvaṭo malamajjano nihīnajacco; cf. Ja 3.452 hīnajacco malamajjano nahāpita (putto). ⁴ Cf. the seventh of the eight important rules, garudhammā, given at Vin 4.52 (BD 2.269), BD 2.255, AN iv.277. ⁵ See BD 2.171, n. 3. ⁶ bhayaṃ upadaṃseti, causes fear to appear.

There is no offence if she is aiming at (explaining) the goal, if she is aiming at (explaining) a rule, if she is aiming at (explaining) the teaching¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = Vin 3.130 (BD 1.218) = Vin 4.11 (BD 2.185) = Vin 4.277 (above, BD 3.280).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 53

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ the nun Caṇḍakālī was one who made strife, who made quarrels, who made contention, who made brawls, who made disputes in the Order ... (see Bi-Ss 4) ... The nun Thullanandā, saying: "These are ignorant, these are inexperienced, they do not even know a (formal) act or the defect of a (formal) act or the failure of a (formal) act or the success of a (formal) act," and being quick tempered,² she abused³ a group. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, being quick tempered, abuse a group?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, being quick tempered, abused a group?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... abuse a group? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, being quick tempered, should abuse a group, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Being quick tempered means: she is called angry.⁴

¹ See Nuns' Bi-Ss 4 above. ² caṇḍikatā. ³ paribhāsati; cf. Bi-Pc 52. ⁴ kodhanā; cf. Vin 4:334; Pv-a 83 caṇḍī ti kodhanā, and see definition at MN-a 2.99.

Group means: it is called an Order of nuns.¹

Should abuse² means: if she abuses, saying: “These are ignorant, these are inexperienced, they do not even know a (formal) act ... or the success of a (formal) act,” there is an offence of expiation. If she abuses several nuns or one nun or one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if she is aiming at (explaining) the goal ... (see Bi-Pc 52.2.3) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ =above, BD 3.295. ² Cf. above, BD 3.344.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 54

54.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3:348 at that time a certain brahmin, having invited nuns, offered them 4:311 food¹ ...” ...

“Whatever nun, being invited or being satisfied,² should eat or partake of solid food or soft food, there is an offence of expiation.”

54.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Being invited means: being invited to any one meal of the five (kinds of) meals.

Being satisfied means: eating is to be seen, a meal is to be seen, standing within a reach of the hand, she asks (her), a refusal is to be seen.³

Solid food means: setting aside the five (kinds of) meals, conjei,⁴ food (that may be eaten) during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life, the rest means solid food.⁵

Soft food means: the five (kinds of) meals: ... meat.⁶

¹ = Monks' Bu-Pc 35, first story; see BD 2.326f. The rule was amended for the monks but not for the nuns. ² The words are here changed to nimantitā vā pavāritā vā from bhuttavi pavarita of the story. This latter pair (in the masculine) appears in the monks' sikkhāpada (Bu-Pc 35); therefore the Old Commentary there defines bhuttāvī, having eaten, while above it defines nimantitā, being invited; but the terms used in these two definitions are the same. ³ = Monks' Bu-Pc 35.3.1. See BD 2.328ff. for notes. ⁴ This is omitted from corresponding paragraph in Monks' Bu-Pc 35. For conjei, yāgu, as being neither a solid food nor a soft food, see BD 2, Introduction, p. xxxi and BD 3.352f. It was counted rather as a drink, see “no offence” clause below. ⁵ = Monks' Bu-Pc 35.3.1. See BD 2.328ff. for notes. ⁶ = Monks' Bu-Pc 35.3.1. See BD 2.328ff. for notes.

If she accepts, thinking: “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of expiation.¹ If she accepts for the sake of nutriment (food to be eaten) during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life, there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of wrong-doing.²

BD 3,3

There is no offence if, being invited (but) not being satisfied, she drinks conje; if she eats having asked the owner (for permission); if when there is a reason she makes use of (food to be eaten) during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc 5

Vin 4,3

¹ = Monks' Bu-Pc 35.3.1. See BD 2.328ff. for notes.

² = Monks' Bu-Pc 35.3.2.

³ = Monks' Bu-Pc 35.3.3.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 55

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun, walking for alms along a certain road in Sāvattḥī, approached a certain family; having approached, she sat down on an appointed seat. Then these people, having offered food to this nun, spoke thus: "Lady, other nuns may also come." Then this nun, thinking: "How may these nuns not come?" having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a place there are fierce dogs, a wild bull, the place is a swamp, do not go there." But a certain nun, walking for alms along that road, approached that family; having approached, she sat down on an appointed seat. Then these people, having offered food to that nun, spoke thus: "Why do not the other nuns come, lady?" Then this nun told this matter to those people. The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can that nun be grudging as to families?"¹ ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun was grudging as to families?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun be grudging as to families? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should be one who is grudging as to families, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ Five forms of meanness, stinginess or grudgingness, macchhariya, are given at AN iii.139, AN iii.258, AN iii.266, AN iii.273, AN iv.459; DN iii.234; Ds 1122 (see Buddhist Psychological Ethics, § 1122, n.); Vism 683.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Family means: ... low caste family.¹

Should be one who is grudging as to families means: if they say, “Why do the nuns not come?” (and) she speaks dispraise of a family in front of nuns, there is an offence of expiation. Or if she speaks dispraise of nuns in front of a family, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if, not being grudging as to families, she merely explains that there is a danger²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = Vin 3.184, Vin 4.80, Vin 4.100, Vin 4.272. ² According to Vin-a 938 she either explains to the nuns that the family are non-believers, or she explains to the family that the nuns are of weak morality and of depraved states of mind.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 56

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns, having spent the rains in a village residence, went to Sāvattthī. Nuns spoke thus to these nuns: "Where did the ladies spend the rains? We hope that the exhortation was effective?"¹

"There were no monks there, ladies; how could the exhortation be effective?" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can these nuns spend the rains in a residence where there is no monk?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nuns ... where there was no monk?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nuns ... where there is no monk? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should spend the rains in a residence where there is no monk, there is an offence of expiation."²

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

A residence where there is no monk means: it is not possible to go for exhortation¹ or for communion.² If she thinks, “I will spend the rains,” (and) prepares a lodging, provides drinking water and water for washing, sweeps a cell, there is an offence of wrong-doing. With sunrise, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ iddha, as at Vin 4.50, Vin 4.54. ² This rule is the same as the second of the eight "important rules," see BD 2.268.

There is no offence if monks, having entered on the rains settlement, come to have gone away or left the Order or done their time or gone over to (another) side; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.³

¹ Rules for exhortation in the eight “important rules” occur at Monks’ Bu-Pc 21–Bu-Pc 24. ² saṁvāsa. (To go) for communion explained at Vin-a 938 to mean (to go) for asking the (date of the) Observance day, uposatha, and the Invitation ceremony, pavāraṇā. See BD 2.268 and n. 6, n. 8; also Nuns’ Bi-Pc 57; but also see definition of saṁvāsa at end of each Pārājika rule, and below, BD 3.356. ³ =above, BD 3.190, where see n. 3.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 57

57.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3:354 that time several nuns, having kept the rains in a village residence, went to Sāvattthī. Nuns spoke thus to these nuns: "Where did the 4:314 ladies keep the rains? Was an Order of monks 'invited'¹?"

"Ladies, we did not 'invite' an Order of monks." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, having spent the rains, not 'invite' an Order of monks?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... did not 'invite' an Order of monks?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... not 'invite' an Order of monks? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having kept the rains, should not 'invite' both Orders in respect of three matters: what was seen or heard or suspected, there is an offence of expiation."²

57.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Having kept the rains means: having kept the first three months or the last three months.³

If she thinks, "I will not 'invite' both Orders in respect of three ¹ pavārito, a technical term. See BD 2.268, n. 8. Regulations for nuns to hold the pavāraṇā ceremony, using the word pavāreti, given at Vin 2.275. Cf. also Vin 1.161.

² Cf. the fourth "important rule," BD 2.268. ³ Cf. definition of "during the rains," above, BD 3.321.

matters: what was seen or heard or suspected,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

BD 3.33

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

Bi-Pc 5

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.289, BD 3.310, BD 3.331, BD 3.336; and below, BD 3.376.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 58

58.1.1
3.356 ... among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery. Now at that time¹ the group of six monks, having approached a nunnery, exhorted the group of six nuns. Nuns spoke thus to the group of six nuns: "Come, ladies, we will go for exhortation."

"Well, ladies, we would go for the sake of exhortation, (but) the group of the six masters exhort us, having come to this place itself." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns not go for exhortation?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns do not go for exhortation?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

4.315 "How, monks, can the group of six nuns not go for exhortation? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should not go for exhortation or for communion, there is an offence of expiation."²

58.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Exhortation means: the eight important rules.³

Communion means: one (formal) act, one recitation, an equal

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 23, where the offence is for a monk to exhort a nun in a nunnery except at a right time. Clearly the trend is for nuns to go to monks. Other regulations for exhortation set out at Vin 2.263ff. ² Cf. Vin 2.263; a nun who does not go for exhortation is to be dealt with according to the rule. ³ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 21–Bu-Pc 24.

training.¹ If she thinks, “I will not go for exhortation or for communion,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

BD 3.33

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about for a nun as a companion, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

Bi-Pc 5

¹ Cf. Old Commentary’s explanation of asamvāsa in each Pārājika (BD.1), and definition of “ill nun” at BD 2.278. ² = above, BD 3.323, below, BD 3.380, and cf. BD 3.289, BD 3.310, BD 3.331, BD 3.336.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 59

59.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.358 at that time nuns neither asked (the date of) the Observance day¹ nor did they ask for exhortation. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns neither ask (the date of) the Observance day nor ask for exhortation?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns neither ... nor ask for exhortation?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can nuns neither ... nor ask for exhortation? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Every half month a nun should desire two things from the Order of monks: the asking as to (the date of) the Observance day and the approaching for exhortation.² For her who transgresses this, there is an offence of expiation.”

59.2.1 Every half month means: every Observance day.³

Observance day means: the two Observance days, that on the fourteenth day and that on the fifteenth day.⁴

Exhortation means: the eight important rules.

If she thinks, “I will neither ask (the date of) the Observance day nor ask for exhortation,” in throwing off the responsibility, ... (see Bi-Pc 58.2.1–Bi-Pc 58.2.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See Vin 1.105, where the lord is shown as prompting Kappina, and as saying that if brahmins do not honour the uposatha, who will? ² The third of the eight “important rules,” Vin 4.52; see BD 2.268. ³ =above, BD 3.44. ⁴ Cf. Vin 1.104, Vin 1.132.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 60

60.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3:359 that time a certain nun together with a man, the one with the other, made a boil burst that had formed on the lower part of her body. Then that man began to violate that nun. She cried out in distress. Nuns, having run up, spoke thus to that nun: "Why do you, lady, cry out in distress?" Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun together with a man, the one with the other, make a boil burst that had formed on the lower part of her body?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... lower part of her body?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun ... lower part of her body? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, without having obtained permission from an Order or from a group, should together with a man, the one with the other, make a boil or a scab¹ that has formed on the lower part of her body burst or break or let it be washed or smeared or bound up or unbound,² there is an offence of expiation."

50.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Lower part of the body means: below the navel to above the circle of the knees.

3:360 Has formed means: has formed there.

¹ rūhita, a diseased growth, literally meaning "healed." ² mocāpeyya, in opposition to previous word, bhandāpeyya.

Boil means: whatever is a boil.

Scab means: whatever is a sore.

Without having obtained permission means: not asking (for permission).¹

Order means: it is called an Order of nuns.²

Group means: they are called several nuns.

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal³; one who is learned, competent to violate.

Together with means: together.⁴

The one with the other means: there is a man and also a nun.⁵

If she commands, saying: “Burst it,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. When it is burst, there is an offence of expiation. If she commands, saying: “Break it ... wash it ... smear it ... bind it up ... unbind it,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. When it is broken ... washed ... smeared ... bound up ... unbound, there is an offence of expiation.

Vin 4.3

There is no offence if, having obtained permission, she causes it to be burst or broken ... or unbound; if some learned man (is there) as companion; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc 6

The Sixth Division: that on a monastery

¹ =above, BD 3.184; cf. BD 3.193. ² =above, BD 3.184; cf. BD 3.193.

Vin 4.271. ⁴ =BD 1.202, BD 1.332, BD 1.337; Vin 4.269, Vin 4.271.

³ =Vin 4.269,

⁵ =Vin 4.269,

Vin 4.271.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 61

61.1.1 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.361 at that time nuns ordained¹ a pregnant woman. She walked for alms. People spoke thus: "Give almsfood to the lady, the lady is heavy with child." The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nuns ordain a pregnant woman?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying, "How can these nuns ordain a pregnant woman?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ordained a pregnant woman?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain a pregnant woman? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a pregnant woman, there is an offence of expiation."

61.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Pregnant woman means: she is called entered by beings.²

Should ordain means: should confer the upasampada ordination.³

If she thinks: "I will ordain (her)" and looks about for a group or for a woman teacher or for a bowl or for a robe or if she determines a boundary, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of two proclamations, there are offences of wrong-doing. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence of expiation for the woman preceptor, and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.¹

¹ vuṭṭhāpentī. ² āpannasattā. ³ upasampādeyya.

If she thinks that she is pregnant when she is pregnant (and) ordains her, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not pregnant when she is pregnant, (and) ordains her, there is no offence. If she thinks that she is pregnant when she is not pregnant, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not pregnant, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not pregnant when she is not pregnant, there is no offence.

There is no offence if she ordains a pregnant woman thinking that she is not pregnant²; if she ordains a woman who is not pregnant thinking that she is not pregnant; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.13, BD 3.185, for this passage. ² This has been said in the paragraph above.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 62

62.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now 3:363 at that time nuns ordained a woman giving suck. She walked for alms. People spoke thus: "Give almsfood to the lady, the lady has a companion."¹ The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nuns ... (Bi-Pc 61.1, instead of pregnant woman read woman giving suck) ..." "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a woman giving suck, there is an offence of expiation."

62.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Woman giving suck means: she is a mother or a foster-mother.

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 61.2. Read, If she thinks that she is a woman giving suck when she is a woman giving suck; if she thinks that she is not a woman giving suck, etc.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ sadutiyaikā, with a companion; cf. dutiyaikā bhikkhunī at Vin 4.230, Vin 4.315; and porāṇa-dutiyaikā, former wife.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 63

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a probationer who had not trained for two years in the six rules.¹ These² were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable.³ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain a probationer who has not trained for two years in the six rules?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... in the six rules?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can these nuns ordain ... in the six rules? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"I allow you, monks, to give a probationer the agreement as to training⁴ for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That probationer, having approached the Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the nuns,⁵ having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: ‘Ladies, I, so and so, a probationer, under the lady so and so, request the Order for the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules.’ And a second time it should be requested ... And a third time it should be requested. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This (woman) so and so, a probationer, under the lady so and so, requests the Order for the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order give the probationer so and so the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. This is the motion: Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This (woman) so and so ... requests ... for two years in the six rules. If the giving to the probationer so and so of the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules is pleasing to the ladies, let them be silent; if it is not pleasing, they should speak. The agreement as to training for two years in the six rules is given to the probationer so and so, and it is right ... So do I understand this.’”

¹ Cf. the sixth of the eight "important rules," Vin 4.52, Vin 2.255. The six rules are given below. See also I.B. HORNER, Women under Primitive Buddhism, 138ff. ² This refers to the probationers; one nun was enough to ordain a probationer, an Order or group not being necessary. The meaning here, and in similar passages below, is that several nuns each ordained one probationer. ³ As in Nuns' Bi-Pc 66, Bi-Pc 72. ⁴ sikkhāsammuti, occurring also in Nuns' Bi-Pc 66, Bi-Pc 72. Cf. other "agreements" at Vin 3.199, Vin 3.228, Vin 3.263, Vin 4.31, Vin 4.330.

That probationer should be told: “Speak thus: ‘I undertake for two years not to transgress the resolution of abstinence from onslaught on creatures; I undertake ... abstinence from taking what is not given ... abstinence from unchastity ... abstinence from lying ... abstinence from occasions for sloth (arising from) fermented liquor and spirits¹ and strong drink²; I undertake for two years not to transgress the resolution of abstinence from eating at the wrong time³.’”

Then the lord, having rebuked these nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... “... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a probationer who has not trained for two years in the six rules, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

⁵ The word “senior” (vuḍḍha) which occurs in corresponding passages—e.g., in Monks’ Nissaggiyas, is rightly omitted here, for a probationer, being junior as regards ordination to all other nuns, should honour them all. ¹ See V.S. AGRAWALA, Maireya in Pāṇini, D.R. Bhandarkar Volume, 1940, p.291. ² Cf. DN iii.62; AN i.211f.; SN ii.68 for these five sīlas. ³ Cf. AN i.212, and Monks’ Bu-Pc 37.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Two years means: two years.²

Has not trained means: either the training is not given or the training is given (but) is interrupted.³

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 61.2.1) ... and an offence of wrongdoing for the group and for the woman teacher.

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) ordains her, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act... offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁴

There is no offence if she ordains a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ The upasampadā ordination had to be conferred on nuns by monks as well as by nuns; see Vin 2.255, Vin 4.52; cf. Vin 2.257. The ordination proceedings are set out at Vin 2.271ff. ² vassāni ... saṁvaccharāni. The former is also more specifically the rains, but the exegesis under “has not trained” suggests that the training had to go on uninterruptedly for two full years and not merely for two rainy seasons. ³ kupitā, disturbed. ⁴ Last clause should probably read “no offence.”

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 64

64.1.1
3:367 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a probationer who had trained for two years in the six rules (but) who was not agreed upon by the Order.¹ Nuns spoke thus: "Come, probationers,² find out about this, give this, convey this, make this allowable." These spoke thus: "Ladies, we are not probationers, we are nuns." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ordained ... not agreed upon by the Order?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain ... not agreed upon by the Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"I allow you, monks, to give the agreement as to ordination³ to a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules, having approached the Order ... (Bi-Pc 63.1) ... should speak thus: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a probationer who has trained

4:321

¹ See previous Bi-Pc 63 where in order to carry out the training as to have a legal right to be ordained, a probationer had to receive the agreement of the Order.

² Note use of plural here, and cf. previous and following Pācittiyas: also Bi-Pc 73.

³ vuṭṭhānasammuti. See above, BD 3:364, for other "agreements."

for two years in the six rules under the lady so and so, request the Order for the agreement as to ordination.’ And a second time ... (Bi-Pc 63.1 instead of probationer read probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules instead of agreement as to training for two years in the six rules read agreement as to ordination.) ... So do I understand this.’”

Then the lord, having rebuked the nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order,¹ there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Two years means: two years.²

Has trained means: has trained in the six rules.³

Not agreed upon means: the agreement as to ordination is not given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.⁴

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 61.2.1) ...

There is no offence if she ordains a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules and who is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ The probationer has to get the agreement, but the nuns have to abide by it. ² As above, BD 3.366. ³ =below, BD 3.374, BD 3.383. ⁴ =below, BD 3.374, BD 3.383. On ñattidutiya kammās see Vin 1.319, and on Saṅghakammās (formal acts) generally, S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, 146ff.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 65

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a girl¹ married for less than twelve years.² These³ were not able to endure cold, heat, hunger, thirst, contact with gadflies, mosquitoes, wind and sun, creeping things, abusive hurtful language; they were not able to endure bodily feelings which arising are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly.⁴ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns ordain a girl married for less than twelve years?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ordained ... married for less than twelve years?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain a girl married for less than twelve years? Monks, a girl married for less than twelve years is not able to endure cold ... bodily feelings ... miserable, deadly. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a girl married for less than twelve years, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Less than twelve years means: not attained to twelve years.⁵

¹ gihigatā, one gone to a layman (as his wife or co-wife). ² See BD 3, Introduction, p. xlix, and I.B. HORNER, Women under Primitive Buddhism, p. 27ff. ³ As in previous Pācittiyas, plural used here, meaning that an indefinite number of nuns had each ordained a "married girl," or child-wife. ⁴ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc 65.1, that in which monks are forbidden to ordain a man under twenty. ⁵ Cf. above, BD 3.13.

Girl married means: one cohabiting with a man.¹

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 61.2.1) ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

If she thinks that it is less than twelve years when it is less than twelve years (and) ordains her, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is less than twelve years ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that twelve years are completed when it is less than twelve years ... no offence. If she thinks that it is less than twelve years when twelve years are completed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether twelve years are completed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that twelve years are completed when twelve years are completed, there is no offence.²

There is no offence if she ordains one (married) for less than twelve years thinking that twelve years are completed; if she ordains one who has completed twelve years thinking that they are completed³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ purisantaragatā. This is the definition of itthi, woman, at MN-a 2.209; DN-a 78. Cf. Ja 1.290; MN i.77; AN i.295, AN ii.206. ² Cf. above, BD 3.13. ³ This occurs in the preceding paragraph.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 66

66.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3:371 at that time nuns ordained a girl married for full twelve years (but) who had not trained for two years in the six rules. These were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable.¹ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain a girl married for full twelve years (but) who has not trained for two years in the six rules?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks ...?" ...

The enlightened one, the lord rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can these nuns ordain ... in the six rules? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." and having rebuked them, having 4:323 given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"I allow you, monks, to give a girl married for full twelve years the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That girl married for full twelve years, having approached the Order ... (Bi-Pc 63.1) ... should speak thus: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a girl married for full twelve years, and who am under the lady so and so, request the Order ... (Bi-Pc 63.1. Instead of probationer read a girl married for full twelve years) ... So do I understand this.' That girl married for full twelve years should be told: 'Speak thus: ... (Bi-Pc 63.1) ...' " ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a girl married for full twelve years (but) who has not trained for two years in the six rules, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ For the whole of this Pācittiya, cf. Bi-Pc 63.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Full twelve years means: attained to twelve years.¹

Girl married means: one cohabiting with a man.²

Two years means: ...

There is no offence if she ordains a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ =below, BD 3.374. ² As in Bi-Pc 65, Bi-Pc 67.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 67

67.1.1
3.373 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a girl married for full twelve years and who had trained for two years in the six rules, but who was not agreed upon by the Order. Nuns spoke thus: "Come, probationers, ... (Bi-Pc 64.1) ..." ... "How can these nuns ordain a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules, but who is not agreed upon by the Order?" ... he addressed the monks, saying:

4.324 "I allow you, monks, to give the agreement as to ordination to a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules, having approached the Order ... (Bi-Pc 63.1) ... should speak thus: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained under the lady so and so for two years in the six rules, request the Order for the agreement as to ordination.' And a second time ... (Bi-Pc 63.1. Instead of probationer read girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules; instead of agreement as to training for two years in the six rules read agreement as to ordination) ... 'So do I understand this.'"

Then the lord, having rebuked these nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Full twelve years means: attained to twelve years.¹

Girl married means: one cohabiting with a man.²

Two years means: two years.³

Has trained upon means: has trained in the six rules.⁴

Not agreed upon means: the agreement as to ordination is not given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.⁵

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 61.2.1) ...

There is no offence if she ordains a girl married for full twelve years who has trained for two years in the six rules and who is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = above, BD 3.372. ² = above, BD 3.370, BD 3.372. ³ = above, BD 3.366, BD 3.368.

⁴ = above, BD 3.368, below, BD 3.383. ⁵ = above, BD 3.368, below, BD 3.383.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 68

68.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now 3:375 at that time the nun Thullanandā, having ordained the woman who lived with her,¹ for two years neither helped her nor had her helped.
These² were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having 4:325 ordained the woman who lives with her, for two years neither help her nor have her helped?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... nor had her helped?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the nun Thullanandā ... nor have her helped? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having ordained the woman who lives with her, for two years should neither help her nor have her helped, there is an offence of expiation."

58.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Woman who lives with her means: she is called the one who shares her cell.³

Having ordained means: having conferred the upasampada ordination.

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.309, below, BD 3.379. ² This must mean that at least for more than one year Thullanandā had ordained her sahajivinīs. ³ =above, BD 3.309.

Two years means: two years.¹

Should neither help her means: should not herself help her in regard to the exposition, the interrogation,² the exhortation, the instruction.³

Nor should have her helped means: should not command another.

If for two years she thinks: "I will neither help her nor have her helped," in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if having looked about she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.⁴

¹ =above, BD 3.366, BD 3.368, BD 3.374. ² Cf. BD 2.94, BD 2.271. ³ anusāsanī. Cf. Vin 1.50 for repetition of these four words. ⁴ Cf. above, BD 3.289, BD 3.310, BD 3.331, BD 3.336, BD 3.355.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 69

69.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3.377 that time nuns for two years did not wait upon an ordained woman instructor.¹ These² were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns for two years not wait upon an ordained woman instructor?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... woman instructor

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

4.326 "How, monks, can nuns ... ordained woman instructor? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun for two years should not wait upon an ordained woman instructor, there is an offence of expiation."

69.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Ordained means: the upasampadā, ordination conferred.

Woman instructor means: she is called a woman preceptor.³

3.378 ¹ pavattinī, or proposer—i.e., for a nun on whom the upasampada ordination is being conferred, as at Vin 2.271. ² Doubtless here referring to the nuns. ³ upajjhā. The first sentence of n. 1 at Vinaya Texts iii.351 must therefore be corrected; also upajjhā occurs twice at Vin 3.35. The word (upajjhā) at Vin 3.100 is obviously a shortened plural form of the regular masculine upajjhāya, for see Vin 3.101 = Bi-Pc 69.2.1 which contains two stories about two (different) upajjhāya. Pali-English Dictionary is probably right in giving both upajjha, short masculine, as at Vin 1.94 and doubtless once at Vin 3.35; and upajjhā, feminine, as in above explanation of pavattinī and in the "no offence" clause, and doubtless once at Vin 3.35.

Two years means: two years.

Should not wait upon means: should not herself attend upon.¹

If she thinks: "I will not wait upon her for two years," in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if the woman preceptor is ignorant or shameless; if he is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc 6

¹ According to Vin-a 941, with soap-powder, toothpick, water for rinsing the mouth, and with whatever was to be done. Cf. Bi-Pc 88 below.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 70

70.1.1
3.379 ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, having ordained (the woman) who lived with her,¹ neither withdrew² her nor had her withdrawn; her husband seized her. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having ordained (the woman) who lives with her, neither withdraw her nor have her withdrawn? Her husband seized her. If this nun had departed her husband could not have seized her." ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... nor had her withdrawn (so that) her husband seized her?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor have her withdrawn (so that) her husband seized her? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having ordained (the woman) who lives with her, should neither withdraw her nor have her withdrawn even to (a distance of) five or six yojanas, there is an offence of expiation."

70.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

(Woman) who lives with her means: she is called the one who shares her cell.³

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.309, BD 3.375. ² vūpakāsesi, to withdraw, seclude, alienate—i.e., from the haunts of men. ³ Cf. above, BD 3.309, BD 3.375.

Having ordained means: having conferred the upasampadā ordination.¹

Should neither withdraw her² means: should not herself withdraw her.

Nor should have her withdrawn means: should not command another.

If she thinks: “I will neither withdraw her nor will I have her withdrawn even to (a distance of) five or six yojanas,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about for a nun as a companion, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.³

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.361, BD 3.375. ² Vin-a 941, “if having taken her, she should not go away.” ³ Cf. above, BD 3.323, BD 3.331, BD 3.336, BD 3.355, BD 3.357.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 71

71.1.1
3.381 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a maiden¹ who was under twenty years of age. These were unable to endure cold ... (Bi-Pc 65. Instead of a girl married for less than full twelve years read a maiden who is under twenty years of age; instead of for full twelve years read twenty years of age.) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a maiden under twenty years of age, there is an offence of expiation.”

71.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Under twenty years of age means: not attained to twenty years of age.²

Maiden means: she is called a female novice.

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 65.2. Read who is under twenty years of age, who has completed twenty years of age.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ kumāribhūtā, probably a virgin. See BD 3, Introduction, p. xlix. Vin-a 942 says that if the agreement as to training has been given to a married girl in her tenth year of marriage, she may be ordained in her twelfth; and likewise receiving the agreement up to her eighteenth year of marriage she may be ordained in her twentieth. From a woman's eighteenth year on, according to her marriage or age, one may say, “This is a married girl” and “This is a maiden.” But a maiden is not to be called a married girl. For the eighteenth year, see next Pācittiya. ² = Vin 4.130.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 72

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a maiden who had completed twenty years of age (but) who had not trained for two years in the six rules. These were ignorant, inexperienced ... (Bi-Pc 66.1. Instead of a girl married for full twelve years read a maiden who has completed twenty years of age.) ... he addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to give a maiden of eighteen years of age the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That maiden of eighteen years of age having approached the Order ...” (Bi-Pc 66.1. Instead of a girl married for full twelve years read a maiden of eighteen years of age.) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a maiden who has completed twenty years of age (but) who has not trained for two years in the six rules, there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Has completed twenty years of age means: has attained to twenty years of age.

Maiden means: she is called a female novice.

Two years means: ... (Bi-Pc 63.2) ...

There is no offence if she ordains a maiden who has completed twenty years of age and who has trained for two years in the six rules; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc 7

BD 3:38

Vin 4:3

Bi-Pc 7

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 73

73.1.1
3.383 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a maiden who had completed twenty years of age and who had trained for two years in the six rules (but) who was not agreed upon by the Order. Nuns spoke thus: "Come, probationers, find out about this, give this, convey this, this is needed, make this allowable." These spoke thus: "Ladies, we are not probationers, we are nuns." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ..." (Bi-Pc 67.1. Instead of a girl married for full twelve years read a maiden who has completed twenty years of age.) ... "... this rule of training:

4.329 "Whatever nun should ordain a maiden who has completed twenty years of age and who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order, there is an offence of expiation."

73.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Completed twenty years of age means: attained to twenty years of age.

Maiden means: she is called a female novice.¹

Two years means: two years.²

Has trained means: has trained in the six rules.³

Not agreed upon means: the agreement as to ordination is not

¹ = above, BD 3.381, BD 3.382. ² = above, BD 3.366, BD 3.368, BD 3.374, BD 3.375, BD 3.378. ³ = above, BD 3.368, BD 3.374.

given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.¹

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 63.2) ...

There is no offence if she ordains a maiden who has completed twenty years of age, who has trained for two years in the six rules and who is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ =above, BD 3.368, BD 3.374.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 74

74.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3:384 that time nuns ordained while they were less than twelve years (of standing).¹ They were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable; moreover, the women who shared their cells were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain while they are less than twelve years (of standing)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... less than twelve years (of standing)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... less than twelve years (of standing)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain while she is less than twelve years (of standing) there is an offence of expiation."

74.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Less than twelve years means: not attained to twelve years.

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 61.2.1) ... offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

74.2.2 ¹ ūnadvādasavassā, probably to be taken as nominative plural agreeing with bhikkhuniyo, and meaning less than twelve years from their own ordination. See next two Pācittiyas, and BD 3, Introduction, p. lii.

There is no offence if she ordains when she has completed twelve years (of standing); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 75

75.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.385 at that time nuns ordained when they had completed twelve years (of standing but) were not agreed upon by the Order. They were ignorant ... (Bi-Pc 74.1. Instead of less than twelve years (of standing) read when they have completed twelve years (of standing but) are not agreed upon by the Order.) ... "... It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"I allow you, monks, to give a nun who has completed twelve years (of standing) the agreement to ordain.¹ And thus, monks, should it be given: That nun who has completed twelve years (of standing), having approached the Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior nuns, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a nun who has completed twelve years (of standing), request the Order for the agreement to ordain.'
And a second time it should be requested ... And a third time it should be requested. This nun should be tested² by the Order thinking: 'This nun is experienced, she is conscientious.' If she is both ignorant³ and unconscientious it should not be given. If she is ignorant but conscientious it should not be given. If she is experienced but un-conscientious, it should not be given. If she is both experienced and conscientious, it should be given. And thus, monks, should it be given: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so who has completed twelve years (of standing) requests the Order for the agreement to ordain. If it seems right to the Order ... (cf. Bi-Pc 63.1, etc.) ... So do I understand this.’”

3.386
¹ vuṭṭhāpana-sammuti, to cause ordination (in another). ² paricchitabbā. Cf. paricchitvā in next Pācittiya Vin-a 942 explains upaparikkhati, to test, examine, investigate. Apparently the Order, in testing her, should do so with a view to her experience and conscientiousness. ³ bālā, apparently here as opposite of byattā, experienced.

Then the lord, having rebuked the nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun who has completed twelve years (of standing but) who is not agreed upon by the Order should ordain, there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Completed twelve years means: attained to twelve years.

Not agreed upon means: the agreement to ordain is not given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.¹

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc 63.2) ...

There is no offence if she ordains when she has completed twelve years (of standing) and is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.368, BD 3.374, BD 3.383.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 76

76.1.1
3.387 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakālī, having approached the Order of nuns, asked for the agreement to ordain. Then the Order of nuns, having tested¹ the nun Caṇḍakālī, saying: "You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being,"² did not give her the agreement to ordain. The nun Caṇḍakālī answered, "Very good." Now at that time the Order of nuns gave the agreement to ordain to other nuns. The nun Caṇḍakālī ... spread it about, saying: "Am I then ignorant, am I then unconscientious,³ that the Order gives the agreement to ordain to other nuns, but does not give it to me?" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Caṇḍakālī, on being told, 'You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being,' and having answered, 'Very good,' afterwards engage in criticism?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakālī ... afterwards engaged in criticism⁴?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the nun Caṇḍakālī ... afterwards engage in criticism? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, on being told, 'You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being,' and having answered, 'very good,' should afterwards engage in criticism, there is an offence of expiation."

3.388
¹ paricchitvā; cf. previous Pācittiya. ² alam tāva te ayye vuṭṭhāpitenā, or "please stop ordaining," or "there is no need for you to ordain at present." Cf. alam te idhavāsenā at Vin 3.184. ³ The two points on which nuns had to be tested according to the previous Pācittiya. ⁴ See above, BD 3.59, BD 3.64, and notes.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

"You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being" means: "You have conferred the upasampadā,¹ sufficiently, lady, for the time being."

If, having answered, "Very good," she afterwards engages in criticism, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if she criticises one acting by nature from desire, from hatred, from confusion, from fear²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ At Bi-Pc 79 below, Caṇḍakālī is called a probationer, and was ordained by Thullanandā. ² Cf. above, BD 3.66.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 77

77.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3:389 at that time a certain probationer, having approached the nun Thullanandā, asked for the upasampadā ordination. The nun Thullanandā, having said to that probationer, "If you, lady, will give me a robe, then will I ordain you," neither ordained her nor made an effort to get her ordained.¹ Then that probationer told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having said ... neither ordain her nor make an effort to get her ordained?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... nor made an effort to get her ordained?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor make an effort to get her ordained? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having said to a probationer: 'If you, lady, will give me a robe, then will I ordain you,' (yet) if she is not afterwards prevented, should neither ordain her nor should make an effort to get her ordained, there is an offence of expiation."

77.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.

¹ Cf. Bi-Pc 23, Bi-Pc 34, Bi-Pc 45.

‘If you, lady, will give me a robe, then will I ordain you’ means: then will I confer the upasampadā ordination on you.

BD 3.30

If she is not afterwards prevented means: if there is not an obstacle.

Should neither ordain her means: should not herself ordain her.

Nor should make an effort to get her ordained means : should not command another.

If she thinks, “I will neither ordain her nor make an effort to get her ordained,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer. .

Bi-Pc 7

Vin 4.3

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.289, BD 3.310, BD 3.331.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 78

78.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now
3.391 at that time a certain probationer, having approached the nun Thullanandā, asked for the upasampadā, ordination. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that probationer: "If you, lady, will wait upon me for two years, then will I ordain you," and having said (this) ... (see Bi-Pc 77.1) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having said to a probationer: 'If you, lady, will wait upon me for two years, then will I ordain you,' (yet) if she is not afterwards prevented, should neither ordain her nor should make an effort to get her ordained, there is an offence of expiation."

78.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.

'If you, lady, will wait upon me for two years' means: if you will attend upon me for two years.¹

'Then will I ordain you,' means: then will I confer the upasampada, ordination on you.

If she is not afterwards prevented means: ... (see Bi-Pc 77.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.378.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 79

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā ordained the probationer Caṇḍakalī who kept company with men, who kept company with youths, who was violent,¹ a dwelling-place of grief.² Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā ordain ... grief?”

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ordained ... grief?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ordain ... grief? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a probationer who keeps company with men, who keeps company with youths, who is violent, a dwelling-place of grief, there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Man means: one attained to twenty years of age.

Youth means: one not attained to twenty years of age.

Keeps company means: keeps company unbecomingly as to body and speech.³

Violent⁴ means: she is called angry.

¹ caṇḍī. ² sokāvāsā. ³ Cf. above, BD 3.208, BD 3.315. ⁴ Cf. above, BD 3.346, where same definition of caṇḍikatā, “quick-tempered.”

Dwelling-place of grief means: she arouses sorrow in others, she enters upon grief.

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.

Should ordain means: ... (see Bi-Pc 61.2) ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.¹

There is no offence if she ordains her not knowing; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD 3.13, BD 3.185, BD 3.361.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 80

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā ordained a probationer without the consent of the parents and husband. The parents and the husband ... spread it about, saying : "How can the lady Thullanandā ordain the probationer without our consent?" Nuns heard the parents and the husband who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying : "How can the lady Thullanandā ordain a probationer without the consent of the parents and husband?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ordained ... and husband?" "It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the nun Thullanandā ordain a probationer ... and husband? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a probationer without the consent of the parents and husband, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Parents means: they are called the progenitors.

Husband means: he to whom she is married.²

Without the consent means: not asking (for permission).

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.

¹ The twenty-second of the twenty-four questions to be put to a nun at her ordination was whether she had her parents' and husband's consent, Vin 2.271. ² yena pariggahitā hoti, by whom she is possessed or appropriated.

Should ordain means: ... (see Bi-Pc 61.2) ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

30.2.2

There is no offence if she ordains her not knowing; if she ordains her, (she) having obtained permission; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 81

... at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā thinking: "I will ordain a probationer," having had monks who were elders convened, having seen sumptuous solid foods and soft foods, saying: "Masters, I will not ordain the probationer yet," having dismissed the monks who were elders, having had Devadatta, Kokālika, Kaṭamorakatissaka, the son of the lady Khaṇḍā and Samuddadatta¹ convened, she ordained the probationer. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā ordain a probationer by showing² favouritism³ to (monks) placed on probation⁴?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ordained a probationer by showing favouritism to (monks) placed on probation?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can the nun Thullanandā ... (monks) placed on probation? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a probationer by showing favouritism to (monks) placed on probation, there is an offence of expi-

¹ Schismatic monks; cf. Monks' Bu-Ss 10, Bu-Ss 11. At Vin 4.66 Thullanandā says that these five were mahānaḡā (great heroes) to her. ² Literally giving, dāna.

³ chanda; as at Vin 4.38 (BD 2.235). ⁴ pārivāsikā bhikkhū. Cf. Vin 1.136; and Vin 2.31ff., where in Kd 12, Kd 13 the rules for monks under probation are discussed at length. The "four months' probation" is described at Vin 1.69, three other types in Kd 13. Four still further kinds given at Vin-a 943f. See also S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.168.

ation.”

81.2.1
3:397
4:336

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

By showing favouritism to (monks) placed on probation means: to a company that has risen.¹

Probationer means: ... (Bi-Pc 80.2) ... and an offence of wrongdoing for the group and for the woman teacher.

81.2.2

There is no offence if she ordains her if the company has not risen; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ vuṭṭhitāya parisāya. Cf. Vin 1.136, where it is said that uposatha should not be held by (accepting) the declaration of purity of (a monk) placed on probation except if the company has not (yet) risen “Has risen” would here seem to apply to monks considered not fit to carry out the various formal acts in a seated assembly of monks.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 82

... At Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained every year; there were not sufficient dwellings. People ... spread it about saying: "How can these nuns ordain every year? There are not sufficient dwellings." Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain every year?" ...

"Is it true, as it is said, monks, that nuns ordain every year?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain every year? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of raining:

"Whatever nun should ordain every year, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Every year means: annually.²

Should ordain means: ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

There is no offence if she ordains in the alternate (years); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Quoted MN-a 3.156 ² anuvassan ti anusamvaccharaṃ.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 83

83.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3.399 that time nuns ordained two (probationers) in the one year.¹ As be-4.337 fore,² there were not sufficient dwellings. As before³ people ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain two (probationers) in one year? As before, there are not sufficient dwellings." Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: ... (cf. Bi-Pc 82.1) "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain two (probationers) in one year, there is an offence of expiation."

83.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

One year means: one year.⁴

Should ordain two (probationers) means: should confer the upasampadā ordination on two (probationers).

If she thinks: "I will ordain two (probationers)," and looks about for a group or ... (Bi-Pc 61.2) ... there is an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

33.2.2 There is no offence if she ordains in alternate years⁵; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

*The Eighth Division: that on a maiden.*⁶

¹ Vin-a 945 says "she ordained two (probationers) in one year in alternate years."

² tath'eva—i.e., in Bi-Pc 82. ³ tath'eva—i.e., in Bi-Pc 82. ⁴ ekavassan ti ekaṃ saṃvaccharaṃ.

⁵ Nothing to show whether the notion of "two (probationers)" is dropped here or not. ⁶ N.B. thirteen Pācittiyas in this Division, and also in the next.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 84

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns used sunshades and sandals. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns use sunshades and sandals, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns use sunshades and sandals?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks ... and sandals?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can ... and sandals? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should use a sunshade and sandals, there is an offence of expiation."

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

At that time a certain nun came to be ill; there was no comfort for her without a sunshade and sandals. They told this matter to the lord. He said: "Monks, I allow a sunshade and sandals to a nun who is ill. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun who is not ill should use a sunshade and sandals, there is an offence of expiation."¹

¹ Cf. Bu-Sk 57, Bu-Sk 62.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Who is not ill means: for whom there is comfort without a sunshade and sandals.

Who is ill means: for whom there is not comfort without a sunshade and sandals.

Sunshade means: there are three (kinds of) sunshade: white sunshade, sunshade of rushes, sunshade of leaves, fastened at the middle, fastened to the rim.¹

Should use means: if she uses (them) even once, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she is not ill when she is not ill (and) uses a sunshade and sandals, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ill ... If she thinks that she is ill when she is not ill ... offence of expiation. If she uses a sunshade (but) not sandals, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she uses sandals (but) not a sunshade, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ill when she is ill ... If she is in doubt as to whether she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ill when she is ill, there is no offence.

There is no offence if she is ill; if she uses (them) in a monastery, in monastery precincts²; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = Vin 4.200. N.B. sandals, upāhana, not defined by Old Commentary. ² At Vin 2.13of. regulations for monks using sunshades are: (1) sunshades allowed; (2) whoever uses one, offence of wrong-doing; (3) allowed for an ill monk; (4) allowed to be used by a monk whether ill or not ill in a monastery or monastery precincts. At Vin 2.207 it is said that incoming monks on entering the monastery should put down their sunshades—as a sign of respect.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 85

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns went¹ in a vehicle.² People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns go in a vehicle, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns go in a vehicle?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns went in a vehicle?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can this group of six nuns go in a vehicle? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should go in a vehicle, there is an offence of expiation."³

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Now at that time a certain nun came to be ill. She was not able to ¹ yāyanti. GEIGER, Pali Literature und Sprache, §138, gives "geht", which seems more suitable than "have themselves earned" (Vinaya Texts ii.25), for "go" covers both driving and being carried in the vehicles mentioned by the Old Commentary. ² yāna; see note at BD 1.81. ³ A dukkāṭa for monks at Vin 1.191; at Vin 2.276 it is said that nuns going in a vehicle "should be dealt with according to the rule"—i.e., this Pācittiya. Cf. Bu-Sk 63.

3,403 go on foot. They told this matter to the lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a vehicle for a nun who is ill.¹ And thus, monks ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun who is not ill should go in a vehicle, there is an offence of expiation."

85,2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Not ill means: she is able to go on foot.

Ill means: she is not able to go on foot.

Vehicle² means: a cart,³ a carriage, a waggon, a chariot, a palanquin,⁴ or a sedan chair.⁵

Should go means: if she goes even once, there is an offence of expiation.

85,2.2

If she thinks that she is not ill when she is not ill (and) goes in a vehicle, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ill ... If she thinks that she is ill when she is not ill ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that she is not ill when she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ill when she is ill, there is no offence.

85,2.3

There is no offence if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ This recurs at Vin 2.276. Corresponding permission for monks given at Vin 1.191.

² = Vin 4.201, and cf. Vin 3.49. ³ See above, BD 3.144, n. 3. ⁴ See above, BD 3.144,

n. 5. ⁵ See above, BD 3.144, n. 5

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 86

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun frequented a certain woman's family. Then that woman spoke thus to that nun: "Please, lady, give this petticoat to such and such a woman." Then that nun, thinking: "If I go away taking it in my bowl, there will be trouble for me,"¹ went away having tied it on. When she was on the high road the strings broke and were scattered. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns² wear a petticoat, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns ... heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun wear a petticoat?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun wore a petticoat?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun wear a petticoat? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should wear a petticoat, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Petticoat means: whatever goes about the hips.

Should wear means: if she wears it even once, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ =above, BD 3.157, BD 3.188. ² The people generalise from one instance.

There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if she wears a hip-string¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ kaṭisuttaka, allowed to nuns at Vin 2.271, but not to be worn all the time; a dukkāṭa for monks to wear them at Vin 2.106, but where meaning may be an ornamental waist-band.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 87

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns wore women's ornaments. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns wear women's ornaments, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns wear women's ornaments?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that ... women's ornaments?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can ... women's ornaments? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should wear women's ornaments, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Women's ornaments mean: they go on the head, round the neck, on the hands,¹ on the feet, round the hips.²

Should wear means: if she wears them even once, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ hattha also means "forearm," see definition of "hand" at BD 1.203. ² Cf. Vin 3.239 (BD 2.107) where these phrases occur in definition of kata, "shaped."

There is no offence if it is on account of illness¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ It is difficult to imagine what diseases could be cured or alleviated by wearing ornaments.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 88

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns bathed with perfume and paint.¹ People ... (see Bi-Pc 87.1; read bathed with perfume and paint, etc.) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should bathe with perfume and paint, there is an offence of expiation².”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Perfume means: whatever is a perfume.

Paint means: whatever is a paint.

Should bathe means: if she bathes, in the business there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the bathing there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ DN ii.142, DN ii.161; Thag 960. ² At Vin 2.280 it is a dukkata for nuns to bathe with chunam (soft soap-powder) or scented clay.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 89

89.1.1 ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at 3.408 that time the group of six nuns bathed with scented ground sesamum. People ... (see Bi-Pc 87.1; read, bathed with scented ground sesamum, etc.) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should bathe with scented ground sesamum, there is an offence of expiation.”

89.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Scented means: whatever is scented.

Ground sesamum means: it is called crushed sesamum seed.

Should bathe means: if she bathes, in the business there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the bathing there is an offence of expiation.

89.2.2 There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if she bathes with common ground sesamum; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 90

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns caused (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment)¹ and also caused (themselves) to be massaged² by a nun. People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place, having seen (them), ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also cause (themselves) to be massaged by a nun, just like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed ... by a nun?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns caused (themselves) to be rubbed ... by a nun?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also cause themselves to be massaged by a nun? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) or should cause (herself) to be massaged by a nun, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ ummaddāpenti. At Vin 2.266 it is an offence of wrong-doing for a nun if she mukham ummaddeti, rubs (ointment, etc.) into her face. ² parimaddāpenti.

By a nun means: by another nun.

Should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) means: if she makes (another) rub (her with ointment),¹ there is an offence of expiation.

Should cause (herself) to be massaged means: if she makes (another) rub² (her), there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Vin-a 946 reads ubbaṭṭāpeti, to make anoint, to make shampoo. ² sambāhāpeti, to rub or shampoo.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 91–93

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns caused (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also caused (themselves) to be massaged by a probationer ... by a female novice ... by a woman householder. People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place, having seen (them), ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also cause (themselves) to be massaged by a probationer ... by a female novice ... by a woman householder, just like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard ... (see Bi-Pc 90.1) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) or should cause (herself) to be massaged by a probationer ... by a female novice ... by a woman householder, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.¹

Female novice means: one conforming to the ten rules of training.²

Woman householder means: she is called a housewife.³

Should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) means: if she makes (another) rub (her with ointment), there is an offence of expiation.

¹ = Vin 4.122, Vin 4.332, Vin 4.333, Vin 4.334, Vin 4.335. ² = Vin 4.122. ³ agāriṇī; cf. gharaṇī at Vin 4.20.

Should cause (herself) to be massaged means: if she makes (another) rub (her), there is an offence of expiation.

91.2.2

There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 94

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns sat down on a seat in front of a monk¹ without asking (for permission). Monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ... without asking (for permission)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... without asking (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... without asking (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should sit down on a seat in front of a monk without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

In front of a monk means: in front of one who is ordained.

Without asking (for permission) means: not having obtained permission.

Should sit down on a seat means: if she sits down even on the ground, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission and) sits down on a seat, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked ¹ Cf. the first of the eight "important rules," Vin 4.52.

4.344
3.414

(for permission) ... If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) ... there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is no offence.

94.2.3

There is no offence if, having asked (for permission), she sits down on a seat; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 95

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns asked a question of a monk who had not given leave.¹ Monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ask a question of a monk who has not given leave?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks ... (see Bi-Pc 94.1) ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ask a question of a monk who has not given leave, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Not given leave means: without asking (for permission).²

Should ask a question means: if, having asked for leave³ in regard to Suttanta, she asks about Discipline or about Abhidhamma,⁴ there is an offence of expiation. If, having asked for leave in regard to Discipline, she asks about Suttanta or about Abhidhamma, there is an offence of expiation. If, having asked for leave in regard to Abhidhamma, she asks about Suttanta or about Discipline, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ anokāsakatam, accusative, agreeing with bhikkhuṃ, meaning "who has not made an occasion" for allowing himself to be questioned. Cf. Vin 1.114, Vin 1.170. It seems as if the nun had to give some kind of notice, and get the monk's permission to put her question. ² The monk could not give leave before the nun had asked permission for it. ³ okāsam kārāpetvā, having had an opportunity made. ⁴ Here probably meaning the literary digest of this name. This passage would therefore seem late, dating from some time after the compilation of the three Piṭakas. See BD 3, Introduction, p. xff.

3.416 If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission and) asks a question ... (Bi-Pc 94.2.2) ... there is no offence.

95.2.3 There is no offence if she asks, having asked for leave; if having asked for leave in general, she asks concerning whatever she likes¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ yattha katthaci, there wherever, presumably meaning that she asks a question on any part of the Suttantas, Vinaya or Abhidhamma, and without having specified beforehand which of these three she would be asking about.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 96

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun entered a village for almsfood without her vest.¹ While she was on the high road gusts of wind blew up her outer cloak. People shouted out: "Beautiful is the waist of the lady." That nun, being made fun of by the people, became ashamed. Then that nun, having gone to a dwelling,² told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun enter a village without her vest?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that this nun ... without her vest?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun enter a village without her vest? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should enter a village without her vest, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Without a vest means: without a vest.³

Vest means: from below the collar-bone to above the navel, for the sake of covering this.

Should enter a village means: in going beyond the enclosure of a village that is fenced in, there is an offence of expiation. In entering the precincts of a village that is not fenced in, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ saṃkacchika, the fourth of a nun's five robes to be pointed, out to her at her upasam-padā ordination, Vin 2.272. ² upassaya, very likely meaning bhikkhuni-upassaya, a nunnery. ³ asaṃkacchikā ti vinā saṃkacchikāṃ.

There is no offence if she is one whose robe is stolen¹; if she is one whose robe is lost; if she is ill; if she is not thinking; if she does not know²; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

*The Ninth Division: that on a sunshade*³

Recited, ladies, are the hundred and sixty-six rules for offences of expiation.⁴ Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.

*Told is the Minor (Class)*⁵

¹ Vin-a 947 says that her vest is to be called a “robe.” ² Cf. above, BD 3.121ff. ³ Note that there are thirteen Pācittiyas in this, as in the preceding Division. ⁴ Ninety-six are here recorded. The monks have ninety-two. The total for monks and nuns is therefore 188. Of the monks’ 92, 70 apply also to the nuns. Thus we get 96 + 70 = 166 for nuns, leaving 22 for the monks alone, as stated at Vin-a 946. See BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxviii. ⁵ Cf. above, BD 3.101.

NUNS' CONFESSION (PĀṬIDESANIYA) 1

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns, having had ghee¹ asked for, partook of it. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, having had ghee asked for, partake of it? Who does not like well cooked things? Who does not like sweet things?"² Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns, having had ghee asked for, partake of it?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns, having had ghee asked for, partook of it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns ...? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having had ghee asked for, should partake of it, it should be confessed by that nun, saying: 'I have fallen, ladies, into a blameworthy matter, un-becoming, which ought to be confessed; I confess it.'"

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Now at that time nuns came to be ill.³ Nuns enquiring after the ill ones, spoke thus to the ill nuns: "We hope, ladies, that you are better, we hope that you are keeping going.”

¹ One of the five standard medicines. ² = Vin 2.196 = Vin 4.71, Vin 4.87. ³ Cf. Vin 4.88 (BD 2.341).

“Formerly, ladies, we, having had ghee asked for, partook of it, thus there came to be comfort for us. But now it is forbidden by the lord and, being scrupulous, we do not have it asked for, thus there does not come to be comfort for us.” They told this matter to the lord. He said:

4:347 “I allow, monks, an ill nun, having had ghee asked for, to partake of it. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun who is not ill, having had ghee asked for, should partake of it, it should be confessed by that nun, saying: ‘I have fallen, ladies, into a blameworthy matter, inappropriate, which ought to be confessed; I confess it.’”

d1.2.1 Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Not ill means: for whom there comes to be comfort without ghee.

Ill means: for whom there does not come to be comfort without ghee.

Ghee means: ghee from cows or ghee from she-goats or ghee from buffaloes, ghee from those whose meat is allowable.¹

If she is not ill (and) has it asked for for herself, in the request there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she accepts, thinking: “I will partake of it on acquisition,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful there is an offence which ought to be confessed.²

d1.2.2
3:421 If she thinks that she is not ill when she is not ill (and) having had ghee asked for partakes of it, there is an offence which ought to be confessed. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ill ... If she thinks that she is ill when she is not ill ... offence which ought to be confessed. If she thinks that she is not ill when she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ill when she is ill, there is no offence.³

¹ Cf. Vin 3.251, Vin 4.88 (BD 2.131, BD 2.342). ² Cf. Vin 4.89. ³ Cf. Vin 4.89.

There is no offence if she is ill; if having been ill (and) having had it asked for she partakes of it when she is not ill, if she eats the remainder of an ill nun's meal; if it belongs to relations; if they are invited; if it is for another; if it is by means of her own property; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

¹ Cf. Vin 4.89.

NUNS' CONFESSION (PĀṬIDESANIYA) 2-8

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns having had oil asked for, partook of it ... having had honey ... molasses ... fish ... meat ... milk ... curds asked for, partook of them.¹ People ... (Bi-Pd 1.1.1-Bi-Pd 1.1.2. Instead of ghee read curds) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun who is not ill, having had oil (... honey ... molasses... fish ... meat ... milk ... curds ...) asked for, should partake of it, it should be confessed by that nun, saying: 'I have fallen, ladies, into a blameworthy matter, inappropriate, which ought to be confessed; I confess it.'"

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Not ill means: for whom there comes to be comfort without curds.

Ill means: for whom there does not come to be comfort without curds.

Oil means: sesamum oil, oil of mustard seeds, oil containing honey, oil of the castor-oil plant, oil from tallow. Honey means: honey of bees. Molasses means: what is produced from sugar-cane. Fish means: it is called one that lives in water. Meat means: the meat of those whose meat is allowable. Milk means: milk of cows or milk of she-goats or milk of buffaloes, milk 'of those whose meat is allowable. Curds means: curds from just these.²

¹ Referring to curds. ² = Vin 3.251, Vin 4.88.

If she is not ill and has them¹ asked for for herself ... (Bi-Pd 1.2. Instead of ghee read curds.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Recited, ladies, are the eight rules for offences which ought to be confessed. Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.

Told are the offences which ought to be confessed.

Bi-Pd 2
BD 3.4

Vin 4.3

¹ Referring to curds.

NUNS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 1-75

75.1.1
3.424

These rules for training, ladies, come up for recitation.¹

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns dressed with the inner robe hanging down in front and behind. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns dress with the inner robe hanging down in front and behind, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns dress ... and behind?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns ... and behind?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns ... and behind? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"I will dress with the inner robe all round (me),¹ is a training to be observed."

One should dress with the inner robe going all round one for covering the circle of the navel, the circle of the knees. Whoever out of disrespect dresses with the inner robe hanging down in front or behind, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ Being the same as the Monks' Sekhiyas, only the first and the last are reprinted here, as in Oldenberg's edition.

There is no offence if it is unintentional; if she is not thinking; if she does not know; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer ...

... at Sāvathī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns eased themselves and spat in the water. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ease themselves and spit in the water, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns ... in the water?" Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord questioned the monks, saying:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns ... in the water?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "Monks, how can this group of six nuns ... in the water? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"I will not ease myself or spit in the water,' is a training to be observed."

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Now at that time ill nuns were (too) scrupulous to ease themselves and spit in the water. They told this matter to the lord. He said:

"I allow, monks, a nun if she is ill to ease herself and spit in the water. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"I will not ease myself or spit in the water, if not ill,' is a training to be observed."

If she is not ill she should not ease herself or spit in the water. Whoever out of disrespect, if not ill ... offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional; if she is not thinking; if she does not know; if she is ill; if done on dry land she pours water over it; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrongdoer.

76.1.1

Recited, ladies, are the rules for training. Concerning them, I ask the ladies ... thus do I understand this.

4.351

Told are the Rules for Training

NUNS' DECIDING OF LEGAL QUESTIONS (ADHIKARAṆASAMATHA)

These seven rules,¹ ladies, for the deciding of legal questions come up for recitation. For the deciding, for the settlement of legal questions arising from time to time:

1. A verdict in the presence of may be given.
2. A verdict of innocence may be given.
3. A verdict of past insanity may be given.
4. It may be carried out on (her) acknowledgement.
5. (There is) the decision of the majority.
6. The decision for specific depravity.
7. The covering up (as) with grass.

Recited, ladies, are the seven rules for the deciding of legal questions. Concerning them I ask the ladies ... thus do I understand this.

¹ = Vin 4.207. See above, BD 3.153f. for notes.

BD 3.4

Bi-As 1

Bi-As 2

Bi-As 3

Bi-As 4

Bi-As 5

Bi-As 6

Bi-As 7

NUNS' CONCLUSION

Recited, ladies, is the occasion, recited are the eight rules for offences involving defeat, recited are the seventeen rules for offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, recited are the thirty rules for offences of expiation involving forfeiture, recited are the hundred and sixty-six rules for offences of expiation, recited are the eight rules for offences which ought to be confessed, recited are the rules for training, recited are the seven rules for the deciding of legal questions. So much (of the sayings) of the lord, handed down in clauses, contained in clauses, comes up for recitation every half month. All should train therein in harmony, on friendly terms, without contention.

Told is the Nuns' Analysis

Told are both Analyses*¹

¹ Here ends Oldenberg's Vol. IV.

Volume III

Khandhaka

Translator's Introduction	1357
1. Going forth (Pabbajjā)	1380
On Awakening	1380
At the Goatherds' Banyan tree	1382
On Mucalinda	1384
At the Rājāyatana tree	1385
On the invitation of Brahmā	1386
On the group of five	1390
On the going forth of Yasa	1403
With Māra	1409
On going forth and full ordination	1411
With Māra, the second	1412
The story of the excellent group	1413
On the miracles at Uruvelā	1415
On Bimbisāra's gathering	1430
On the going forth of Sāriputta and Moggallāna	1436
On the duties to the preceptor	1443
On the duties to the one who shares his cell	1454

On dismissal	1455
On the duties to the teacher	1462
On the duties to the student	1467
On not forgiving when dismissed	1467
The story of the ignorant and inexperienced	1467
On the nullifications of guidance	1468
On five cases when one may ordain	1469
On six cases when one may ordain	1472
On one who had formerly been a member of another sect	1473
The story of five diseases	1477
On King’s service	1479
The story of a thief garlanded with fingers	1481
The story of a thief broken out of jail	1482
The story of an thief with a “wanted” notice	1483
The story of a scourged man	1483
The story of a branded man	1484
The story of a debtor	1484
The story of a slave	1484
The story of a bald-headed metal-smith	1485
The story of the boy Upāli	1486
The story of malaria	1488
The story of Kaṇḍaka	1489
The story of when it was crowded	1490
On release from dependence	1491
The story of Rāhula	1493
On training rules	1495
The story of an act of punishment	1496
The story of making a prohibition without asking	1498
The story of luring away	1498
The story of Kaṇḍaka the novice	1498

The story of a eunuch	1499
The story of one in communion by theft	1500
The story of an animal	1501
The story of a matricide	1503
The story of a parricide	1504
The story of a killer of a perfected one	1504
The story of a raper of nuns	1505
The story of a hermaphrodite	1505
The story of without a preceptor, etc.	1505
The story of without a bowl, etc.	1507
The portion on thirty-two (cases) where one should not let go forth	1508
The story of guidance for the unconscientious	1510
The story of guidance for one on a journey, etc.	1510
Permission to proclaim by clan	1512
The story of two expecting ordination, etc.	1512
Permission for ordination twenty years from conception	1513
Ordination procedure	1514
Four requisites	1518
Four things not to be done	1518
The story of one suspended for not seeing an offence	1520
2. Observance (Uposatha)	1525
Permission to gather	1525
Permission to recite the Pātimokkha	1526
The story of Mahākappina	1532
Permission for a boundary	1533
On an observance hall	1535
On a maximum for observance	1536
Permission for a “not separated” boundary	1538
Abolishing a boundary	1540

A village boundary, etc.	1541
Incomplete observance, etc.	1542
Reciting the Pātimokkha in brief, etc.	1543
On questioning regarding Vinaya	1545
On answering regarding Vinaya	1546
On reproving	1547
Protesting an act that is not the rule, etc.	1548
Requesting the reciting of the Pātimokkha, etc.	1549
Allowance to learn the counting of the fortnights, etc.	1550
Allowance for preliminary duties	1553
The story of those travelling to distant parts, etc.	1554
On giving entire purity	1556
On giving consent	1559
On being grabbed by relatives	1560
Agreement for the mad	1561
The observance by an Order, etc.	1562
Procedure for making amends for offences	1565
Procedure for an offence without making obstacle	1566
Procedure for making amends for a shared offence	1567
Fifty cases of no offence	1570
Fifty cases of perceiving it is a group or not a group	1571
Fifty cases of doubt	1572
Fifty cases of acting badly	1573
Fifty cases of aiming at schism	1573
Abbreviated repetitions on entering a boundary	1574
Seeing characteristics, etc.	1575
Performing observance with those of a different communion, etc.	1577
Portion on should not go	1578
Portion on should go	1579

Seeing a blameworthy person	1580
3. Rains (Vassa)	1583
Allowance to enter the rains	1583
On tour in the rains, etc.	1584
Allowance for seven days business	1585
Allowance for five even when not sent for	1589
Allowance for seven when sent for	1594
Allowance only when sent for	1595
Portion on no offence for cutting short the rains when there is danger	1596
Portion on no offence for cutting short the rains when there is schism in the Saṅgha	1599
Entering the rains in a cow pen, etc.	1601
Places for not entering the rains	1602
Unlawful agreement	1603
Offence of wrong-doing in assent	1604
4. Invitation (Pavāraṇā)	1609
Dwelling not in comfort	1609
Division of the Invitation	1614
Allowance to give invitation	1615
On being grabbed by relatives	1616
Division of invitation by Saṅgha, etc.	1616
Procedure for making amends	1619
Procedure for no obstacle from offence	1619
Procedure for making amends for shared offence	1620
Fifty cases of no offence	1620
Fifty cases of perceiving it is a group or is not a group	1621
Fifty cases of doubt	1622
Fifty cases of acting badly	1622

Fifty cases of aiming at schism	1623
Abbreviated repetitions on entering a boundary	1623
Various days	1624
Visible characteristics	1624
Invitation with those of different communion, etc.	1624
Portion on should not go	1624
Portion on should go	1624
Seeing a blameworthy person	1624
Invitation with two statements, etc.	1625
Setting aside the invitation	1627
Basis for a grave offence, etc.	1633
The story of makers of strife	1635
Harmonious invitation	1637
5. Leather (Camma)	1641
The story of Soṇa Koḷivisa	1641
Rejection of double-lined sandals	1650
Rejection of all dark green, etc.	1651
Allowance for cast off sandals with many linings	1653
Rejection of sandals inside a monastery	1654
Rejection of wooden sandals	1656
Rejection of vehicles, etc.	1661
Rejection of high and broad seats	1662
Rejection of all leather	1664
Allowance for what is displayed by householders, etc.	1666
The story of Soṇa Kutikaṇṇa	1667
The five boons for Mahākaccana	1669
6. Medicine (Bhesajja)	1677
On five medicines	1677
On root medicine, etc.	1679

The story of Pilindavaccha	1685
Allowance for sugar, etc.	1694
On rejection of what is prepared indoors, etc.	1696
Picked up and received	1698
Allowance for what is received, etc.	1701
On rejection of surgery	1704
On rejection of human flesh	1705
On rejection of elephant flesh	1709
Allowance for conjei and honey-lumps	1711
The story of the minister young in faith	1713
The story of Belaṭṭhakaccāna	1716
The story of Pāṭaligāma	1720
The story of Sunidha and Vassakāra	1723
On the truths at Koṭigāma	1726
The story of Ambapālī	1727
The story of the Licchavīs	1728
The story of General Siha	1730
Allowance for a place for what is allowable	1738
The story of the householder Meṇḍaka	1742
Allowance for five dairy products, etc.	1747
The story of Keṇiya the matted-hair ascetic	1750
The story Roja the Malla	1754
The story of one gone forth when old	1758
On the four great references	1762

7. Kaṭhina

1765

Allowance for Kaṭhina	1765
Seven on bringing	1773
Seven on taking	1775
Six on bringing	1775
Six on taking	1776

Fifty on bringing	1776
Fifty on taking, etc.	1779
Fifty on taking what is imperfectly executed	1779
Twelve cases contrary to expectation	1780
Twelve cases in accordance with expectation	1782
Twelve on business	1785
Nine cases on without collecting	1787
Five on living in comfort	1789
On obstacles and not-obstacles	1791

8. Robes (Cīvara) 1796

The story of Jīvaka	1796
The story of the merchant's wife	1800
The story of King Bimbisāra	1803
The story of the merchant of Rājagaha	1804
The story of the merchant's son	1807
The story of King Pajjota	1808
On a pair of Siveyyaka cloths	1812
On exactly thirty purges	1812
On asking for a boon	1814
On permission for woollen garments, etc.	1816
On searching for rag-robres	1818
On an agreement for the receiver of cloth	1820
On an agreement for a storeroom, etc.	1821
On dying robes	1824
Allowance for cut-up cloth	1827
Allowance for three robes	1829
On extra robes	1831
The story of Visākhā	1833
Allowance for a sitting-cloth, etc.	1840
On the least robe to be assigned, etc.	1843

On when a robe becomes the Saṅgha's	1847
The story of Upananda the Sakyan	1849
On the story of one ill	1852
On inheritance	1855
On rejection of nakedness	1857
On rejection of garments of grass, etc.	1858
On rejection of all dark green	1859
On when there is no robe after the rains	1860
On a robe for a divided Saṅgha	1862
On rightly and wrongly allotted	1863
Eight channels for the accruing of robes	1865
9. The monks from Campā (Campeyya)	1868
The story of the monk Kassapagotta	1868
On an act not by rule in an incomplete assembly, etc.	1873
On an act without a motion, etc.	1875
Carrying out by a fourfold Order, etc.	1880
Carrying out by a Fourfold (Order)	1881
Carrying out by a Fivefold (Order)	1882
Carrying out by a Tenfold (Order)	1882
Carrying out by a Twentyfold (Order)	1882
On one on probation, etc.	1882
On two sent away, etc.	1884
On an act not by rule, etc.	1886
On the questions of Upāli	1890
On an act of censure	1895
On an act of guidance	1897
On an act of banishment	1897
On an act of reconciliation	1898
On an act of suspension for not seeing an offence	1898
On an act of suspension for not making amends	1899

On revoking an act of suspension for not relinquishing . . .	1899
On revoking an act of censure	1899
On revoking an act of guidance	1900
On revoking an act of banishment	1901
On revoking an act of reconciliation	1901
On revoking an act of suspension for not seeing an offence .	1901
On revoking an act of suspension for not making amends . .	1901
On revoking an act of suspension for not relinquishing . . .	1901
On disputing an act of censure	1902
On disputing an act of guidance	1903
On disputing an act of banishment	1903
On disputing an act of reconciliation	1903
On disputing an act of suspension for not seeing an offence .	1904
On disputing an act of suspension for not making amends .	1904
On disputing an act of suspension for not relinquishing . . .	1904
On revoking an act of censure	1904
On revoking an act of guidance	1905
On revoking an act of banishment	1905
On revoking an act of reconciliation	1905
On revoking an act of suspension for not seeing an offence .	1905
On revoking an act of suspension for not making amends . .	1905
On revoking an act of suspension for not relinquishing . . .	1906

10. The monks from Kosambī (Kosambaka) 1911

On the dispute among the monks from Kosambī	1911
The story of Dīghāvu	1918
On going to Bālakaloṇaka	1929
On going to Pācīnavamsadāya	1930
On going to Pārileyaka	1932
On eighteen cases	1935
Allowance to restore	1938

On harmony in the Saṅgha	1939
Questions of Upāli on harmony in the Saṅgha	1940
Translator's Introduction	1944
11. The followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka	1962
Act of censure	1962
Twelve on an act not by rule	1965
Twelve on an act by rule	1966
Six on desires	1967
Eighteen duties	1969
Eighteen cases that should not be settled	1970
Eighteen cases that should be revoked	1971
Act of guidance	1972
Twelve on an act not by rule	1974
Twelve on an act by rule	1974
Six on desiring	1974
Eighteen duties	1974
Eighteen cases that should not be revoked	1975
Eighteen cases that should be revoked	1975
Act of banishment	1977
Twelve on an act not by rule	1982
Twelve on an act by rule	1982
Fourteen on desiring	1982
Eighteen duties	1983
Eighteen cases that should not be revoked	1984
Eighteen cases that should be revoked	1985
Act of reconciliation	1986
Twelve on an act not by rule	1990
Twelve on an act by rule	1990
Four on desiring	1990

Eighteen duties	1991
Eighteen cases that should not be revoked	1994
Eighteen cases that should be revoked	1994
An act of suspension for not seeing an offence	1994
Twelve on an act not by rule	1996
Twelve on an act by rule	1996
Six on desiring	1996
Forty three duties	1996
Forty-three cases that should not be revoked	1998
Forty-three cases that should be revoked	2000
An act of suspension for not making amends	2000
Twelve on an act not by rule	2000
Twelve on an act by rule	2000
Six on desiring	2001
Forty-three duties	2001
Forty-three cases that should not be revoked	2001
Forty-three cases that should be revoked	2001
An act of suspension for not relinquishing a wrong view	2001
Twelve on an act not by rule	2004
Twelve on an act by rule	2004
Six on desiring	2004
Forty-three duties	2005
Forty-three cases that should not be revoked	2006
Forty-three cases that should be revoked	2006

12. Probation (Parivāsa) 2010

Duties on one on probation	2010
Duties of one being sent back to the beginning	2016
Duties of one deserving mānatta	2017
Duties of one undergoing mānatta	2018
Duties of one deserving rehabilitation	2019

13. Accumulation (Samuccaya)

2022

Emission of semen	2022
Unconcealed mānatta	2022
Unconcealed rehabilitation	2023
Probation concealed for one night	2025
Mānatta concealed for one night	2025
Rehabilitation concealed for one night	2026
Probation concealed for five days	2026
Sending one on probation back to the beginning	2026
Sending one deserving mānatta to the beginning	2028
Mānatta for three offences	2029
Sending one undergoing mānatta to the beginning	2029
Sending one deserving rehabilitation back to the beginning	2030
Rehabilitation for one who has been sent back to the beginning	2030
Probation for one who has concealed for a fortnight	2031
Sending one on probation for a fortnight back to the beginning	2032
Concurrent probation	2032
Sending one deserving mānatta back to the beginning, etc.	2033
Mānatta for three offences	2033
Sending one undergoing mānatta back to the beginning	2034
Sending one deserving rehabilitation back to the beginning	2034
Rehabilitation for one who concealed for a fortnight	2035
Probation	2035
Concurrent probation with dependent duration	2035
All lengths concealed with dependent duration	2036

Probation for two months	2037
Procedure for one given probation for two months	2042
Purifying probation	2044
Forty cases	2047
Thirty-six cases	2050
One hundred on mānatta	2051
Four hundred on concurrent probation and beginning	2055
The portion with eighteen cases measured, etc.	2057
The portion with eleven cases on two monks	2057
Nine cases on impure beginning	2060
Second set of nine cases	2062
Third set of nine cases	2064
14. Settlements (Samatha)	2066
Verdict in the presence of	2066
Verdict by memory	2068
Verdict by former madness	2076
Acknowledgement	2079
Majority	2081
Bad character	2083
Covering over with grass	2085
Issues	2088
Settlement of issues	2097
15. Minor matters (Khuddaka)	2113
16. Lodgings (Sayanāsana)	2181
First recitation section	2181
Allowance for dwellings	2181
Allowance for couches and chairs	2186
Allowance for whitewash, etc.	2190
Rejection of a bold design	2191

Allowance for a balustrade	2191
Allowance for an assembly hall	2193
Allowance for a porch	2194
Allowance for a fenced monastery	2194
Second recitation section	2195
The story of Anāthapiṇḍika	2195
Giving building work	2202
Allowance for the first seat, etc.	2204
Persons not to be bowed to	2207
Rejection of reserved seating	2207
Allowance for what is displayed by householders	2208
Appreciation for the Jetavana monastery	2209
Reservation of a seat, etc.	2210
Agreement for an assigner of lodgings	2213
Third recitation section	2215
Things not to be disposed of	2218
Things not to be distributed	2220
On the gift of building work	2222
Rejection of using elsewhere, etc.	2226
Allowance for meals for the Order, etc.	2228
Agreement for an issuer of meals	2229
Agreement for an assigner of lodgings	2229
Agreement on one to dispose of trifles	2230
Agreement on an accepter of outer cloaks	2231
17. Schism in an Order (Saṅghabheda)	2235
First recitation section	2235
On the going forth of the six Sakyans	2235
The story of Devadatta	2242
On the five teachers	2244
Second recitation section	2247

Act of informing	2247
The story of Prince Ajātasattu	2250
Sending assassins	2252
Shedding blood	2254
Sending out Nālāgiri	2256
On the request for the five points	2258
Third recitation section	2263
On schism in the Order	2263
Questions of Upāli	2270
18. Duties (Vatta)	2276
On the duties of visitors	2276
On the duties of residents	2280
On the duties of travellers	2281
On the duties of expressing appreciation	2283
On duties in the refectory	2284
On duties for those going on almsround	2287
On duties for forest dwellers	2289
On duties regarding lodgings	2291
On duties in the sauna	2294
On duties in the toilet	2295
On duties to the preceptor	2297
On duties to one who shares his cell	2304
On duties to the teacher	2307
On duties to the student	2307
19. Suspending the Observance (Uposathaṭṭhāpana)	2314
Requesting the recitation of the Pātimokkha	2314
Eight wonderful things about the great ocean	2316
Eight wonderful things about this Dhamma and Vinaya	2318
Those deserving to hear the Pātimokkha	2321

Setting aside the Pātimokkha by rule and not by rule	2322
Setting aside the Pātimokkha by rule	2327
Factors for undertaking on one's own behalf	2329
Things to be reviewed by a reprover	2331
Things to be established by a reprover	2333
On connected with the reprover and the reprovved	2333
20. Nuns (Bhikkhunī)	2338
First recitation section	2338
The story of Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī	2338
Eight important rules	2341
Allowance for the ordination of nuns	2343
Second recitation section	2350
Third recitation section	2364
21. (Recitation with) Five Hundred (Pañcasata)	2383
Origin of the Council	2383
On the lesser and minor training rules	2389
On the higher penalty	2393
22. (Recitation with) Seven Hundred (Sattasata)	2398
First recitation section	2398
Second recitation section	2410

TRANSLATOR'S INTRODUCTION

The present volume of the Book of the Discipline covers the whole of the Mahāvagga, the Great, or Greater Division of the Vinaya, and is thus a translation of the first volume of OLDENBERG'S Vinaya Piṭakam, published in 1879. The Mahāvagga was translated in full by RHYSDAVIDS and OLDENBERG, and comprises most of Volume I and the first part of Volume II of their Vinaya Texts (their Cūlavagga translation also begins in Volume II), published in the Sacred Books of the East, Volumes XIII and XVII, in 1881, 1882. These volumes, although they first appeared seventy years ago, are still indispensable for a study of early Buddhist monastic life.

This new translation of the Book of the Discipline is, however, justified I think, for various reasons. For example, recent events have focused attention on the Buddhist lands of South-East Asia where Buddhist monks still follow these ancient rules; Buddhism itself is stirring and seeking to know more of its own treasures, and it is attracting non-Buddhists to become acquainted with them likewise. The moment is therefore not unsuitable to re-translate one of the principal works of the Pali canon, the more especially as many Western students are now debarred from consulting the original English translation, Vinaya Texts, since unfortunately it is out of print. Moreover, the scholarship which has been lavished on the Pali canon during roughly the last century has inevitably resulted in an increased understanding of the technical and other terms so abundant in the Vinaya and which in many cases also occur in other parts of the Pali canon. Following this, there has resulted a surer knowledge of Pali Buddhism as a whole. Now that references, allusions, remarks, not to mention words themselves, can be compared with other contexts, which had been either not edited in Roman letters or not translated by the time Vinaya Texts was published, they are able to take on a fresh and a fuller meaning. For the same reason various terms and phrases, hitherto difficult and perhaps baffling, have become easier to understand, and hence to translate.

I have therefore attempted translations of various words that Rhys Davids and Oldenberg, for one reason or another, kept in the Pali. I do not claim originality, however, for my renderings, for most, if not all of these terms have already been translated where they occur in other canonical texts and have appeared in their appropriate books in the Pali Text Society's Translation Series or in the Sacred Books of the Buddhists. Some of these words may be mentioned here. For example, as in the first three volumes of the Book of the Discipline, saṅgha is rendered as Order; dukkāṭa as wrong-doing (a type of offence) of constant occurrence in this volume; sāmaṇera as novice; titthiyā as other sects; bhikkhu and bhikkhunī as monk and nun; chabbaggiyā bhikkhū as the sixfold group of monks; vassa as the rains; parivāsa as probation; upajjhāya as preceptor; saddhivihārika as the one who shares his cell; ācariya as teacher (in a technical sense), and antevāsin as his pupil; and pavāraṇā as Invitation.

In this volume I have also translated a number of other words, likewise left untranslated by Rhys Davids and Oldenberg, and which have not occurred in my three preceding volumes. For example, I have translated pārisuddhi as entire purity; nissaya as dependence; and ñatti as motion while ñatticatuttha is a motion followed by a resolution put three times. I have also given the names of the formal acts of the Order in English. All these are technical terms, and should be understood, for they naturally help to clarify some of the depths and complications of the Vinaya. In almost every case the notes which Rhys Davids and Oldenberg append to their untranslated words are of great value and merit careful consultation. I have made no attempt to translate dhamma and nibbāna. But I hope by translating such terms as I have mentioned above I have, while keeping to the Pali intention, perhaps clothed them in a meaning and significance easier for the English reader to grasp than when he is confronted with the Pali forms.

This volume opens with the account, of the greatest importance to historians and devotees of Buddhism alike, of the days immediately preceding the formation of the Order itself, beginning with the seven days' contemplation under the Bo-tree where Gotama sat enjoying the bliss of deliverance just after he had attained that full awakening, illumination or enlightenment which marked his passage from Bodhisattahood to Buddhahood.

According to this Mahāvagga account, during each of “the three watches of the night” —presumably the last of the seven spent under the Bo-tree—he uttered a solemn utterance concerned with cause, and then with the routing of Māra (in the third watch). The Dhammapada Commentary (Dhp-a iii.127) says that in the first watch he dissipated the darkness (ignorance) veiling his former abodes, or lives, births; that in the second he purified his deva-vision; and that in the third, out of compassion for creatures, he paid right mindfulness to dependent origination both in forward and reverse order. Then, self-awakened to the fullest self-awakening, he uttered the solemn utterance common to hundreds of thousands of Buddhas, namely the two verses beginning anekajātisaṃsāram (Dhp 153; Thag 183; Ja i.76). The Introduction to the Vinaya Commentary (Vin-a i.17) and the Dīgha Commentary (DN-a i.16), agree that these verses are the first Buddhavaṇṇana; while the Udāna Commentary (Ud-a 208) and the Suttanipāṭa Commentary (Sn-p-a ii.392) also say that he uttered these verses after he had attained the three knowledges in the three watches of the night. The Khuddakapāṭha Commentary (Kp-a 12f.), elaborating further, or perhaps following some other tradition, says that while these two verses were the first of all words to be uttered by the Buddha (Buddha, because now, although very recently, “awakened”), they were only spoken mentally and not out loud. For what he first spoke out loud, so this Commentary continues, was the verse which in the Mahāvagga is attributed to the end of the first watch of the night of awakening.

At the end of the third watch of this crucial night the Buddha went, according to the Mahāvagga, to the foot of the Ajapāla banyan and sat there for seven days; he then spent another seven days at the foot of the Mucalinda tree, and a still further seven at the foot of the Rājāyatana. While he was at the first of these three trees he was visited by a brahmin, representative of one of the sects which abounded in India at that time, and the Buddha stated his view on what it is to be a “Brahmin” (in the true sense). While he was at the second tree a naga-king arrived to offer him protection—indicative of the close and, on the whole, friendly relations which in the Buddhist tradition existed between serpents and human beings. Again Gotama made a short statement, this time on what it is that constitutes “highest bliss”, parama sukha. Although this statement lacks the terseness of that attributed to Gotama in the Māgandiya Sutta (MN 75): that “nibbāna is the highest bliss”, it nevertheless contains tenets that throughout the long history of Buddhism have remained at the heart of its teaching: that the absence of malice, the absence of feeling attracted to conditioned things, the transcending of sense-pleasures, and the averting (or control, vinaya) of pride in the thought “I am” — that these are the highest bliss.

In the “Talk on Brahmā’s Entreaty” during the time of the Buddha’s hesitation to teach dhamma, concepts emerge which, with more insistence or less, are found in most of the Pali canonical texts: the deepness and difficulty of dhamma, its peace, and the consequent need to teach it in a world so delighting and rejoicing in sensual pleasure that it was averse to letting itself be persuaded that dhamma, earnestly practised, led upstream, against the current, paṭisotagāmin, and by the death of craving opened the doors of deathlessness to nibbāna, the source of true and supreme bliss.

The first Khandhaka, Section or Chapter of the Mahāvagga, called the Great (mahā) Section,¹ also contains Gotama’s famous utterance to Upaka, the Naked Ascetic, of his victoriousness, perfection and self-awakening, of his uniqueness, and of his having had no teacher (Kd 1.6.8). He is therefore different from other human beings. Then there comes, preceded by further stress on the finding of deathlessness, the First Discourse, delivered to the five earliest followers, and called elsewhere the Dhammacakkappavattana Sutta, the Discourse on the Rolling of the Wheel of Dhamma, in which the Middle Course between the two extremes, the dead-ends of too great luxury and too great austerity, is called the ariyan Eightfold Way. This Way is graded into sīla, samādhi and pañña. (MN i.301) and centres on dukkha, unsatisfactoriness, ill or suffering, and the stopping of it, epitomised later by Gotama when he is recorded to say (MN i.140): “As formerly, so now, this is precisely what I teach: ill and the stopping of ill.” Aññāta Koṇḍañña was the first of the disciples to apprehend this central fact in causality, that “whatever is of the nature to arise, all that is of the nature to stop”. It was his vision of dhamma, as it was soon afterwards that of his four companions.

¹ Note by Sujato: In this SuttaCentral edition this is titled the Pabbajjākkhandhaka, the Chapter on Going Forth.

As this dhamma-vision arose in each one of them he asked for the “going forth” or admission, pabbajjā, and for the ordination, upasampadā, in the Lord’s presence. In response, Gotama uttered the words, “Come, monk, ehi bhikkhu, well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahmarfaring for the utter ending of ill.” This, the original formula, used by Gotama when the Order was beginning to form and while it was still in its infancy, covers simultaneous admission and ordination. Later, two separate procedures supervened, and as the Mahāvagga shows, admission into the Order had to be gained before ordination could be conferred.

After the Second Discourse, that on the impossibility of the five khandhas being self because they are impermanent and suffering, and also spoken to the five original followers, and after the ordination of Yasa, his four friends, and then his fifty friends, there were sixty-one arahants in the world (Kd 1.10.4). “Freed from all snares,” they were told by Gotama to go out on tour and preach dhamma for the good and the welfare of the multitude. As a result many people became anxious for admission and ordination, but, journeying to Gotama so as to be admitted and ordained by him, they arrived exhausted. Accordingly he thereupon allowed monks themselves to admit and ordain in any district, in any quarter. They were not, however, instructed to use the words “Come, monk.” On the contrary, it is now the candidate who has three times to repeat another formula. This is called admission and ordination by the “three goings for refuge”. This marks the second stage in the ordination proceedings. In the usage to be followed by those who wished to be monastic followers, the three refuges became stabilised as buddhaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi, dhammaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi, saṅghaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi, each phrase to be repeated three times. Those who wished to be counted as lay-disciples (upāsaka, feminine upāsikā) asked for this status by repeating the slightly different formula of taking refuge not in buddhaṃ, dhammaṃ and saṅghaṃ, but in bhagavantaṃ, dhammaṃ and bhikkhusaṅghaṃ,¹ or in bhavantaṃ Gotamaṃ, dhammaṃ and bhikkhusaṅghaṃ.²

It is probable that this method of admitting and ordaining did not last very long. The reasons given for abolishing it are perhaps not very convincing, and we should have expected more details and tales of mishaps showing that it no longer sufficed and therefore needed revising. At all events, as the Mahāvagga stands, on an occasion when Sāriputta asked him how he should admit and ordain a certain Brahmin, Gotama did not answer that the Brahmin’s repetition of the three goings for refuge would constitute his ordination (Kd 1.28.3). Instead the third phase now arose: that of the Order ordaining a candidate, presented by his preceptor, by means of a formal act (kamma) consisting of a motion and a resolution proclaimed three times (ñat-ticatuttha). This means that it is now the Order alone which has the authority, the power and the legal right to ordain. In addition, the candidate for ordination now has to have a preceptor, agreed upon by the Order, who must present him to the Order—that is to the one dwelling within the boundary where he wants to take up his residence—and who must have prepared him beforehand so that, without feeling ashamed or confused, he will be able to answer a number of routine questions that will be put to him in the midst of the Order. No doubt of gradual growth, these routine-questions form a kind of examination, and it is impressed on the candidate by his preceptor that now, above all times, is a time for truth-speaking.

¹ Besides the Mahāvagga references, see e.g. MN i.368, MN i.379, MN i.391, MN i.396.

² See also e.g. MN i.290, MN i.413, MN i.489, MN i.501.

These are, however, merely some of the features among the many leading to the finalised form of the ordination proceedings. These multiplied and became intricate to suit the dynamic and progressive phase in which they took shape. Gone is the old simplicity of “Come, monk”. Regulations have to increase to meet a complexity of emergent eventualities. The resources, nissaya, the minimum number of monks composing an Order competent to ordain, the number of years a monk must have been ordained before he is reckoned as suitable or competent to ordain others, living in dependence, nissāya vatthum, on a teacher, giving guidance, nissayam dātum, the qualities that a monk should be possessed of in order to ordain, and the ordination and probation of former members of other sects, and the age at which a person may be ordained, are all subjects brought under review. The inner life of the Order had to be safeguarded as much as had its relations to the world outside.

That the candidate for ordination had to undergo a prior period of preparation and instruction at the hands of a preceptor implies a passage of time elapsing between “going forth” or preliminary admission, and “ordination”, or final admission. It would seem that in order to meet difficulties, perhaps created by the drawing power of Gotama’s Order itself, what had once been one operation became split into two. This is the intention of Kd 1.28 which, without mentioning admission, allows monks to ordain by a formal act consisting of the motion and the resolution put to the Order three times. Since the method of admission is not formulated here, although Sāriputta had asked how to admit and how to ordain, it becomes clear that these two proceedings, hitherto simultaneous, are now in the process of separating. Kd 1.30 shows even more confusion. It cites an instance where monks admit and ordain a brahmin who had asked for admission (only). Gotama reproved them for admitting anyone who went forth for the sake of the good meals the monks were reputed to enjoy—and then pointed out the four “resources” for one being ordained, saying that admission was for the sake, not of good food, but of each one of the resources.

It is, however, clear that two stages were becoming necessary before the full status of a monk could be acquired, and that in the earlier of these two stages, entered on to by pabbajjā, admission, the monk’s standing, rights and duties would be different from those in the latter stage, entered on to by upasampadā, ordination. Hence when pabbajjā was functionally separated from upasampadā, it received a new and specialised significance, coming to mean admission to noviciateship. One became a novice, sāmaṇera, by the conferment of pabbajjā, a newly ordained monk, nava, by the conferment of upasampadā. The former, like the latter, had its own machinery for its proper enactment (BD 1.50–BD.1.61). For example, a boy should not be allowed to “go forth” unless he had his parents’ consent, and unless he had reached the age of fifteen, except on the strange condition that he could scare crows (BD 1.51)—a test perhaps that his first infancy was past. Methods of dealing with refractory novices are laid down (BD 1.57–BD.1.60). As depraved monks could be expelled after they had been ordained, so depraved novices could be expelled before they were ordained. The going for refuge in the buddha, dhamma and saṅgha although abolished from the normal procedure of ordination, was retained as the formula novices are to repeat when being allowed to go forth (Kd 1.54.3). It is also the formula to be used by those former members of other sects, who later will be eligible for ordination, when they are asking to enter on a four months’ probationary period which they have to observe first (BD 1.38).

By enlarging the Order to include novices, who might be those who shared a cell (with a preceptor) or pupils (of a teacher), by not limiting it to Gotama himself and the first sixty monks, all of whom were arahants, by exhorting these original “adepts” to go forth and teach dhamma and as a result of their returning with an unspecified number of people seeking for admission and ordination, the Order was rendered accessible to men whose powers of attaining the matchless deliverance (Kd 1.13.1) were not so great as those of the original disciples. These were monks who therefore stood in need of training. But in spite of many opportunities of submitting to it and profiting by it, they did not always turn out satisfactorily. Hence it may be presumed that the bhikkhusaṅgha of the third refuge for lay followers said less than was intended. The saṅgha of arahants, or at least of ariyans is meant, not that of average men. The Saṅgha of the Triple Gem is not the community of monks as such, not the community that includes the groups of six or seventeen monks, notorious for their bad habits and as makers of trouble, or the quarrelsome monks of Kosambī, or those depraved or ill-behaved individuals on account of all of whom rules were formulated, regulations devised, and offences discriminated from what were not classed as offences, and whose misdoings provide the raison d'être of discipline, of vinaya, of the outward standard of self-control so much needed not merely to distinguish the monks from members of other sects, although in some cases a certain amount of imitation was permitted, but also to gain the loyalty and support of the lay followers. For on these depended to a large extent the physical conditions which would make a monk free to devote himself to his training, the goal of which was the vision of nibbāna. The Saṅgha of the third refuge has in reality reference only to those steadfast disciples who, having entered the sotāpanna stage are on the supramundane parts of the Way, and so are themselves of supramundane stature and attainments—lokuttara because unaffected by all that is lokiya, of the world, compounded and conditioned. “They are united by the communion of understanding and ethical behaviour,” according to the Commentaries on the Bhayabherava Sutta (MN-a i.130ff.) and the Khuddakapāṭha (Kp-a 18), in both of which the meaning of “going for refuge” is discussed at length and at a high level not approached in the Vinaya Commentary.

The first twenty-four chapters of the First Section, the Mahākhan-dhaka, of the Mahāvagga appear to give a chronological account of events from the night of Awakening under the Bo-tree on the banks of the river Nerañjarā to the admission and ordination of Sāriputta and Moggallāna, the pair of chief disciples, already gone forth from home into homelessness as wanderers. From this point on, a precise historical narration is not so apparent, for the Mahāvagga now begins to group together subject-matter that belongs together. Strict chronology is suspended, no doubt in the interests of classifying this subject-matter and reducing its complexity to some kind of manageable order, the better to be fixed in the memory. What need was there for the existing or for any subsequent Order to know the exact procession of events? It was of greater value to learn and master the rules and procedure governing both the recurrent occasions and the daily conduct of monastic life, and this could be more easily accomplished if the material for the various topics were grouped together instead of being scattered throughout the immense compilation known as the Vinaya-Piṭaka.

If, in the hands of the early editors the sequence of events became secondary to systematisation, this plan nonetheless well shows both the development and the stabilisation of the Order as a uniform institution, the growth of several monastic practices, of government within it for the sake of its own preservation and continuance which, in turn, depended on the essential qualities of scrupulousness and striving on the part of the individuals who became its members. These therefore were being continually brought to live in conformity with a standard of behaviour specially suitable to recluses, samaṇa, and worthy of those who had “left the world” with its evanescent pleasures and its troubles and had instead entered on a way of life where worldly joys and sorrows were gradually to be renounced so that the other-worldly and higher joy that transcended them could be apprehended.

For achieving this, the life of the Order regarded as a whole came to be, no doubt gradually, planned and arranged and adapted to circumstances, while, running parallel to such developments, the life of its members became carefully regulated. Thus the first steps of all—admission and ordination into the Order—were experimented with until various types of applicants regarded as not eligible for entry could be excluded by rules, based either on experience or on forethought. This left the Order open only to the sort of person whom it was not unreasonable to suppose might be assimilated without bringing it into disgrace. Even so, there were backsliders, as already mentioned. Disgrace would have been courted if, for example, debtors and those in the royal service had been allowed to escape their obligations by becoming monks. Therefore they were debarred from entering the Order.

After its first Section on Admission and Ordination, the Mahāvagga proceeds to an account of the nature and establishment of the great fortnightly Observance of uposatha, whose principal feature is the recital of the Pātimokkha rules. This provides monks with an occasion to reveal any offence they may have committed. Their silence, on the other hand, is taken to mean that they have “entire purity”, pārisuddhi, in respect of adherence to the rules. As usual, all kinds of subsidiary matters had to be defined and regularised in order to achieve the smooth running of the main concerns. In the case of the Uposatha it was for example determined that only monks living within the same recognised boundary should gather together on an Uposatha day. Therefore methods of fixing boundaries had to be established. Moreover the Uposatha could not be held at some place chosen at random; a place of a maximum size for the current needs had to be agreed upon within each boundary so that all the monks living there should know where to go and arrive in time. If they had difficulty in crossing a river—one that ran through their boundary—to get there, it might be agreed by the Order that they need not come bringing all their three robes; but if they left them behind they must not lay them aside in an unsuitable place where they might get lost or burnt or eaten by rats (BD 2.12).

Right and wrong methods of reciting the Pātimokkha are given: whether or not it should be recited in full or in brief, which to some extent depended on the absence or presence of ten sources of danger. It was, ideally, to be recited by an elder (thera), but if he was incompetent, then it was to be recited by some other experienced, competent monk; if there were none within the boundary, a newly ordained monk was to be sent to a neighbouring residence to learn it there, either in full or in brief, and then return (Kd 2.17.6).

If a monk, owing to illness, could not attend the recital of the Pāti-mokkha, he had to send his “entire purity”, pārisuddhi, by another. This monk conveyed it on behalf of the one who was ill and declared it (dātum) to the Order; but many occasions are posited when the entire purity comes to be not conveyed on account of a variety of things that might happen to the conveyer both while on his way from the invalid to the meeting-place and after his arrival there but before he had given the entire purity. This, and the conveyance and giving, or declaration of the consent (chandam dātum) on behalf of a monk who is ill for the carrying out of a formal act of the Order, serve to show how extremely important it was held to be—a point stressed over and over again—that an Order should be “complete” whenever its business was being discharged. This was not to fall into the hands of the few. Even those who, like Mahākappina, claimed to be “purified with the highest purity” (Kd 2.5.5), were not not to go. For an Order would not have been complete if even one monk were absent. It would seem that the only reasons for not going to the Observance in person were severe illness and madness. In the former case the Order could be regarded as complete although in fact not complete, provided that the entire purity and the consent were properly and safely conveyed and declared. In the latter, the Order must grant the mad monk, here typified by Gagga, the agreement for a madman. This agreement is to the effect that whether the mad monk remembers the Observance or not, comes for it or not, whether he remembers a formal act of the Order or not, comes for it or not, the Order either with him or without him can legitimately carry out both the Observance and the formal act.

Such are some of the items and problems which had to be settled and solved before the recital of the Pātimokkha received its final form. I do not recapitulate all these here, for they may be read in the text. Those I have given may be regarded as typical of the care taken to forestall and circumvent deleterious contingencies that might arise and disrupt the monk's standing either in his own eyes or in those of his fellows or those of the world. The strength of the regulations governing monastic proceedings and individual conduct lies in the standard or criterion they give of how to act in a multitude of circumstances affecting a monk's life.

When the Mahāvagga comes to deal with the rainy season it pays almost equal attention to entering on the rains and then keeping them by residing in one monastery for either the first three or the second three of the four months of this period, as it does to the journeys monks may take away from their rains-residence. The prime motive underlying the establishment of rains-residences was protection or non-injury: the protection of crops—the economic main-spring of life—and the protection of the teeming small creatures that some Pācittiyas also seek to safeguard. One of the results of this anxiety not to harm vegetable or animal life, and which sometimes received an impetus from the criticisms the laity made, was the allowance given monks and nuns to enter on the rains, followed by an attempt to immobilise them during this season. But restrictions such as this latter were at variance with the immense vitality the Orders possessed, as is shown by the numerous occasions when it is deemed not only permissible but desirable for monks to leave the rains-residence on various kinds of monastic business or on compassionate missions. Even as life must go on, so the Order's business must go on. And the life of this smaller world within the larger one could not close down entirely for a third of each year¹; monks were too much involved with the world outside, they were dependent on it (BD 3.10-BD.3.11.4), and had commitments towards it, and their lives were too much interlocked with those of the laity to make this feasible. A compromise had therefore to be found between, on the one hand, staying in a residence for the whole of the three months of the rains, whereby the minimum of harm would be brought to the crops and the life of minute creatures, and, on the other, leaving the residence for business which might reasonably be regarded as urgent. This compromise was effected by limiting the time of absence to seven days; and the business calling for a monk's presence being carefully defined, if he could not transact it within this time, he should not undertake it at all.

¹ The rains lasted for four months. Each monk could choose whether he would observe the first three months or the second three months, but he was not expected to observe all four.

The end of the rains was marked by two ceremonies. One of these was the Pavāraṇā, when monks invited one another to speak of offences they had seen, heard or suspected to have been committed during the rains. The recital of the Pātimokkha was to "remove" offences, by confessing them, during the nine dry months of the year; the Invitation was to remove any offences that monks had committed during the three wet months, and would help them to aim at grasping discipline (Kd 4.1.13).

The other ceremony held at the end of the rains was not disciplinary in nature or connected with the confession of offences. It was for the making up of the kaṭhina cloth, or cotton cloth that had accrued by way of gift to the monks, into robes to replace those that had become thin and shabby or spoiled by the rains (Kd 7). Thus the replenishment of robe-material comes under consideration, and had to be managed in an orderly and prescribed way.

Further, various officers were created for looking after robe-material: the acceptor, the guardian, the distributor; places suitable for store-rooms are prescribed: dyes and methods of dyeing laid down; the use of three robes only (one doubled however) allowed; while the kinds of medicine monks might take are discussed in considerable detail. The kinds of shoes and sandals they might wear, and the use they might make of animals' skins are treated with equal precision. Both of these categories no doubt spring from the desire not to take life, however infinitesimal. Wooden shoes, or clogs, are objected to because if monks wore them and stepped on insects they might kill them (Kd 5.6.3), besides disturbing monks who were meditating. Further, sandals made of young palmyra palms and young bamboos came to be forbidden after people had complained to monks that, in cutting these down, they were destroying life that was one-facultied. Other complaints must also have tended to reduce the slaughter of animals. Rugs—or garments (Kd 8.28.2)—made of black antelope skin were forbidden to monks and also sheets made of the hide of the Kadali deer (Kd 5.10.4), and it became an offence of wrong-doing to recline upon the hides of lions, tigers and leopards (Kd 5.10.6) or of smaller animals. Cowhides were forbidden because scandalised monks found that one of their number had incited a depraved lay follower to kill a calf for his benefit, and they remembered that Gotama had condemned “onslaught on creatures”. But, at the end of Kd 5, an exception is made in favour of the border districts (Kd 5.13.13) where, because of the hardships and discomfort, the hides of sheep, goats and deer were allowed to be used as coverings.

The last two Sections of the Mahāvagga point to an Order that was indubitably growing and that, in order to meet this expansion, had to be carefully controlled. Kd 9 engages on a thorough discussion of what it is that constitutes valid as against invalid formal acts that an Order can carry out. In the first place an Order to carry out a legally valid formal act must be complete; those monks not able to be present because of illness must send their leave for absence, and those who are present must not protest against the proceedings. A “complete Order” also refers, as before, to the one residing within a determined boundary. The actions and business of every such Order must be transacted on a uniform pattern, and conform to one uniform standard, so that each Order transacts its business in the same way as every other, all following the same regulations. This must therefore be done, in the second place, dhammena, rightly, properly, by rule. To carry out a formal act dhammena, by rule, means that if it is to be carried out by a motion and one resolution, ñattidutiya, the motion must be put and the resolution proposed once only. But if it is to be carried out by a motion and a resolution put three times, ñatticatuttha, then this must be done, in all cases the motion being put before the resolution is proclaimed. The formal act will then be irreversible, fit to stand, and protests against its validity of no avail. Immense pains are taken to distinguish a formal act carried out in a complete assembly and by rule from one carried out in an incomplete assembly and either by what has the appearance of rule or not by rule. The formal acts under the jurisdiction of an Order number sixteen. They comprise (Kd 9.4.1): invitation, rehabilitation, ordination, but only an Order consisting of twenty monks or more can carry out all of these. They also include verdicts of innocence, of past insanity, specific depravity, formal acts of suspension for not seeing an offence, for not making amends for it, for not giving up a wrong view; and of banishment, censure, placing under guidance, reconciliation, sending one who merits probation back to the beginning, and the imposing of mānatta (two features in the penalty for Saṅghādisesa offences). When circumstances justify, these formal acts may be revoked by the Order.

Finally, the tenth and last Section strikes a different note again by promulgating regulations and advice for allaying schisms. These might arise through genuine disagreement upon what constituted an offence and what did not, or upon the particular kind of offence incurred by a particular action; or when factions formed to support a monk or monks who had quarrelled with their fellows from other causes, among which must be included the positive wish to create a schism, a wish put into practice by, for example, suspending a monk for an offence he had not committed and that he therefore refused to see as an offence of his. On one such an occasion Gotama is reputed to have tried, unsuccessfully, to make the bickering monks compose their differences by telling them a Jātaka story illustrating the conquest of wrath by non-wrath (Kd 10.2). The Mahāvagga therefore contains dhamma or doctrine as well as discipline. Indeed the latter would be nugatory if it were not based on the former and promulgated in conjunction with it. How great is the contrast between the quarrelsome monks of Kosambī whose brawls and dissensions caused Gotama to seek solitude like the great bull-elephant who was beset and annoyed by the rest of the herd (Kd 10.4.6), and the peaceable monks, Anuruddha, Nandiya and Kimbila who lived harmoniously together as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection, full of amity in gesture, speech and thought surrendering their minds to each other and so, although having different bodies, having only one mind nāna hi kho no kāyā ekañ ca pana maññe cittaṃ, (Kd 10.4.3-Kd.10.4.4).

The Mahāvagga deals with a time when, at the beginning of Gotama's ministry, the number of monks—and nuns too—was fast increasing, and when they, travelling to more distant parts of India, bore the new doctrine with them and so started the influx of members that has gone on until today. If the geographical expansion of the Order can be gauged by the relaxations in the rules for the outlying districts or border countries, made necessary by the conditions prevailing there, harder than those of the Middle Country where otherwise the scene is laid—principally at Rājagaha, also at Sāvattthī, Vesālī, Kapilavatthu and other neighbouring places—its numerical expansion can equally well be gauged by the awareness of schisms arising to the danger and detriment of the Order, and which could only have occurred some time after its formation.

Although the beginning of the Mahāvagga gives not only an impression but an account of an Order expanding and taking shape immediately after its inception, the remainder appears to refer to a time when the Order already had a considerable amount of history behind it, and to a time therefore when many rules had been laid down and when, in spite of attempted schisms, a certain amount of stability had been achieved in the matter of the Order's government and legislation. This may to some extent be judged, for example, by the number of times, thirteen in all, that the phrase yathādhammo kāretabbo, should be dealt with according to the rule, occurs. The rule referred to will in each case be found complete with the penalty incurred for infringing it, in the Vibhaṅgas. That the use of this phrase assumes the prior existence of the rule is confirmed, in addition, by the fact that the material contained in the Mahāvagga is placed in the palm-leaf manuscripts after the Maha- (or Bhikkhu-) and Bhikkhuni-Vibhaṅgas. Although this sequence is not followed by Oldenberg in his edition of the Vinaya Piṭakam, it is that rightly adopted in the Vinaya Texts, for here the Vibhaṅga for monks, although drastically curtailed precedes the Mahāvagga—that for nuns being omitted entirely.

The question then arises why, in the middle of the Vinaya, an account is incorporated “of the very first events in the history of the Saṅgha” (Vinaya Texts i.72, note). Rhys Davids and Oldenberg think it “natural” to connect “the stories or legends concerning the ordination of bhikkhus” with these early events because, so they argue, “it was impossible to realise the idea of a Saṅgha without rules showing who was to be regarded as a duly admitted member of the fraternity, and who was not”. I agree that this provides a good reason for prefacing the record of the development of the first and most vital step in a monk’s life by a short history of how there came to be a life for monks at all. From their admission and ordination, all the rest follows. At the same time many stories are interspersed throughout the whole of the Vinaya, excepting the Parivāra. Not only are there several in the Mahāvagga itself, for example about Ambapālī and the Licchavis, about Jīvaka Komārabhacca, Visākhā, Meṇḍaka, Dīghāvu, and about Pilindavaccha, and about the boy Upālī (both told elsewhere in the Vinaya), and countless shorter ones, but every rule in the Vibhaṅgas is introduced by some story, long or short, as the case may be. This being so, it seems not only “natural” but logical to introduce the rules governing the initial and most important step in a monk’s life by an account of the first events which occurred after the supreme moment when Gotama attained full self-awakening. Since this was the initial and most important step in a Buddha’s career, to recount it was therefore the greatest of all stories a Buddhist “book” could tell.

The Mahāvagga possibly derives its name from that of its first Section, the Mahākhandhaka, the Great (or Greater) Section because it deals with great (or greater) events. The plan of naming a Division after its first Section, or a Section after its first chapter, is of fairly common occurrence in the Piṭakas, and was perhaps adopted here. On the other hand, it might be conceded that the Mahāvagga, including as it does matter concerned with admission and ordination, with the Uposatha, Pātimokkha, Pavāraṇā and Kaṭhina ceremonies, the clarification of what are valid formal acts, and the ways of dealing with a schism, contains subjects exceeding in importance those contained in the Cūlavagga. It is again possible that the Cūlavagga was regarded as the “Less” or “Lesser” or the Small Division because of its two Sections on the Councils of Rājagaha and Vesālī. As the first of these purports to have been convened shortly after Gotama had died, and the second a century later, the Cūlavagga takes us to a time when he, as the living fount of authority, was no longer promulgating discipline, and when discipline was no longer growing.

Yet the mass of the rules attributed to him and held to have been laid down by him when he was alive, many large in their scope, others concerned with small details, but having their own significance nonetheless, together yield a formidable body of that discipline, vinaya, which with dhamma, was to be the teacher after Gotama had passed away. The text at DN ii.154 is I think sufficiently clear in its meaning, although it has been accused of gloss. It reads yo vo Ānanda mayā dhammo ca vinayo ca desito paññatto so vo mam’ accayena satthā. Gotama was speaking to Ānanda, a monk; he would not therefore have omitted to speak of vinaya which, together with dhamma, gives a surer basis for progress towards the final vision and ultimate bliss than dhamma alone can give. Had the sentence run: yo vo mayā dhammo ca desito vinayo ca paññatto, it might have been more apparent that the reference of the following so was to both dhamma and vinaya. Dhamma is taught, desita, showing the Way; vinaya is laid down, paññatta, for keeping one’s footsteps on the Way by strict adherence to it. Both are satthu sāsanaṃ, the Teacher’s instruction.

Discipline, as promulgated, is itself an authority. According to the early editors (Vin 1.99) the teaching will stand firm so long as Vinaya is not lost even if the Suttanta (Piṭaka) and the Abhidhamma be forgotten. It is moreover capable of almost indefinite extension and application, and can regulate items of behaviour that, in spite of the multitude of rules, offences and “allowances” (anujānāmi) that were laid down by the Teacher, were not legislated for in particular in his lifetime. The monk must make up his mind about what has not been legislated for, measuring any course of action by the general standard of what he knows to be discipline. He must remember this and apply it to his problem. When Mahāpajāpati asked to be taught dhamma in brief (Vin 2.258) a general standard was given to her by which she might know of other things eso dhammo eso vinayo etaṃ satthu sāsanaṃ (this is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction). Similarly in the Mahāvagga, when some monks were doubtful or had scruples about what had been allowed, anuññata, and what had not, they were told that anything not fitting in with what had been allowed, anything tallying with what had not been allowed, was not allowable, na kappati, not suitable; and the contrary.

4.xviii

In the Mahāvagga alone there are about 280 occasions when Gotama, by uttering the word anujānāmi, I allow, I permit, made something or some usage permissible to monks. The variety of cases covered is so large, ranging as it does from accepting a monastery to the preparation of a foot-salve, from using three robes to the insertion of a patch, from the novices training in ten rules to the use of a trough for dye, that anyone acquainted with these would stand a good chance of knowing how to act in circumstances not specifically either allowed or objected to by Gotama. Or they could extend an “allowance” to suit circumstances beyond those legislated for. Gotama himself, as recorded, once gave a flint in this direction when, after making ten “allowances” for curing a boil a monk was suffering from, finally said, “I allow, monks, a linen bandage, and every treatment for curing a sore” (Kd 6.14.4–Kd.6.14.5).

Besides the use of anujānāmi, the Buddha is often represented as saying to monks, “you may” or “you should not”, a prohibition apt to be followed by intimating that contravention results in an offence of wrong-doing. This kind of offence, with thullaccaya, grave offences, mentioned infrequently in this volume, and three other types of offence, not mentioned here at all, are regarded as a “falling away from right habits” (Kd 4.16.12).

Whether Gotama himself was responsible for all these allowances and prohibitions we shall probably never know. In the story of the three monks who had spent the rains at Rājagaha and who journeyed to Pāṭaliputta to ask elders residing there to solve their problem there is a hint that power might be delegated (Kd 8.24.6). This story may, however, be included in the Mahāvagga for the simple reason that it was recording exceptional events. Or it may have been left in because in fact the practice of turning to others instead of to Gotama to interpret dhamma, a rule, was becoming more generally adopted than is evident in the rest of the Mahāvagga.

It is true that there is not much philosophy in the Vinaya. It is by nature as by name a book or basket of discipline. But as it is rather hollow to lay down rules for training and for outward behaviour without giving the underlying reasons why they should be observed, it is not possible to exclude philosophical concepts completely from a “book” principally concerned with discipline. I have already mentioned some of these philosophical concepts (above, BD 4.viii). The Mahāvagga, especially at its beginning, is not in fact devoid of some of the notions which are recognised features in Buddhist philosophy. In the first place, to mention but a few examples, the goal is spoken of and is named. It is amata, deathlessness, the undying. Its gates have been opened by Gotama, the Way-finder, so that those who hear dhamma may arrive at the object of their quest. The notion of gaining the goal by travelling on a Way between two opposites is common to many traditions and in Pali Buddhism finds expression in the First Utterance, but which is merely one example among several the Pali canon contains of the philosophical rightness of adopting the mean between two opposing extremes. The First Sermon also defines the four truths of ill, or the unsatisfactoriness and suffering which possesses every compounded thing. It is because these truths are not understood or grasped that there is this long long faring-on (in saṃsāra) “both for me and for you” (Vin 1.230). Ill has to be eradicated by cutting off its root, ignorant craving, before recurrent birth, again-becoming, punabbhava, can be stopped, and deathlessness won.

Then, the young men are told, in a passage that with the passing of time has become controversial, that they should seek, gaveseyyātha, the self, attānaṃ (singular). Anyone acquainted with the importance of Atman, self, in the Upaniṣads might be inclined to think that this was the greatest of all philosophical concepts in Ancient India. Various passages in the Pali canon, including the Attavagga of the Dhammapada, should not be ignored in estimating the position of it as a philosophical concept in Early Buddhism. The Second Utterance, for example, lays the idea of self beside that of not-self when it says in its opening words: rūpaṃ bhikkhave anattā, rūpaṃ ca h’idaṃ bhikkhave attā abhaviṣṣa, “material shape (or body), monks, is not self, for if, monks, material shape had been self ...” and similarly of the four other khandhas: if they had been self they would not be as we know them: impermanent, suffering and liable to alteration. Everything that is compounded or constructed is not-self. What is constructed is to be escaped from (Ud p.80); and the self is to be sought (Vin 1.23), that self which therefore by inference is not made, is not compounded, and which is unaffected by kamma, the deeds or actions done in a series of individual lives while the being is bound to saṃsāra, satto saṃsāraṃ āpādi (SN i.38).

The message of the Third Utterance is that if one turns away from feelings of pleasure and pain derived from the impingement of the sixfold sensory data on their appropriate sense-organs, then one knows that one is freed and comprehends that birth (rebirth) is destroyed, the walk to the Highest is brought to a close, done is what was to be done, and there is now no more of being this or that (Vin 1.34-35). The content of this Disquisition on Burning is purely philosophical.

Nor will the various allusions to cause and dependent origination be missed. The whole system was based on cause: if this comes to be that will come to be. Discipline therefore will lead to something not yet existing for the man who is earnestly training in it and cultivating it. The Buddha would not have spent so much time in laying down rules and precepts unless he had thought they would be effective in the quest for the goal.

At the top of each right hand page the chapter number and paragraph number of each Section are given.¹ The figures in heavy type in square brackets in the body of the text refer to the page numbers of Oldenberg's Vinaya Piṭakam, Volume I, and are placed so as to mark the end of each such page.

I gratefully acknowledge the care and attention given by the Burleigh Press to the production of this volume.

I.B. HORNER.

London, February, 1951.

¹ Note by Sujato: These remarks do not apply to the SuttaCentral edition.

1. GOING FORTH (PABBAJĀ)

Praise to the Lord, the Perfected One, the Fully Self-Awakened One

ON AWAKENING

At one time¹ the awakened one, the Lord, being recently fully awakened, was staying at Uruvelā on the bank of the river Nerañjarā at the foot of the Tree of Awakening.² Then the Lord sat cross-legged in one (posture)³ for seven days at the foot of the Tree of Awakening⁴ experiencing the bliss of freedom.⁵

Then the Lord during the first watch of the night paid attention to⁶ causal uprising in direct and reverse order: conditioned by ignorance⁷ are the habitual tendencies⁸; conditioned by the habitual tendencies is consciousness⁹; conditioned by consciousness is psycho-physicality¹⁰; conditioned by psycho-physicality are the six (sense-) spheres; conditioned by the six (sense-) spheres is awareness¹; conditioned by awareness is feeling; conditioned by feeling² is craving; conditioned by craving is grasping; conditioned by grasping is becoming; conditioned by becoming is birth; conditioned by birth, old age and dying, grief, sorrow and lamentation, suffering, dejection and despair come into being.

¹ From here to the end of Kd 1.2.3 cf. Ud p. 1. I largely follow translation at Verses of Uplift, which also see for notes. ² bodhirukkha is the Bo-tree, ficus religiosa. Vin-a 952 says “bodhi is knowledge of the four ways; the lord attained that awakening here, so the tree acquired the name of the tree of awakening.” Cf. MN-a iii.326 and MN-a i.54. ³ eka-pallaṅkena. ⁴ bodhirukkhamūle; cf. bodhiyā mūle at Ps.i.174 = Mnd 458; and bodhimūle at Snp-a 32, Snp-a 391. ⁵ vimuttisukha. ⁶ manasākāsi, worked with the mind. ⁷ The “causal chain” occurs, with explanations of its terms, at SN ii.1ff. See also MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p. 76ff. ⁸ sankhāra. ⁹ viññāṇa. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p. 77, p. 150; Indian Religion and Survival, p. 66; Original Gospel, p. 63, p. 112, p. 114; Dialogues of the Buddha ii, 2nd edition, Preface, p. ix for the view that viññāṇa has a meaning of “man as surviving.” ¹⁰ nāmarūpa, name and shape.

Such is the arising of this entire mass of ill. But from the utter fading away and stopping of this very ignorance (comes) the stopping of habitual tendencies; from the stopping of habitual tendencies the stopping of consciousness; from the stopping of consciousness³ the stopping of psycho-physicality; from the stopping of psycho-physicality the stopping of the six (sense-) spheres; from the stopping of the six (sense-) spheres the stopping of awareness; from the stopping of awareness the stopping of feeling; from the stopping of feeling the stopping of craving; from the stopping of craving the stopping of grasping; from the stopping of grasping the stopping of becoming; from the stopping of becoming the stopping of birth; from the stopping of birth, old age and dying, grief, sorrow and lamentation, suffering, dejection and despair are stopped. Such is the stopping of this entire mass of ill.

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

“Truly, when things⁴ grow plain to the ardent meditating brahmin,
His doubts all vanish
in that he comprehends thing-with-cause.”

Then the Lord during the middle watch of the night paid attention to causal uprising in direct and reverse order: conditioned by ignorance are the habitual tendencies; conditioned by the habitual tendencies is consciousness ... Such is the arising ... Such is the stopping of this entire mass of ill.

¹ phassa, perhaps contact. It is the known or realised impingement of a sense-datum on its appropriate sense-organ. ² From here to “dejection and despair come into being”, cf. DN i.45. ³ From here to the end of the paragraph cf. DN ii.35. ⁴ dhammā. According to Vin-a 954-5 the (thirty-seven) things helpful to awakening and the four ariyan true things. These last are not necessarily the four truths of ill, for see AN v.56 (the four stations of mindfulness) and Minor Anthologies 1, Introduction, p. 2ff. But see also Points of Controversy, p. 118, n. 1. This verse and the two following occur at Kv 186.

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

“Truly, when things grow plain
to the ardent meditating brahmin,
His doubts all vanish
in that he discerns destruction of cause.”

Then the Lord during the last watch of the night paid attention to causal uprising in direct and reverse order: conditioned by ignorance are the habitual tendencies; conditioned by the habitual tendencies is consciousness ... Such is the arising ... Such is the stopping of this entire mass of ill.

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

“Truly, when things grow plain
to the ardent meditating brahmin,
Routing the host of Māra does he stand
Like as the sun when lighting up the sky.”

*Told is the Talk on Awakening.*¹

AT THE GOATHERDS' BANYAN TREE

Then the Lord, having emerged from that contemplation at the end of seven days, approached the Goatherds' Banyan² from the foot of the Tree of Awakening; having approached, he sat cross-legged in one (posture) for seven days at the foot of the Goatherds' Banyan experiencing the bliss of freedom.

¹ This is probably an abbreviation for “Told is the Talk at the Tree of Awakening”: see titles of 2, 3 and 4. ² Although Ud-a 51 gives two more possible explanations for this name than Vin-a 957, both agree that goatherds used to come and sit in the shade of this tree.

Then a certain brahmin of the class uttering the sound *hum*¹ approached the Lord; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, that brahmin spoke thus to the Lord: “To what extent, good Gotama, does one become a brahmin? And again, what are the things which make a brahmin²?”

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

“That brahmin who bars out evil things, not uttering the sound *hum*³, with no impurity, curbed-of-self,
Master of Vedas⁴, who lives the Brahma-faring—this is the brahmin who may rightly speak the Brahmaspeech⁵
Who has no blemishes⁶ anywhere in the world⁷.”

Told is the Talk at the Goatherds’

¹ huhuñkajātiko brāhmaṇo. See Journal of the Pali Text Society, 1901, p.42, and Verses of Uplift, p. 3, n. Vin-a 957 calls him one who believes in omens that are seen, diṭṭhamangalika, and who walks about making: (the sound) hum from arrogance and in anger. ² brāhmaṇa-karaṇā. Ud 3 reads -kārakā. ³ nihuhuñka. He is to give up having confidence in his superstitious omens and formulæ, and to believe instead in the new teaching. “Brahmin” came to mean, in this, the best and highest kind of man. ⁴ vedāntagū, as at Snp 463. Vin-a 958 says there has been a going either to the end by means of the “lores” (vedas, those called the knowledge of the four ways, or to the end of the three Vedas. ⁵ dhammena so brāhmaṇo brahmāvādāni vadeyya. Vin-a 958=Ud-a 55 take this to mean he can rightly say “I am a brahmin”. MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p. 85, translates brahmavāda by “Brahma-faith”, with a note, p. 84, that vāda is equally to be rendered by -cult or -teaching. ⁶ ussāda, prominence, excrescence; conceit, arrogance. Vin-a 958=Ud-a 55 give five: passion, hatred, stupidity, pride, false view. Snp-a ii.521 gives seven, enumerated at Snp-a ii.425 as the five of Vin-a and Ud-a With the addition of the obstructions and wrong conduct. See my Early Buddhist Theory of Man Perfected, p.262 and p.265, n. 2. ⁷ This verse occurs at Ud p. 3, Ne 150. Last line = last line of Snp 783.

ON MUCALINDA

^d1.3.1 Then the Lord, at the end of seven days, having emerged from that contemplation, approached the Mucalinda (tree) from the foot of the Goatherds' Banyan; having approached, he sat cross-legged in one (posture) for seven days at the foot of the Mucalinda experiencing the bliss of freedom.

^d1.3.2 Now at that time¹ a great storm arose out of due season, for seven days there was rainy weather, cold winds and overcast skies. Then Mucalinda, the serpent king, having come forth from his own haunt, having encircled the Lord's body seven times with his coils, having spread a great hood over his head, stood saying: "Let no cold (annoy) the Lord, let no heat (annoy) the Lord, let not the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind and heat or creeping things (annoy) the Lord."

^d1.3.3 Then Mucalinda, the serpent king, at the end of those² seven days, having known that the sky³ was clear and without a cloud, having unwound his coils from the Lord's body, having given up his own form and assumed a youth's form, stood in front of the Lord honouring the Lord with joined palms.

^d1.3.4 Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

"Happy his solitude who glad at heart
Hath dhamma learnt and doth the vision see!
Happy is that benignity towards
The world which on no creature worketh harm.

Happy the absence of all lust, th' ascent Past and beyond the needs of sense-desires.
He who doth crush the great 'I am' conceit—
This, truly this, is happiness supreme."

Told is the Talk at the Mucalinda

¹ Kd 1.23.2-Kd 1.3.4=Ud 2.1, Mucalindavagga; verses quoted Kv 212, see Points of Controversy, 129, n. 3 for further references. ² tassa, omitted at Vin 1.3, but found at Ud 10. ³ deva.

AT THE RĀJĀYATANA TREE

Then the Lord, at the end of seven days, having emerged from that contemplation, approached the Rājāyatana¹ from the foot of the Mu-calinda; having approached, he sat cross-legged in one (posture) for seven days at the foot of the Rājāyatana experiencing the bliss of freedom.

Now at that time² the merchants Tapussa³ and Bhallika were going along the high-road from Ukkalā to that district.⁴ Then a devatā who was a blood-relation of the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika spoke thus to the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika: “My good fellows, this Lord, having just (become) wholly awakened, is staying at the foot of the Rājāyatana, go and serve that Lord with barley-gruel⁵ and honey-balls, and this will be a blessing and happiness for you for a long time.”

Then the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika, taking barley-gruel and honey-balls, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they stood at a respectful distance. As they were standing at a respectful distance, the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord receive our barley-gruel and honey-balls, that this may be a blessing and happiness for us for a long time.”

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Truth-finders⁶ do not receive with their hands. Now with what shall I receive the barley-gruel and honey-balls?” Then the four Great Kings, knowing with their minds the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, from the four quarters presented the Lord with four bowls made of rock crystal, saying: “Lord, let the Lord receive the barley-gruel and honey-balls herein.” The Lord received the barley-gruel and the honey-balls in a new¹ bowl made of rock crystal, and having received them he partook of them.

¹ Name of a tree. Called by MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p. 80, “Kingstead tree.” See Vinaya Texts, i.81, note. ² Cf. Ja i.80f. ³ Chief of the disciples who first came for refuge, AN i.26; included in a list of eminent householders and upāsakas at AN iii.450–451. Bhalliy(k)a has a verse at Thag 7, while Thag-a 50 gives in outline the story of their ministering to the Lord. ⁴ According to Vin-a 959, the Middle District (or Country) where the Lord was staying. ⁵ mantha, defined at Vin 4.80, see BD 2.324. ⁶ Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.118, n. 4, claims that “the first use of the term Tathāgata in the Buddha’s life-history” occurs at MN i.168.

Then the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika, having found that the Lord had removed his hand from the bowl, having inclined their heads towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “We, Lord, are those going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma; let the Lord accept us as lay-disciples gone for refuge for life from this day forth.” Thus these came to be the first lay-disciples in the world using the two-word formula.²

Told is the Talk at the Rājāyatana

ON THE INVITATION OF BRAHMĀ

Then the Lord, having emerged from that contemplation at the end of seven days, approached the Goatherds’ Banyan from the foot of the Rājāyatana; having approached, the Lord stayed there at the foot of the Goatherds’ Banyan.

Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus:³ “This dhamma, won to by me, is deep, difficult to see, difficult to understand, peaceful, excellent, beyond dialectic, subtle, intelligible to the learned.⁴ But this is a creation delighting in sensual pleasure,⁵ delighted by sensual pleasure, rejoicing in sensual pleasure. So that for a creation delighting in sensual pleasure, delighted by sensual pleasure, rejoicing in sensual pleasure, this were a matter difficult to see, that is to say causal uprising by way of cause. This too were a matter very difficult to see,⁶ that is to say the calming of all the habitual tendencies, the renunciation of all attachment, the destruction of craving, dispassion, stopping, nibbāna. And so if I were to teach dhamma and others were not to understand me, this would be a weariness to me, this would be a vexation to me.”

¹ paccaggha. Vin-a 960 says this usually means very costly; but it can mean, as here, quite new and quite hot (abbhūṇha), produced at that very moment. ² dvevācīkā, i.e. bhagavā (and not, as at some time became usual, buddha) and dhamma, there being at that time no saṅgha. ³ For the Great Hesitation, cf. SN i.136, DN ii.36, MN i.167, and see KS i.171, Dialogues of the Buddha ii.29f. and Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.118 for notes. See also MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p. 73ff.

⁴ Quoted at Bv-a 9. ⁵ ālaya, what is clung to, “habit.” But Vin-a 961 = MN-a ii.174 explain by the five strands of sense-pleasure. ⁶ suddasa, as at Dh 36.

And further, these verses not heard before in the past occurred spontaneously to the Lord:

“This that through many toils I’ve won—Enough! Why should I make it known?
By folk with lust and hate consumed
This dhamma is not understood.”¹

Leading on against the stream²,
Subtle, deep, difficult to see, delicate,
Unseen ‘twill be by passion’s slaves
Cloaked in the murk of ignorance.”³

In such wise, as the Lord pondered, his mind inclined to little effort⁴ and not to teaching dhamma. Then it occurred to Brahmā Sahampati,⁵ knowing with his mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind: “Alas,⁶ the world is lost,⁷ alas, the world is destroyed, inasmuch as the mind of the Truth-finder, the perfected one, the fully awakened one, inclines to little effort and not to teaching dhamma.”

Then as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did Brahmā Sahampati, vanishing from the Brahma-world, become manifest before the Lord.⁸

¹ Cf. Snp 764. ² paṭisotagāmin, against the stream up to the source (nibbāna), not with the stream, for that leads to dangerous whirlpools and waves in a pool (here in an unfavourable sense) lower down. Vin-a 962 says that paṭisota is called nibbāna. A stream can be a River of Life or a River of Death, according as to whether one goes against the current, striving with hands and feet, or with the current. Cf. LAMOTTE, Vol. I, p. 59, n. 1. ³ This translation follows that at Dialogues of the Buddha ii.30, with the important exception that paṭisotagāmin is not “against the stream of common thought.” Verse also found at MN i.168, DN ii.38, SN i.136; Mahāvastu iii.314, Lalitavistara, edited LEFMANN, p.397. ⁴ apposukkatā, indifference, “rest quiet” (Further Dialogues of the Buddha, i.118), “to be averse from exertion” (KS i.173), “to remain quiet” (Vinaya Texts, i.85). ⁵ A Great Brahmā. ⁶ vata bho. ⁷ Quoted Bv-a 10. ⁸ For this paragraph and the beginning of the next, see AN ii.21,

Then Brahmā Sahampati, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having stooped his right knee to the ground having saluted the Lord with joined palms, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord teach dhamma, let the Well-farer teach dhamma; there are beings with little dust in their eyes who, not hearing dhamma, are decaying, (but if) they are learners of dhamma, they will grow.”¹

Thus spoke Brahmā Sahampati; having said this, he further spoke thus:²

“There has appeared in Magadha before thee
An unclean dhamma by impure minds devised.
Open this door of deathlessness, let³ them hear Dhamma awakened to by the stainless one.

“As on a crag on crest of mountain standing
A man might watch the people far below,
E’en so do thou, O Wisdom fair, ascending,
O Seer of all, the terraced heights of truth,⁴
Look down, from grief released, upon the peoples Sunken in grief, oppressed with birth and age.

“Arise, thou hero! Conqueror in the battle!
Thou freed from debt! Man of the caravan!
Walk the world over, let the Blessed One Teach dhamma. They who learn will grow.”⁵

When he had spoken thus, the Lord spoke thus to Brahmā Sahampati: “Brahmā, it occurred to me: “This dhamma penetrated by

¹ Quoted Bv-a 10. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Dialogues of the Buddha ii, 2nd edition, Preface, xii. Also her Note to Gotama the Man (added in 1938) where she says, “The only rational translation (of aññātāro bhavissanti) is that ‘they who come to know (i.e. the dhamma you should teach), will come to be, will become, that is will grow. Thus rendered the last clause balances the opposed clause, that men are in a decline.”

² As at MN i.168, SN i.137; quoted Bv-a 10. For references to parallel Sanskrit, Chinese and Tibetan Texts, see LAMOTTE, Traité de la Grande Veriu de Sagesse, vol.1, p. 57, n. 1.

³ To end of this verse = Snp 384. ⁴ dhammamaya pāsāda; cf. paññāpāsāda at DhP 28.

⁵ Second part of verses taken from MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p. 82. The Dīgha version omits the first four lines. Last four lines at SN i.234.

me is deep ... that would be a vexation to me.’ And further, Brahmā, these verses not heard before in the past occurred spontaneously to me: ‘This that through many toils I’ve won ... cloaked in the murk of ignorance.’ In such wise, Brahmā, as I pondered, my mind inclined to little effort and not to teaching dhamma.”

Then a second time did Brahmā Sahampati speak thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord teach dhamma ... if they are learners of dhamma, they will grow.” Then a second time did the Lord speak thus to Brahmā Sahampati: “But, Brahmā, it occurred to me: ... my mind inclined to little effort and and not to teaching dhamma.”

Then a third time did Brahmā Sahampati speak thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord teach dhamma ... if they are learners of dhamma, they will grow.” Then the Lord, having understood Brahmā’s entreaty and, out of compassion for beings, surveyed the world with the eye of an awakened one. As the Lord was surveying the world with the eye of an awakened one, he saw beings with little dust in their eyes, with much dust in their eyes, with acute faculties, with dull faculties, of good dispositions, of bad dispositions, docile, indocile, few seeing fear in sins and the worlds beyond.¹

Even as in² a pond of blue lotuses or in a pond of red lotuses or in a pond of white lotuses, a few blue or red or white lotuses are born in the water, grow in the water, do not rise above the water but thrive while altogether immersed; a few blue or red or white lotuses are born in the water, grow in the water and reach to the surface of the water; a few blue or red or white lotuses are born in the water, grow in the water, and stand up rising out of the water, undefiled by the water.

Even so, did the Lord, surveying the world with the eye of an awakened one, see beings with little dust in their eyes, with much dust in their eyes, with acute faculties, with dull faculties, of good dispositions, of bad dispositions, docile, indocile, few seeing fear in sins and the worlds beyond. Seeing Brahmā Sahampati, he addressed him with verses:

¹ paralokavajjabhayadassāvino, Vin-a 963 saying that these are those who see by fear (bhayato) the world(s) beyond and sin. ² Cf. DN i.75, MN iii.93, SN i.138.

“Open for those who hear are the doors of deathlessness¹;
let them renounce their faith².”

Thinking of useless fatigue, I have not preached, Brahmā, the sublime and excellent dhamma to men³.”

Then Brahmā Sahampati, thinking: “The opportunity was made by me for the Lord to teach dhamma,”⁴ greeting the Lord, keeping his right side towards him, vanished then and there.⁵

Told is the Talk on Brahmā’s Entreaty

ON THE GROUP OF FIVE

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now, to whom should I first teach dhamma? Who will understand this dhamma quickly?” Then it occurred to the Lord: “Indeed, this Āḷāra the Kālāma⁶ is learned, experienced, wise, and for a long time has had little dust in his eyes.
Suppose I were to teach dhamma first to Āḷāra the Kālāma? He will understand this dhamma quickly.”

But then an invisible devatā announced to the Lord: “Lord, Āḷāra the Kālāma passed away seven days ago.” And the knowledge arose to the Lord that Āḷāra the Kālāma had passed away seven days ago. Then it occurred to the Lord: “Āḷāra the Kālāma was of great intelligence.
If he had heard this dhamma, he would have understood it quickly.”

¹ Vin-a 963 calls this “the noble Way”, ariyamagga. The “quest” in folklore and in the great religious traditions alike is for immortality, the undying. Early Buddhism is in line with these traditions. ² saddhā must refer to their (own, Vin-a 963) present wrong beliefs. ³ Verse also at DN ii.39, MN i.169, SN i.138; and cf. Mahāvastu iii.319; Lalitavistara, p.400. See discussion on some of the expressions found in theverse by LAMOTTE, Vol. I, p.60, n.1. ⁴ From the beginning of the verses to here is quoted at Bv-a 18. ⁵ tatth’eva can mean “as before”; if it does so here, it would mean by the same method of vanishing from the Brahma-world as in Kd 1.5,5above.

⁶ The teacher to whom, according to the biographical record (also preserved in the Ariyapariyesanā Sutta, MN 26.), Gotama first went for instruction after he had gone forth (from home into homelessness).

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now, to whom should I first teach dhamma? Who will understand this dhamma quickly?” Then it occurred to the Lord: “Indeed, this Uddaka, Rāma’s son,¹ is learned, experienced, wise, and for a long time has had little dust in his eyes. Suppose I were to teach dhamma first to Uddaka, Rāma’s son? He will understand this dhamma quickly.”

But then an invisible devatā announced to the Lord: “Lord, Uddaka, Rāma’s son, passed away last night.” And the knowledge arose to the Lord that Uddaka, Rāma’s son, had passed away last night. Then it occurred to the Lord: “Uddaka, Rāma’s son, was of great intelligence. If he had heard this dhamma, he would have understood it quickly.”

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now, to whom should I first teach dhamma? Who will understand this dhamma quickly?” Then it occurred to the Lord: “That group of five monks² who waited on me when I was self-resolute in striving³ were very helpful. Suppose I were to teach dhamma first to the group of five monks?”

Then it occurred to the Lord: “But where is this group of five monks staying at present?⁴ Then the Lord with deva-vision, purified and surpassing that of men, saw the group of five monks staying near Benares at Isipatana in the deer-park. Then the Lord, having stayed at Uruvelā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Benares.

Upaka, a Naked Ascetic,⁵ saw the Lord going along the highroad between Gayā and the (Tree of) Awakening; seeing him, he spoke thus to the Lord: “Your reverence, your sense-organs are quite pure, your complexion very bright, very clear. On account of whom have you, your reverence, gone forth, or who is your teacher, or whose dhamma do you profess?"

¹ According to the same account, the teacher to whom Gotama went next when he had mastered Ālāra’s teaching. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism. 57ff. for some remarks on both these teachers, and E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.184. Mil 236 says that Ālāra and Uddaka were Gotama’s fourth and fifth teachers; and Thig-a 2 that he went first to Bhaggava (not mentioned at Mil 236). ² Añña-Koṇḍañña, Bhaddiya, Vappa, Mahānāma, Assaji, as below BD 6.31ff. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names; MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, 62f.; and “Unknown Co-founders of Buddhism”, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society 1927. ³ padhānapahitattarū.

⁴ Quoted at Bv-a 18. ⁵ ājivika, “man of the livelihood”, Buddhist India, p.143. At Divyāvadāna 393 Upaka appears to be called Upaganena.

When this had been said, the Lord addressed Upaka, the Naked Ascetic, in verses:¹

“Victorious over all, omniscient am I,
Among all things undefiled,
Leaving all, through death of craving freed,
By knowing for myself, whom should I follow?²

“For me there is no teacher,
One like me does not exist,
In the world with its devas
No one equals me.³

“For I am perfected in the world,
The teacher supreme am I,⁴
I alone am all-awakened,⁵
Become cool am I, nibbāna-attained.

“To turn the dhamma-wheel
I go to Kasi’s city,
Beating the drum of deathlessness
In a world that’s blind become.”

“According to what you claim, your reverence, you ought to be⁶ victor of the unending⁷” (Upaka said).

“Like me, they are victors indeed,
Who have won to destruction of the cankers;

¹ Verses also at MN i.171; quoted at Kv 289; Thig-a 220. ² This verse = Dhp 353.
³ This verse is quoted at Mil 235. Cf. also Mahāvastu iii.326. ⁴ Cf. Snp 179. ⁵ Or, “I am unique, the all-awakened.” ⁶ arah’asi, also meaning “you deserve to be, are worthy or fit to be”. There is also the reading arahā asi, as at Kv 289, and see Psalms of the Sisters, 129f. ⁷ anantajina. Vin-a 964 merely says “You are set on becoming a victor of the unending.” Ananta, the unending, may refer to dhamma, also to nibbāna.

Vanquished by me are evil things,
Therefore am I, Upaka, a victor.”¹

When this had been said, Upaka, the Naked Ascetic, having said, “It may be (so),² your reverence,” having shaken his head,³ went off taking a different road.

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course approached Benares, the deer-park of Isipatana, the group of five monks. The group of five monks saw the Lord coming in the distance; seeing him, they agreed among themselves, saying: “Your reverences, this recluse Gotama is coming, he lives in abundance, he is wavering in his striving, he has

¹ This verse and Upaka’s remarks are quoted at Kv 289. ² hupeyya. MN i.171, Snp-a 258, Thig-a 220 read huveyya (which is interchangeable with hupeyya). It is a dialectical form of bhaveyya. According to B.M. BARUA, The Ājīvikas, p. 50, it is an expression found in the “Ājīvika language” and “is not a recognised Pali word.” He translates “perhaps it may be so,” Oldenberg “it may be so,” Chalmers, preserving the patois, “mebbe” E.J. THOMAS, The Life of Buddha, p. 83, “would that it might be so”, Dictionary of Pali Proper Names (under Upaka) “it may be so”; while MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, To Become or not to Become, p. 85, would prefer “may he become”, the “he” referring to the man, every man, to whom Gotama was prepared to teach his message. She suggests that he will have rehearsed this message to Upaka, and maintains that what has survived—“a glaringly imperfect misrepresentation”—makes omission and glossing all but certain. ³ I think that as the text stands, had Upaka been convinced or even interested he would not have departed by a different road (ummagga, also meaning the wrong road). It is perhaps odd that this episode, if it shows disagreement, is presumed to have occurred at the beginning of Gotama ministry. But it may be included to emphasize his determination to preach first of all to the “five” in accordance with his decision; or to show that Upaka spoke somewhat as a prophet—in the “key”, below, BD 4.127, he is called Upako isi, Upaka the seer. According to Thig-a 220f., when Upaka was an old man, tormented by his wife’s gibes, he sought Gotama and went forth into homelessness; he then soon attained the stage of non-returning and died. From this account it does not appear that he had had any great urge earlier to become one of Gotama’s disciples.

In the translation above I have put a slight bias on three words, each of which admits of more than one rendering, so as to mark consistently what seems to me to be Upaka’s apparent failure to be convinced: (1) arahasi = (a) you ought to be (slightly contemptuous), (b) you are worthy to be (respectful); (2) huveyya, discussed in preceding note; (3) sisam okampetvā, having shaken his head. Okampeti may mean, according to Pali-English Dictionary, both to wag and to shake. Indians shake their heads from side to side to show disagreement, but wag them up and down to show agreement.

reverted to a life of abundance.¹ He should neither be greeted, nor stood up for, nor should his bowl and robe be received; all the same a seat may be put out, he can sit down if he wants to.”

But as the Lord gradually approached this group of five monks, so this group of five monks, not adhering to their own agreement, having gone towards the Lord, one received his bowl and robe, one made ready a seat, one brought water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand.² The Lord sat down on the seat made ready, and the Lord, while he was sitting down, washed his feet.³ Further, they addressed the Lord by name and with the epithet of “your reverence.”⁴

When this had been said, the Lord spoke thus to the group of five monks: “Do not, monks, address a Truthfinder by name, and with the epithet ‘your reverence’. A Truthfinder, monks, is a perfected one, a fully awakened one. Give ear, monks, the deathless has been found; I instruct, I teach dhamma. Going along in accordance with what has been enjoined, having soon realised here and now by your own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring⁵ for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, you will abide in it.”

When this had been said, the group of five monks spoke thus to the Lord: “But you, reverend Gotama, did not come to a state of further-men,⁶ to the eminence of truly ariyan vision of knowledge, by this conduct, by this course, by this practice of austerities. So how can you now come to a state of further-men, to the eminence of the truly ariyan vision of knowledge, when you live in abundance, are wavering in striving, and have reverted to a life of abundance?”

When this had been said, the Lord spoke thus to the group of five monks: “A Truthfinder, monks, does not live in abundance, he does not waver in striving, he does not revert to a life of abundance. A Truthfinder, monks, is a perfected one, a fully awakened one. Give ear, monks, the deathless has been found; I instruct, I teach dhamma. Going along in accordance with what has been enjoined, having soon realised here and now by your own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, you will abide in it.”

¹ bahulla. As MRS. RHYS DAVIDS observes. Manual of Buddhism, 69, this means literally “muchness”, Vin-a 964 taking it to mean abundance of robes, etc. ² Cf. Vin 4.231, Vin 4.310; see BD 3.191. ³ As at MN ii.139. ⁴ āvusovādena. ⁵ At MN i.197, MN i.201, this goal is said to be unshakeable freedom of mind. ⁶ Cf. Bu-Pj 4 (and see BD 1, Introduction, p.xxiv).

And a second time did the group of five monks speak thus to the Lord ... And a second time did the Lord speak thus to the group of five monks ... And a third time did the group of five monks speak thus to the Lord: “But you, reverend Gotama, did not come to a state of further-men ... by this practice of austerities ... to a life of abundance?”

When this had been said, the Lord spoke thus to the group of five monks: “Do you allow, monks, that I have never spoken¹ to you like this before?”

“You have not, Lord.”

“A Truthfinder, monks, is a perfected one, a fully awakened one. Give ear ... you will abide in it.” And the Lord was able to convince the group of five monks.² Then the group of five monks listened to the Lord again, gave ear to him and aroused their minds for profound knowledge.³

Then⁴ the Lord addressed the group of five monks, saying: “These⁵ two (dead) ends,⁶ monks, should not be followed by one who has gone forth. Which two? That which is, among sense-pleasures, addiction to attractive sense-pleasures, low, of the villager,¹ of the average man,² unariyan, not connected with the goal³; and that which is addiction to self-torment, ill, unariyan, not connected with the goal. Now, monks, without adopting either of these two (dead) ends, there is a middle course, fully awakened to by the Truthfinder, making for vision,⁴ making for knowledge, which conduces to calming,⁵ to super-knowledge,⁶ to awakening,⁷ to nibbāna.

¹ bhāsitaṃ. MN i.172 reads vabbhācitaṃ. Vin-a 965 and MN-a ii.191 explain by vākyabhedanā. ² From here the Majjhima version diverges. ³ aññācittaṃ upaṭṭhāpesum; cf. DN i,230, DN i231. ⁴ Cf. SN v.420. ⁵ See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.109, for a literal translation of the First Utterance, and a discussion of many of its terms; also E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.87. This Utterance given at SN iv.330, SN v.420, and the “middle course” part of it at MN i.15, to whose Commentary (MN-a i.104f.) Vin-a 965 refers. ⁶ anta is end, then contrast, extreme, opposite, side. See Manual of Buddhism, p.118, for discussion of the meaning. SN-a iii.297 explains by koṭṭhāsā, parts, divisions. MN-a i.104 says “the Way does not lead to, does not approach these sides, it is freed from these sides, therefore it is called the middle course.” The “mean” between two extremes also found at SN ii.17, SN ii.20, SN ii.61, SN iii.135.

“And what, monks, is this middle course fully awakened to by the Truthfinder, making for vision, making for knowledge, which conduces to calming, to super-knowledge, to awakening, to nibbāna? It is this ariyan eightfold Way itself, that is to say: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right mode of living, right endeavour, right mindfulness, right concentration.⁸ This, monks, is the middle course, fully awakened to by the Truthfinder, making for vision, making for knowledge, which conduces to calming, to super-knowledge to awakening, to nibbāna.”

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of ill: birth is ill, and old age is ill and disease is ill and dying is ill, association with what is not dear is ill, separation from what is dear is ill, not getting what one wants is ill—in short the five groups of grasping are ill.”

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill:⁹ that which is craving connected with again-becoming, accompanied by

¹ gammo. Another debatable term. I follow SN-a iii.297 (cf. AN-a iii.360) whose explanation is gāma-vāsinaṃ santako, belonging to village dwellers; meaning I think more “common” than “pagan”, by both of which it has been rendered. “Boorish” would be better. ² pothujjaniko, ordinary, of the many-folk, the “blind” and fools. ³ anattasamhita, defined at MN-a iii.110 as na vuḍḍhinissita, not bent on growth.

⁴ According to MN-a i.104 vision of the knowledge of the truths. ⁵ Of passion, etc., MN-a 1.104, AN-a iii.360; of the corruptions, SN-a iii.297. ⁶ abhiññā, of the four truths, MN-a and SN-a ⁷ MN-a i.104 says that awakening is the Way, sambodho ti maggo. ⁸ A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Hinduism and Buddhism, p. 69, uses “composure” for samādhi, and elsewhere “synthesis.” MN-a i.105 gives the interpretations which the Ancients, poraṇa, used to put upon the eight “fitnesses” of the Way: “the way of insight is right view, the way of thorough furthering, abhiniropana, is right thought, the way of equanimity is right concentration.” The gaps may be filled up from what follows at MN-a i.105. ⁹ This paragraph is debated at Kv 488–489.

delight and passion, finding delight in this and that, that is to say: craving for sense-pleasures, craving for becoming, craving for de-becoming.¹

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill: the utter and passionless stopping of that very craving, its renunciation, surrender, release, the lack of pleasure in it.²

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill³: this ariyan eightfold Way itself, that is to say: right view ... right concentration.

On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of ill’, among things not heard before by me, monks, vision arose, knowledge⁴ arose, wisdom⁵ arose, higher knowledge⁶ arose, light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is the ariyan truth of ill must be completely known’ ... ‘Now that which is the ariyan truth of ill is completely known’, among things not heard before by me, monks, vision arose, knowledge arose, wisdom arose, higher knowledge arose, light arose.

“On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill’ ... light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is this ariyan truth of the uprising of ill must be given up’⁷ ... ‘... is given up’ ... light arose.

“On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill’ ... light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is this ariyan truth of the stopping of ill must be realized’ ... ‘... is realised’ ... light arose.

“On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of the course going to the stopping of ill’ ... light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is this ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill must be made to become' ... '... is made to become' ... light arose.

¹ vi-bhava, meanings ascribed: (1) wealth, property, prosperity; (2) non-becoming, ceasing (although there is the word a-bhava); (3) more becoming, more births. Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.214 “annihilation.” See also Dialogues of the Buddha ii.340, note. I think it means, with taṇhā, craving or thirst, the longing for sensations to come and go, rise and fall. LAMOTTE, Le Traité de la Grande Vertu de Sagesse, vol.1, p. 3, n. 4, translates these three cravings (taṇhā) as cravings for plaisir, existence, impermanence. ² anālaya. On ālaya, pleasure (clinging, abode, habit) see above, BD 4.6. Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.214 “ejection”, Dialogues of the Buddha iii.298 “aversion from.” SN-a iii.112 defines it in connection with kāma. ³ The “four truths of ill” are cited at Kv 290. ⁴ ñāṇa. ⁵ paññā. ⁶ vijjā. We have nothing in English corresponding to the number Pali words for “knowledge.” ⁷ I.e. the craving or thirst (taṇhā) which leads to the uprising of ill must be given up.

“And so long, monks, the vision of knowledge of these four ariyan truths with the three sections and twelve modes¹ as they really are, was not well purified by me, so long was I, monks, not thoroughly awakened with the supreme full awakening as to the world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, with its recluses and brahmins, its creatures with devas and men. This I knew.

“But when, monks, the vision of knowledge of these four ariyan truths, with the three sections and twelve modes as they really are, was well purified by me, then was I, monks, thoroughly awakened with the supreme full awakening as to the world ... with its recluses and brahmins, its creatures with devas and men. This I knew.

“Moreover, the vision of knowledge arose in me: ‘Freedom of mind is for me unshakeable, this the last birth, there is not now again-becoming.’²” Thus spoke the Lord; delighted, the group of five monks rejoiced in the Lord’s utterance. Moreover, while this discourse³ was being uttered, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the venerable Koṇḍañña that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

And when the Lord had rolled the dhamma-wheel, the earth devas made this sound heard⁴: “The supreme dhamma-wheel rolled thus by the Lord at Benares in the deer-park at Isipatana cannot be rolled back by a recluse or brahmin or deva or by Māra or by Brahmā or by anyone in the world.” Having heard the sound of the earth devas, the devas of the Four Great Kings⁵ made this sound heard ... the Thirty devas ... Yama’s devas ... the Happy devas ... the devas who delight in creation ... the devas who delight in the creation of others ... the devas of Brahmā’s retinue made this sound heard: “The supreme dhamma-wheel rolled thus by the Lord at Benares in the deer-park at Isipatana cannot be rolled back by a recluse or brahmin or deva or by Māra or by Brahmā or by anyone in the world.”

¹ Each of the four truths is treated as (1) a truth which (2) must be in some way responded to, and which (3) has been in that way responded to. ² One of the formulae of arahanship. ³ veyyākaraṇa, called at DN-a 130 a sutta (discourse) without verses. ⁴ Cf. Vin 3.18-19 (BD 1.33). ⁵ I.e. the Regents of the four quarters. A longer list of devas is to be found at MN i.289.

In this wise in that moment, in that second, in that instant, the sound reached as far as the Brahma-world, and the ten thousand-fold world-system¹ trembled, quaked, shook violently and a radiance, splendid, measureless, surpassing the devas' own glory,² was manifest in the world. Then the Lord uttered this solemn utterance: “Indeed, Koṇḍañña has understood, indeed, Koṇḍañña has understood.” Thus it was that Aññata Koṇḍañña³ became the venerable Koṇḍañña’s name.⁴

Then the venerable Aññata Koṇḍañña, having seen dhamma,⁵ attained dhamma,⁶ known dhamma,⁷ plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction,⁸ spoke thus to the Lord: “May I, Lord, receive the going forth⁹ in the Lord’s presence, may I receive ordination?¹⁰”

“Come, monk¹¹,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma. Fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be this venerable one’s ordination.

Then the Lord exhorted, instructed those remaining monks with dhamma-talk. Then while they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma-talk, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the venerable Vappa¹ and to the venerable Bhaddiya,² that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

¹ Cf. AN i.227. ² devānaṃ devānubhāvaṃ, cf. DN ii.12, MN iii.120. ³ aññāta meaning “who has understood”. He is often called Añña Koṇḍañña. At AN i.23 he is called “foremost of the disciples of long standing.” Verses at Thag 673–688. For the view that Añña was his personal name, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Gotama the Man, p. 102, GS i.16, n. 2, Verses of Uplift (Sacred Books of the Buddhists VIII), p. 93, n. 1. See too Ud-a 371, Psalms of the Bretheren, p. 284. ⁴ Saṃyutta account breaks off here.

⁵ Saṃyutta account breaks off here. ⁶ Quoted Bv-a 13, the last two in reverse order. ⁷ Saṃyutta account breaks off here. ⁸ Cf. DN i.no.148; AN iv.186; MN i.234, MN i.501. ⁹ pabbajjā. ¹⁰ upasampadā. ¹¹ The first time that this, thought to be the oldest formula for leave to become a disciple of Gotama’s, is used in the Vinaya. The Order was not as yet in existence, and the ordination regulations were neither appointed nor was ordination separated by a period of probation from the time of a disciple’s “going forth”, pabbajjā, from home, or the household life, into homelessness.

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma ... having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “May we, Lord, receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination.

Then the Lord, eating the food brought back by these,³ exhorted, instructed those remaining monks with dhamma-talk, saying: “Let the group of six⁴ live on whatever the three monks bring when they have walked for almsfood.”

Then while they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma-talk, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the venerable Mahānāma⁵ and to the venerable Assaji,⁶ that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma ... having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “May we, Lord, receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination.

Then the Lord addressed the group of five monks, saying: “Body,

¹ Verses at Thag 61, see also Thag-a 150, Vin-a 965, MN-a ii.192, AN-a i.147, Ja i.82; MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p. 63. ² No verses ascribed to him. See Vin-a 965, MN-a ii.192, AN-a i.147, Ja i.82. Omitted from Dictionary of Pali Proper Names

³ Koṇḍañña, Vappa and Bhaddiya. ⁴ I.e. Gotama and the group of five. ⁵ References as under n. 2 above. See also Dh-p-a ii.74. Included in Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁶ The disciple through whom Sāriputta and so Moggallāna became followers of Gotama, see Vin 1.39f. (below, BD 4.52); also MN i.227 (Cūlasaccaka Sutta), SN iii.124ff., MN-a ii.270, MN-a ii.271, and BD 4.52, n. 3 below.

monks, is not self.¹ Now were this body self, monks this body would not tend to sickness, and one might get the chance of saying in regard to body, 'Let body become thus for me, let body not become thus for me'. But inasmuch, monks, as body is not self, therefore body tends to sickness, and one does not get the chance of saying in regard to body, 'Let body become thus for me, let body not become thus for me'.

Feeling is not self ... and one does not get the chance of saying in regard to feeling, 'Let feeling become thus for me, let feeling not become thus for me'.

"Perception² is not self ... The habitual tendencies are not self ... one does not get the chance of saying in regard to the habitual tendencies, 'Let the habitual tendencies become thus for me, let the habitual tendencies not become thus for me'.

"Consciousness is not self ... Inasmuch, monks, as consciousness is not self, therefore consciousness tends to sickness, and one does not get the chance to say in regard to consciousness, 'Let consciousness become such for me, let consciousness not become thus for me.'

What do you think about this, monks? Is body permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, Lord."

"But is that which is impermanent painful or pleasurable³?"

"Painful, Lord."

"But is it fit to consider that which is impermanent, painful, of a nature to change, as 'This is mine, this am I, this is my self'?"

"It is not Lord."

"Is feeling ... perception ... are the habitual tendencies ... is consciousness permanent or impermanent?"

¹ This famous Second Utterance given also at SN iii.66, where called "The Five", doubtless referring to the five disciples who heard it, and to the five topics, body ... consciousness (or mind) which it covered; cf. MN iii.19. Translated at KS iii.59, Further Dialogues of the Buddha, ii, 165f., MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.150, E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.88. ² saññā. ³ sukha, happiness, mental and physical ease; used in opposition to dukkha.

“Impermanent, Lord.”

“But is that which is impermanent painful or pleasurable?”

“Painful, Lord.”

“But is it (it to consider that which is impermanent, painful of a nature to change, as “This is mine, this am I, this is my self”?)

“It is not so, Lord.”

“Wherefore, monks, whatever is body, past, future, present or internal or external, or gross or subtle, or low or excellent whether it is far or near—all body should, by means of right wisdom, be seen, as it really is, thus: This is not mine, this am I not, this is not my self.

“Whatever is feeling ... whatever is perception ... whatever are the habitual tendencies ... whatever is consciousness past, future, present, or internal or external, or gross or subtle, or low or excellent, whether far or near—all consciousness should, by means of right wisdom, be seen as it really is, thus: This is not mine, this am I not, this is not my self.

“Seeing in this way, monks, the instructed¹ disciple of the ariyans disregards² body and he disregards feeling and he disregards perception and he disregards the habitual tendencies and he disregards consciousness; disregarding he is dispassionate; through dispassion he is freed; in freedom the knowledge comes to be: ‘I am freed’³, and he knows: Destroyed is birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such or such.”

Thus spoke the Lord; delighted, the group of five monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said. Moreover while this discourse was being uttered, the minds of the group of five monks were freed from the cankers without grasping. At that time there were six perfected ones in the world.

The First Portion for Recital

¹ sutavant, one who has heard, hence learnt (the oral teaching). ² nibbindati, turns away from, is disgusted by. He “disregards” because he refuses to know. ³ See BD 1.10 and its n. 2, n. 3.

ON THE GOING FORTH OF YASA

At that time in Benares there was a young man of family, the son of a (great) merchant¹, delicately reared, called Yasa².

He had three mansions, one for the cold weather, one for the hot weather, one for the rains. Being ministered to by bands of female musicians³ for four months in the mansion for the rains, he did not come down from that mansion⁴. Then while Yasa, the young man of family, was possessed of and provided with the five kinds of sense-pleasures⁵, and was being ministered to, he fell asleep first and his suite fell asleep after him, and an oil lamp was burning all through the night.

Then Yasa, the young man of family, having awoken first saw his own suite sleeping, one with a lute in the hollow of her arm, one with a tabor at her neck, one with a drum in the hollow of her arm, one with dishevelled hair, one with saliva dripping from her mouth, muttering in their sleep, like a cemetery before his very eyes.⁶ Seeing this, its peril grew plain, and his mind was set on disregarding it.⁷ Then Yasa, the young man of family, uttered a solemn utterance: "What distress indeed, what affliction indeed."

Then Yasa, the young man of family, having put on his golden sandals, approached the door of the dwelling. Non-human beings opened the door, thinking: "Let there be no obstacle for the going forth from home into homelessness of Yasa, the young man of family." Then Yasa, the young man of family, approached the city-door. Non-human beings opened the door, thinking: "Let there be no obstacle for the going forth from home into homelessness of Yasa, the young man of family." Then Yasa, the young man of family, approached the deer-park at Isipatana.

¹ See BD 2, Introduction, p. xlvii and BD 42, n. 4. ² Verses at Thag 117. ³ nippurisehi turiyehi; see note at Dialogues of the Buddha ii.18; also Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.356. ⁴ Reading heṭṭhā pāsādā. DN ii.21, MN i.504 read heṭṭhāpāsādāṃ, "to the lower (parts of the) mansion." On pāsāda, see BD 2.16, n. 5, n. 6. ⁵ Cf. Vin 3.72, DN i.36, DN i.60, and DN-a 121. ⁶ hatthapattāṃ susānaṃ maññe, literally one would think one's hand had reached a cemetery. Hatthappatta, what one can put one's hand on, and so what is before one's eyes. ⁷ nibbidāya cittaṃ saṅṭhāsi.

At that time, the Lord having risen in the night towards dawn, was pacing up and down in the open air. The Lord saw Yasa, the young man of family, coming in the distance: seeing him, having come down from (the place) where he was pacing up and down, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then Yasa, the young man of family, when he was near, uttered this solemn utterance to the Lord: “What distress indeed, what affliction indeed.” Then the Lord spoke thus to Yasa, the young man of family: “This, Yasa, is not distress, this, Yasa, is not affliction. Come, sit down, Yasa, I will teach you dhamma.”

Then Yasa, the young man of family, thinking: “It is said that this is not distress, that this is not affliction”, exultant and uplifted, having taken off his golden sandals, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk¹ to Yasa, the young man of family, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing them.

When the Lord knew that the mind of Yasa, the young man of family, was ready, malleable, devoid of hindrances, uplifted, pleased², then he explained to him the teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way³. And just as a clean cloth without black specks will take a dye easily, even so (as he was sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Yasa, the young man of family, that whatever is of a nature to uprise, all that is of a nature to stop.”

Then the mother of Yasa, the young man of family, having mounted up to the mansion, not seeing Yasa, the young man of family, approached the (great) merchant, the householder; having approached she spoke thus to the (great) merchant, the householder; “Householder, your son, Yasa, is not to be seen.” Then the (great) merchant, the householder, having dispatched messengers on horse-back to the four quarters, himself approached the deer-park at Isipatana. The (great) merchant, the householder, saw the prints of golden sandals, and seeing them he followed them along.

¹ This passage is frequently found in connection with “conversions”; cf. Vin 2.156, Vin 2.192, DN i.110, DN i.148, DN ii.41, MN i.379, AN iv.186, AN iv.209, Ud 49. ² In sense of with the teaching, prepared to follow it. ³ Note that paṭipadā (of the fourth truth), the course which leads to the ceasing of ill, is here represented by the one word maggā. This may not be a substitution for the “fourth truth”, but the original notion, left in.

The Lord saw the (great) merchant, the householder, coming in the distance; seeing him, it occurred to the Lord: “Suppose I were to perform such a psychic wonder that the (great) merchant, the householder, sitting here, should not see Yasa the young man of family, sitting here?” Then the Lord performed such a psychic wonder.

Then the (great) merchant, the householder, approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord has the Lord not seen Yasa, the young man of family?”

“Well, householder, sit down. Perhaps, sitting here, you may see Yasa, the young man of family, sitting here.”

Then the (great) merchant, the householder, thinking: “It is said that I, sitting here, will see Yasa, the young man of family, sitting here”, and exultant, uplifted, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

As the (great) merchant, the householder was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk ... attained without the help of another to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Just as one might set upright what has been upset, or might uncover what was concealed, or might show the way to one who is astray, or might bring an oil lamp into the darkness, thinking, ‘Those with eyes may see shapes’, even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. I myself go to the Lord as refuge, to dhamma, and to the Order of monks. Let the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple gone for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.” Thus he came to be the first lay-disciple in the world using the three-word formula.¹

Kd 1.7.8

BD 4.2

Kd 1.7.9

Kd 1.7.1

Vin 1.17

Then while the father of Yasa, the young man of family, was being taught dhamma, as he¹ was reviewing his stage (of knowledge) as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Then it occurred to the Lord: “While the father of Yasa, the young man of family, was being taught dhamma, as he was reviewing his stage (of knowledge) as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Now Yasa, the young man of family, cannot become one, having turned back to the low life, to enjoy pleasures of the senses as he did formerly when leading a household life. Suppose I were to annul that psychic wonder?” Then the Lord annulled that psychic wonder.

Then the (great) merchant, the householder, saw Yasa, the young man of family sitting down; seeing him, he spoke thus to Yasa, the young man of family: “Dear Yasa, your mother is full of lamentation and grief, give your mother life.”

Then Yasa, the young man of family, looked towards the Lord. Then the Lord spoke thus to the (great) merchant, the householder: “What do you think about this, house-holder, that dhamma was seen by Yasa with a learner’s knowledge, with a learner’s insight, even as by you? As he was reviewing his stage (of knowledge), as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Now can Yasa, householder, having turned back to the low life, become one to enjoy pleasures of the senses, as he did formerly when leading a household life?”

“No, Lord.”

“Dhamma was seen by Yasa, the young man of family, householder, with a learner’s knowledge, with a learner’s insight, even as by you. As he was reviewing his stage (of knowledge), as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Now Yasa, the young man of family, householder, cannot become one, having turned back to the low life, to enjoy pleasures of the senses, as he did formerly when leading a household life.”

¹ tevācika, instead of the dvevācika of Kd 1.4.5, for here the Bhikkhusaṅgha is included in the refuge-formula. We must therefore assume that when the group of five monks became disciples of Gotama a saṅgha was formed. ¹ I.e. Yasa.

“Lord, it is a gain for Yasa, the young man of family, Lord, it is well gotten for Yasa, the young man of family, inasmuch as the mind of Yasa, the young man of family, is freed from the cankers without grasping. Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow with Yasa, the young man of family, as his attendant?” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the (great) merchant, the householder, knowing that the Lord had consented, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then Yasa, the young man of family, soon after the (great) merchant, the householder, had departed, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may I receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may I receive ordination?”

“Come, monk,” the Lord said, “well preached is dhamma. Lead the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be that venerable one’s ordination. At that time there were seven perfected ones in the world.

Told is the Going Forth of Yasa

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the (great) merchant, the householder, with the venerable Yasa as attendant; having approached, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then the mother and the former wife of the venerable Yasa approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them that, “whatever is of a nature to uprise, all that is of a nature to stop.”

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma ... spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent Lord! ... we ourselves, Lord, go to the Lord as refuge, to dhamma and to the Order of monks. Let the Lord accept us as women lay-disciples, gone for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.” Thus these were the first women lay-disciples in the world using the three-word formula.

Then the venerable Yasa’s mother and father and former wife, having with their own hand(s) served the Lord and the venerable Yasa and having offered them sumptuous foods, solid and soft, sat down when the Lord had finished his meal and had removed his hand from the bowl. Then the Lord, having gladdened, roused, rejoiced, delighted the venerable Yasa’s mother and father and former wife with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat departed.

Four householder friends of the venerable Yasa, young men of families of (great) merchants and lesser (great) merchants¹ in Benares, Vimāla, Subāhu, Puṇṇaji, Gavampati², heard: “They say that Yasa, the young man of family, having cut off his hair and beard, having put on yellow robes, has gone forth from home into homelessness.” Having heard this, it occurred to them: “Now this can be no ordinary dhamma and discipline, nor can this be an ordinary going forth, in that Yasa, the young man of family, having cut off his hair and beard, having put on the yellow robes, has gone forth from home into homelessness.”

These four people approached the venerable Yasa; having approached, having greeted the venerable Yasa, they stood at a respectful distance. Then the venerable Yasa, taking these four householder friends, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Yasa spoke thus to the Lord: “These four householder friends of mine, Lord, young men of families of (great) merchants and lesser (great) merchants in Benares, Vimāla, Subāhu, Puṇṇaji, Gavampati, may the Lord exhort, may he instruct these four.”

The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them that “whatever is of the nature to arise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

¹ setṭhānuseṭṭhi. See Ja v.384 for mahā-setṭhi, setṭhi (but with variant reading anuseṭṭhi) and anuseṭṭhi; also Vinaya Texts i.102, n. 3. ² Verses attributed only to Gavampati, Thag 38, and he appears to be the only one mentioned elsewhere in the canon, e.g. DN ii.356, SN v.436.

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma ... spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well preached is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination. Then the Lord exhorted, instructed these monks with dhamma talk. While they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma talk, their minds were freed from the cankers without grasping. At that time there were eleven perfected ones in the world.

Told is the Going Forth of the four Householders

Fifty householder friends of the venerable Yasa, young men of the first families and of those next to the first¹ in the district heard: “They say that Yasa, the young man of family ... (as in Kd 1.9.1-Kd.1.9.4 down to:) While they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma talk, their minds were freed from the cankers without grasping. At that time there were sixty-one perfected ones in the world.

WITH MĀRA

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying²: “I, monks, am freed from all snares, both those of *devas*³ and those of men. And you, monks, are freed from all snares, both those of devas and those of men. Walk, monks, on tour for the blessing of the manyfolk, for the happiness of the manyfolk out of compassion for the world, for the welfare, the blessing, the happiness of devas and men. Let not two (of you) go by one (way.)¹ Monks, teach dhamma which is lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending.² Explain with the spirit and the letter the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled, wholly pure. There are beings with little dust in their eyes, who, not hearing dhamma, are decaying, (but) if they are learners of dhamma, they will grow. And I, monks, will go along to Uruvelā, to the Camp township,³ in order to teach dhamma.”

¹ pubbānupubbaka. Explained by Vin-a 966 as the oldest and next to the oldest in regard to lineage. ² SN i.105-106. ³ dibba; neither “divine” (Vinaya Texts i.112) nor “celestial” (KS i.131) is exactly right for this difficult adjective which means deva-ish, pertaining to devas.

Then Māra, the Evil One, approached the Lord; having approached, he addressed the Lord with verses:

“Bound art thou by all the snares,
Both those of devas and of men,
In great bondage art thou bound,
Recluse, thou’lt not be freed from me.”⁴ “Freed am I from all the snares,

Both those of devas and of men,
From great bondage am I freed,
Humbled art thou, O End-maker.”⁵

“The tale of mind-impressions is a snare
That weaves its tallies to and fro in air.
With these will I have wherewith to fetter thee,
Recluse, thou wilt not be freed from me.”⁶

¹ ekena can also mean together, but above is interpretation given at Vin-a 966, and cf. SN-a i.172. ² SN-a i.172 gives differing but related arrangements of subjects included under “beginning, middle and end”. ³ Senānigama here and at MN i.166; for the variant spelling used at e.g. SN i.106, Ja i.68, see Vinaya Texts i.113, n. 1, KS i.132, n. 5; Dictionary of Pali Proper Names; E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p. 230. There was a tradition that in old times it had been an army’s camping place, MN-a ii.173, SN-a i.172, the town where Senāni, Sujāta’s father lived. ⁴ These four lines with the next four also at SN i.106. ⁵ Antaka, explained at Vin-a 966 as an inferior, low being; a name of Māra. Cf. Thig.59, Thig.62, Thig.195; also DhP 48, where not used in this way. ⁶ These four lines and the next four occur also at SN i.111.

“Sights, sounds, scents, tastes,¹ and things to touch, Bringing delights to mind of man-for such
All wish, all will, for me is past and gone,
Humbled art thou, O End-maker.”

Then Māra, the Evil One, thinking, “The Lord knows me, the well-farer knows me,” pained, afflicted, vanished then and there.

Told is the Talk on Māra

ON GOING FORTH AND FULL ORDINATION

At that time monks brought (to the Lord) from various quarters, from various districts those wishing for the going forth, those wishing for ordination, thinking: “The Lord will let these go forth, he will ordain them.” Thereby both the monks as well as those wishing for the going forth and those wishing for ordination were tired. Then a reasoning arose in the Lord’s mind as he was meditating in seclusion, thus: “At present monks are bringing (to me) from various quarters ... and those wishing for ordination are tired. Suppose I were to allow it to monks, saying: ‘You, monks, may now yourselves let go forth, may ordain in any² quarter, in any district?’”

Then the Lord, emerging from seclusion towards evening, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “While I was meditating in seclusion, monks, a reasoning arose in my mind, thus: ‘At present monks are bringing ... in any quarter, in any district’”

“I allow, monks, that you yourselves may now let go forth may ordain in any quarter, in any district. And thus, monks, should one let go forth, should one ordain: First, having made him have his hair and beard cut off, having made him put on yellow robes, having made him arrange an upper robe over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks' feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be told: 'Speak thus: "I go to the awakened one for refuge, I go to dhamma for refuge, I go to the Order for refuge. And a second time I go ... And a third time I go to ... the Order for refuge.'" I allow, monks, the going forth and the ordination by these three goings for refuge.¹"

¹ The Vinaya version puts scents before tastes in the usual way. SN i.111 reverses the order; see KS i.140, n. 3. Cf. Kd 5.1.27; Snp 387, Snp 759, Thag 455. Thag 895. AN iii.69.

² tāsu tāsu. Tam tam means whatever, each, this and that.

Told is the Talk on Ordination by the three Goings for Refuge

WITH MĀRA, THE SECOND

Then the Lord, having kept the rains, addressed the monks, saying: "Monks, by proper attention, by proper right effort was supreme freedom attained by me, supreme freedom² realised. You, too, monks, by proper attention, by proper right effort may attain supreme freedom, may realise supreme freedom."

Then Māra, the Evil One, approached the Lord; having approached, he addressed the Lord with verses:

"Bound art thou by Māra's snares,
Both those of devas and of men,
In great bondage art thou bound.
Recluse, thou wilt not be freed from me."³

"Freed am I from Māra's snares,
Both those of devas and of men,
From great bondage am I freed,
Humbled art thou, O End-maker."

Then Māra, the Evil One, thinking, "The Lord knows me, the well-farer knows me," pained, afflicted, vanished then and there.

¹ Apparently this was the second stage in admitting disciples to the religious life, the first being by the formula spoken by the Lord, 'come, monk'. Responsibility is now being delegated to his followers themselves. Note that bhagavantam (the lord) has given way to buddham (the awakened one) in the first sentence of the formula.

² Cf. AN iii.218. ³ These four lines occur at SN i.105, but there the third line of each verse reads, "In (From) Māra's bondage ..."

THE STORY OF THE EXCELLENT GROUP

Then the Lord, having stayed at Benares for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Uruvelā. Then the Lord, turning off from the road, approached a certain woodland grove¹; having approached, having plunged into that woodland grove, he sat down at the root of a certain tree. At that time a group of as many as thirty friends of high standing,² with their wives, were amusing themselves in that same woodland grove. One had no wife, (so) a woman of low standing³ was brought along for him. Then while they were heedlessly amusing themselves that woman of low standing, taking (their) belongings, ran away.

Then these friends, doing their friend a service and seeking for that woman, roaming about that woodland grove, saw the Lord sitting at the root of a certain tree; seeing him, they approached the Lord, having approached, they spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, has the Lord not seen a woman?”

“But what have you, young men, to do with a woman?”

“We, Lord, a group of as many as thirty friends of high standing, with our wives, were amusing ourselves in this woodland grove; one had no wife, (so) a woman of low standing was brought along for him. Then, Lord, as we were heedlessly amusing ourselves, that woman of low standing, taking our belongings, ran away. Consequently, Lord, we friends, doing our friend a service and seeking for that woman, are roaming about this woodland grove.”

¹ At Ja i.82 this is called Kappāsiya woodland grove. ² tiṃsamattā bhaddavaggiyā saḥāyakā. Vin-a 971 says “sons of rājas, of high repute (bhaddaka, honoured, of good quality), bound into a group (vagga, party) by their bodies and minds, were wandering about”; and Vin-a 1106 says “because they were brothers by one father of the King of Kosala, a synonym for these elders is the group who are of high standing”. For both here and at Dhp-a ii.32 they are identified with the thirty monks of Pāvā (see Vin 1.253, SN ii187). The bhaddavaggiyā = kumāra are referred to at Ja i.82 = Dhp-a i.87, Dhp-a i.97 as among the “converts” who, because converted first, should, so some monks thought, have been given precedence over the Great Pair; at Dhp-a i.100, as having heard the Tuṇḍilovāda (cf. Vin-a 1106 and Ja no.388). Mahavaṃsa xxx.79 mentions their conversion as a subject to be represented in the relic shrine of the Mahā Thūpa. ³ vesī can also mean a prostitute, but here probably used in opposition to bhadda, high standing.

“What do you think of this, young men? Which is better for you, that you should seek for a woman or that you should seek for the self¹?”

“Truly this were better for us, Lord, that we should seek for the self.”

“Well then, young men, you sit down, I will teach you dhamma.”

Saying, “Yes, Lord,” this group of friends of high standing, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”²

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma,³ ... spoke thus to the Lord: “May we, Lord, receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination.

Told is the Case of the Group of Friends of High Standing

The Second Portion for Repeating

¹ attānaṃ gaveseyyātha. Cf. DhP 146 andhakāreṇa onaddhā padīpaṃ na gavessatha, “that ye in the bonds of darkness should not hunt for a lamp”; and the compound attadīpā of DN ii.100 and Snp 501. ² As in Kd 1.7.5–1.7.6. ³ As in Kd 1.6.32.

ON THE MIRACLES AT URUVELĀ

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Uruvelā. Now at that time three matted hair ascetics, Kassapa of Uruvelā,¹ Kassapa of the River,² Kassapa of Gayā,³ were living at Uruvelā. Of these, the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā was leader, guide, highest, chief, head of five hundred matted hair ascetics; the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of the River was leader ... head of three hundred matted hair ascetics; the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Gayā was leader ... head of two hundred matted hair ascetics.

Then the Lord approached the hermitage⁴ of the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā; having approached, he spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: “If it is not inconvenient to you, Kassapa, let me stay for one night in the fire-room.”

“It is not inconvenient to me, great recluse, (but) there is a fierce serpent king of psychic power there; he is a terribly venomous snake. Do not let him harm you.” And a second time the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: “If it is not inconvenient to you ...” And a third time the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: “If it is not inconvenient to you, Kassapa, let me stay for one night in the fire-room.”

“It is not inconvenient to me, great recluse, (but) there is a fierce serpent king of psychic power there; he is a terribly venomous snake. Do not let him harm you.”

“It is not likely that he can harm me. Please do you, Kassapa, allow (me the use of) the fire-room,”

¹ Verses at Thag 375–380. At AN i.25 he is called chief of those disciples who have large followings. Thag-a i.71 recounts that one of this Kassapa’s followers, Belaṭṭhasīsa, was tamed with him (see below, Kd 20.18, Kd 20.19) and afterwards became Ānanda’s preceptor. These three Kassapas were brothers. They had a sister whose son, Senaka, was converted by the Lord, see Psalms of the Bretheren, p.180. On the three brothers, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.206ff. ² I.e. of the river Nerañjarā. His verses at Thag 341. Thag-a on Uruvelākassapa says that Kassapa of the River was so called because he “went forth” at a bend in a great river; and that Kassapa of Gayā was so called because he went forth at Gayāsīsa. ³ Verses at Thag 345–349.

⁴ Cf. Vin 4.107 (BD 2.382) for many similarities with this passage.

1.15.3 “Stay, great recluse, as you wish it.”

Then the Lord, having entered the fire-room, having laid down a grass mat, sat down cross-legged, keeping his back erect, having caused mindfulness to be present in front of him. Then that serpent saw that the Lord had entered, and seeing this, pained, afflicted, he blew forth smoke. Then it occurred to the Lord: “What now if I, without destroying this serpent’s skin and hide and flesh and ligaments and bones and the marrow of the bones, were to master (his) heat by heat?”

1.15.4 Then the Lord, having worked a work of psychic power, blew forth smoke. Then that serpent, not conquering anger, blazed up. The Lord, having attained the condition of heat, also blazed up. When both were in flames, the fire-room became as though burning, ablaze, in flames. Then the matted hair ascetics, having surrounded the fire-room, spoke thus: “Beautiful indeed is the great recluse, (but) he will be harmed by the serpent.”¹

1.15.5 Then the Lord at the end of that night, without having destroyed that serpent’s skin and hide and flesh and ligaments and bones and the marrow of the bones, having mastered (his) heat by heat, having placed him in his bowl, showed him to the matted hair ascetic, Uruvelākassapa, saying: “This, Kassapa, is your serpent, his heat was mastered by heat.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great majesty, in that he can master by heat the heat of the fierce serpent king who has psychic power and is a terribly venomous snake; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

1.15.6 Near the Nerañjarā,² the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa:

¹ Text reads nāge na viheṭṭhissati, but should be corrected, as Vinaya Texts i.120, n. 3 indicates, by parallel passage at Vin 2.195: nāgena viheṭṭhiyissati, which I follow. Sinhalese edition reads nāgena viheṭṭhiyati, is harmed by the serpent, which also makes sense if the ascetics, seeing Gotama in flames, thought he was already brought to harm. ² For note on this repetition of the story (in this and the next paragraph) in a more popular style, see Vinaya Texts i.120, n. 4. Note by Sujato: the “popular style” is in fact verse and I have formatted it as such, without changing the text.

“If it is not inconvenient to you, Kassapa, let me stay this day (only)¹ in the fire-hall.²”

“It is not inconvenient to me, great recluse,
(but) as I am anxious for your comfort I warn you that there is a fierce serpent king there, of psychic power, a terribly venomous snake.
Do not let him harm you.”

“It is not likely that he can harm me.
Please do you, Kassapa, allow (me the use of) the fire-room.³”

“It is given”; having understood this,
the fearless one entered, fear overpassed.

Having seen that the holy man⁴ had entered, the chief of snakes⁵, afflicted, blew forth smoke.
The chief of men, joyful, unperturbed, blew forth smoke there too.

But the chief of snakes, not conquering anger, blazed up like a fire.
The chief of men, highly proficient in the condition of heat, blazed up there too.

When both were in flames, the matted hair ascetics, as they were looking at the fire-room, said:

¹ ajjunho; see BD 2.64, n. 1. Vin-a 971 also explains by ajja ekadivasam. ² Text reads aggisālamhi; Sinhalese edition aggisaraṇamhi; variant reading at Vin 1.365 aggisālāyam. ³ agyāgara, as throughout, except for case just referred to. ⁴ isi = ṛsi, seer, sage. ⁵ Here, instead of being called nāgarājā, king of serpents, he is called ahināga; and here nāga is probably not to be taken as “serpent” but as balancing the nāga in manussanāga, “chief of men,” just below, and therefore as meaning chief, strongest, foremost (something awe-inspiring: cobra, elephant, saint). Cf. mahānāga, used of (chief) disciples, at MN i.32, MN i.151; and definition of nāga at MN i.145 as “synonym for that monk in whom the cankers are destroyed,” and cf. also MN-a i.153.

1.15.7 “Beautiful indeed is the great recluse,
(but) he will be harmed by the serpent.”¹

Then at the end of that night
the serpent’s flames became extinguished, but the multicoloured flames of him of psychic power remained,
and multicoloured flames, dark green, then red, crimson, yellow and crystal-coloured were on Angirasa’s² body.

Having put the chief of snakes into his bowl, he showed him to the brahmin,³ saying:
“This, Kassapa, is your serpent, his heat was mastered by heat.”

1.1.26 Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, thoroughly believing in this wonder of psychic power of the Lord, spoke thus to the Lord: “Stay just here, great recluse, I (can offer you) a constant supply of food.”⁴

The First Wonder

1.16.1 Then the Lord stayed in a certain woodland grove near the hermitage of the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa. Then the four Great Kings, having illumined the entire woodland grove on a glorious night with glorious colour, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they stood at the four quarters like huge fires.

1.16.2 Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night, and having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready. But now, who were these, great recluse, who, having illumined the entire woodland grove during the glorious night with glorious colour, approached you and having approached, having greeted you, stood at the four quarters like huge fires?”

¹ See above, BD 4.34, n. 1. ² Name applied to Gotama now and again in the Piṭakas; DN iii.196 (“name of the son of the Sakyans”), SN i.196 = Thag 1252, AN iii.239, Thag 536, Ja i.116. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names and GS iii.175, n. 1. Vin-a 971 says aṅgato raṁsiyo saṁsaranti, flames streamed from his body (limb). ³ Note that the jaṭila is here referred to as a brahmin. ⁴ This invitation seems to cancel the Lord’s request to stay for “one day (only),” and to account for the fact that he stayed on in the woodland grove for several days.

“Kassapa, these were the four Great Kings who approached me in order to hear dhamma.”

Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that the four Great Kings also approach him in order to hear dhamma; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

The Second Wonder

Then Sakka, lord of the devas, having illumined the entire woodland grove on a glorious night with glorious colour, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance, like a huge fire, more glorious and more superb than the former splendours of colour.¹

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night ... (as in² Kd 1.16.2) ... stayed in that same woodland grove.

The Third Wonder

Then Brahmā Sahampati ... (as in Kd 1.17) ... stayed in that same woodland grove.

The Fourth Wonder

Now at that time a great sacrifice (made by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa was going forward,³ and the entire (population of) Aṅga and Magadha, taking abundant solid food and soft food, wanted to go (to it)).¹ Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “At present my great sacrifice is going forward, and the entire (population of) Aṅga and Magadha, taking abundant solid food and soft food, will come. If the great recluse does a wonder of psychic power before the populace, the great recluse’s gains and honour will much increase, my gains and honour will decline. Now the great recluse shall certainly not come to-morrow.”

¹ I.e. the four Great Kings, so Vin-a 972. ² Reading “Sakka, lord of devas” instead of “the four Great Kings.” ³ paccupaṭṭhito hoti. It was a sacrifice performed by him.

Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind of the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, having gone to Uttarakuru,² having fetched almsfood from there, having eaten it by the Anotatta lake,³ took his midday rest there. Then at the end of that night the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready. But why did you not come yesterday, great recluse? We thought of you however, saying ‘How is it that the great recluse does not come?’ A portion of solid food and soft food was put aside for you.”

“Now did it not occur to you, Kassapa, ‘At present my great sacrifice is going forward ... Now the great recluse shall certainly not come to-morrow’?”

“So I, Kassapa, knowing by mind the reasoning in your mind, having gone to Uttarakuru, having fetched almsfood from there, having eaten it by the Anotatta lake, took my mid-day rest there.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that he also knows mind by mind; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.” Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

¹ Cf. the people’s annual festivals mentioned at Psalms of the Brethren 181, at one of which the Lord converted Kassapa of Uruvelā’s nephew. ² Mentioned at Vin 3.7 (BD 1.14). See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, especially for its being considered a mark of great psychic power to be able to go here—a somewhat mythical region.

³ One of the seven great lakes of the Himalayas. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names.

The Fifth Wonder

Now at that time a rag-robe accrued to the Lord. Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now where can I wash the rag-robe?” Then Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, having dug a tank with his hand, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord may wash the rag-robe here.” Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now on what can I knead the rag-robe?” Then Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, having put down a large stone near him, said: “Lord, the Lord may knead the rag-robe here.”

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now holding on to what can I come up from (the water)?” Then a devatā inhabiting a kakudha (tree)¹, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, bent down a bough, saying: “Lord, the Lord may come up from (the water) holding on here.” Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now on what can I stretch out² the rag-robe?” Then Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, having put down a large stone near him said: “Lord, the Lord may stretch out the rag-robe here”

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready. But how is it, great recluse, that this tank was not here before, and now this tank is here? Nor was this stone put down before. By whom was this stone put down? Nor was a bough of this kakudha (tree) bent down before, and now this bough is bent down.”

“Kassapa, a rag-robe accrued to me here, and this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now where can I wash the rag-robe?’ Then, Kassapa, Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in my mind, having dug a tank with his hand, spoke thus to me: ‘Lord, the Lord may wash the rag-robe here.’ So this tank was dug by the hand of a non-human being.¹ Then this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now on what can I knead the rag-robe?’ ‘... So this stone was put² by a non-human being.

¹ Terminalia Arjuna according to Pali-English Dictionary. Cf. Ja vi.518–519, Dhpa iv.153, Ajjuna at Buddhavaṃsa viii.23 and Dhpa i.105 is the tree of the Buddha Anomadassin. Vin-a 972 calls it ajjunarukkha, which Pali-English Dictionary calls Pentaptera Arjuna. ² vissajjeyyaṃ, explained at Vin-a 972 as sukkhāpanatthāya pasāretvā ṭhapeyyaṃ (where) can I put it, stretching it out to dry?

Then this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now holding on to what can I come up out of (the water)?’ Then, Kassapa, a devatā ... said: ‘Lord, the Lord may come up from (the water) holding on here.’ So this kakudha (tree) was a hold for my hand.³ Then this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now on what can I stretch out the rag-robe?’ Then⁴ Sakka, lord of the devas ... So this stone was put by a non-human being.”

Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that Sakka, lord of the devas, does him a service; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.” Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night; having approached, he announced the time to the Lord, saying: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready.”

“You go on, Kassapa, I am coming along,” and having dismissed the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, having plucked a fruit from a rose-apple tree, after which this Land of the Rose-apples⁵ is named, he sat down in the fire-room, having arrived first.

The matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa saw the Lord sitting in the fire-room; seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: “By what way have you come, great recluse? I set out before you, but you are sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first.”

“Now I, Kassapa, having dismissed you, having plucked a fruit from a rose-apple tree, after which this Land of the Rose-apples is named, am sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first. Truly, Kassapa, this rose-apple fruit is full of colour, full of scent, full of flavor; if you like, do eat it.”

“No, great recluse, you alone are worthy of it, you alone eat it.”

¹ amanussena. Cf. Vin 3.85 (and BD 1.147, n. 2). ² nikkhittā, instead of, as previously, upanikkhi-. ³ āhara-hattha. ⁴ The name Kassapa is omitted here. ⁵ Jambudīpa, usually meaning India.

Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that having dismissed me first ... he sat down in the fire-room, having arrived first; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.” Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night; having approached he announced the time to the Lord, saying: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready.”

“You go on, Kassapa, I am coming along,” and having dismissed the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, and having plucked a mango fruit not far from the rose-apple tree, after which this Land of the Rose-apples is named ... having plucked a fruit of emblic myrobalan¹ not far from the mango tree ... having plucked a fruit of yellow myrobalan² not far from the emblic myrobalan, having gone to the Thirty,³ having plucked a flower from the Coral Tree,⁴ he sat down in the fire-room, having arrived first. The matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa saw the Lord sitting in the fire-room, and seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: “By what way have you come, great recluse? I set out before you, but you are sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first.”

“Now I, Kassapa, having dismissed you, having gone to the Thirty, having plucked a flower from the Coral Tree, am sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first. Truly, Kassapa, this flower of the Coral Tree is full of colour, full of scent; if you like, do take it.”

“No, great recluse, you alone are worthy of it, you alone take it.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that having dismissed me first, having gone to the Thirty, having plucked a flower from the Coral Tree, he is sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

¹ āmalakī (here and at MN i.456; elsewhere āmalaka), phyllanthus emblica. The fruit allowed to monks as a medicine, Vin 1.201. Cf. Vin 1.278. ² haritākī. Fruit also allowed as a medicine at Vin 1.201. Cf. MN iii.127. ³ I.e. to the realm of the Thirty (or Thirty-three) Devas, tāvatiṃsa. ⁴ pāricchattaka, “shading all round,” Erythrina Indica. (mythical) tree growing in the Tavatimsa realm. At AN iv.117 the devas’ rejoicings at each stage in the development of shoot and bloom are set out. See GS iv.78ff. for notes. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, missing the above Vinaya reference, asserts that the flowers are never plucked. In that case this is a noteworthy exception.

Now at that time these matted hair ascetics, wanting to tend the (sacred) fires, were unable to chop sticks. Then it occurred to these matted hair ascetics: “Doubtless it is (owing to) the psychic might of the great recluse that we are unable to chop sticks.” Then the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Kassapa, let sticks be chopped.”

“Let them be chopped, great recluse.” Five hundred sticks were chopped simultaneously.¹ Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that also sticks are chopped; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Now at that time these matted hair ascetics, wanting to tend the (sacred) fires, were unable to kindle the fires. Then it occurred to these matted hair ascetics: “Doubtless ... unable to kindle the fires.” Then the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Kassapa, let the fires be kindled.”

“Let them be kindled, great recluse.” Five hundred fires were kindled simultaneously ... “... in that also the fires are kindled; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Now at that time these matted hair ascetics, having tended the fires, were unable to extinguish the fires.² ... The five hundred fires were extinguished simultaneously ... “... in that also the fires are extinguished; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

¹ sakid eva, just once, once only. There was doubtless one stick “for each of the five hundred jaṭilas over whom Kassapa was chief” (Vinaya Texts i.129). ² It is clear therefore that the fires were not kept burning perpetually.

Now at that time on the cold winter nights between the eights¹ in a time of snowfall these matted hair ascetics were plunging into the river Nerañjarā, then emerging and repeatedly plunging in and out.² Then the Lord created as many as five hundred fire-vessels³ just where these matted hair ascetics, having come up from (the river), warmed themselves.⁴ Then it occurred to these matted hair ascetics: “Doubtless it is (owing to) the psychic might of the great recluse that these fire-vessels are created.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that he can create these fire-vessels; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Now at that time a great rain fell out of the proper season, and a great flood resulted.⁵ The Lord was staying in a place which became inundated by water. Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now suppose that I, having made the water recede all round, should pace up and down in the middle on dust-covered ground?” Then the Lord, having made the water recede all round, paced up and down in the middle on dust-covered ground. Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, thinking: "I hope that the great recluse has not been carried away¹ by the water," went together with a boat and many matted hair ascetics to that place where the Lord was staying. The matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa saw the Lord who, having made the water recede all round, was pacing up and down in the middle on dust-covered ground, and seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: "Is it indeed you who are here, great recluse?"

¹ antaraṭṭhakāsu, the aṭṭhakā days which, according to Vin-a 1128, are “the eight (days) between Māgha and Phagguṇa” (names of lunar mansions). Cf. MN-a ii.48 (on MN i.79) “four at the end of the month of Māgha, four at the beginning of the month of Phagguṇa, thus between the two there are eight nights.” Cf. AN-a ii.225 (on AN i.136), “the time extends for eight days in the interval between Māgha and Phagguṇa. For there are four days at the end of Māgha and four at the beginning of Phagguṇa, this is called ‘occurring between the eights’” (antaraṭṭhako) See Vin 1.288, Ud 1.9, Ud-a 74. Translated at Sacred Books of the Buddhists viii, p. 7 as “between the eighths”; at GS i.119, Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.55 as “in the dark half of the month(s)”; at Vinaya Texts i.130, Vinaya Texts ii.211 as “between the Aṣṭakā festivals.” Critical Pali Dictionary gives “occurring between the eights.” The translation “eighths” is justified by the meaning of aṣṭakā (feminine) as the “eighth day after full moon” (Monier Williams). But “eights” seem preferred by the Commentaries. See notes at Sacred Books of the Buddhists viii.p. 7, GS i.119, Vinaya Texts i.130. ² Cf. Ud 6 for parallel passage. It would appear that jaṭilas practised purification by fire and water; cf. ceremonial bathing at Gayā mentioned by Kassapa of Gayā, Thag 345. ³ mandāmukhi. Vin-a 972 calls these aggibhājāni. ⁴ Same word, visibbeti, as used in Bu-Pc 56; see BD 2.398, n. 3. ⁵ sañjāyi, literally was born, was produced.

"It is I,² Kassapa," and the Lord having risen up above the ground, placed himself in the boat. Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: "Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that also the water does not carry him away; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am."

Then it occurred to the Lord: "Now, for a long time it will occur to this foolish man, 'Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.' Now, suppose I should deeply stir³ this matted hair ascetic?" Then the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: "Neither are you, Kassapa, a perfected one nor have you entered on the way to perfection, and that course is not for you by which you either could be a perfected one or could have entered on the way to perfection." Then the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā, having inclined his head to the Lord's feet, spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, may I receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may I receive ordination?"

"It is you, Kassapa, who are leader, guide, highest, chief, head of five hundred matted hair ascetics; do consult these so that they can do what they think (right)." Then the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā approached these matted hair ascetics; having approached, he spoke thus to these matted hair ascetics: "I want, good sirs,⁴ to fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse; let the revered sirs⁵ do what they think (right)."

¹ Cf. same expression at Vin 3.213 (BD 2.48). ² Emphatic: ayam ah'asmi. ³ saṁve-jeyyaṁ. Cf. this word, as used above, with other examples of it given by A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Saṁvega, 'Aesthetic Shock', Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol. 7, No. 3, Feb., 1943. ⁴ bho. ⁵ bhavanto.

“For a long time we, good sir,¹ have been much pleased² by the great recluse; if, revered sir,³ you will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse, all of us will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse.”

Then these matted hair ascetics, having let their hair, their braids, their bundles on the carrying-poles,⁴ their implements for fire worship be carried away⁵ all mixed up in the water, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined their heads to the Lord’s feet, they spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination.

The matted hair ascetic Kassapa of the River saw the hair the braids, the bundles on the carrying-poles, the implements for fire-worship being carried away all mixed up in the water; seeing this, it occurred to him: “I hope my brother is not in danger,” and he dispatched matted hair ascetics saying: “Go and find out about my brother,” and he himself with his three hundred matted hair ascetics approached the venerable Kassapa of Uruvela; having approached he spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa of Uruvela: “Is this better, Kassapa?”

“Yes, friend, this is better.”

Then these matted hair ascetics ...⁶ So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination.

The matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Gayā saw the hair, the braids, the bundles on the carrying-poles, the implements for fire worship being carried away all mixed up in the water; seeing this, it occurred to him: "I hope my brothers are not in danger," and he dispatched matted hair ascetics, saying: "Go and find out about my brothers," and he himself with his two hundred matted hair ascetics approached the venerable Kassapa of Uruvela; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa of Uruvelā: "Is this better, Kassapa?"

¹ bho. ² In the sense of believing in his teaching. ³ bhavaṃ. ⁴ khārikāja, which Vin-a 972 explains as khāri-bhāra. Khāri is a three bushel measure, kāja (= vividha, vivadha) is the shoulder-pole on which some ascetics and wanderers carried their property, their khāri. DN-a 269 calls khāri the requisites of an ascetic: kindling wood, water pot, needle and so on. Cf. khāri-vividha at Ud 65=SN 1.78, and DN 1.101.

⁵ pavāhetvā. Pavāheti is to cause to be carried away, and hence to cleanse, to wash away (evil). Perhaps a dual reference is intended here. Cf. Thag 346 (Kassapa of Gayā’s verses). ⁶ Repeating Kd 1.20.19 for the followers of Kassapa of the River.

"Yes, friend, this is better."

Then these matted hair ascetics, having let their hair, their braids, their bundles on the carrying-poles, their implements for fire worship be carried away all mixed up in the water, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined their heads to the Lord's feet, they spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may we receive ordination?"

"Come, monks," the Lord said, "well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill." So this came to be these venerable ones' ordination.

Through the Lord's psychic resolution, five hundred fire-sticks could not be chopped, (and) were chopped; fires could not be kindled (and) were kindled; could not be extinguished (and) were extinguished; five hundred fire-vessels were created. In this way there came to be three thousand five hundred marvels.

Then the Lord, having stayed at Uruvelā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Gayā Head together with a large Order of monks, with all those same thousand monks who had formerly been matted hair ascetics. Then the Lord stayed near Gayā at Gayā Head together with the thousand monks.

And there the Lord addressed the monks, saying: "Monks, everything is burning.¹ And what, monks, is everything that is burning? The eye, monks, is burning, material shapes are burning, consciousness through the eye² is burning, impingement on the eye³ is burning, in other words the feeling which arises from impingement on the eye, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too is burning. With what is it burning? I say it is burning with the fire of passion,¹ with the fire of hatred, with the fire of stupidity; it is burning because of birth, ageing, dying, because of grief, sorrow, suffering, lamentation and despair.

¹ Quoted at Kv 209. ² cakkhuvīññaṇa, i.e. cognising by the eye, vision or seeing. See Buddhist Psychological Ethics, 2nd edition, p.161, n. 5; Dialogues of the Buddha ii.340, Dialogues of the Buddha iii.230; and cf. MN i.111f. ³ cakkhusamphassa, or impression on, or contact with, the eye.

“The ear is burning, sounds are burning ... the nose is burning, odours are burning ... the tongue is burning, tastes are burning ... the body is burning, tangible objects are burning ...the mind is burning, mental states are burning, consciousness through the mind² is burning, impingement on the mind is burning, in other words the feeling which raises through impingement on the mind, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too is burning. With what is it burning? I say it is burning with the fire of passion, with the fire of hatred, with the fire of stupidity; it is burning because of birth, ageing, dying, because of grief, sorrow, suffering, lamentation and despair.

“Seeing this, monks, the instructed disciple of the ariyans disregards the eye and he disregards material shapes and he disregards consciousness through the eye and he disregards impingement on the eye, in other words the feeling which arises from impingement on the eye, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too he disregards. And he disregards the ear and he disregards sounds, and he disregards the nose and he disregards odours, and he disregards the tongue and he disregards tastes, and he disregards the body and he disregards tangible objects, and he disregards the mind and he disregards mental states and he disregards consciousness through the mind and he disregards impingement on the mind, in other words the feeling that arises from impingement on the mind, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too he disregards; disregarding, he is dispassionate; through dispassion he is freed; in freedom the knowledge comes to be, ‘I am freed’, and he comprehends: Destroyed is birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such or such.”³

¹ Quoted at Snp-a 32. ² manovīññāṇa, i.e. cognising by the mind, ‘apprehending’.

³ As above, BD 4.21.

And while this discourse was being uttered, the minds of these thousand monks were freed from the cankers without grasping.

Told is the Disquisition¹ on Burning

Told is the Third Portion for Repeating: the Wonder(s) at Uruvelā

ON BIMBISĀRA'S GATHERING

Then the Lord, having stayed at Gayā Head for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha together with the large Order of monks, with all those same thousand monks who had formerly been matted hair ascetics. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Palm Grove pleasure ground² in the Supatiṭṭha shrine.³

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha heard: "Verily, the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, who has gone forth from the Sakyan clan, has reached Rājagaha and is staying at Rājagaha in the Palm Grove pleasure ground in the Supatiṭṭha shrine. A lovely reputation has gone forth concerning the Lord Gotama, thus: He is indeed Lord, perfected one, fully awakened one, endowed with knowledge and conduct, well-farer, knower of the worlds, unrivalled charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and mankind, awakened one, Lord. Having realised them by his own super-knowledge, he makes known this world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmas, creatures with devas and men, with recluses and brahmins. He teaches dhamma, lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending. He explains with the spirit and the letter the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled and wholly pure. Good indeed it were to see perfected ones like this."

¹ pariyāya. ² Laṭṭhivanuyyāna, literally the pleasance, pleasure ground or park of the grove of sprouts (or canes or sticks). Vin-a 972 explains by tāluyyāna, the palmyra, or talipot-palm pleasance. Cf. Ja i.68, Ja i.84; and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ³ Vin-a 972 calls this a round tree. See E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p. 230.

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, surrounded by twelve myriad¹ brahmins and householders² of Magadha, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Then some of these twelve myriad brahmins and householders of Magadha having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance; some exchanged greetings with the Lord, and having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, they sat down at a respectful distance; some having saluted the Lord with joined palms, sat down at a respectful distance; some having shouted out their name and clan before the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance; some having become silent, sat down at a respectful distance.

Then it occurred to those twelve myriad brahmins and householders of Magadha: “Now,³ does the great recluse fare the Brahma-faring under Kassapa of Uruvelā, or does Kassapa of Uruvelā fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse?” Then the Lord, knowing with his mind the reasoning in the minds of those twelve myriad brahmins and householders of Magadha, addressed Kassapa of Uruvelā with the verses:

“What hast thou seen, O dweller in Uruvelā,
That thou, known as emaciate⁴, hast abandoned the (sacred) fire?

I ask thee about this matter, Kassapa:
Hast thou abandoned thy fire-implements?”

“The sacrifices speak of forms and sounds,
Also of tastes⁵, pleasures and women.
Knowing that ‘This is dross’ among affections—
Therefore I delighted not in sacrifice, in offering.”

¹ nahuti. Cf. Snp 677. Exact meaning unknown, but some high number. Vin-a 972 says “here one nahuta is ten thousand.” ² brāhmaṇagahapatika, not “brahmin householders” as at BURLINGAME, Buddhist Legends i.197, but as at Vinaya Texts i.137 (where see note) and above. For see definition of “householder” at Vin 3.222, “setting aside king ... and Brahmin, he who remains is called ‘householder’.” ³ Cf. Ja vi.220; To end of second verse quoted at Bv-a 20. ⁴ kisako vadāno; see note Vinaya Texts i.138, n. 1. ⁵ rūpe ca sadde ca atho rase; cf. Snp 974.

“But if your mind delights not there, Kassapa,” the Lord said, “Among forms, sounds and also tastes,

Then in the world of devas and men what does your mind delight in?
Kassapa, tell me that.”

“When I had seen the path, peaceful, without substrate,¹ Stainless², not attached to sensations’ becoming,
Not becoming otherwise³, where one is not led by others⁴—

In consequence, I delighted not in sacrifice, in offering.”

1.22.6 Then the venerable Kassapa of Uruvelā, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having inclined his head towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple⁵; Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple.” Then it occurred to those twelve myriad Brahmins and householders of Magadha: “Kassapa of Uruvelā fares the Brahmarfaring under the great recluse.”

1.22.7 Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the minds of these twelve myriad Brahmins and householders of Magadha, talked a progressive talk ... stopping, the Way.⁶

1.22.8 And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take a dye, even so as the twelve myriad Brahmins and householders of Magadha with Bimbisāra at their head were (sitting) in those very seats, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them, that “Whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop,” and one myriad declared themselves to be lay-followers.

¹ anupadhika, i.e. without substrate for or attachment to rebirth. ² akiñcanaṃ kāmabhava asattaṃ, also at Snp 176, Snp 1059, Snp 1091. Akiñcana can also mean “having nothing”, “calling nothing one’s own”, see Vinaya Texts i.139, n. 1. Vin-a 973 says of it that it means without the stain of passion. ³ anaññathābhāvīṃ, i.e. there is no becoming (for the path) as to birth, decrepitude, dying (according to Vin-a 973). Cf. SN iii.225, SN iv.23, SN iv.66. ⁴ anaññaneyyaṃ. Vin-a 973 says that one should oneself, by making the Way become, come to the path and should not be brought to it by anyone else. Cf. Snp 55, Snp 213, Snp 364. ⁵ Ja vi.220, Bv-a 20. ⁶ As above, Kd 1.7.5-1.7.6.

Then King Bimbisāra of Magadha, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Formerly, Lord, when I was a young man I had five ambitions.¹ These are now realised² by me.

1. “Formerly, Lord, when I was a young man it occurred to me: ‘Might I be anointed into kingship.’ This was my first ambition, Lord. It has now been realised by me.
2. “And ‘Might the perfected one, the fully awakened one come into my realm.’ This, Lord, was my second ambition. It has now been realised by me.
3. “And ‘That I might pay homage to this Lord.’ This, Lord, was my third ambition. It has now been realised by me.
4. “And ‘May that Lord teach me dhamma.’ This, Lord, was my fourth ambition. It has now been realised by me.
5. “And ‘Might I understand that Lord’s dhamma.’ This, Lord, was my fifth ambition. It has now been realised by me.

“Formerly, Lord, when I was a young man I had these five ambitions. They are now realised by me.

“Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Even, Lord, as one might set upright what has been upset³ ... even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. So I, Lord, go to the Lord⁴ as refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. Lord, may the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple gone for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts. And, Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me to-morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then King Seniya Bim-bisāra of Magadha, having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, at the end of that night had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “Lord, it is time, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha together with the large Order of monks, with all those same thousand monks who had formerly been matted-hair ascetics.

¹ assāsaka. ² samiddha, well effected. ³ As above, Kd1.7.10. ⁴ bhagavantam.

Now at that time Sakka, lord of the devas, having assumed the form of a Brahmin youth, walked in front of the Order of monks with the Lord at its head, singing these verses:

“The tamed with the tamed, with the former matted-hair ascetics,
the well freed¹ with the well freed,
The Lord, beautifully coloured like a golden ornament,² entered Rājagaha.

“The freed³ with the freed,
with the former matted-hair ascetics,
the well freed with the well freed,
The Lord, beautifully coloured like a golden ornament,
entered Rājagaha.

“The crossed over with the crossed over,
with the former matted-hair ascetics,
the well freed with the well freed,
The Lord, beautifully coloured like a golden ornament,
entered Rājagaha.

“He of the ten states,⁴ of the ten powers,⁵ versed in the ten things,⁶

¹ vippamutta. ² singīnikkhasuvaṇṇa. Cf. SN ii.234. Gold is the colour for immortality. ³ mutta. ⁴ dasavāsa. Ten ariya-vāsā given at DN iii.269, AN v.29. ⁵ dasabala became an epithet of this and the previous Buddhas. ⁶ According to Vin-a 973 the ten paths of action.

and furnished with the ten,¹
He, the Lord, surrounded by ten hundred,
entered Rājagaha.^{2”}

People having seen Sakka, lord of the devas, spoke thus: “Indeed this brahmin youth is lovely, indeed this brahmin youth is good to look upon, indeed this brahmin youth is charming. Whose, now, is this brahmin youth?” When they had spoken thus, Sakka, lord of the devas, addressed these people with a verse:

“He who is steadfast, tamed in every way, awakened, peerless among men,
Perfected, well-farer,
I am his attendant in the world.”³

Then the Lord approached the dwelling of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, with his own hand having offered, having satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance it occurred to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “Now, where could the Lord stay that would be neither too far from a village nor too near, suitable for coming and going, accessible for people whenever they want⁴, not crowded by day, having little noise at night, little sound, without folk’s breath, haunts of privacy, suitable for seclusion?”⁵

Then it occurred to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “Now, this Bamboo Grove of ours, a pleasure park,⁶ is neither too far from a village ... suitable for seclusion. Suppose I were to give the Bamboo Grove, a pleasure park, to the Order of the monks with the awakened one at its head?"

¹ According to Vin-a 973 the ten factors of an adept, asekhehi aṅgehi upeto. Cf. the adept’s ten qualities, dhammā, at AN v.222, and his ten powers, balāni, at Ps.ii.173: both consist of the eight “fitnesses” of the eightfold Way with the addition of right knowledge and right freedom. ² Quoted at Ja i.84. ³ Ja i.84. ⁴ atthikānaṃ-atthikānaṃ, explained at Vin-a 974 as going up to the awakened one and hearing dhamma. ⁵ This is stock, Vin 2.158, DN iii.38, MN ii.118, MN iii.13, AN iv.88, Vb 224.

⁶ uyyāna; see definition at Vin 4.298. (BD 3.325).

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having taken a ceremonial vessel made of gold, dedicated it to the Lord, saying: "May I, Lord, give this Bamboo Grove, a pleasure park, to the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head?" The Lord accepted the park.¹ Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma, having risen from his seat, departed. Then the Lord, on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "Monks, I allow a park."²

ON THE GOING FORTH OF SĀRIPUTTA AND MOGGALLĀNA

At that time the wanderer Sañjaya³ was residing in Rājagaha together with a great company of wanderers, with two hundred and fifty wanderers. Now at that time Sāriputta and Moggallāna fared the Brahma-faring under the wanderer Sañjaya, and an agreement came to be formed by these: "Whoever attains the deathless first, let him announce it."

Then the venerable Assaji,⁴ having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. He was pleasing whether he was approaching or departing, whether he was looking in front or looking behind, whether he was drawing in or stretching out (his arm), his eyes were cast down, he was possessed of pleasant behaviour.¹ The wanderer Sāriputta saw the venerable Assaji walking for almsfood in Rājagaha—pleasing whether he was approaching ... possessed of pleasant behaviour—and seeing him, it occurred to him: “This is one of those monks who are indeed perfected ones in the world or who have entered on the way to perfection. What now if I, having approached this monk, should ask him: ‘On account of whom are you, your reverence, gone forth, or who is your teacher, or whose dhamma do you profess’?²”

¹ uyyāna; see definition at Vin 4.298. (BD 3.325). ² Ārāma, a park, and then a monastery. ³ Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, ii.p.1000 identifies him with Sañjaya-Belaṭṭhiputta, one of the six famous heretical teachers of Gotama's days, and whose doctrines are given at DN i.58. See also MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.123. ⁴ This Assaji was one of "the group of five" friends to whom Gotama addressed his first and second Utterances. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.122ff. for the view that the "subject of causation ... is due directly to Assaji," and her Gotama the Man, p.76f., p.108, p.242, Manual of Buddhism, p.215.

Then it occurred to the wanderer Sāriputta: “But it is not the right time to question this monk, he has gone in among the houses, he is walking for almsfood. What now if I should follow close after this monk who has learnt a way for those who need it³?” Then the venerable Assaji, having walked for almsfood in Rājagaha, taking his almsbowl, returned. Then the wanderer Sāriputta approached the venerable Assaji; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the venerable Assaji; having exchanged courteous and friendly greetings, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, the wanderer Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Assaji: “Your reverence, your faculties are quite pure, your complexion very bright, very clear. On account of whom, your reverence, have you gone forth, or who is your teacher, or whose dhamma do you profess⁴?”

“There is, friend, a great recluse, a son of the Sakyans, gone forth from a Sakyan family. I have gone forth on account of this Lord and this Lord is my teacher and I profess this Lord’s dhamma.”

“But what is the doctrine of your reverence’s teacher, what does he point out?”

¹ Stock. Cf. e.g. MN iii.35, MN iii.90, DN i.79, AN ii.104, AN ii.106, AN ii.210, Vin 3.180.

² Cf. above Kd 1.6.7. ³ atthikehi upaṇṇātaṃ maggaṃ. Vin-a 975 says this means either a way that is known and practiced; or, there will be deathlessness for us who need it; and thus upaṇṇāta means nibbāna, and so the meaning here is: tracking (or wayfaring after, magganto), seeking this. ⁴ As at Kd 1.6.7.

“Now, I, friend, am new,¹ not long gone forth, fresh to this dhamma and discipline. I am not able to teach you dhamma in full, but I can tell you its purport² briefly.”

Then the wanderer Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Assaji: “So be it, your reverence, tell me little or tell me much, (but) in any case explain to me its purport; I want just its purport. Why should you make a great elaboration³?”

Then the venerable Assaji uttered this terse expression⁴ of dhamma to the wanderer Sāriputta:

“Those things which proceed from a cause,
of these the Truth-finder has told the cause,
And that which is their stopping—the great recluse has such a doctrine.”⁵

When the wanderer Sāriputta had heard this terse expression of dhamma, there arose dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, that “Whatever is of the nature to uprise all that is of the nature to stop.” He said: “If this is indeed dhamma, you have penetrated as far as the ¹ nava. If occurring with bhikkhu means a recently ordained monk. But not so combined here. It can also mean young, but other evidence is lacking to show that Assaji, the last of the group of five to attain dhamma-vision Kd 1.6.36 was young in years. He was however young in standing as a follower of Gotama, newly ordained.

² attha. This whole passage is controversial. MRS. RHYS DAVIDS takes attha here as “the well, the good,” Sakya, p.134f.; COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol.4, no.2, July 1939, p.172f. as “purport”. On the whole I am inclined to agree with his interpretation of the passage. See also E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, etc., p.93f. ³ vyāñjana. See COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol.4, no.2, July 1939, p.171ff. E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha as Legend and History, p.94, n.1, says that this is a verse “in āryā metre ... even if now corrupted”, and he prints it as verse as does Norman at Dh-p-a.1.92.

⁴ pariyāya, formula, paraphrase, circumlocution, see COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol.4, no.2, July 1939, p.172, n.1. Perhaps “epitome”. Cf. AN iv.63, where dhamma-pariyāya also appears to refer to verses.

⁵ Referred to at Ja i.85.

sorrowless path, unseen, neglected for many myriads of aeons.”¹

Then the wanderer Sāriputta approached the wanderer Moggallāna. Then the wanderer Moggallāna saw the wanderer Sāriputta coming in the distance, and seeing the wanderer Sāriputta, he spoke thus: “Friend, your faculties are quite pure, your complexion very bright, very clear. Can it be that you, friend, have attained the deathless?”

“Yes, friend, I have attained the deathless.”

“But how did you, friend, attain the deathless?”

“Now, I, friend, saw the venerable Assaji walking for almsfood in Rājagaha—pleasing whether he was approaching or departing ... (as at Kd 1.23.2) ...

“Then, friend, it occurred to me: ‘But it is not the right time to question this monk ... (as at Kd 1.23.3, Kd 1.23.4) ...

“Then, friend, the venerable Assaji uttered this terse expression of dhamma:

“Those things which proceed from a cause,
of these the Truthfinder has told the cause,
And that which is their stopping—the great recluse has such a doctrine.”

When the wanderer Moggallāna had heard this terse expression of dhamma ... (as at Kd 1.23.5) ...

Then the wanderer Moggallāna spoke thus to the wanderer Sāriputta: “Let us go, friend, to the Lord, (for) this Lord is the teacher for us.”

“Friend, these two hundred and fifty wanderers are staying here because of us, looking to us; do let us consult them so that they may do what they think (right).” Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached

¹ = Tha-ap i.149. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.135. Vin-a 976 takes the phrase to mean “this sorrowless path, unseen by us for many myriads of aeons is neglected” (or passed by, abbhatitam). Or, taking abbhatitam to mean “in the past, what is passed and over”, this passage could be translated; “unseen by us for many myriads of aeons in the past.”

these wanderers; having approached, they spoke thus to these wanderers:

“We are going, friends, to the Lord, (for) this Lord is the teacher for us.”

“We, venerable ones, are staying here because of you, looking to you. If the venerable ones will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse all of us will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse.”

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached the wanderer Sañjaya; having approached they spoke thus to the wanderer Sañjaya: “Sir, we are going to the Lord, (for) this Lord is the teacher for us.”

“No, friends, do not go; we three will one and all look after this group.” And a second time ... And a third time ... “... will look after this group.”

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna, taking those two hundred and fifty wanderers, approached the Bamboo Grove; but on that self-same spot hot blood issued from the mouth of Sañjaya the wanderer.¹ The Lord saw Sāriputta and Moggallāna coming in the distance; seeing them, he addressed the monks saying:

“Monks, these two friends, Kolita and Upatissa,² are coming. This pair of disciples will be my chief, my eminent pair.”³

When, in the deep sphere of knowledge, they had attained the matchless freedom in which there is destruction of attachments,⁴ then the teacher explained about them in the Bamboo Grove:

“These two friends,

¹ See Vinaya Texts i.149, n. 1. ² Moggallāna was named Kolita, probably after his village, where he was born; Upatissa was Sāriputta’s name, as he is recorded to say at MN i.150, “but my fellow Brahma-farers know me as Sāriputta”—a name derived from his mother’s, Rūpasārī. ³ Quoted at DhP-a i.95. ⁴ See Vinaya Texts i.149, n. 3, for note on “extraordinary grammatical construction” of this passage. Note by Sujato: The reason for the “extraordinary grammatical construction” is that the passage is in verse, which was not recognized by editor or translator. I have not changed the text, but I have formatted it as verse.

Kolita and Upatissa, are coming.
This pair of disciples will be my chief,
my eminent pair.”

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined their heads to the Lord’s feet, they spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this was these venerable ones’ ordination.

Now at that time very distinguished young men belonging to respectable families of Magadha were faring the Brahma-faring under the Lord. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “The recluse Gotama gets along by making (us) childless, the recluse Gotama gets along by making (us) widows, the recluse Gotama gets along by breaking up families. A thousand matted hair ascetics have now been allowed to go forth by him, and these two hundred and fifty wanderers of Sañjaya have been allowed to go forth, and these very distinguished young men belonging to respectable families of Magadha are faring the Brahma-faring under the recluse Gotama.” Moreover, having seen the monks, they reprovved them in this verse:

“The great recluse has come to Giribbaja of the Magadhese
Leading all Sañjaya’s (followers).
Who will now be led by him?”

Monks heard these who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, this noise will not last for long, it will last only for seven days, after seven days it will cease. Therefore, monks, if they reprove you in this verse:

‘The great recluse has come to Giribbaja¹ of the Magadhese
Leading all Sañjaya’s (followers).
Who will now be led by him?’

You should reprove them in reply in this verse:

‘Verily great heroes, Truthfinders,
lead by what is true dhamma.
Who would be jealous of the wise, leading by dhamma?’”

1.24.7
0 4.57
Now at that time the people, having seen the monks, reproved them in this verse:

“The great recluse has come to Giribbaja of the Magadhese
Leading all Sañjaya’s (followers).
Who will now be led by him?”

The monks reproved these people in reply in this verse:

“Verily great heroes, Truthfinders,
lead by what is true dhamma.
Who would be jealous of the wise,
leading by dhamma?”

1.144
With the people saying: “It is said that the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, lead by dhamma, not by what is not-dhamma,” that noise lasted exactly seven days, after seven days it ceased.

Told is the Going Forth of Sāriputta and Moggallāna

Told is the Fourth Portion for Repeating

ON THE DUTIES TO THE PRECEPTOR

1.25.1 Now at that time monks, being without preceptors, not being exhorted, not being instructed, walked for almsfood wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, not befittingly attired.¹ While people were eating, they held their almsbowls close above the soft food for the remains,² and they held their almsbowls close above the solid food for the remains, and they held their almsbowls close above the savoury food for the remains, and they held their almsbowls close above the beverages³ for the remains, and having themselves asked for curry and boiled rice,⁴ they ate it, and they remained in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise.⁵

People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, walk for almsfood, wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, not befittingly attired? While people are eating, they hold their almsbowls close above the soft food ... and they remain in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise, like brahmins at the meal-time of brahmins.”

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks, contented, conscientious, scrupulous desirous of training ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks walk for almsfood wrongly dressed ... and remain in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise?”

Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks walk for almsfood wrongly dressed ... and remain in the refectory making a great noise, a loud noise?”

¹ A name for Rājagaha, cf. Snp 408. Literally “cow-pen”. Vin-a 97 says Giribbaja was a town in the country of the Magadhese. ¹ See Bu-Sk 1, Bu-Sk 2, Bu-Sk 3, Bu-Sk 4, Bu-Sk 23, Bu-Sk 24, and BD 2.369 for references. I think it is meant that they were not wearing their robes in the regulation ways. ² uttiṭṭha-patta. Vin-a 977, as noted in Vinaya Texts i.152, gives two explanations of this phrase, the one connecting it with ucchittha, left over, rejected; the other with uttiṭṭhahati, to rise. ³ Cf. Vin 3.72 (BD 1.124) for these four items. ⁴ odana, one of the five soft foods (Vin 4.83). ⁵ Cf. Bu-Sk 11–Bu-Sk 14.

“It is true, Lord.”

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“It is not fitting, monks, in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not proper, it is unworthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men walk for almsfood ... and remain in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased, but it is, monks, for displeasing those who are not (yet) pleased as well as those who are pleased, and for causing wavering in some.”

Then the Lord,¹ having rebuked these monks, having in many a figure spoken in dispraise of difficulty in supporting and maintaining oneself, of great desires, of lack of contentment, of clinging (to the obstructions), of indolence; having in many a figure spoken in praise of ease in supporting and maintaining oneself, of desiring little, of contentment, of expunging (evil), of punctiliousness, of graciousness, of decreasing (the obstructions), of putting forth energy, having given reasoned talk on what is fitting, on what is becoming, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, I allow a preceptor.² The preceptor, monks, should arouse in the one who shares his cell³ the attitude of a son⁴; the one who shares his cell should arouse in the preceptor the attitude of a father.⁵ Thus these, living with reverence, with deference, with courtesy towards one another, will come to growth, to increase, to maturity in this dhamma and discipline.

“And thus, monks, should a preceptor be chosen⁶: having arranged the upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured his feet, having sat down on the haunches, having saluted with joined palms, he should speak to him thus: ‘Honoured sir, be my preceptor; honoured

¹ Cf. this passage with Vin 3.21 (BD 1.37). ² upajjhāya; Sanskrit upadhyāya, a tutor.

³ saddhivihārika, literally one who stays, resides, lives with (another), a co-resident, and so a pupil in the same vihāra. ⁴ puttacitta, a son’s mind. Cf. SN iv.11of., mātucitta bhaginīcitta dhītucitta, the mind of a mother, sister, daughter. ⁵ pitucitta, a father’s mind. ⁶ gahetabbo, literally should be taken. But words for “choosing” were almost lacking, and gaṇhāti was often made to do duty for them.

sir, be my preceptor; honoured sir, be my preceptor.’ If he¹ says: ‘Very well’ or ‘Certainly’ or ‘All right’ or ‘It is proper’ or ‘Manage it amiably’, and makes this understood by gesture, makes this understood by speech, makes this understood by gesture and by speech, the preceptor has been chosen; if he does not make this understood by gesture, if he does not make this understood by speech, if he does not make this understood by gesture and by speech, the preceptor has not been chosen.

“The one who shares a cell,² monks, should conduct himself properly towards the preceptor. This is the proper conduct in this respect: having got up early, having taken off his sandals,³ having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, he should give tooth-wood,⁴ he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conjei, having washed a bowl, the conjei should be placed near (the preceptor). When he has drunk the conjei, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it,⁵ having washed it properly without rubbing it, it should be put away. When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed. If that place is soiled, that place should be swept.

“If the preceptor wishes to enter a village, his inner clothing⁶ should be given (to him), the inner clothing (that he is wearing) should be received (from him) in return,¹ the girdle should be given (to him); having folded them² (into two or four folds), the outer robes are to be given³ (to him); having washed it, a bowl with water⁴ is to be given (to him). If the preceptor desires an attendant, (the latter) having put on his inner robe all round so as to cover the three circles,⁵ having bound on the girdle, having folded them and having dressed in the outer robes, having fastened the ties, having washed, having taken a bowl, should be the preceptor's attendant. He should not walk too far away (from him), he should not walk too close. He should receive the bowl and its contents.⁶

¹ I.e. the preceptor, see Vin-a 977. ² From here to BD 4.67 below, = Vin 2.223-227.

³ Vin-a 977 says he might have worn these for pacing up and down or for keeping his feet clean if he had got up early. ⁴ dantakaṭṭha, as used by Indians today, a piece of wood. Allowed at Vin 2.138. Vin-a 977 says that the saddhivihārika, the one who shares a cell, having brought a large, a middle-sized and a small one—whatever he (the preceptor) takes of these is for three days, and then on the fourth, day he should be given the same again. ⁵ nīcaṃ katvā. So as not to let drops of water from inside the bowl spoil his robes when one is washing it; in the case of an earthen bowl it might break if dropped from a height. ⁶ nivāsana; possibly another word for antaravāsaka, the putting on of which is denoted by nivāseti, cf. BD 2.1, n. 2, BD 2.32, n. 2, n. 3.

“He should not interrupt the preceptor when he is speaking. (But) if the preceptor is bordering on an offence, then speaking himself, he should warn him. When he⁷ is returning,⁸ he⁹ should make a seat ready, having come back first; he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand¹⁰; having gone to meet him, he should receive his bowl and robe, he should give back the inner clothing (given) in return, he should receive his inner clothing. If a robe is damp with perspiration, he should dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but a robe should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should fold up the robe. When folding up the robe, having made the corners turn back four finger-breadths, he should fold up the robe thinking: 'Mind there is no crease¹ in the middle.' The girdle should be placed in a fold (of the robe).² If there comes to be almsfood and the preceptor wishes to eat,³ having given him water, almsfood should be placed near (him).

¹ paṭṭinivāsanaṃ paṭiggahetabbaṃ. Vin-a 978 is silent. Vinaya Texts i.155 suggests “house-dress?”. This would mean some kind of robe in addition to the three regulation ones. Bohtlingk and Roth, and Monier-Williams also both give “a kind of garment, for Buddhists”. It would look as if a monk might, and indeed must, enter village in a nivasāna, but not in a paṭṭinivāsana. I doubt the separate existence of such a garment. I suggest it is a nivasāna that is simply changed for another when a monk sets out on the begging round. If he has a change of nivasāna he could not be a tecīvarika. Monks in Ceylon often change their robes before they go out.

² saṅgaṇaṃ katvā. As at Kd 18.4.3. Vin-a 789 says “having made two robes of one” (i.e. having put two robes together), “two outer cloaks (saṅghāṭiyo) are to be given. Every robe is called a saṅghati if it is put together, saṅghāṭittā”. It thus seems that saṅghāṭi here stands both for the outer cloak and for the upper robe, uttarāsanga; not for the inner robe, however, since this, under the name nivāsana, had probably been given to the preceptor already. Usually there is only one robe called saṅghāṭi.

³ saṅghāṭiyo, literally outer cloaks. See above note. ⁴ sa-udako means with the drops of water remaining in the bowl after rinsing it, not drying it. ⁵ Cf. Bu-Sk 1, Bu-Sk 2 (BD 3.121). ⁶ pattapariyāpanna. Vin-a 978 says that if the bowl is warm or heavy with the conjei or rice received, the one who shares a cell should take the preceptor's bowl and give him his own. ⁷ Presumably the preceptor. ⁸ To the monastery from the alms-round. ⁹ Presumably the one who shares a cell. ¹⁰ Cf. Vin 1.9; Vin 4.231, Vin 4.310 (BD 3.191).

"He should offer the preceptor drinking-water. When he has eaten, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it,⁴ having washed it properly without rubbing it, having emptied out the water, he should dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but a bowl should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other hand under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground.⁵ When laying aside a robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.⁶ When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed, the water for washing the feet, the foot-stool, the foot-stand should be put away. If that place comes to be soiled, that place should be swept.

"If the preceptor wishes to bathe, he should prepare a bath. If he wants a cold (bath), he should prepare a cold one; if he wants a hot

¹ bhaṅga, breaking, splitting, dissolution, destruction. Vin-a 979 indicates that if the robe were folded up in the same crease every time, it would wear thin along that crease. ² obhoga. Vin-a 979 says "having folded up the girdle, it should be laid aside having arranged it in a fold (bhoga) of the robe". ³ Vin-a 979 says that this would only be if he had failed to obtain almsfood in the village; in this case the one who shares his cell should bring him the almsfood which he himself had obtained. ⁴ So as not to get dusty, Vin-a 979. ⁵ So as not to get dusty, Vin-a 979. ⁶ Vin-a 980, he is not to lay it aside by taking hold of the edges and throwing the robe over bamboo or cord, or the fold might be damaged by coming into contact with a wall.

(bath), he should prepare a hot one. If the preceptor wishes to enter a bathroom¹, he should knead chunam should moisten clay²; taking a chair for the bathroom,³ having gone close behind the preceptor, having given him the chair for the bathroom, having received his robe, he should lay it to one side. He should give him the chunam, he should give him the clay. If he is able to do so,⁴ he should enter the bathroom. When he is entering the bathroom, having smeared his face with clay, having covered himself front and back, he should enter the bathroom.

“He should not sit down so as to encroach upon (the space intended for) monks who are elders.⁵ He should not keep newly ordained monks from a seat. He should make preparation for the preceptor in the bathroom. When he is leaving the bathroom, taking the chair for the bathroom, having covered himself front and back, he should leave the bath-room. He should also make preparation for the preceptor in the water. When he is bathing, having come out (of the water) first, having dried his own body, having put on his inner robe, he should wipe off the water from the preceptor’s limbs, he should give him his inner clothing, he should give him his outer cloak⁶; taking the chair for the bathroom, having come back first, he should make ready a seat, he should put out water for washing the feet, a footstool, a footstand. He should offer the preceptor drinking-water.

“If he wishes to make him recite,⁷ he should make him recite. If he wishes to interrogate,⁸ he should be interrogated. In whatever dwelling-place the preceptor is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, it should be cleaned if he¹ is able (to do so). When he is cleaning the dwelling-place, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet,² he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the mattress³ and the squatting-mat,⁴ he should lay them to one side.

¹ jantāghara, see Vinaya Texts i.157, n. 2; iii.103. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.183, calls jantāghara, “a common bath”, and jantāgharasālā, “bath-rooms”. ² Clay for use on the face in the bath-room allowed at Vin 2.120. ³ Allowed at Vin 2.120.

⁴ Vin-a 980, if he is not ill. The bathroom must have been full of hot steam, and juniors as much as seniors had to be careful to protect their faces with a smearing of clay. ⁵ Cf. Vin 4.42, where monks must not lie down in the space meant for elders, and see BD 2.247, n. 3. This expression and the next also occur at Kd 18.4.2.

⁶ saṅghāṭi, perhaps here meaning the upper robe as well as the outer cloak, although then the plural might have been expected. See above, BD 4.60, n. 3. ⁷ No doubt meaning, if the preceptor wishes to make the one who shares the cell recite the Pātimokkha or give an exposition of the eight chief rules, cf. BD 2.271, n. 1. ⁸ Cf. BD 2.271, n. 2.

“Having lowered the couch, having taken it out properly without rubbing it,⁵ without knocking it against the door or the posts,⁶ he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out properly without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the couch,⁷ he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the spittoon,⁸ he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining-board,⁹ he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the ground-covering,¹⁰ having observed how it was laid down,¹¹ he should lay it to one side. If there come to be cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering¹²; he

¹ I.e. the one who shares a cell. ² nisīdanapaccattharaṇa. Cf. BD 2.34, n. 1, BD 2.46, n. 3, BD 2.244, n. 6. ³ Cf. BD 2.47, n. 1. ⁴ Cf. BD 2.73, n. 6. ⁵ Vin-a 980, without rubbing it on the ground. ⁶ kavāṭapiṭṭha. Vin-a 980 explains as “not touching the door (kavāṭa) and the door-posts” (piṭṭhasaṅghāṭa). On kavāṭa and piṭṭhasaṅghāṭa see BD 2.258, n. 3, n. 8, and A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p.256 (under dvāra). Kavāṭa allowed at Vin 2.142, and kavāṭapiṭṭhasamghāṭa at Vin 2.153, Vin 2.154. ⁷ A couch and a chair might have removable legs; cf. BD 2.240. See BD 4.64, n. 4. ⁸ Allowed at Vin 2.175. ⁹ apassenaphalaka, a board for resting the head, arms or elbows upon. Allowed at Vin 2.175. Some made of stone can be found at the entrance to dwelling-places among the ancient remains at Anuradhapura. ¹⁰ bhummattharaṇa; cf. BD 2.46, n. 4. ¹¹ Paññatta; same word as is used for “laying down” a rule of training, see BD 2.4, n. 1. ¹² ullokā paṭhamam ohāretabbam. Not, I think, “he should remove them as soon as he sees them”, as at Vinaya Texts i.159 and as favoured by Pali-English Dictionary. For ulloka occurs at Vin 2.151 as meaning a cloth or covering for a couch or chair, and was something that could be spread, santharati. Thus it probably has a technical meaning, and is one of the numerous kinds of “cloths”. Buddhaghosa on Vin 2.151 explains it as cilimika; and this he explains at Vin-a 775 as something made for preserving the texture of earth which is prepared with plaster.

4.64 should wipe the corners¹ of the window-holes.² If a wall that was coloured red³ becomes stained, he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked⁴ becomes stained he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground did not come to be treated, he should sweep it, having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: 'Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust.' Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side.

25.16 "Having dried the ground-covering in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the supports for the couch⁵ in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them where they were before. Having dried the couch in the sun ... the chair in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back properly without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the mattress and the squatting-mat in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down before. Having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down before. Having dried the spittoon in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before. Having dried the reclining-board in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before.

¹ Vin-a 980, of the room. But it seems more probable that the corners of the window-holes are intended. ² ālokaśandhi. Cf. BD 2.258 and n. 2; BD 2.259 and n. 1. ³ geruka-parikammakata. Geruka is yellow ochre or red chalk. Cf. BD 2.259 and n. 3. ⁴ Cf. BD 2.259. Setavaṇṇa, whitewash or plaster, the third colouring (with red and black) allowed for use in vihāras (Vin 2.150) is not included above. ⁵ Allowed at Vin 2.150. It seems that these supports were detachable from the couches, for first they were to be taken out and put in the sun, and then the couch was to be taken out. Vinaya Texts iii.278, n. 3, says that the couch "was supported on movable tressels—the paṭipādakā", but A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p. 265, sees "no reason why the paṭipādakā of a mañca should not be fixed legs". On the other hand, āhaccapādaka (of couches and chairs) seems to mean "removable legs", Bu-Pc 14, and Vin 2.149.

“He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl ... (as in Kd 1.25.11) ... the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

“If dusty winds blow from the east, he should close the eastern windows.¹ If dusty winds blow from the west, he should close the western windows. If dusty winds blow from the north, he should close the northern windows. If dusty winds blow from the south, he should close the southern windows. If the weather is cool, he should open the windows by day, he should close them at night. If the weather is warm, he should close the windows by day, he should open them at night.

“If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch² ... If an attendance-hall³ ... If a fire-hall⁴ ... If a privy comes to be soiled, the privy should be swept. If there does not come to be drinking-water, drinking-water should be provided. If there does not come to be water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there does not come to be water in the pitcher of water for rinsing,⁵ water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing.

“If dissatisfaction⁶ has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell should allay⁷ it or should get (another) to allay⁸ it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If remorse has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares the cell should dispel it or should get (another) to dispel it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If wrong views have arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell should dissuade him (from them) or should get another to dissuade him (from them),⁹ or he should give him a talk on dhamma.¹”

¹ vātapāna, see BD 2.259, n. 1. Three kinds allowed at Vin 2.148. ² koṭṭhaka, or gate-house, or store-room, allowed at Vin 2.142, Vin 2.153. ³ upaṭṭhānasālā, allowed at Vin 2.153. See BD 2.194, n. 4. ⁴ aggisālā, allowed at Vin 2.154. ⁵ ācamanakumbhī, allowed at Vin 2.142. ⁶ anabhirati, see BD 1.114, n. 1; and Vin 1.144. ⁷ vūpakāsetabbā. Vin-a 981 says that he should take him elsewhere. ⁸ vūpakāśepetabbā. Another monk should be told: ‘Having taken the elder, go elsewhere’, Vin-a 981. Cf. Vin 1.142 (=below, BD 4.190). ⁹ Cf. Vin 1.142 (=below, BD 4.190).

“If the preceptor has committed an offence against an important rule² and deserves probation,³ the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order grant the preceptor probation?’ If the preceptor deserves to be sent back to the beginning,⁴ the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order send the preceptor back to the beginning?’ If the preceptor deserves mānatta (discipline), the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) on the preceptor?’ If the preceptor deserves rehabilitation,⁵ the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order rehabilitate the preceptor?’

“If the Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against the preceptor—one of censure⁶ or one of guidance⁷ or one of banishment⁸ or one of reconciliation⁹ or one of suspension¹⁰—the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order not carry out a (formal) act against the preceptor or change it to a lighter one?’¹¹ Yet if a (formal) act—one of censure ... one of suspension—is carried out by the Order against him, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor

¹ For above passage cf. AN v.72, where competence in these matters is one of the qualifications a monk must possess in order to confer the upasampadā ordination.

² At Vin 4.51, one of the qualities a monk must possess in order to exhort the nuns is that of not having offended against an “important rule”, garudhamma. There were eight “important rules” to be kept by nuns; see BD 2.266, n. 11 and BD 4.267. But, above, the important rules seem to refer to Saṅghādisesa, for what follows; probation, etc., are among the penalties for breaking Saṅghādisesa rules. ³ parivāsa, cf. BD 1.196, n. 3, and Vin 1.143, Vin 2.31ff. Not the same parivāsa as that granted to members of other sects on their wishing to enter the Order, see below, BD 4.85. ⁴ Cf. BD 1.196, n. 4, and for mānatta BD 1.196, n. 5, and Vin 1.143. ⁵ abbhāna, cf. BD 1.196, n. 6; BD 3.28, n. 4. ⁶ tajjaniya. Cf. Vin 1.143, Vin 2.2ff. See Vin 1.325, AN i.99 and DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.170, for this and the four following formal acts. ⁷ nissaya, tutelage. Cf. Kd 11.9.1ff. ⁸ pabbājaniya. Cf. Kd 11.13.1ff. ⁹ paṭisāraniya. Cf. Kd 11.18.1ff. ¹⁰ ukkhepaniya. Cf. Kd 11.25.1ff. ¹¹ Vin-a 981 indicates that the one who shares the cell should do his best to plead with the monks to cancel the formal act. But if they insist, he should beg the preceptor to conduct himself properly.

conduct himself properly,¹ be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order could revoke that (formal) act?

“If the preceptor’s robe should be washed, the one who shares his cell should wash it or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor’s robe be washed?’ If the preceptor’s robe-material should be made up, the one who shares his cell should make it up or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor’s robe-material be made up?’ If dye should be boiled for the preceptor ... If the preceptor’s robe should be dyed ... ‘... could the preceptor’s robe be dyed?’ When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased.²

“Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not give an almsbowl to anyone nor should he receive an almsbowl from anyone; he should not give a robe to anyone nor should he receive a robe from anyone; he should not give a requisite to anyone nor should he receive a requisite from anyone; he should not cut off anyone’s hair nor should he have his hair cut off by anyone; he should not render a service to anyone nor should he cause a service to be rendered by anyone; he should not execute a commission for anyone nor should he cause a commission to be executed by anyone; he should not become an attendant on anyone nor should he take anyone as an attendant; he should not bring back alms-food for anyone nor should he have almsfood brought back by anyone. Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not enter a village, he should not go to a cemetery, he should not leave the district.³ If the preceptor becomes ill, he should tend him for as long as life lasts; he should wait (with him) until he recovers.⁴”

Told is what is due to a Preceptor

¹ Cf. BD 1.323 and its n. 1, n. 2, n. 3 for these expressions. ² acchinne theve. Vin-a 981 says “he should not depart if even a little dye is falling down.” Proper methods for dyeing robe-material given at Vin 1.286. ³ disā pakkamitabbā. Cf. Kd 2.21.1 where ignorant monks travelling to distant parts, disaṅgamikā, do not ask teachers and preceptors for permission. ⁴ vuṭṭhānassa, until he gets up from his illness, Vin-a 982. Cf. Vism 94.

ON THE DUTIES TO THE ONE WHO SHARES HIS CELL

1.26.1 “The preceptor,¹ monks, should conduct himself properly towards the one who shares his cell. This is the proper conduct in this respect: the one who shares the cell should be furthered,² he should be helped 4.68 by the preceptor in regard to recitation, interrogation, exhortation, instruction.³ If there is a bowl for the preceptor but no bowl for the one who shares his cell, a bowl should be given by the preceptor to the one who shares his cell, or he should make an effort, thinking ‘How then could a bowl be procured for the one who shares my cell?’
If there is a robe for the preceptor ... If there is (another) requisite in 1.51 for the preceptor ... ‘How then could (another) requisite be procured 1.26.2 for the one who shares my cell?’

“If the one who shares the cell becomes ill, having got up early he should give tooth-wood, he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conje⁴ ... that place should be swept.

1.26.3 “If the one who shares a cell wishes to enter a village⁵ ... having washed, a bowl with water is to be given to him. Thinking, ‘He will be returning about now’, he should⁶ make ready a seat, he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand ... He should offer drinking water to the one who shares his cell.

6.4-7 “In whatever dwelling-place one who shares a cell is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, it should be cleaned if he is able to do so ...⁷ ... so that the Order could revoke that (formal) act.’

in 1.52 “If the robe of one who shares a cell should be washed, the preceptor should explain, saying: ‘Thus should you wash it or he should 5.8-11 make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the robe of the one who shares my cell be washed?’ If the robe-material of one who shares a cell should be made up, the preceptor should explain, saying: ‘Thus should you make it up’, or ... ‘How then could the robe-material of the one who shares a cell’ ... ‘Thus should you boil it or ... ‘How then could dye be boiled for the one who shares my cell?’ If the robe of the one who shares a cell should be dyed ... ‘Thus should you dye it’, or ... ‘How then could the robe of the one who shares my cell be dyed?’ When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased. If the one who shares a cell becomes ill, he should tend him as long as life lasts; he should wait until he recovers.”

¹ From here to BD 4.69, below = Vin 2.227-Vin.2.230. ² saṃgahetabbo, used with the next word, anuggahetabbo, below, BD 4.157. ³ These four words are used in definition of “should (neither) help” at Vin 4.325 (BD 3.376); and cf. BD 2.271, n. 2. ⁴ As at Kd 1.25.2, reading “preceptor” for “one who shares a cell” and vice versa. ⁵ As at Kd 1.25.9 (first half). ⁶ From here to the end of Kd 1.26.6, as at Kd 1.25.10-Kd.1.25.13, omitting the first two sentences of Kd.1.25.10. ⁷ As at Kd 1.25.14-Kd.1.25.22.

Told is what is due to one who shares a cell

ON DISMISSAL

Now at that time those who shared cells did not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can those who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that those who share cells do not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?”

“It is true, Lord.”

The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can those who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?”

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, those who share cells should not not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors. Whoever should not conduct himself properly, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Even so, they did not conduct themselves properly. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to dismiss¹ one who does not conduct himself properly. And thus, monks, should he be dismissed: If he, saying: 'I dismiss you' or 'Do not come back here' or 'Bring back your bowl and robe' or 'I am not to be waited upon by you', makes this understood by gesture, if he makes this understood by voice, if he makes this understood by gesture and by voice, the one who shares the cell comes to be dismissed. If he does not make this understood by gesture, if he does not make this understood by voice, if he does not make this understood by gesture and by voice, the one who shares the cell does not come to be dismissed.

¹ pañāmetum.

1.27.3
4.70
Now at that time those who shared a cell and who were dismissed did not apologise. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow (them), monks, to apologise." Even so, they did not apologise. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, one who is dismissed is not not to apologise. Whoever should not apologise, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

1.27.4
Now at that time preceptors, on being apologised to, did not forgive. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to forgive." Even so, they did not forgive. And those who shared a cell departed and they left the Order and they went over to (other) sects. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, when you are being apologised to you should not not forgive. Whoever should not forgive, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

1.27.5
Now at that time preceptors dismissed those who were conducting themselves¹ properly, they did not dismiss those who were not conducting themselves properly. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, one who is conducting himself properly is not to be dismissed. Whoever should dismiss him, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And, monks, one who is not conducting himself properly is not not to be dismissed. Whoever should not dismiss him, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ For use of singular, where we should use the plural, cf. BD 3.364, BD 3.367, BD 3.369. Here the meaning is that each of several preceptors dismissed the particular monk who shared his cell.

“Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities he may be dismissed: if there does not come to be much affection for his preceptor, if there does not come to be much faith (in him), if there does not come to be much sense of shame (towards him), if there does not come to be much respect (for him), if there does not come to be much development¹ (under him). Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities he may be dismissed. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities he should not be dismissed: if there comes to be much affection for his preceptor ... if there comes to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities he should not be dismissed.

“Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities it is suitable² to dismiss him: if there does not come to be much affection for his preceptor ... if there does not come to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities, it is suitable to dismiss him. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities it is not suitable to dismiss him: if there comes to be much affection for his preceptor ... if there comes to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities it is not suitable to dismiss him.

“Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities, a preceptor, in not dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in dismissing him, he does not become one who has gone too far: if there does not come to be much affection for his preceptor... if there does not come to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities, a preceptor, in not dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in dismissing him he does not become one who has gone too far. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities, the preceptor, in dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in not dismissing him, he does not become one who has gone too far: if there comes to be much affection for the preceptor ... if there comes to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities, a preceptor, in dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in not dismissing him, he does not become one who has gone too far.”

¹ bhāvanā. Vin-a 982 explains by mettabhāvanā, development of amity. ² alam, enough.

1.28.1 Now at that time a certain brahmin, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks did not want to let him go forth, and because he could not obtain the going forth among the monks, he became lean, wretched, of a bad colour, very yellow, his veins standing out all over his body.¹ The Lord saw this brahmin, lean ... all over his body, and seeing him, he addressed the monks, saying: “How is it, monks, that this brahmin is lean ... all over his body?”

“Lord, this brahmin asked the monks for the going forth. The monks did not want to let him go forth, and because he could not obtain the going forth among the monks, he is lean ... all over his body.”

1.28.2
1.28.3 Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Now, monks, who remembers a service² done by this brahmin?” When he had spoken thus the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “I, Lord, remember a service done by this brahmin.”

“Now, what help (given) by this brahmin, Sāriputta, do you remember?”

“Lord, as I was walking for almsfood here in Rājagaha this brahmin had spoon-alms³ bestowed upon me. This, Lord, is the service done by this brahmin which I remember.”

n 1.56
1.28.3 “Good, Sāriputta, it is good. Indeed those who are truly men,⁴ Sāriputta, are thankful and grateful.⁵ Because of this do you, Sāriputta, let this brahmin go forth (and) ordain him.”

“How, lord, do I let this brahmin go forth, how do I ordain him?”

¹ Stock, cf. Vin 3.88 (BD 1.153–BD.1.154). ² adhikāra. ³ kaṭacchubhikkhā, alms given with a ladle to a monk (cf. Thag 934, Mil 9); contrasted with ticket-food and the gifts of robes, etc., at Dh-p-a 1.379, and with a “great gift”, mahādāna, given to a body of monks at Pv 2.9.56–Pv 2.9.58. ⁴ sappurisa. Cf. Vin 3.7. ⁵ Cf. SN ii.272.

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“From this day forth, monks, I abolish that ordination by going to the three refuges which I allowed. I allow you, monks, to ordain by a (formal) act consisting of a motion and a resolution put three times.¹

“And thus, monks, should one ordain: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This (person) so and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain so and so, through the preceptor so and so. This is the motion.

“‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This person so and so ... may ordain so and so. The Order is ordaining so and so through the preceptor so and so. If the ordination of so and so through the preceptor so and so is pleasing to the venerable ones let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... should speak.

“‘And a third time I speak forth this matter ... should speak. So and so is ordained by the Order through the preceptor so and so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Now at that time a certain monk immediately after he was ordained indulged in bad habits. Monks spoke thus: “Do not, your reverence, do that, it is not allowed.”² He spoke thus: “But indeed, I did not ask the venerable ones saying, ‘Ordain me’. Why did you ordain me without being asked (to do so)?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not ordain without being asked (to do so). Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain when you have been asked (to do so).

“And thus, monks, should one ask (for it): That one who wishes for ordination, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks' feet, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: 'Honoured sirs, I ask the Order for ordination; honoured sirs, may the Order raise me up,¹ out of compassion.' And a second time should he ask ... And a third time should he ask ...

¹ ñatticatuttha. See Kd 9.3.4–Kd.9.3.9, and DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p. 150.

² Cf. BD 1.309, BD 2.230, BD 2.393.

1.29.3 "The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This (person) so and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. So and so asks the Order for ordination through the preceptor so and so. If it seems right to the Order the Order may ordain so and so through the preceptor so and so. This is the motion.

1.29.4 "Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This (person) so and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. So and so asks the Order for ordination through the preceptor so and so. If the ordination of so and so through the preceptor so and so is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... So and so is ordained by the Order through the preceptor so and so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this."

1.30.1 Now at that time in Rājagaha a succession of meals of sumptuous foods came to be arranged.² Then it occurred to a certain brahmin: "Now, these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are pleasant in character, pleasant in conduct; having eaten good meals they lie down on beds sheltered from the wind.³ What now if I should go forth among these recluses, sons of the Sakyans?" Then that brahmin, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks allowed him to go forth (and) they ordained him.

¹ ullumpatu, meaning according to Vin-a 984 "having made me arise from what is bad may they establish me in what is good; or, having raised me from the status of a novice may they establish me in the status of a monk". Cf. below, BD 4.122, and Vin-a 1033. See also A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol.4, No.2, p.145, where he takes ullumpatu as meaning "extract" (me from all evil). ² Cf. Vin 1.248, Vin 4.75 (BD 2.315). ³ Cf. Vin 1.72, Vin 4.129 (BD 3.10-11).

The succession of meals dwindled away¹ after he had gone forth. Monks spoke thus: “Come along now, your reverence, we will walk for almsfood.” He spoke thus: “Your reverences, I did not go forth for this—that I should walk for almsfood. If you will give to me, I will eat, but if you will not give to me, I will leave the Order.”

“But, did you, your reverence, go forth for your belly’s sake?”

“Yes, your reverences.”

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this monk go forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught for his belly’s sake?” These monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, went forth for your belly’s sake?”

“It is true, Lord.”

The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

“How can you, foolish man, go forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught for your belly’s sake? It is not foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased.” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, when you are ordaining, to explain four resources²: that going forth is on account of meals of scraps; in this respect effort is to be made by you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: a meal for an Order, a meal for a special person, an invitation, ticket-food, (food given) on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon, on an Observance day, or the day after an Observance day.³ That going forth is on account of rag-robles; in this respect effort is to be made by you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: (robles made of) linen, cotton, silk, wool, coarse hemp, canvas.¹ That going forth is on account of a lodging at the root of a tree; in this respect effort is to be made by you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: a dwelling-place, a curved house,² a long house,³ a mansion,⁴ a cave.⁵ That going forth is on account of ammonia as a medicine; in this respect effort is to be made by you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses.⁶”

¹ Khīyittha; cf. khīyanti at BD 2.236, n. 1, n. 2. ² nissaya, cf. Vin 1.96. Nissaya is something which you depend upon, which supplies you, a source of supply. Not to be confused with the formal act called nissaya, referred to at Vin 1.49 (BD 4.66, above), which is an act placing someone under guidance, giving him help. ³ For last four, cf. BD 2.313–BD.2.314 and notes.

Told is the Fifth Portion for Repeating: on what is due to a Preceptor

ON THE DUTIES TO THE TEACHER

131.1
0 4.76

Now at that time a certain brahmin youth, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks explained the resources to him beforehand. He spoke thus: “If honoured sirs, you had explained the resources to me after I had gone forth, I should have been satisfied, but now, honoured sirs, I will not go forth; the resources are disgusting and loathsome to me.” The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the resources should not be explained beforehand. Whoever should (thus) explain them, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, to explain the resources soon after ordaining (a person).”

¹ See BD 2.7, BD 2.143 and notes. ² aḍḍhayoga. Commentaries speak of it as suvaṇṇavaṅkageha (see Pali-English Dictionary), as garuḷasaṅṭhānapāsāda (see Critical Pali Dictionary), and as suvaṇṇavaṅkageha (see Vinaya Texts i.173, n. 1). It is possible that the curve refers only to the roof, curved upwards perhaps at the ends, like some forms of domestic architecture in present-day India, and this is the reason for the aḍḍha, half: that in some respect the building is half and not entirely curved. At Vin 2.172 it is said that repairs may be made to an aḍḍhayoga during a period of seven or eight years. ³ pāsāda, see BD 2.16, n. 5. ⁴ hammiya, see BD 2.16, n. 6. ⁵ guha. These five are the five lenāni, abodes, allowed at Vin 2.146; allowed at Vin 1.107, as the site for an uposatha hall; at Vin 1.239 as the site for kappiyabhūmi, a place for what is allowable, an outhouse; at Vin 1.284 as the site for a store-room—in the last three cases the sites are to be agreed upon by the Order. ⁶ Cf. BD 1.133, BD 2.342. At BD 2.131 these five medicines may be used by ill monks.

Now at that time monks ordained through a group of two and a group of three (monks). They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, you should not ordain through a group of less than ten (monks).¹ Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through a group of ten or more than ten (monks).”

Now at that time monks of one year’s standing and of two years’ standing (severally) ordained the one who shared his cell. And when he was of one year’s standing,² the venerable Upasena, Vanganta’s son,³ ordained the one who shared his cell. When he was of two years’ standing, having kept the rains-residence, taking the one who shared his cell and who was of one year’s standing, he approached the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Now, it is the custom for awakened ones, for Lords to exchange friendly greetings with in-coming monks.

Then the Lord spoke thus to the venerable Upasena, Vanganta’s son: “I hope, monk, that things go well with you, I hope you are keeping going, I hope you came here with but little fatigue on the journey.”

“Things do go well with me, Lord, I am keeping going, Lord, I came, Lord, with but little fatigue on the journey.”

Now Truthfinders (sometimes) ask knowing,⁴ and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask, knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask, knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truthfinders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal. There is bridge-breaking¹, for Truthfinders in whatever does not belong to the goal. Awakened ones, Lords, question monks concerning two matters: “Shall we teach dhamma?” or “Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?”

¹ See Vin 1.319. A group gaṇa, is usually in the Vinaya regarded as consisting of from two to four monks (or nuns), but here it is equivalent to an Order, a saṅgha.

² See Ja ii.449, Vin-a 194, Ud-a 266, AN-a i.271 for this same episode. Ud-a states that Upasena was of two years’ standing as a preceptor. But it is more likely that AN-a is right in saying that two years’ standing as a monk is meant, i.e. since his own ordination. ³ See BD 2.83. ⁴ See also Vin 1.158, Vin 1.250, Vin 3.6, Vin 3.88–89 for this passage; and BD 1.13, n. 1, n. 2.

Then the Lord spoke thus to the venerable Upasena, Vanganta’s son: “Of how many years’ standing are you, monk?”

“I, Lord, am of two years’ standing.”

“And of how many years’ standing is this monk?”

“He is of one year’s standing, Lord.”

“Who is this monk as regards you?”

“He is the one who shares my cell, Lord.”

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked (him), saying:

“It is not fitting, foolish man, it is not becoming, it is not proper, it is unworthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it should not be done. How can you, foolish man, when you should be exhorted and instructed by others, think to exhort and instruct another (monk)? Too quickly have you, foolish man, turned to abundance,² that is to say to acquiring a group. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased.” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one who is of less than ten years’ standing should not ordain.³ Whoever (such) should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through one who is of ten years’ standing or through one who is of more than ten years’ standing.”

Now at that time ignorant, inexperienced monks ordained thinking: “We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing.” (Consequently) there were to be found ignorant preceptors, wise (monks) who shared their cells; inexperienced preceptors, experienced (monks) who shared their cells; preceptors who had heard little, (monks) who shared their cells who had heard much; preceptors of poor intelligence, intelligent (monks) who shared their cells; and a certain former member of another sect, when he was being spoken to by his preceptor regarding a rule, having refuted the preceptor, went over to the fold of that same sect¹ (as before.)

¹ See COOMARASWAMY, The Perilous Bridge of Welfare, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol. 8, No. 2, August, 1944, for a discussion of the Bridge mainly from Indian sources. ² Cf. Vin 1.287. ³ Cf. Bi-Pc 74, where a nun of less than twelve years’ standing should not ordain.

Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these ignorant, inexperienced monks ordain, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing’? (So that) there are to be found ... intelligent (monks) who share their cells.” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that ignorant, inexperienced monks ordained, thinking: ... there are to be found ... intelligent (monks) who share their cells?”

“It is true, Lord.”

Then awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men, ignorant, inexperienced, ordain, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing’? ... intelligent (monks) who share their cells. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one who is ignorant, inexperienced should not ordain. Whoever (such) should ordain, there is an offence of wrong doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through an experienced, competent monk who is of ten years’ standing or more than ten years’ standing.”

Now at that time monks, when their preceptors had gone away and had left the Order and had died and had gone over to another side (of the Order),² being without teachers,³ not being exhorted, not being instructed, walked for almsfood wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, not befittingly attired. While people were eating ... (= Kd 1.25.1-1.25.2)

¹ titthāyatanam saṅkhami. Cf. Vin 4.217 (BD 3.167). ² Cf. BD 3.190.

...

“It is true, Lord.”

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, I allow a teacher. The teacher, monks, should arouse in his pupil¹ the attitude of a son; the pupil should arouse in his teacher the attitude of a father. Thus these, living with reverence, with deference, with courtesy towards one another, will come to growth, increase, maturity in this dhamma and discipline. I allow you, monks, to live ten years in dependence,² and when one is of ten years’ standing to give guidance.³

“And thus, monks, should a teacher be chosen: having arranged the upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured his feet, having sat down on the haunches, having saluted with joined palms, he should speak to him thus: ‘Honoured sir, be my teacher, I will live in dependence on the venerable one; honoured sir, be my teacher, I will live in dependence on the venerable one; honoured sir, be my teacher, I will live in dependence on the venerable one.’ If he says: ‘Very well’ or ‘Certainly’ or ‘All right’ or ‘It is proper’ or ‘Manage it amiably’, and makes this understood by gesture ... (= Kd 1.25.7-1.25.24, reading teacher and pupil for preceptor and one who shares a cell) ... If the teacher becomes ill, he should tend him as long as life lasts; he should wait until he recovers.”

Told is what is due to a Teacher

³ ācariya. See Vinaya Texts i.178, n. 2 for note comparing this with preceptor. Vism 94 says that in a dwelling-place are teachers, preceptors, those who share a cell, pupils, those having the same preceptors, those having the same teachers. It mentions teachers for the going forth, teachers for ordination, pupils ordained and allowed to go forth having the same preceptor; teachers in guidance, in the exposition (or recitation, of the Pātimokkha), pupils in the same having the same teacher.
¹ antevāsika. ² nissāyaṃ vatthum. ³ nissayaṃ dātum. There is also the formal act of nissaya, of placing under guidance, as in Kd 1.25.22. The word translated above, Kd 1.30.4, as “resource” is also nissaya, but it is there combined with the verb ācikkhitum.

ON THE DUTIES TO THE STUDENT

“The teacher, monks, should conduct himself properly towards his pupil. This is the proper conduct in this respect: the pupil should be furthered, he should be helped by the teacher ... (= Kd 1.26.1-1.26.2, reading teacher and pupil for preceptor and one who shares a cell) ... If the pupil becomes ill, he should tend him as long as life lasts; he should wait until he recovers.”

What is due to a Pupil

The Sixth Portion for Repeating

ON NOT FORGIVING WHEN DISMISSED

Now at that time pupils did not conduct themselves properly towards their teachers ... (= Kd 1.27.1-1.27.8, reading teacher and pupil as above) ... in not dismissing him he does not become one who has gone too far.”

THE STORY OF THE IGNORANT AND INEXPERIENCED

Now at that time ignorant, inexperienced monks, gave guidance, thinking: “We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing.” (So that) there were to be found ignorant teachers, wise pupils; inexperienced teachers, experienced pupils; teachers who had heard little, pupils who had heard much; teachers of poor intelligence, intelligent pupils. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these ignorant inexperienced monks give guidance, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing’? (So that) there are to be found ignorant teachers ... intelligent pupils.”

Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that ignorant, inexperienced (monks)¹ are giving guidance, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing?’”

¹ Omitted in Oldenberg’s text of the Vinaya.

“Is it true, Lord.” The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked them; having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, one who is ignorant, inexperienced, should not give guidance. Whoever (such) should give it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to give guidance through an experienced, competent monk who is of ten years’ standing or of more than ten years’ standing.”¹

ON THE NULLIFICATIONS OF GUIDANCE

^{1.36.1} Now at that time monks, when their teachers and preceptors had gone away and had left the Order and had died and had gone over to another side (of the Order),² did not know about nullifications of guidance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, there are these five nullifications of guidance from a preceptor: when a preceptor has gone away or left the Order or died or gone over to another side (of the Order), and command is the fifth.³ These, monks, are the five nullifications of guidance from a preceptor. Monks, there are these six nullifications of guidance from a teacher: when a teacher has gone away or left the Order or died or gone over to another side (of the Order), and command is the fifth, or if he⁴ has come to be connected with a preceptor.⁵ These, monks, are the six nullifications of guidance from a teacher.

¹ Cf. above, Kd 1.31.6–1.31.8. ² As in Kd 1.32.1. ³ Vin-a 986 says that the teacher dismisses the pupil from guidance in the words of Kd 1.27.2. ⁴ Meaning the pupil, if we follow Vin-a 988; but DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.181, takes it to mean the teacher. ⁵ Vin-a 988 says that if one who shares a cell, living in dependence on a teacher, sees a preceptor walking for alms in the same village or worshipping at the same shrine, or if he hears him teaching dharmma in a dwelling-place or among houses (the teacher’s) guidance lapses. This would suggest that the preceptor occupies a higher position than the teacher.

ON FIVE CASES WHEN ONE MAY ORDAIN

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities¹ he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him: if he is not possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... body of concentration ... body of wisdom ... body of freedom ... body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a monk is not possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.

Kd 1:36

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him: if he is possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him.

Kd 1:36

Vin 1:6

Kd 1:36

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him: if he is neither himself possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit nor encourages another as to an adept’s body of moral habit ... if he is neither himself possessed of an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom nor encourages another as to an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.

BD 4.8

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him: if he is himself possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit and encourages another as to an adept’s body of moral habit ... if he is himself possessed of an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom and encourages another as to an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a novice is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him.

Kd 1:36

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if he comes to be lacking in faith,¹ if he comes to be without shame, if he comes to be reckless, if he comes to be lazy, if he comes to be of muddled mindfulness.² Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him.

Kd 1:36

¹ Cf. DN iii.279; SN i.99; AN i.162, AN iii.271, AN v.16.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if he comes to have faith, if he comes to feel shame, if he comes to be cautious, if he comes to be of stirred up energy, if he comes to be of ready mindfulness³. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him.

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if, in regard to moral habit,⁴ he comes to have fallen away from moral habit; if, in regard to good habits,⁵ he comes to have fallen away from good habits; if, in regard to (right) view,⁶ he comes to have fallen away from (right) view; if he comes to have heard little, if he comes to be of poor intelligence. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain ...

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if, in regard to moral habit, he does not come to have fallen away from moral habit; if, in regard to good habits, he does not come to have fallen away from good habits; if, in regard to (right) view, he does not come to have fallen away from (right)

¹ On the following quintet, cf. DN iii.252, DN iii.282; MN i.43; AN ii.218; SN ii.159, also AN iii.421, AN iv.145 and see MN-a i.190. ² mutṭhassati. See definition at SN-a i.115. On this and upaṭṭhitasati, “ready mindfulness” (or recollection), see MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.92. Cf. sati mutṭha at Thag 98, Thag 99. ³ upaṭṭhitasati; cf. also MN i.356. ⁴ adhisīle. Vin 1.172 says that the four Pārājikas and the thirteen *Saṅghādisesa*s are “falling away from moral habit”, as does Vin-a 989. Thus adhisīla is also the “higher morality”. ⁵ ajjhācāra. Vin 1.172 names the falling away from this as grave offences, offences of expiation, those which ought to be confessed, those of wrong-doing, those of wrong speech. Vin-a 989 calls them “the five other classes of offence” (i.e. excluding the Pārājika and Saṅghādisesa). Ajjhācāra can also mean “transgression”. ⁶ atiditṭhi. Vin 1.172 says that “falling away from right view means wrong view”, views of an extreme nature; while Vin-a 989 says that getting rid of right view, he is possessed of wrong view of an extreme nature.

view; if he comes to have heard much; if he comes to be intelligent. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him.

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if he is not competent to tend or to get (another) to tend a pupil or one who shares a cell and who is ill, to allay or get (another) to allay dissatisfaction that has arisen, to dispel or get (another) to dispel, by means of dhamma,¹ remorse that has arisen, if he does not know what is an offence, if he does not know the removal² of an offence. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... a novice should not attend him.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him.

“And monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if he is not competent to make a pupil or one who shares a cell train in the training regarding the fundamentals of conduct,³ to lead him in the training regarding the fundamentals of the Brahma-faring,⁴ to lead him in what pertains to dhamma,⁵ to lead him in what pertains to discipline,⁶ to discuss or get (another) to discuss, by means of dhamma, a false view that has arisen. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... a novice should not attend him.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him.

“And monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... a novice should not attend him: if he does not know what is an offence,¹ if he does not know what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight offence, if he does not know what is a serious offence, if the two Pātimokkhas² in full are not properly handed down to him, not properly classified, not properly intoned, not properly divided by rule and in respect of the explanation.³ Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... a novice should not attend him.

¹ Cf. above Kd 1.25.20. ² vuṭṭhāna, the arising from. Cf. below, BD 4.134, āpatti vuṭṭhitā, an offence that is removed, and BD 4.197, gāmo vuṭṭhāsi, the village (was) removed. ³ abhisamācārikā. Vin-a 989–Vin-a 990 equates these with the duties (laid down) in the Khandhakas. ⁴ ādibrahmacāriyikā; see Vinaya Texts i.185, n. 1. Vin-a 990 speaks of this as sekhapaññatti, which might mean ideas, concepts, notions suitable to a sekha, a learner. ⁵ abhidhamma. Vin-a 990 takes this as a division by name and form; and clearly has the Abhidhammapiṭaka in mind. But, for this passage pre-dating the existence of the Abhidhammapiṭaka, see Oldenberg, Vin i.xii, also BD 3.xf., and my article: Abhidhamma Abhivinaya Indian History Quarterly Vol. XII, No. 3, September, 1941. ⁶ abhivinaya, taken by Vin-a 990 to mean the whole of the Vinayapiṭaka.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him.

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him: if he does not know what is an offence, if he does not know what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight offence, if he does not know what is a serious offence, if he is of less than ten years’ standing. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him: if he knows what is an offence, if he knows what is not an offence, if he knows what is a slight offence, if he knows what is a serious offence, if he is of ten years’ standing or of more than ten years’ standing.”

Told is the Portion of sixteen times five (cases) when one may ordain

ON SIX CASES WHEN ONE MAY ORDAIN

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of six qualities ... he should not ordain, ¹ Cf. Vin 2.249; AN iv.140, AN v.71, AN v.80, AN v.201. ² That for the monks and that for the nuns. On Pātimokkha see below, BD 4.131, n. 2. For this part of the passage see also Vin 4.51 (BD 2.266). In general Buddhaghosa, at Vin-a 790 and Vin-a 990, gives different explanations of the terms. This accounts for the different translations here and at BD 2.266. ³ Or, meaning, anuvyañjanaso. Vin-a 990 appears to explain this by vibhaṅgato, as to the Vibhaṅga, the explanatory material surrounding each rule; and suttato, “by rule”, by mātikato, by the “summaries”, the headings of, or key to, each set of rules (in Vin 3 and Vin 4).

he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.¹

Vin 1.6

Told is the Portion of sixteen times² six (cases) when one may ordain

ON ONE WHO HAD FORMERLY BEEN A MEMBER OF ANOTHER SECT

Now at that time the one who had formerly been a member of another sect³ when he was being spoken to by his preceptor regarding a rule, having refuted the preceptor, went over to the fold of that same sect (as before), but having come back again, he asked the monks for ordination.⁴ The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd 1.38

“Monks, he who was formerly a member of another sect ... having refuted the preceptor and going over to the fold of that same sect (as before), on coming back should not be ordained. But, monks, whoever else was formerly a member of another sect and desires the going forth in this dhamma and discipline and desires ordination, to him you should grant probation⁵ for four months.⁶

Kd 1.38

“And thus, monks, should it be granted: first, having made him have his hair and beard cut off, having got (someone) to present⁷

BD 4.8

¹ Vinaya Texts i.186, n. 1 points out that BD 1.37 is “identical with Kd 1.36.2–1.36.15, but for the sixth case which, throughout BD 1.37, is added each time at the end of the five cases given in BD 1.36”: “if he is of less than ten years’ standing” and “if he is of ten years’ standing or more than ten years’ standing” respectively. ² Vinaya Texts i.186, n. 2, points out that this should be “Fourteen times”, for where the first four items in Kd 1.36.15 and Kd 1.36.17 are the same as one another and only the last in each is different, thus together making a total of six items, in Kd 1.37.13, Kd 1.37.14 there is no repetition and these six items form one group and no more. ³ See above Kd 1.31.6.

⁴ Cf. Vin 2.279, in regard to nuns. ⁵ This is probation before ordination into the Order took place. It is not the probation which forms part of the penalty for breaking a Saṅghādisesa rule. Vin-a 990 says that it is called probation, parivāsa, for members of other sects and also probation for the unconcealed, appaṭicchannaparivāsa, and can be given to naked wanderers, naked ascetics, ājīvakas, and to unclothed ascetics, acela, but not to anyone who has a cloak or a blanket made of the skin of wild animals. Cf. appaṭicchannaparivāsa at Vin 5.126. If Buddhaghosa’s explanation is right, the “unconcealed probation” of Critical Pali Dictionary is erroneous. ⁶ Cf. this sentence with Sn p.102, DN i.176. ⁷ See BD 2.53, BD 2.55, etc.

him with yellow robes, having made him arrange his upper robes over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks' feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be told: 'Speak thus: "I go to the enlightened one for refuge, I go to dhamma for refuge, I go to the Order for refuge. And a second time I go ... And a third time I go ... to the Order for refuge."'¹

138.3 "Monks, if he who was formerly a member of another sect has approached the Order ... has saluted with joined palms, he should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, so and so, formerly a member of another sect, desire ordination in this dhamma and discipline. Therefore do I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for probation for four months.'² And a second time he should ask. And a third time he should ask. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, so and so, formerly a member of another sect, desires ordination in this dhamma and discipline. He asks the Order for probation for four months. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may grant probation to so and so, formerly a member of another sect, for four months. This is the motion.

138.4 "Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, so and so, formerly a member of another sect, desires ordination in this dhamma and discipline. He asks the Order for probation for four months. The Order is granting probation for four months to so and so, formerly a member of another sect. If the granting of probation for four months to so and so, formerly a member of another sect, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Probation for four months is granted by the Order to so and so, formerly a member of another sect. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.'

n 1.70
138.5
4.87 "Monks, a former member of another sect becomes one who succeeds thus, one who fails thus. And how, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails? Herein, monks, a former member of another sect enters a village at too early a time,¹ he returns too late in the day.² Thus, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails. And again, monks, a former member of another sect comes to be one whose resort³ (for alms) is among prostitutes,⁴ or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among widows,⁵ or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among grown girls,⁶ or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among eunuchs, or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among nuns.⁷ Thus, too, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails.

¹ Same method used at Kd1.54.3 for letting novices go forth. ² Quoted at DN-a ii.362.

“And again, monks, a former member of another sect in regard to those various things which have to be done by his fellows in the Brahma-faring, comes to be not dexterous therein, not vigorous, not possessed of consideration for those kinds of things,⁸ not able to act himself, not able to direct (others). Thus too, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails. And again, monks, a

¹ Vin-a 991 says that he enters a village when he ought to be doing services for the monks. ² Vin-a 991 says that he comes back when the monks are meditating or having the exposition and interrogation, and does not do what is due to a preceptor or teacher. ³ gocara, animals' feeding ground, pasture, then applied to places where monks accept alms-food. ⁴ vesiyā, also meaning a low-class woman. Vin-a 991 calls them women who fall easily into transgression on account of their beauty. On vesiyagocara see also Vb-a 339, AN-a iii.278 The gocaras are referred to below, BD 4.417. Also at AN iii.128, where it is said that if a monk goes to them he is thought of as a depraved monk and is mistrusted even if he is kuppadhamma (variant reading akuppa-), bound for the immovable (see GS iii.98, n. 1). At Vb 246 (quoted Vism 17) a sixth gocara is added: liquor-shop, and the six are called agocara. These are referred to at Dh-p-a iii.275. ⁵ Vin-a 990, Vb-a 339 define widows as women whose husbands are dead or absent. ⁶ thullakumāriyo. Cf. below, BD 4.198. Vin-a 991 says these are girls who have attained their youth or who are past it; Vb-a 339, AN-a iii.278 say that they are mahallika, i.e. grown-up girls, Vb-a adding that they are “not placed”, i.e. unmarried (cf. same expression in regard to kulamāriyo at AN-a iv.12). See Ja iv.219 where thullakumārika does not mean “coarse” but “grown-up”, of full age, vayappatta; unmarried is implied by the context. On kumāribhūtā as maiden, unmarried girl, see BD 3, Introduction, p. xlix. ⁷ Not necessarily visiting the nuns' quarters, for see story of Udāyin asking Uppalavaṇṇā for one of her robes when she visited the monks' dwelling-place, Vin 3.208. ⁸ Same expression occurs at Vin 4.211.

4.88 former member of another sect comes to be one who is not of keen desire¹ as to the recitation, as to the interrogation, as to the higher morality, the higher thought, the higher wisdom. Thus too, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails.

1:38:7 “And again, monks, a former member of another sect becomes angry, displeased, dissatisfied if dispraise is being spoken of the teacher, the views, the approval, the persuasion, the creed² of that fold of a sect from which he has come over; he becomes pleased, elated, satisfied if dispraise is being spoken of the awakened one or of dhamma or of the Order; or else he becomes pleased, elated, satisfied if praise is being spoken of the teacher, the views, the approval, the persuasion, the creed of that fold of a sect from which he has come over; he becomes angry, displeased, dissatisfied if praise is being spoken of the awakened one or of dhamma or of the Order. This, monks, is the knitting together³ in regard to what may be the failure⁴ of a former member of another sect. It is thus, monks, that a former member of another sect becomes one who fails. Therefore, monks, if there come a former member of another sect who has failed, he should not be ordained.

1:8-10 “And how, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who succeeds? Herein, monks, a former member of another sect does not enter a village at too early a time, he does not return too late in the day. Thus, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who succeeds. And again, monks ... (point by point the contrary of Kd 1.38.5, Kd 1.38.6, Kd 1.38.7) ... This, monks, is the knitting together in regard to what may be the success of a former member of another sect. It is thus, monks, that a former member of another sect becomes one who succeeds. Therefore, monks, if there come a former member of another sect who has succeeded, he may be ordained.

1 tibbacchanda; cf. DN iii.252, DN iii.283 for seven other matters for which a monk should have tibbacchanda. 2 ādāya, here used as a noun. 3 saṅghātanikaṁ, the unifying. The word also occurs at MN i.322, AN iii.10 in the simile of the house with the peaked roof. There is no justification for the “decisive moment” of Vinaya Texts i.190. The sentence comes as a conclusion to the ways, already mentioned, in which failure (and below, success) may be manifested. 4 anārādhaniyasmim.

“If, monks, a former member of another sect comes naked, a robe belonging to a preceptor¹ should be looked about for. If he comes without the hair of his head cut off, the Order should be asked for permission for shaving it close.² Monks, if those come who are fire-worshipping matted hair ascetics they may be ordained, probation should not be given to these. What is the reason for this? These, monks, affirm deeds, they affirm what ought to be done.³ If, monks, there come a former member of another sect who is a Sakyan by birth, he may be ordained, probation should not be given to him. I, monks, will give this special privilege to (my) relations.”

The Talk on Former Members of Another Sect

The Seventh Portion for Repeating

THE STORY OF FIVE DISEASES

Now at that time five diseases were prevalent among the people of Magadha: leprosy, boils, eczema, consumption, epilepsy.⁴ People, afflicted with the five diseases, having approached Jivaka Komārabhacca,⁵ spoke thus: “It were good, teacher, if you would attend us.”⁶

“But I, masters, am very busy, there is much to be done, and King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha is to be looked after by me, also the women’s quarters and the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head. I am not able to attend you.”

“All this property shall become yours, teacher, and we will be your slaves.⁷ It were good, teacher, if you would attend us.”

¹ upajjhāyamūlaka cīvara. According to Vin-a 994, having made a preceptor his master, issara, he has some claim on him as to bowl and robes. At Vin 3.204, there is the expression mūlacīvara. See Kd 1.26.1 where if one who shares a cell has no robe his preceptor should try to get one for him. ² bhaṇḍukamma. Cf. below, end of Kd 1.48.2. ³ kammavādino kiriyavādino. Cf. DN i.53, DN i.115, AN i.62, Vin 1.233, Vin 3.2. See also A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol.4, No.2, p.119ff. ⁴ As at Kd 1.76.1 below. Cf. Vin 4.8 (BD 2.180, where see n. 4 for further references). Mentioned also with many other diseases, at AN v.110. ⁵ See Kd 8.1. ⁶ tikicchati, to treat medically, to cure. ⁷ Cf. Vin 1.274.

1.39.2 “But I, masters, am very busy ... I am not able to attend you.”

0.4.90 Then it occurred to these people: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are of pleasant character, of pleasant conduct; having eaten good meals, they lie down, on beds sheltered from the wind. Suppose we were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans? In that case monks would look after us and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca would attend us.” Then these people, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks let them go forth, they ordained them. These monks looked after them and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca attended them.

1.39.3 Now at that time monks, looking after many ill monks, lived intent on asking, intent on hinting, saying: “Give food for the sick, give food for those who look after the sick, give medicines for the sick.”¹ And Jīvaka Komārabhacca, attending many ill monks, omitted some of his duties towards the king.

1.39.4 A certain man, afflicted with the five diseases, having approached Jīvaka Komārabhacca, spoke thus: “It were good, teacher, if you would attend me.”

“But I, master, am very busy ... I am not able to attend you.”

“All this property shall be yours, teacher, and I will be your slave. It were good, teacher, if you would attend me.”

1.39.5 “But I, master, am very busy ... I am not able to attend you.”

Then it occurred to that man: “Now these recluses, sons of the Sakyans are of pleasant character ... Suppose I were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans? In that case monks would look after me and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca would attend me; and when I am well I will leave the Order.”

Then that man, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. These monks let him go forth, they ordained him. These monks looked after him and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca attended him. When he was well he left the Order. Jīvaka Komārabhacca saw that man who had left the Order; seeing him, he spoke n.1.73 ¹ Three of the benefits that Visākhā was allowed to confer on the Order.

thus to that man: “Had not you, master, gone forth among the monks?”

“Yes, teacher.”

“Then why have you, master, acted in this way?” Then this man told this matter to Jīvaka Komārabhacca.

Jīvaka Komārabhacca looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these honoured sirs let one afflicted with the five diseases go forth?” Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “It were well, Lord, if the masters did not let one afflicted with (any one of)¹ the five diseases go forth.”

The Lord then gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with talk on dhamma. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one afflicted with (any one of) the five diseases should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ON KING’S SERVICE

Now at that time there came to be a disturbance on the borderlands of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded the generals, the chief ministers, saying: “Go, good sirs, search² the borderlands.”

“Very well, sire,” the generals, the chief ministers answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent.

Then it occurred to (some) very distinguished warriors: “Because we delight in battle,¹ we do evil and we engender much demerit. Now by what means could we refrain from evil and do what is good?" Then it occurred to these warriors: "These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are dhamma-farers, even-farers, Brahma-farers, they are truth-speakers, of moral habit, of good character.² Now, if we were to go forth among these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, thus might we refrain from evil and do what is good." Then these warriors, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks let them go forth, they ordained them.

¹ Taken separately at Vin-a 995f. in relation to going forth. ² Vin-a 996 says that thieves were giving trouble, but because Bimbisāra was a stream-winner he did not command: “Strike them, kill them.”

The generals, the chief ministers, asked those in the King's service³: "How is it, good sirs, that the warriors, so and so and so and so, are not to be seen?"

"Sirs,⁴ the warriors, so and so and so and so, have gone forth among the monks." The generals, the chief ministers ... spread it about, saying: "How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, let one who is in the king's service go forth?" The generals, the chief ministers told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha asked the chief ministers of justice:

"Good sirs, what does he who lets one go forth who is in a king's service engender⁵ (for himself)?"

"Sire, a preceptor's head should be cut off, the tongue should be torn from the announcer of a proclamation,⁶ half the ribs of a (member of a) group should be broken."

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the Lord: "There are, Lord, kings who are of no faith, not believing; these might harm monks even for a trifling matter. It were well, Lord, if the masters did not let one in a king's service go forth." Then the Lord gladdened ...

¹ Cf. Vin 4.104. ² Cf. BD 1.70, BD 1.125, BD 1.200, BD 1.223. ³ rājabhaṭṭa. ⁴ sāmi, lords, masters. ⁵ pasavati, same word as used above in "engender much demerit".

⁶ anussāvaka. Vin-a 996 takes this as ācariya, teacher, which would be more in line with "preceptor" and "group", both of which might let a person go forth. The announcer of a proclamation had not, as such, this power.

delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one in a king’s service should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

THE STORY OF A THIEF GARLANDED WITH FINGERS

Now at that time a thief (wearing) a garland of fingers¹ came to have gone forth among the monks. People, having seen (him), were perturbed, then alarmed, then they ran away, then they went by a different route, then they turned in another direction, then they closed the door.² People ... spread it about, saying: “How can the recluses, sons of the Sakyans let a thief wearing an emblem³ go forth?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. The Lord addressed the monks saying:

“Monks, a thief who wears an emblem should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one) go forth, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

THE STORY OF A THIEF BROKEN OUT OF JAIL

Now at that time it was decreed by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “There is nothing to do against those who go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans. Well preached is dhamma, let them fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.”¹ Now at that time a certain man, having committed a theft, was imprisoned in a jail; he, having broken out of jail, having run away, went forth among the monks.

People having seen (him) spoke thus: “This is the very² thief who has broken out of jail. Come along, let us bring him (back).³” Some spoke thus: “Do not, masters, speak thus, for it is decreed by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: ‘There is nothing to do against those ... utter end of ill.’” People ... spread it about, saying:

“These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are safe and secure⁴; there is nothing to do against them. But how can they let a thief go forth who has broken out of jail?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a thief who has broken out of jail should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF AN THIEF WITH A “WANTED” NOTICE

1.43.1 Now at that time a certain man, having committed a theft, having run away, went forth among the monks. And in the royal palace, this was written:¹ “Wherever he may be seen, there he should be killed.” People, having seen (him), spoke thus: “This is the very thief who was written about. Come along, let us kill him.” Some spoke thus: “Do not, masters, speak thus ... utter end of ill.” People ... spread it about, saying:

“These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are safe and secure; there is nothing to do against them. But how can they let a thief go forth who has been written about?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a thief who has been written about should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF A SCOURGED MAN

Now at that time a certain man who had been scourged as punishment² came to have gone forth among the monks. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, let ¹ aṅgulimāla. Not the well-known bandit-thief of this name (as Vinaya Texts 1.196 and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names take it), for in the absence of nāma or ti no proper name is denoted. The robber who came to be called Aṅgulimāla has verses ascribed to him at Thag 866–891. At Thag 869–870 he is shown as asking the Lord for the going forth, the Lord as saying, “Come, monk”, and this at constituting his monk-status, bhikkhubhāva. His story, and the verses are also given at MN 86. It is difficult to reconcile the above Vinaya ruling with the story of Aṅgulimāla’s going forth, for the Lord recognised his unusual potentialities, hardly to be expected in the common run of thieves. ² Cf. Vin 3.144 (BD 1.246). ³ dhajabaddha. ¹ Cf. Vin 4.226 (BD 3.182–183) where similar words are attributed to King Pasenadi. ² ayaṃ so, emphatic. ³ nema, as in Kd 1.46.1, Kd 1.47.1. ⁴ abhayūvarā. This is the word which gives the title to this portion for “repeating”. ¹ (This footnote proved troublesome to typeset due to its length, so it has been moved to an appendix with other long notes on page 2984.) ² kasāhata katadaṇḍakamma.

one who has been scourged as punishment go forth?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who has been scourged as punishment should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF A BRANDED MAN

Now at that time a certain man who had been branded as punishment¹ ... (as in Kd 1.44.1 to the end).

THE STORY OF A DEBTOR

Now at that time a certain man, a debtor, having run away, came to have gone forth among the monks. The creditors, having seen (him), spoke thus: “This is our very debtor. Come along, let us bring him (back).²” Some spoke thus: “Do not, masters, speak thus, for it is decreed by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “There is nothing to do against those who go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans. Well preached is dhamma, let them fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” People ... spread it about, saying:

“These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are safe and secure; there is nothing to do against them. But how can they let a debtor go forth?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a debtor should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF A SLAVE

Now at that time a certain slave, having run away, came to have gone forth among the monks. The mistresses,³ having seen (him), spoke ¹ lakkhaṇāhata katadaṇḍakamma. ² nema, as in Kd 1.42.2, Kd 1.47.1. ³ ayyikā. At Vin 1.371, the variant reading sāmikā is given. A small piece of evidence that women ruled the household, rather than their husbands.

thus: “This is our very slave. Come along, let us bring him (back).¹”
... (as in BD 1.46) ...

“Monks, a slave should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF A BALD-HEADED METAL-SMITH

Now at that time a certain bald-headed metal-smith,² having quarrelled with his parents, having gone to a monastery, went forth among the monks. Then the parents of that bald-headed metal-smith, searching for that bald-headed metal-smith, having gone to the monastery, asked the monks, saying: “Honoured sirs, have you seen a youth like that?” The monks, not knowing (him), merely said: “We do not know (him)”; not seeing (him), merely said: “We do not see (him).”

Then the parents of that bald-headed metal-smith, searching for that bald-headed metal-smith, having seen him gone forth among the monks ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are shameless, of bad conduct, liars; knowing, they merely say, ‘We do not know’; seeing, they merely say, ‘We do not see’ and this youth is gone forth among the monks.” Monks heard the parents of this bald-headed metal-smith who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to ask the Order for permission for shaving (the hair of the head) close.³”

¹ nema, as in Kd 1.42.2 and Kd 1.46.1. ² kammārabhaṇḍu. Highly esteemed by king and people, Ja iii.281. No distinction was apparently made between workers in gold, silver and other metals, but Vin-a 1002 says he was a goldsmith's son. The exact point of his being a smith is obscure. ³ bhaṇḍukamma, cf. above Kd 1.38.11. Vin-a 1003 says that if there is a newly shaven one (navamuṇḍa) or one leaving the Order or if there is anyone among the Jains and so on whose hair is two finger-breadths long or less, there is no need to cut his hair, therefore such a one can be allowed to go forthwithout asking for the close shaving. But whoever has hair more than two finger-breadths long, even if it be only a top-knot, may only be allowed to go forth when the close shaving has been asked for.

THE STORY OF THE BOY UPĀLI

^{1.49.1} Now at that time in Rājagaha a group of seventeen boys were friends¹; of these the youth Upāli was the chief. Then it occurred to Upāli's parents: "By what means could Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want?" Then it occurred to Upāli's parents: "If Upāli should learn writing, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want." Then it occurred to Upāli's parents: "But if Upāli ^{4.97}learns writing his fingers will become painful. If Upāli were to learn calculation, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want."

^{1.49.2} Then it occurred to Upāli's parents: "But if Upāli learns calculation, his breast will become painful. If Upāli were to learn money-changing, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want." Then it occurred to Upāli's parents: "But if Upāli learns money-changing his eyes will become painful. Now there are these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, pleasant in habit, pleasant in conduct; having eaten good meals, they lie down on beds sheltered from the wind. Now if Upāli were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want."

^{1.49.3} The boy Upāli heard this conversation of his parents. Then the boy Upāli approached those boys; having approached, he spoke thus to these boys: "Come, masters, we will go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans."

"If you, master, will go forth, we likewise will also go forth." Then these boys, having (each) approached his parents, spoke thus:

^{n1:78} "Consent that I may go forth from home into homelessness." Then the parents of those boys consented, thinking: "All these boys want the same thing, they are bent on what is good." These, having approached monks, asked for the going forth. These monks let them go forth, they ordained them.

^{1.49.4} Getting up in the night towards dawn, these cried out: "Give conje, give rice, give solid food."

¹ As at Vin 4.128ff. (BD 3.10ff.).

The monks spoke thus: “Wait, your reverences, until it turns light. Should there be conje you shall drink it; should there be rice you shall partake of it; should there be solid food you shall eat it. But should there not be conje or rice or solid food, then, having walked for alms, you shall eat.”

But these monks, being spoken to thus by the monks, cried out just the same: “Give conje, give rice, give solid food,” and they soiled and wetted the bedding.

Then the Lord, getting up in the night towards dawn, hearing this noise of boys, addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Why ever, Ānanda, is there this noise of boys?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true as is said, monks, that monks knowingly ordain an individual¹ who is under twenty years of age?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men knowingly ordain an individual who is under twenty years of age?”

Monks, an individual under twenty years of age is not able² to endure cold, heat, hunger, thirst, the sting of gadflies or mosquitoes, wind and sun, creeping things, abusive, hurtful language; he is not the kind (of person) who endures bodily feelings which, arising, are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly. But, monks, an individual of twenty years of age is able to endure cold, heat ... miserable, deadly. Monks, this is not for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing the number of those who are pleased.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, an individual who is under twenty years of age should not knowingly be ordained. Whoever should (so) ordain should be dealt with according to the rule.”³

¹ On the monkish intention of puggala, see BD 3.xxiiiff. ² As at Vin 4.130, Bu-Pc 65 (BD 3.12). ³ Bu-Pc 65.

THE STORY OF MALARIA

150.1 Now at that time a certain family came to pass away as a result of malaria.¹ (Only) the father and little son belonging to it survived.² These, having gone forth among the monks, walked even for alms-food together. Then that boy, when almsfood was given to his father, having run up to him, spoke thus: “Give to me too, father, give to me too, father.” People ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are not chaste. This boy was born of a nun.” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a boy of less than fifteen years of age should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”³

151.1 Now at that time the family, faithful, believing, who supported the venerable Ānanda, passed away as a result of malaria, but two boys survived. These, having seen monks, ran up to them according to their former allowable custom, (but) the monks sent them away. These cried on being sent away by the monks. Then it occurred to the venerable Ānanda: “It is laid down by the Lord that a boy of less than fifteen years of age should not be allowed to go forth, and these boys are less than fifteen years of age. Now by what means might these boys not be lost?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ ahivātakaroga, should be “snake-wind-disease”. Word occurs at Ja ii.79, Ja iv.200. See note at Jataka Cambridge translation, ii.55. Cf. Mahāvastu i.253, a disease called adhivāsa (produced by non-human agency) which is said to attack a whole district.

² sesā honti “came to remain”. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1003 explains the means by which a person may escape from the disease—by making a hole in the wall or roof and running away. This is also mentioned at Ja ii.79, Ja iv.200. See note at Jātaka translation, ii.55. The rogāmādigato, the reading which Vinaya Texts i.204, n. 1 ascribes to the Commentary, should be tirogāmādigato, reached a distant village (where he is free, muccati, of the disease). ³ Five years, therefore, were to elapse before the upasampadā ordination was allowed (see Bu-Pc 65 and below, Kd 1.75.1). (Note by Sujato: This last reference is, apparently by mistake, left blank in the text. I have supplied the probable referent.) This intervening period is referred to at Ja i.106: ku-laputto ... pabbajitvā upasampadāya pañcavassiko hutvā, a boy of good family, having gone forth, being five years off ordination ...

“But, Ānanda, are these boys able to scare¹ crows?”

“They are able (to do so), Lord.” Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to let a youth of less than fifteen years of age and who is a scarer of crows² go forth.”

THE STORY OF KAṆḌAKA

Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, had two novices, Kaṇḍaka³ and Mahaka.⁴ These committed sodomy with one another. Monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these novices indulge in a bad habit such as this?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, two novices should not attend one (monk). Whoever should make two novices attend⁵ to him, there is an offence of ¹ uṭṭepetum, meaning “to make fly up” or “to catch in snares”. See Pali-English Dictionary Vin-a 1003 is not helpful. ² kākuṭṭepaka. The word should probably read uḍḍepaka. Vin-a 1003 explains as “having taken a clod of earth in his left hand, he is able, sitting down and having made the crows fly up (kāke uḍḍāpetvā), to eat a meal put down in front of (him)”. This shows a certain amount of physical strength and endurance, not to be found in an infant. In a country where crows are as persistent as they are in India, it must have been useful to have had boys who could scare them away. Nevertheless this allowance forms a most singular exception to the general rule forbidding the going forth of a youth under fifteen years of age. ³ Also below, BD 4.107, where it was probably this Kaṇḍaka who was expelled. There is also a Kaṇḍaka, a novice, at Vin 4.138, but he was expelled for holding a wrong view, and is therefore perhaps not the same as Upananda’s novice. ⁴ Heard of nowhere but here, I think. ⁵ upaṭṭhāpeti. Cf. above, Kd 1.36.2. This word can also mean to look after, to cause to attend, e.g. one who is ill or another monk, whether a senior or a junior. See Vinaya Texts i.49, n. 5; also Bu-Pc 70 where the same word is used in connection with the expelled Kaṇḍaka, and is there defined by the Old Commentary, in terms of giving material help and comfort. It does not mean “to ordain” as at Vinaya Texts i.205 and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, article on Karitaka. Below, Kd 1.55.1, the ruling is amended.

wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF WHEN IT WAS CROWDED

153.1 Now at that time¹ the Lord spent the rains just there, in Rājagaha, the cold weather there, the hot weather there. People ... spread it about, saying: “The district is crowded up, confused with recluses, sons of the Sakyans; because of them the district is not to be seen.” Monks, heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord.

153.2 Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Go, Ānanda, and taking a key, announce to the monks in every cell: “Your reverences, the Lord wishes to set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri. Whatever venerable one needs (to do so), let him come.”

153.3 “Yes, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered the Lord in assent, taking the key, announced to the monks in every cell: “Your reverences, the Lord wishes to set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri. Whatever venerable one needs (to do so), let him come.”

4.101 Monks spoke thus: “Reverend Ānanda, it is laid down by the Lord (that one is) to live ten years in dependence, and when one is of ten years’ standing (he is) to give guidance.² If we go there then guidance must be chosen³ (there), but the stop (there) may be short; then we must come back again and guidance must be chosen again. If our teachers and preceptors are going, we too will go; but if our teachers and preceptors are not going, then we will not go. Reverend Ānanda, we shall (otherwise) look feather-brained.”⁴

¹ Cf. Kd 1.53.1 with Bi-Pc 40, where a similar description of Rājagaha is given when it was crowded out by nuns. ² See Kd 1.32.1 above. ³ nissayo ca gahetabbo bhavissati. Cf. upajjhāyo gahetabbo at Kd 1.25.7 and ācariyo gahetabbo at Kd 1.32.2: “thus should a preceptor ... a teacher be chosen.” The reference in the above passage would appear to be back to this kind of choosing: choosing a preceptor or teacher, or both, to give guidance. If a pupil or preceptor leave one another then nissaya (guidance) is broken. ⁴ lahucittakatā no paññāyissati, a feather-brained (light minded) state will be apparent in us.

Then the Lord set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri with an Order of monks numbering less than a group.¹

ON RELEASE FROM DEPENDENCE

Then the Lord, having stayed in Dakkhiṇāgiri for as long as he found suiting, came back again to Rājagaha. Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “How is it, Ānanda, that the Truthfinder set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri with an Order of monks numbering less than a group?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, an experienced competent monk to live five years in dependence (but) an inexperienced one all his life.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he should not live independently² (of a preceptor or teacher): if he is not possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is not possessed of these five qualities he should not live independently. Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he is possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may live independently.³

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not live independently: if he comes to be of no faith ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... Monks, he should not live independently. Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he comes to have faith ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... Monks, ... he may live independently.

“... five further qualities he should not live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he comes to have fallen away from moral habit

¹ ogaṇena bhikkhusaṅghena. Vin-a 1003 explains ogaṇena as parihīnagaṇena, lacking a group, and as appamattaka bhikkhusaṅgha, only a small Order of monks. Usually a “group” consisted of from two to four monks or nuns, but above, Kd 1.31.2, a group of ten monks is referred to. ² anissitena, in independence, without a teacher to give guidance. ³ Cf. below, Kd 1.73.1–1.73.4 where other cases are given where a monk may live independently, anissita.

... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he does not come to have fallen away ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... he may live independently.

“... five further qualities he should not live independently: if he does not know what is an offence ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he knows what is an offence ... (=Kd 1.36.15) ... he may live independently.

“... five further qualities he should not live independently: if he does not know what is an offence ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years' standing ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he knows what is an offence ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of five years' standing or of more than five years' standing ...

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of six qualities he should not live independently: if he is not possessed of an adept's body of moral habit ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years' standing. Monks, if a monk is not possessed of these six qualities he should not live independently. Monks, if a monk is possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if he is possessed of an adept's body of moral habit ... (=Kd 1.37.2) ... if he is of five years' standing or more than five years' standing ...

“... six further qualities he should not live independently: if he comes to have no faith ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years' standing ... possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if he comes to have faith ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of five years' standing or more than five years' standing ...

“... six further qualities he should not live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he comes to have fallen away from moral habit ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years' standing ... possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he does not come to have fallen away ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of five years' standing or more than five years' standing.

“... six further qualities he should not live independently: if he does not know what is an offence ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years' standing ... possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if he knows what is an offence ... (=Kd 1.36.3) ... if he is of five years' standing or more than five years' standing. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these six qualities he may live independently."

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Safe and Secure.

Vin 1.8

THE STORY OF RĀHULA

Then the Lord, having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Kapilavatthu. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Kapilavatthu.¹ The Lord stayed there among the Sakyans in Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery.² Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of Suddhodana the Sakyan; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat. Then the lady, Rāhula's mother, spoke thus to the boy Rāhula: "This, Rāhula, is your father, go and ask him for your inheritance."

Kd 1.54

Then the boy Rāhula approached the Lord; having approached, he stood in front of the Lord and said: "Pleasant is your shadow, recluse." Then the Lord, rising up from his seat, departed. Then the boy Rāhula, following close behind the Lord, said: "Give me my inheritance, recluse, give me my inheritance, recluse." Then the Lord addressed the venerable Sāriputta, saying: "Well then, do you, Sāriputta, let the boy Rāhula go forth."³

"How do I, Lord, let the boy Rāhula go forth?"

Kd 1.54

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "I allow, monks, the going forth for novices by the three goings for refuge. And thus, monks, should you let one go forth: first, having made him have his hair and beard cut off, having got (someone) to present him with yellow robes, having made him arrange his upper robe over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks' feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be told: 'Speak thus: "I go to the awakened one for refuge I go to dhamma for refuge, I go to the Order for refuge. And a second time I go ... And a third time I go ... to the Order for refuge".'¹ I allow, monks, the going forth for novices by these three goings for refuge."

¹ Vin-a 1005 says it was a distance of sixty yojanas from Rājagaha; and going a yojana a day, the Lord's journey took two months. ² See BD 2.94, n. 1. ³ Story of "Rāhula's conversion" also given at Dhp-a i.116f.

4.104

1.54.4
Then the venerable Sāriputta let the boy Rāhula go forth. Then Suddhodana the Sakyan approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance Suddhodana the Sakyan spoke thus to the Lord:

"I, Lord, ask the Lord for one boon."

"But, Gotama,² Truth-finders are beyond (granting) boons."³

"Lord, it is what is allowable, it is what is blameless."

"Speak on, Gotama."

1.54.5
"Lord, when the Lord went forth there came to be not a little sorrow, likewise when Nanda⁴ did; it was extreme when Rāhula did."⁵ Affection for a son, Lord, cuts into the skin, having cut into the skin it cuts into the hide, having cut into the hide it cuts into the flesh ... the ligaments ... the bones, having cut into the bones and reaching the marrow, it abides. It were well, Lord, if the masters did not let a child to go forth without the parents' consent."

1.54.6
Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Suddhodana the Sakyan with talk on dhamma. Then Suddhodana the Sakyan gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ Same method employed at Kd 1.38.2 for granting probation to former members of other sects. ² Gotama was the clan or family name. ³ atikkaniavarā. Vinaya Texts, in translating above and parallel passages at Vin 1.280, Vin 1.292, adds "before they know what they are". ROUSE, Jātaka translation, iv.198 (=Ja iv.315, quoting Vin 1.292) has "the Tathāgatas have boons beyond measure"; Critical Pali Dictionary "above (granting) boons". ⁴ The Lord's half-brother, son of Mahāpajāpati. On Nanda's going forth see Vin-a 1008f., Dhp-a i.116. Verses at Thag 157. See Ud 21ff. ⁵ Vin-a 1010 says that Suddhodana thinking the family line broken because these three went forth, asked where a king could come from.

“Monks, a child who has not his parents’ consent should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Then the Lord, having stayed in Kapilavatthu for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there in Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time the family who supported the venerable Sāriputta sent a youth to the venerable Sāriputta, saying: “May the elder let this youth go forth.” Then it occurred to the venerable Sāriputta: “A rule of training laid down by the Lord says that two novices should not attend one (monk),¹ and this Rāhula is my novice. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” He told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow, monks, two novices to attend one experienced, competent monk, or else as many to attend (him) as he is able to exhort, to instruct.”

ON TRAINING RULES

Then it occurred to the novices: “Now, how many rules for training are there for us and in which we are to train?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, I allow ten rules for training for novices² and novices to train in these:

1. Restraint from onslaught on creatures;³
2. Restraint from taking what is not given;⁴
3. Restraint from unchastity;⁵

¹ Above, Kd 1.52.1. ² Novice is defined at Vin 4.122 (BD 2.412) as one conforming to ten rules for training; also female novice is so defined at Vin 4.343 (BD 3.411).

³ Bu-Pj 3, Bu-Pc 61. These restraints or abstinences occur at e.g. DN i.4ff., AN i.211, AN ii.209, AN iv.247ff., SN v.469, Pp 58. Cf. DN-a 69ff. ⁴ Bu-Pj 2. ⁵ Bu-Pj 1.

4. Restraint from lying;¹
5. Restraint from the occasion of sloth (induced by) fermented liquor, spirits and strong drink;²
6. Restraint from eating at the wrong time;³
7. Restraint from seeing shows⁴ of dancing, singing and music;⁵
8. Restraint from the occasion of using garlands, scents, unguents and wearing finery;
9. Restraint from using high beds, large beds;⁶
10. Restraint from accepting gold and silver.⁷

“I allow monks, these ten rules for training for novices and novices to train in these.”

THE STORY OF AN ACT OF PUNISHMENT

Now at that time novices were not respectful, not deferential not courteous towards the monks. Monks ... spread it about saying: “How can these novices not be respectful ... towards the monks?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, I allow you to impose a punishment⁸ on a novice who is possessed of five qualities:

1. “If he tries for non-receiving (of gains)⁹ by monks.
2. “If he tries for non-profiting by monks.
3. “If he tries for non-residence for monks.
4. “If he reviles and abuses¹⁰ monks.

¹ Bu-Pj 4. ² Cf. Bu-Pc 61. ³ Bu-Pc 37. ⁴ visūka appears to mean twisting, wriggling, restless motion. On the miming nature of singing, dancing and music see BD 3.xl, note and BD 4.298, n. 2. These shows where movement was a feature were of quite a different character from shows of inanimate objects. Nuns were forbidden to visit these latter by their Bu-Pc 41. ⁵ A dukkāṭa for monks to see these, Vin 2.108; a Pācittiya for nuns to see them, Bi-Pc 10. ⁶ Cf. Bu-Pc 87. ⁷ Bu-NP 18. ⁸ daṇḍakamma; cf. above Kd 1.44.1, Kd 1.45.1, and Vin 2.262f. ⁹ So Vin-a 1013; “of requisites,” AN-a iv.160. Cf these with five qualities” at Vin 2.18, “eight qualities” at AN iv.345, Vin 2.125. ¹⁰ Cf. Vin 4.52, Vin 4.309 where nuns may not revile or abuse a monk.

5. “If he causes monk to break with monk.

“I allow you, monks, to impose a punishment on a novice who is possessed of these five qualities.”

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, how should the punishment be imposed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition.”¹ Now at that time monks made a prohibition for novices in respect of an Order’s entire monastery. The novices, on being unable to enter the monastery, went away, and left the Order, and went over to (other) sects. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, an Order’s entire monastery should not be made (the subject of) a prohibition. Whoever should make (it such), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition in respect of wherever he is staying or wherever he is entering.”²

Now at that time monks made a prohibition for novices in respect of nutriment taken by the mouth. People, making a drink of conje and also rice for an Order, spoke thus to the novices: “Come, honoured sirs, drink the conje, come, honoured sirs, partake of the rice.” The novices spoke thus: “It is not possible, sirs, the monks have made (this the subject of) a prohibition.” The people ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs make a prohibition for novices in respect of nutriment taken by the mouth?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nutriment taken by the mouth is not to be made (the subject of) a prohibition. Whoever should make (it such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Told is the Item on Punishment

¹ āvāraṇa, an obstacle, hindrance, barring off. Cf. Vin 2.262f. ² paṭikkamati, to return, Vin-a 1013 explains by pavisati, to enter. The meaning is entering a monastery in the sense of returning to it.

THE STORY OF MAKING A PROHIBITION WITHOUT ASKING

^{1.58.1}
^{n 1.85} Now at that time the group of six monks, without having asked preceptors (for permission), made a prohibition for novices. Preceptors hunted about, saying: “Now, where are our novices? They are not to be seen.” Monks spoke thus: “A prohibition was made, your reverences, by the group of six monks.” The preceptors ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, without asking us (for permission), make a prohibition for our novices?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a prohibition is not to be made without asking preceptors (for permission). Whoever should make one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF LURING AWAY

^{1.59.1} Now at that time the group of six monks lured away¹ the novices of monks who were elders. The elders, getting their own tooth-wood and water for rinsing the mouth, were incommoded.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, another’s assembly should not be lured away. Whoever should lure it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF KAṆḌAKA THE NOVICE

^{1.60.1}
^{4.108} Now at that time Kaṇḍaka,³ a novice of the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, seduced the nun Kaṇḍakā. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this novice indulge in a bad habit like this?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ apalāṅenti, to draw over (to themselves). Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1014 hints at bribery, the group of six saying they would give bowls and robes to the novices.

² kilamati, more usually to go short of; to be tired, fatigued. Those who shared cells and pupils should get tooth-wood and water for rinsing the mouth for their preceptors and teachers respectively, Kd 1.25.8, Kd 1.32.3. ³ See above, Kd 1.52.1 and BD 3.31.

“I allow you, monks, to expel a novice who is possessed of ten qualities:

1. “If he is one who makes onslaught on creatures.
2. “If he is one who takes what is not given.
3. “If he is one who is unchaste.
4. “If he is a liar.
5. “If he is a drinker of strong drink.
6. “If he speaks dispraise of the awakened one.
7. “If he speaks dispraise of Dhamma.
8. “If he speaks dispraise of the Order.
9. “If he is a holder of a false view.¹
10. “If he is a seducer of nuns.²

“I allow you, monks, to expel a novice who is possessed of these ten qualities.”

THE STORY OF A EUNUCH

Now at that time a certain eunuch came to have gone forth among the monks. Having approached a number of young monks, he spoke thus: “Come, venerable ones, commit an offence with me.” The monks refused, saying: “Be off³, eunuch, depart⁴, eunuch. What need have you?” Refused by the monks, having approached a number of large, fat⁵ novices, he spoke thus: “Come, your reverences, commit an offence with me.” The novices refused, saying: “Be off, eunuch, depart, eunuch. What need have you?” Refused by the novices, having approached mahouts and grooms⁶, he spoke thus: “Come, sirs, commit an offence with me.” The mahouts and grooms committed an offence with him.

¹ At Vin 4.138 (BD 3.31) a novice, Kaṇḍaka, was expelled on this ground. ² Vin-a 1015 explains that “one who is unchaste” may be ordained if he is willing to restrain himself in the future, but a seducer of nuns cannot even go forth. Cf. Vinaya Texts i.215, n. 1. At AN v.70, AN v.71 among ten specified occasions where the Pātimokkha may be suspended are included the presence of a seducer of nuns, and the presence of a eunuch (see next paragraph below). ³ nassa, disappear. ⁴ vinassa = nassa, Vin-a 871, which adds “go where we do not see you”. For cara pi re vinassa see Vin 4.139. ⁵ Moligalla; variant readings given at Vin 1.372: moḷigalla, mukalla.

These ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are eunuchs, and those of them who are not eunuchs, they too commit offences with eunuchs. Thus they are one and all unchaste.” Monks heard these mahouts and grooms who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if a eunuch is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”¹

THE STORY OF ONE IN COMMUNION BY THEFT

Now at that time a certain descendant of an ancient family which had come down in the world was delicately nurtured. Then it occurred to this descendant of the ancient family which had come down in the world: “Now, I am delicately nurtured, I am not able to acquire wealth not (already) acquired, nor to increase the wealth (already) acquired.² Now by what means could I live at ease and not be in want?” Then it occurred to this descendant ... in the world: “Now these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are of pleasant conduct, of pleasant character; having eaten good meals, they lie down to sleep on beds sheltered from the wind. Suppose that I, having prepared a bowl and robe for myself, having cut off my hair and beard, having clothed myself in yellow robes, having gone to a monastery, should be in communion together with monks?”

⁶ hatthibhaṇḍa assabhaṇḍa. Vin-a 1015 explains bhaṇḍa by gopaka, guardian, watchman. ¹ Vin-a 1016 says he is to be expelled by the expulsion due to characteristic, liṅganāsana. Three kinds of expulsion are given at Vin-a 87of.: (1) expulsion from communion, meaning expulsion for not seeing an offence, not making amends for it, not giving up a false view; (2) expulsion due to characteristic, as an example of which the nun Mettiyā is cited (Vin 3.162-3); (3) expulsion as a punishment, with the words, ‘From today forth, reverend novice, the Lord cannot be referred to as your teacher’ (Vin 4.139 = BD 3.31). ² This inability is at AN i.129 given as a characteristic of a blind person (puggala), while the opposite, ability in this respect, is given as a characteristic of a one-eyed and of a two-eyed person.

Then that descendant ... in the world, having prepared a bowl and robe for himself, having cut off his hair and beard, having clothed himself in yellow robes, having gone to a monastery, greeted the monks. The monks spoke thus: “Of how many years’ standing are you, your reverence?” “What does this mean, your reverences: ‘how many years’ standing’?”

“But who, your reverence, is your preceptor?”

“What does this mean, your reverences: ‘preceptor’?”

The monks spoke thus to the venerable Upāli¹:

“Please, reverend Upāli, examine this one who has gone forth.”

Then as that descendant ... in the world was being examined² by the venerable Upāli, he told him this matter. The venerable Upāli told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if one who is in communion by theft³ is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled. Monks, if one who has gone over to (another) sect⁴ is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF AN ANIMAL

Now at that time a certain serpent was troubled about his birth as a serpent, he was ashamed of it, loathed it⁵. Then it occurred to that serpent: “Now, by what means could I be freed quickly from birth as a serpent and get back¹ human status?” Then it occurred to that serpent: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are dhamma-farers, even-farers, Brahma-farers, they are truth-speakers, they are of moral habit, of good conduct. Now if I were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, so would I be freed quickly from birth as a serpent and could get back human status.”

¹ No doubt the Vinaya expert. ² Vin-a 1016: as he was being asked about cutting off the hair and beard, accepting yellow robes, going for refuge, choosing a preceptor, and about proclamations and guidance. At Vin 3.212 Upāli was asked to examine monks who, having come naked, were taken to be Naked Ascetics. Vin-a 665 gives the nature of these questions (see BD 2.45, n. 6, n. 7). He examines below Kd 1.64.2. ³ theyyasamvāsaka. Word occurs also at Vin 1.307. Samvāsa is being in communion, see definition at end of each Pārājika rule (BD.1). Theyya is “by theft”, here of the signs or marks of a monk. ⁴ titthiyapakkantaka. This word also occurs with theyyasamvāsaka and others at Vin 1.307. All the words tell what monks, disappointed of robe-material, pretend to be. ⁵ Stock, as at AN i.145; MN i.423, MN iii.300.

Then that serpent, in the form of a brahmin youth, having approached the monks, asked for the going forth. The monks let him go forth, they ordained him. Now at that time that serpent, together with a certain monk, was living in a dwelling-place on the boundary.² Then that monk, getting up in the night towards dawn, paced up and down in the open air. Then that serpent, confident that that monk had gone out, fell asleep. The whole dwelling-place was full of the snake, his coils were protruding through the windows.

Then that monk, thinking: “I will enter the dwelling-place,” opening the door,³ saw the whole dwelling-place full of the snake, his coils protruding through the windows. Terrified at seeing this, he uttered a cry of distress. Monks, having run up, spoke thus to that monk: “Why did you, your reverence, utter a cry of distress?”

“Your reverences, this whole dwelling-place is full of a snake, his coils are protruding through the windows.” Then that serpent having awakened because of this noise, sat down on his own seat. Monks spoke thus: “Who are you, friend?”

“I am a serpent, honoured sirs.”

“But why did you, friend, act in this way?” Then that serpent told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord.

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, spoke thus to this serpent: “Indeed, you serpents are not liable to growth in this dhamma and discipline. You, serpent, go away, observe the Observance day precisely¹ on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth day of the half-month. Thus will you be freed quickly from birth as a serpent and get back human status.”

¹ paṭilabhati. He had been unchaste (in a former birth), Vin-a 1022. If paṭilabhati does mean “to get back” here rather than to “acquire”, it indicates a belief in the possibility of losing human status for animal status. ² paccantima. Vinaya Texts i.218 say “(near the boundary wall of the Jetavana)”, and although this may be meant, there is no evidence for it at Vin-a 1022. Paccantima cannot well mean “neighbouring, adjoining” here, for the evidence is that monk and snake shared the same dwelling-place. ³ kavātaṃ paṇāmento. On this phrase see BD 1.199, n. 3.

Then that serpent, thinking: “It is said that I am not liable to growth in this dhamma and discipline,” pained, afflicted, shedding tears, departed having uttered a cry of distress.

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, there are these two cases of manifestation of a serpent’s true nature²: when he indulges in sexual intercourse with a female of his own species, and when he falls asleep in confidence. Monks, these are two cases of manifestation of a serpent’s true nature. Monks, if an animal is not ordained, it should not be ordained; if it is ordained, it should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF A MATRICIDE

Now at that time a certain brahmin youth deprived his mother of life. He was troubled about his evil deed, he was ashamed of it, loathed it.³ Then it occurred to that brahmin youth: “Now, by what means could I get rid of this evil deed?” Then it occurred to this brahmin youth: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are dhamma-farers, even-farers Brahma-farers, they are truth-speakers, of moral habit, of good conduct. Now, if I were to go forth among these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, so would I get rid of this evil deed.”

Then that brahmin youth, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks spoke thus to the venerable Upāli: “Formerly, indeed, reverend Upāli, a serpent in the form of a brahmin youth went forth among the monks. Please, reverend Upāli, examine this brahmin youth.”⁴ Then as that brahmin youth was being examined by the venerable Upāli he told him this matter.

¹ tatth’eva. ² Vin-a 1022 gives five cases: the time of its reinstatement, paṭisandhi, of its sloughing its skin, the two cases mentioned in the text, and the time of its passing away. ³ As at Vin 2.292. ⁴ Cf. above Kd 1.62.2.

The venerable Upāli told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if a matricide is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF A PARRICIDE

^{1.65.1} At that time a certain brahmin youth deprived his father of life. He was troubled about his evil deed ... (=Kd 1.64.1, Kd 1.64.2) ... The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if a parricide is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF A KILLER OF A PERFECTED ONE

^{1.66.1} Now at that time several monks were going along the highroad from Sāketa to Sāvattthī. Thieves, having issued forth on the road, robbed some monks and killed other monks. Those in the royal service, having set out from Sāvattthī, caught some thieves (but) other thieves ran away. Those who ran away went forth among the monks; those who were caught were led off to execution.

^{1.66.2} Those who had gone forth saw those thieves being led off to execution; seeing them, they spoke thus: “It is well that we ran away, for had we been caught then should we have been killed likewise.”

^{4.113}
^{1.89} Monks spoke thus: “But what have you done, your reverences?” Then those who had gone forth told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, those monks were perfected ones. Monks, if a murderer of a perfected one is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF A RAPER OF NUNS

1.67.1

Now at that time several nuns were going along the high-road from Sāketa to Sāvattthī. Thieves, having issued forth on the road, robbed some nuns and seduced other nuns. Those in the royal service, having set out from Sāvattthī ... (=Kd 1.66.1, Kd 1.66.1) ... The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if a seducer of a nun is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”¹

“Monks, if a schismatic is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

“Monks, if a shedder of (a Truth-finder’s²) blood is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”³

THE STORY OF A HERMAPHRODITE

Now at that time a certain hermaphrodite had gone forth among the monks. He acted and also made (another) act. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd 1.68

“Monks, if a hermaphrodite is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF WITHOUT A PRECEPTOR, ETC.

Now at that time monks ordained one who had no preceptor. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd 1.69

“Monks, one with no preceptor should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd 1.69

¹ Cf. above BD 4.108, where a novice who seduces a nun is to be expelled. ² So the Commentary., Vin-a 1024. ³ Other prohibitions in regard to these classes of persons given at Vin 1.136, Vin 1.320.

Now at that time monks ordained one who had an Order as preceptor¹ ... He said:

“Monks, one who has an Order as preceptor should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks ordained one who had a group as preceptor ... He said:

“Monks, one who has a group as preceptor should not be ordained ... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks ordained one who had a eunuch² as preceptor ... one who had one living in communion as it were by theft as preceptor ... one who had one who had gone over to (another) sect as preceptor ... one who had an animal as preceptor ... one who had a matricide as preceptor ... one who had a parricide as preceptor ... one who had a murderer of a perfected one as preceptor ... one who had a seducer of a nun as preceptor ... one who had a schismatic as preceptor ... one who had the shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood as preceptor ... one who had a hermaphrodite as preceptor. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who has a eunuch as preceptor ... one who has a hermaphrodite as preceptor should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF WITHOUT A BOWL, ETC.

1.70.1

Now at that time monks (each) ordained one who had no bowl.¹ They walked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands.² People ... spread it about, saying: “Like followers of (other) sects.”³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who has no bowl should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) ordained one who had no robe. They walked naked for almsfood. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like followers of other sects.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who has no robe should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) ordained one who had no bowl or robe. They walked naked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands ...

“Monks, one who has no bowl or robe should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) ordained by means of lending a bowl.⁴ When they were ordained, they returned (each one) his bowl and walked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands ...

¹ It is to be gathered from Vin-a 1025 that an Order might (inadvertently) contain any of the types of malefactors mentioned above from a matricide down to a hermaphrodite. ² The following classes of persons mentioned also above, BD 4.108ff. ¹ apattaka, see BD 2.123, n. 6. ² hatthesu piṇḍāya caranti. Same expression at Vin 3.245; see BD 2.119, n. 3, n. 4. For same expression in next paragraph, Vin 1.372 gives five variant readings all reading carati. But at Nuns' Bu-Pc 63ff. we get a singular noun followed by a plural verb, as above, with the meaning that each nun ordained a woman, and that then these were considered all together as a plurality: in referring to their actions a plural verb was needed and was used. ³ Cf. Vin 3.245 (BD 2.119). ⁴ yācitakena pattaena, by (using) a bowl that had been asked for, i.e. borrowed by the candidates for ordination.

Kd 1.70

BD 4.1

Kd 1.70

Kd 1.70

“Monks, one should not ordain by lending a bowl. Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

^{1.70.5} Now at that time monks (each) ordained by means of lending a robe. When they were ordained, they returned (each one) his robe and walked naked for almsfood ...

“Monks, one should not ordain by lending a robe. Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

^{1.70.6} Now at that time monks (each) ordained by means of lending a bowl and robe. When they were ordained, they returned the bowl and robe and walked naked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands
^{n.1.91} ...

“Monks, one should not ordain by lending a bowl and robe. Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Told is the Portion on Twenty (Cases) where one should not ordain

THE PORTION ON THIRTY-TWO (CASES) WHERE ONE SHOULD NOT LET GO FORTH

^{1.71.1} Now at that time monks (each) let go forth one who had his hands cut off ... his feet cut off ... his hands and feet cut off ... his ears cut off ... his nose ... his ears and nose ... his fingers ... his nails¹ cut off ...
^{4.116}

¹ alā; see Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.71, 1886, p.105.

who had the tendons (of his feet) cut ... one who had webbed fingers¹ ... a hunchback ... a dwarf ... one who had a goitre ... one who had been branded² ... one who had been scourged³ ... one who had been written about⁴ ... one who had elephantiasis ... one who was badly ill ... one who disgraced an assembly⁵ (by some deformity⁶) ... one who was purblind⁷ ... one with a crooked limb ... one who was lame ... one paralysed down one side ... a cripple ... one weak from old age ... one who was blind⁷ ... one who was dumb⁸ ... one who was deaf⁹ ... one who was blind and dumb ... one who was deaf and dumb ... one who was blind and deaf and dumb. They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “Monks, one who has had his hands cut off should not be let go forth; one who has had his feet cut off ... one who is blind and deaf and dumb should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Told is the Portion on Thirty-two (Cases) where one should not let go forth

Told is the Ninth Portion for Repeating: that on Inheritance

¹ phaṇahatthaka, with a hand like a snake’s hood. Cf. hatthaphaṇaka at Vin 2.107, “hands used as an instrument shaped like a snake’s hood” for smoothing the hair. Vin-a 1027, “one whose fingers were grown together like a bat’s wings”. See note by A.K. COOMARASWAMY on the jālalakkhaṇa, “The ‘Webbed Finger’ of Buddha”, Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. VII, 1931, p.365, where he is of the opinion that jāla does not mean a webbing connecting the fingers, but refers to the thin lines of rosy light which may be seen between the fingers when they are held together and the hand held up to the light. The fingers of the Buddha, as Mahāpuruṣa, would be straight and regularly formed, of one measure, ekappamāṇā, according to this lakkhaṇa, or sign. “It is even possible”, as Coomaraswamy adds in a postscript, “that ‘having webbed fingers’ represents the exact opposite of the meaning of the original lakkhaṇa.” ² Cf. Vin 1.76 (above, BD 4.95). ³ Cf. Vin 1.75 (above, BD 4.95).

⁴ |emphCf. Vin 1.75 (above, BD.4.95) ⁵ parisadūsaka. ⁶ Given at length at Vin-a 1027ff. ⁷ The two words for blind: kāṇa and andha, are used. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1030 says that kāṇa means blind of one or both eyes (and not merely blind of one). He cites the Mahāpaccaṛī Commentary as asserting kāṇa to mean blind of one eye and andha of both, and he cites the Great Commentary, as saying that andha means blind from birth; he keeps this explanation at Vin-a 1031. “Purblind” and the next three terms occur at Vin 2.90, AN i.107, AN ii.85, AN iii.385, SN i.94, Pp 51.

⁸ Vin-a 1031 explains that if he were unable to say the complete formula for going for refuge, he could not go forth. ⁹ Vin-a 1031, if he could hear a loud noise he might go forth.

THE STORY OF GUIDANCE FOR THE UNCONSCIENTIOUS

4.117

Now at that time the group of six monks gave guidance to those who were unconscientious. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, guidance should not be given to those who are unconscientious. Whoever should give it to (such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks lived under the guidance of those who were unconscientious; these soon also became unconscientious, depraved monks. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one should not live under the guidance of those who are unconscientious. Whoever should (so) live, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

1.72.2

Then it occurred to the monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that guidance should not be given to those who are unconscientious, and that one should not live under the guidance of those who are unconscientious. Now, how are we to know who is conscientious or who is unconscientious?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to wait for four or five days until (you can say), ‘I know what is the nature of the monks’¹.”

n 1.92

THE STORY OF GUIDANCE FOR ONE ON A JOURNEY, ETC.

1.73.1

Now at that time a certain monk was going along a highroad in the Kosala country. Then it occurred to that monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that one should not live independently.² I am in need of guidance¹ but I am going along a high-road. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ bhikkhusabhāgata. Vin-a 1031, “Until I know from monks that their conscientiousness is shared by the monk giving guidance”. Or, is sabhāgata equal to sabhāva, the nature (of a monk), as I take it to be? ² Above, BD 4.101.

"I allow a monk, monks, if he is going along a high-road and is not receiving guidance to live independently."

Now at that time two monks were going along a high-road in the Kosala country. These arrived at a certain residence, and there one monk became ill. Then it occurred to that ill monk: "It is laid down by the Lord that one should not live independently. I am in need of guidance, but I am ill. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"I allow a monk, monks, if he is ill and is not receiving guidance to live independently."

Then it occurred to that monk who was tending the ill one: "It is laid down by the Lord ... I am in need of guidance but this monk is ill. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"I allow a monk, monks, if he is tending an ill one and is not receiving guidance, to live independently although being requested."²

Now at that time a certain monk was staying in a forest and there came to be comfort³ for him in this lodging. Then it occurred to this monk: "It is laid down by the Lord that one should not live independently. I am in need of guidance, but I am staying in a forest and there comes to be comfort for me in this lodging. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"I allow a monk, monks, if he is a forest-dweller and is thinking

¹ ahañ c'amhi nissayakaraṇīyo. ² By the ill one, Vin-a 1032. That is, as the Commentary says, the ill monk may ask the other to request him to give guidance; but if through pride he does not ask, he may go away. We must therefore assume that if he stays with the invalid but does not take guidance from him, he may live independently of guidance. ³ phāsu. Vin-a 1032, "there comes to be comfort in regard to obtaining tranquillity and vision".

about abiding in comfort¹ and is not receiving guidance, to live independently, thinking: ‘If a suitable giver of guidance comes along, I will live under his guidance’.”

PERMISSION TO PROCLAIM BY CLAN

Now at that time (a person) wished for ordination from the venerable Kassapa the Great.² Then the venerable Kassapa the Great sent a message to the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Let Ānanda come, he will proclaim³ this (person).” The venerable Ānanda spoke thus:

“I am not able to pronounce⁴ the elder’s⁵ name (for) the elder is my teacher⁶.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to proclaim merely by clan (-name).”

THE STORY OF TWO EXPECTING ORDINATION, ETC.

Now at that time two (persons) wished for ordination from the venerable Kassapa the Great. These quarrelled, saying: “I will be ordained first, I will be ordained first.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Phāsuvihāra; cf. brahmavihāra, and the monk who was phāsuvihārika, below BD 4.373, Kd 7.12.1. ² At AN i.23 called “chief of those who uphold the ascetic practices”. Verses at Thag 1051–1090. He exchanged robes with Gotama, SN ii.221.

³ anussāveti, in technical meaning of proclaiming the resolution three times after the motion for ordaining a person had been put before an Order. Cf. Kd 1.28.3–Kd 1.28.6. ⁴ gahetuṃ, a word with a variety of meanings; here meaning “to pronounce” in sense of “to take”, cf. “to take his name in vain”. Since Ānanda calls Kassapa his guru (garu me), and if we equate guru with ācariya, spiritual teacher or father (cf. pitucitta, Vin 1.45, Vin 1.60), it was not suitable for Ānanda to “take” (pronounce) his “father’s” name. The use of the gotta (clan) name is less intimate and therefore permissible. Cf. Kauṣītakī Upaniṣad 2.11.7 where the father “takes his son’s name”, nāma asya gṛṇhati. I am indebted for this note to A.K. Coomaraswamy. Mahākassapa’s reference to Ānanda as kumāraka, young boy at SN ii.218 should also be noted. ⁵ I.e. Mahākassapa’s, as stated at Vinaya Texts i.228. For in making the proclamations, Ānanda would have had to say that so-and-so wished to be ordained by Kassapa. ⁶ garu, probably equivalent to guru, spiritual teacher. Cf. garunissaya at Vin 2.303.

“I allow you, monks, to make two proclamations together.”

Now at that time there were those wishing for ordination from several elders. These quarrelled, saying: “I will be ordained first, I will be ordained first.” The elders spoke thus: “Come, your reverences, we are making all the proclamations together.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to make two or three proclamations together if there is one preceptor, but not if there are different preceptors.”

PERMISSION FOR ORDINATION TWENTY YEARS FROM CONCEPTION

Now at that time the venerable Kassapa the Boy¹ became ordained twenty years after his conception. Then it occurred to the venerable Kassapa the Boy: “It is laid down by the Lord that an individual who is under twenty years of age should not be ordained,² and I am twenty years from my conception. Now am I ordained³ or am I not ordained?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“When in his mother’s womb the first thought has arisen, the first consciousness appeared,⁴ his birth is (to be reckoned as) from that time. I allow you, monks, to ordain one who is twenty years of age from his conception.”

¹ Kumāarakassapa. Kumāra has the meaning both of boy and of prince. Kumāarakassapa “went forth” when he was only seven years old and he had been reared by a king since his birth by a nun; see AN-a i.284, MN-a ii.120, Thag-a (Psalms of the Brethren p.147f.), Dh-p-a iii.144, Ja i.148. Verses are ascribed to him at Thag 201-202. Called “chief of those who are versatile speakers” at AN i.24. The Vammīki Sutta (MN i.142) was spoken to Kumāarakassapa; the Nigrodhamigajāta (Ja no.12) and Dh-p 160 on account of his mother. ² Bu-Pc 65, and above, BD 4.98. ³ Cf. Bu-Pc 65 where it is stated that if a person is ordained while he is under twenty he is not (really) ordained. He himself incurs no offence, but there is an offence for the monks who ordain him. ⁴ Cf. definition of manussaviggaha, human being, at Vin 3.73.

ORDINATION PROCEDURE

^{176.1} Now at that time ordained (monks) were to be seen who were (afflicted by) leprosy and boils and eczema and consumption and epilepsy.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, when one is being ordained to ask him about things which are stumbling-blocks² for him.³ And thus should he be asked: Have you diseases like this: leprosy, boils, eczema, consumption, epilepsy? Are you a human being? Are you a man? Are you a freeman? Are you without debts? Are you not in the royal service? Have you your parents’ consent? Are you full twenty years of age? Are you complete as to bowl and robes? What is your name? What is the name of your preceptor?”

^{176.2} Now at that time monks asked those wishing for ordination, but who were not instructed, about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to reply. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

^{176.3} “I allow you, monks, having instructed first, afterwards to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks.”

^{4.121} They instructed just there in the midst of the Order. As before, those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to reply. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

^{176.4} “I allow you, monks, having instructed aside, to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks in the midst of the Order. And thus, monks, should one be instructed: First, he should be invited to choose⁴ a preceptor; having invited him to choose a preceptor, a bowl and robes should be pointed out to him (with the words): ‘This is a bowl for you, this is an outer cloak, this is an upper robe, this is an inner robe; go and stand in such and such a place.’”

Ignorant, inexperienced (monks) instructed them. Those wishing for ordination, but who were not (properly) instructed, were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to reply. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Cf. above, Kd 1.39.1. ² antarāyike dhamme, cf. Vin 4.134 (BD 3.21, where see n. 5).

³ Cf. Vin 2.271f. for the questions put to nuns on their ordination. ⁴ gāhāpetabbo; cf. gāhāpaka at Vin 3.246 (BD 2.122, where see n. 1).

“Monks, one should not be instructed by an ignorant, inexperienced (monk). Whoever (such) should instruct, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to instruct by means of an experienced, competent monk.”

Those who were not agreed upon instructed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one should not be instructed by one who is not agreed upon. Whoever should so instruct, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to instruct by means of one who is agreed upon. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: oneself may be agreed upon by oneself or another may be agreed upon by another¹. And how is oneself to be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. So and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order, I would instruct so and so.’ Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself.

“And how is another to be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. So and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order, so and so could instruct so and so.’ Thus may another be agreed upon by another.

“The monk who is agreed upon, having approached the one who wishes for ordination, should speak thus to him: ‘Listen, so and so. This is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking).

¹ Cf. below, Kd 2.15.6.

When I am asking you in the midst of the Order about what is,¹ you should say, 'It is,' if it is so; you should say, 'It is not,' if it is not so. Do not be at a loss, do not be abashed. Thus I will ask² you: 'Have you diseases like this ... What is your preceptor's name?'"

They³ arrived together. They should not arrive together. The instructor having come first, the Order should be informed by him, saying: "Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. So and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. He has been instructed by me. If it seems right to the Order, let so and so come." He should be told: "Come." Having made him arrange his upper robe over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks' feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be made to ask for ordination, saying: "Honoured sirs, I ask the Order for ordination; honoured sirs, may the Order raise me up out of compassion.⁴ And a second time, honoured sirs, ... And a third time, honoured sirs, I ask the Order for ordination; honoured sirs, may the Order raise me up out of compasson."

The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: "Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, so and so, wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order I could ask so and so about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Listen, so and so. This is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking). I am asking you about what is. You should say, 'It is', if it is so; you should say, 'It is not,' if it is not so. Have you diseases like this: ... What is your preceptor's name?"

¹ yaṃ jātam. Vin-a 1033 says about that which is produced, jāta, has arisen, is existing in your body. This can only refer to the questions on the diseases. The Pali in such cases is idiomatic: "Is there for you a disease?" So one could say, "I am asking you about what exists, yaṃ jātam (as a disease for you), and you should say there is, atthi (such a disease for me) it being so, santaṃ; there is not, n'atthi, it being not so, asantaṃ". But since in fact not all the questions are about diseases, I have translated as above, the better to emphasise the general necessity to answer all the questions truthfully in accordance with the preliminary reminder, "This is a time for truth and fact". ² pucchissāṃ. ³ The instructor and his candidate. Nothing to show whether the Lord is supposed to continue to give these instructions, or whether they are incorporated without being attributed to him. ⁴ Cf. above, Kd 1.29.2.

Kd 1,76

The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: "Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This one, so and so, wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. He is quite pure in regard to the things which are stumbling-blocks, he is complete as to bowl and robes. So and so is asking the Order for ordination by means of the preceptor so and so. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order ordain so and so by means of the preceptor so and so. This is the motion.

Kd 1,76

"Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This one, so and so, wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. He is quite pure in regard to the things which are stumbling-blocks, he is complete as to bowl and robes. So and so is asking the Order for ordination by means of the preceptor so and so. The Order is ordaining so and so by means of the preceptor so and so. If the ordination of so and so by means of the preceptor so and so is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak.

Kd 1,76

"And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. "So and so is being ordained by the Order by means of the preceptor so and so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this."

FOUR REQUISITES

The shadow should be measured¹ at once, the length of the season² should be explained, the portion of the day³ should be explained, the formula⁴ should be explained, the four resources should be explained (with the words): ‘Going forth is on account of meals of scraps ... (as at Kd 1.30.4) ... These are extra acquisitions: ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses.’

Told are the Four Resources

FOUR THINGS NOT TO BE DONE

Now at that time monks, having ordained a certain monk, went away leaving him alone. Afterwards as he was going along alone, he met his former wife on the way. She spoke thus: “What, have you now gone forth?”

“Yes, I have gone forth.” She said:

“Sexual intercourse is difficult for those who have gone forth. Come and indulge in sexual intercourse.” Having indulged in sexual intercourse with her, he arrived late. Monks spoke thus: “What were you, your reverence, doing for such a long time?”

Then this monk told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, having ordained (a monk), to give him a companion and to explain four things which are not to be done. When a monk is ordained he should not indulge in sexual intercourse, even with an animal.¹ Whatever monk indulges in sexual intercourse, he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a man with his head cut off could not become one to live by that bodily connection, even so a monk, having indulged in sexual intercourse, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans.² This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.

¹ This must mean the shadow of the candidate, cast by the sun. Vin-a 1033 says the shadow should be measured with the words, It is the length of one man or of two men, ekaporisā dveporisā. Cf. porisa meaning “height of a man.” at MN i.74, MN i.187, MN i.365. ² Vin-a 1033 “the seasons are the rains, the cold weather, the hot weather. If whichever season it is is not ended, that season is incomplete by so many days”, thus the number of days remaining in that season, or “the exact season” (Pali-English Dictionary) should be explained. ³ Vin-a 1033, morning or afternoon. ⁴ sangīti, chanting together. According to Vin-a 1034, having done all this together he should be asked about his measure, the season and portion of the day in order that he might give the correct answers and so make it clear that he has properly understood his age as a member of the Order.

“When a monk is ordained he should not take by theft what has not been given, even if it is only a blade of grass.³ Whatever monk takes by theft a *pāda*⁴ or the worth of a pāda or more than a pāda that has not been given, he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a withered leaf, freed from its stalk, could not become green again, even so a monk, having taken by theft a pāda or the worth of a pāda or more than a pāda that was not given, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans.⁵ This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.

“When a monk is ordained he should not intentionally deprive a living thing of life, even if it is only an ant.⁶ Whatever monk deprives a human being of life even down to causing abortion,⁷ he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a flat stone, broken in half, becomes (something) not to be put together again, even so a monk, having intentionally deprived a human being of life, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans.⁸ This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.

“When a monk is ordained he should not lay claim to a state of further-men, even thinking: ‘I delight in solitude’.⁹ Whatever monk, of evil desires, filled with covetousness, lays claim to a state of further-men which is non-existent, not a fact¹⁰—to meditation or to a deliverance or to contemplation or to an attainment or to a way or to a fruit¹—he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a palmyra palm, cut off at the crown, could not become one for further growth,² even so a monk, of evil desires, filled with covetousness, having claimed a state of further-men which is nonexistent, not a fact, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.”

¹ Bu-Pj 1, Vin 3.22. ² Vin 3.28. ³ Bu-Pj 2. ⁴ See note at BD 1.71. ⁵ Cf. Vin 3.47.
⁶ Bu-Pj 3 (for human beings) and Bu-Pc 61 (for animals). ⁷ Vin 3.83f. ⁸ Vin 3.74.
⁹ suññāgāra. See Vin 3.91. Where “delight in solitude for the mind devoid of the hindrances” occurs in definition of “state of further-men”. ¹⁰ Vin 3.90, where such a one is called the “chief great thief”.

Told are the Four Things which are not to be done

THE STORY OF ONE SUSPENDED FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

Now at that time a certain monk, suspended³ for not seeing an offence, left the Order, (but) having come back again, he asked the monks for ordination. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, suspended for not seeing an offence, leaves the Order, (but) having come back again, asks the monks for ordination. They should speak thus to him: ‘Will you see this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will see it’, he may be let go forth. If he says: ‘I will not see it’, he should not be let go forth.

“Having let him go forth they should say (to him): ‘Will you see this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will see it’, he may be ordained. If he says: ‘I will not see it’, he should not be ordained. Having ordained him, they should say: ‘Will you see this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will see it’, he may be restored.⁴ If he says: ‘I will not see it’, he should not be restored. Having restored him, they should say: ‘Do you see this offence?’ If he sees it, that is good; if he does not see it, he may be suspended again if it possible to obtain unanimity⁵; if it is not possible to obtain unanimity there is no offence in eating with, in being in communion with (him).¹

¹ Cf. the longer list of concepts enumerated in definition of “state of further-men” at Vin 3.91, Vin 3.92. ² Vin 3.92. ³ ukkhitta. Cf. Vin 4.113, Vin 4.137, Vin 4.218 and see BD 3.28, n. 4. ⁴ On osāreti, to restore after seeing an offence, making amends for it and giving up a false view, see BD 3.28, n. 4. ⁵ I.e. among the monks, for this further suspension.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, suspended for not making amends for an offence, leaves the Order (but) having come back again, asks the monks for ordination. They should speak thus to him: ‘Will you make amends for this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will make amends’, he may be let go forth ... (as in Kd 1.79.2 reading make amends for instead of see) ... in being in communion with (him).

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, suspended for not giving up a wrong view, leaves the Order (but) having come back again, asks the monks for ordination. They should speak thus to him: ‘Will you give up this wrong view?’ If he says: ‘I will give it up he may be let go forth ... (as in Kd 1.79.2 reading give up instead of see) ... in being in communion with (him).

The Great Section²: the First

THIS IS ITS KEY

As to great matters in the Vinaya, to bringing ease to the well-behaved both in restraint of evil desires and in strivings for conscientiousness,
And also bearing in mind the instruction which is within the range of the all-knowing conqueror, in a realm which has no other,
in peace from bondage,
in what is well laid down,
in that which has no doubt,
In Section in Vinaya, as well as in Parivāra and in Heading(s), the good follows closely as though imitating.
Who does not understand cattle does not guard the herd, so not knowing moral habit, how can he guard restraint?
Although the Suttantas and Abhidhamma be forgotten, for all time the teaching persists while Vinaya is not destroyed.
Therefore, because firmly supported,

¹ So Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1034, tena saddhim, and as may be deduced from Bu-Pc 69 and its Old Commentary’s definition of “has not acted according to the rule”.

² Mahākhandhaka. Called pabbajjākkhandhaka at DN-a ii.363.

I will declare the key in regular sequence according to (my) knowledge.

Listen while I speak.

The matter, the provenance¹, the offence, the methods and the abbreviations—it is not easy not to leave something out; discern that from the method.

Awakening, and the Rājāyatana, the Goatherds', Sahampati
Brahmā, Ālara, Uddaka, and monks, Upaka the seer, Koṇḍañña, Vappa, Bhaddiya and Mahānāma, Assaji,
Yasa, four, fifty, all, he sent out (on tour), the quarters,

The subject,² as to Māra, and the thirty,
at Uruvelā, three matted hair ascetics, fire-room, the Great Kings, Sakka, and Brahmā, the entire (population),

Rag-robe, a tank, and a stone, kakudha-(tree),
a stone, a rose-apple, and a mango, emblic myrobalam, he brought a flower from the Coral Tree,

4.128 'Kassapa, let them be chopped, let them be kindled, and let them be extinguished',

they plunged into, fire-vessels, rain, Gayā, and the Palm Grove, (King of) Magadha,

Upatissa, Kolita, and distinguished (young men), the going forth, wrongly dressed, dismissal, and the lean wretched brahmin,

He indulged in bad habits, the stomach,
the brahmin youth, a group, year's standing, by the ignorant, going away,

ten years' standing, guidance,

They did not conduct themselves (properly), to dismiss, ignorant, nullification, five, six,

and whoever else, and naked, not with (his hair) cut off, matted hair ascetic, a Sakyan.

Five diseases among the Magadhese, service,³ a thief (and) fingers, and (the King of) Magadha decreed, jail, written about, scourged,

Branded, debtor, and a slave, close-shaving, Upāli, snake (-wind disease),⁴

¹ nidāna. This usually appears in the Vinaya to mean the place where the Lord was staying when such conduct occurred as led to the framing of a rule or allowance, thus the "provenance" of a rule or allowance. See also ks iii, Introduction xff.; ks iv, Introduction xivf. ² vatthuri. Appearing to refer to Kd 1.12.2, Kd 1.12.4, the going forth and ordination formula by the three refuges. Going forth and Ordination form the subject matter of Section i of the Mahāvagga. ³ Text reads eko. Oldenberg, Vin 1.373 thinks we ought to read bhaṭo (for rājabhaṭa in Kd 1.40.3). ⁴ See Kd 1.50.1; Kd 1.51.1.

a family with faith, and Kaṇḍaka, and then crowded up,
 About how to live,¹ the boy, trainings, and they were,² Now how?
 entire, by mouth, preceptors, luring away, Kaṇḍaka, Eunuch, theft,³ going over to,⁴ and a snake, on a mother, a father, perfected ones, a nun, schismatic, concerning blood,⁵ hermaphrodite,⁶ Without a preceptor, through an Order, a group, eunuch, without a bowl, without a robe, both these,
 then those three on what was lent,
 Hands, feet, hands and feet, ears, nose, both these,
 fingers, nails, tendons, webbed hands, and a hunch-back, dwarf, Having goitre, and then a branded one,
 scourged, written about, elephantiasis, badly (ill), and one who disgraces an assembly, blind, and just then one with a crooked limb,
 And then a lame one, paralysed down one side, with a cripple, old age, blind from birth, dumb, deaf, blind and dumb, and what is thereto,
 Whatever is called blind and dumb, and then dumb and deaf,
 And blind and dumb and deaf,
 and guidance to the unconscientious,
 And one should (not) live, what is done on a journey,⁷ being asked, wishing for,
 'let him come',⁸ they quarrelled,⁹ if there is one preceptor, Kassapa,
 And ordained (monks) were to be seen pressing about diseases,
 the uninstructed were at a loss, instruction just there,
 And then in the Order, then an ignorant one, and not agreed upon, together, the 'may-it-raise-(me-)up' ordination, resource, alone, the three.¹⁰
 In this Section are one hundred and seventy-two items.

¹ vatthumhi, i.e. in dependence for five years or for life, Kd 1.53.4. Sinhalese edition vatthusmiri. ² viharanti, as in Kd 1.57.1. ³ I.e. in communion by theft, Kd 1.62.3.

⁴ I.e. going over to (another) sect, Kd 1.62.3. ⁵ ruhirena, here replacing lohituppā-dako of Kd 1.67.1, the shedder of a (tathāgata's) blood. ⁶ Here called only vyañjana (accompanying attribute, distinctive characteristic) instead of ubhatovyañjana as at Kd 1.68.1. ⁷ kataddhāna, referring to Kd 1.73.1, Kd 1.73.2. Sinhalese edition reads tathāddhānaṃ. ⁸ Following āgacchatu of Sinhalese edition = Kd 1.74.1, instead of Text's āgacchantarī. ⁹ vivadenti (with variant reading vivādentī, Vin 1.373).

¹⁰ Doubtless referring to (1) not seeing an offence, (2) not making amends for an offence, (3) not giving up a wrong view (each a ground for a monk's suspension; and their opposites, each being a ground for his restoration dealt with at Kd 1.79.1, Kd 1.79.4).

Told is the First Key, that to the Great Section

2. OBSERVANCE (UPOSATHA)

PERMISSION TO GATHER

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying near Rājagaha on Mount Vulture Peak. Now at that time wanderers belonging to other sects, having collected together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month.¹ spoke dhamma,² People came up to them to hear dhamma. They gained affection for the wanderers belonging to other sects, they gained faith (in them), the wanderers belonging to other sects gained adherents.³

Then reasoning arose thus in the mind of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha as he was meditating in seclusion: “At present wanderers belonging to other sects, having collected together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month, speak dhamma. These people go up to them to hear dhamma. They gain affection for the wanderers belonging to other sects, they gain faith (in them), the wanderers belonging to other sects gain adherents. Suppose the masters should also collect together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month?”

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance, As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King

¹ On pakkha, cf. Vin 4.75 (BD 2.313, and q.v. n. 3) where eating food given pakkhikam and uposathikam, “on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon” and “on an observance-day”, form exceptions to the rule prohibiting a group-meal. ² Vin-a 1034, what is and what is not to be done by them. ³ pakkha is literally a party, a side, a faction, not necessarily a schismatic one, as is shown by above context, and see BD 3.190, n. 3.

Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, as I was meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in my mind thus: ‘At present wanderers belonging to other sects ... should collect together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month?’”

Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, gladdened, ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to assemble together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month.”

Now at that time monks, thinking: “It is allowed by the Lord to assemble together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month,” having assembled together, sat down in silence. Those people came up to hear dhamma. They looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, having assembled together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month, sit in silence, like dumb pigs¹? Ought not dhamma to be spoken when they are assembled together?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, having assembled together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month, to speak dhamma.”

PERMISSION TO RECITE THE PĀTIMOKKHA

Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “What now if I were to allow those rules of training, laid down by me for monks, (to form) a recital of Pātimokkha¹ for them? It would be a (formal) act of observance² for them.”

¹ mūgasūkarā; Vin-a 1034 explains by thūlasarīrasūkarā, pigs that are fat in body.

Then the Lord, having emerged from his seclusion in the evening, on this occasion, in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Now, monks, as I was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in my mind thus: ‘What now if I should allow those rules of training, laid down by me for monks, (to form) a recital of Pātimokkha for them? It would be a (formal) act of observance for them’. I allow you, monks, to recite a Pātimokkha.

“And thus, monks, should it be recited: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Today, the fifteenth (day), is an Observance (day). If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out Observance, it may recite the Pātimokkha. What is the Order’s first duty? Let the venerable ones announce entire purity.³ I will recite the Pātimokkha (while) one and all of us present⁴ listen properly and pay attention to it.⁵ He for whom there may be an offence should

¹ RHYS DAVIDS (E.R.E., article on Pātimokkha) says that from “the manner in which the word is used” in this passage it is not surprising” to find that the early Buddhists ascribed the institution ... of the Pātimokkha itself to a date long antecedent to that of the Buddha. If that be correct, the word Pātimokkha must have been current in Kosala when Buddhism arose, and ... among members of the previous orders”. Rhys Davids refers to DN ii.46–DN ii.49, where tradition ascribes a Pātimokkha to the time when Vipassin was Buddha, and to the verse (DN ii.49), repeated at DhP 185, which contains the words: pātimokkhe ca saṃvaro ... etaṃ buddhānāsānaṃ, “and restraint according to the Pātimokkha—this is the teaching of the Buddhas” (plural).

On suggested meanings of Pātimokkha, see BD 1, Introduction, p. xiff.; Vinaya Texts i., Introduction, p. xxvii. On the number of rules that the Pātimokkha contained, see WINTERNITZ, History of Indian Literature, ii.2, n. 5, which gives further references, and also B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature, i.48f. ² uposathakamma. Upasatha stands for “observance” itself. The phrase tad-ah-uposathe, “on this day’s observance”, is usually used for an Observance day. ³ pārisuddhi, i.e. that only those are present who have committed no offences, or who have acknowledged any committed, or who have fulfilled the penalty for them. Cf. below, BD 4.158. ⁴ sabbeva santā. Cf. ubho va santā at Vin 3.218. ⁵ Vinaya Texts i.242 take these words (all of us ... to it) to be the answer of the monks then present. As there is no ti marking the end of a speech, I think Gotama is still supposed to be telling the monks the way in which the recitation is to be carried out.

reveal¹ it. If there is no offence, you should become silent. By your becoming silent I shall thus know that the venerable ones are quite pure. For as there is an answer for each question,² so it is proclaimed³ up to the third time in an assembly like this. Whatever monk remembering while it is being proclaimed up to the third time that there is an existent offence and should not reveal it, there comes to be conscious lying⁴ for him.⁵ Now, conscious lying, venerable ones, is a thing called a stumbling-block⁶ by the Lord. Therefore the existent offence should be revealed by a monk who remembers that he has fallen (into an offence) and who desires purity; for when it is revealed there comes to be comfort for him.’”

Pātimokkha⁷ means: this is the beginning, this is the head,⁸ this is the foremost of states that are good; therefore it is called Pātimokkha.

The venerable ones means: this—‘the venerable ones’—is a term of esteem,⁹ this is a term of respect, this is a deferential and honorific designation.¹⁰

I will recite means: I will explain, I will teach, I will lay down, I will establish, I will make clear, I will analyse, I will make plain.¹¹

To it means: to (what) is called the Pātimokkha.

One and all of us present means: as many as there are in this assembly—elders and newly ordained and those of middle standing—these are called ‘one and all of us present’.

¹ āvikareyya. Āvikaroti is to make clear, to manifest, thus to disclose, to bring to light. This method of clearing oneself of an offence is perhaps a forerunner to the more formal confession, āpatti deseti, to an Order, a group or to one individual monk.

² paccekaputtḥassa. ³ anussāvita. ⁴ Defined at Vin 4.2 (BD 2.166). ⁵ Quoted Atthasālinī 92. ⁶ antarāyiko dhammo; see BD 3.21, n. 5. ⁷ On the inclusion of this Commentary in the Mahāvagga, see Vinaya Texts i, Introduction, p. xv and S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p. 91. ⁸ This derivative, Pātimokkha from mukha “is quite impossible”, WINTERNITZ, History of Indian Literature, ii.22, n. 2. But punning is not to be taken as serious scientific etymology, for this was unknown so early.

⁹ Or, of endearment, of affection, piya. ¹⁰ Cf. Cnd 130, Snp-a 536. ¹¹ Cf. SN ii.25, SN ii.154. SN iii.132, SN iv.166; AN i.286, AN ii.160.

(We) listen properly means: having applied ourselves, having attended,¹ we concentrate with all our mind.²

(We) pay attention means: we listen,³ minds one-pointed, minds not distracted, minds not perturbed.⁴

He for whom there may be an offence means: a certain offence of the five classes of offence or a certain offence of the seven classes of offence⁵ for an elder or for a newly ordained one or for one of middle standing.

He should reveal means: he should tell, he should make clear, he should open up, he should make plain in the midst of an Order or in the midst of a group or to one individual.

If there is no offence means: either one comes not to be committed or, if fallen into, it is removed.⁶

You should become silent means: you should not speak, you should consent.

I shall know⁷ that you are quite pure means: I will know, I will understand.

For as there is an answer for each question means: as one (person) if questioned about one (thing) would answer, so it should be known to that assembly: 'He questions me'.

An assembly like this (means): it is called an assembly of monks.

It is proclaimed up to the third time means: it is proclaimed once and it is proclaimed a second time and it is proclaimed a third time.

Remembering means: knowing, perceiving.

There is an existent offence means: either one comes to be committed or if fallen into is not removed.

¹ aṭṭhikatvā manasikatvā; cf. Vin 4.144. ² sabbaṃ cetasā samannāharāma; cf. SN i.112, SN i.189, SN n. ii.220; AN ii.116, AN iii.163, AN iii.402, AN iv.167; MN i.325. ³ nisāmema.

⁴ Cf. AN iii.174; Ds 11, Ds 15, Ds 24; Mnd 501. ⁵ The five classes of offence comprise the Pārājika, Saṅghādisesa, Aniyata, Nissaggiya, Pācittiya offences; the seven classes these five with the addition of the Pāṭidesaniyas and Sekhiyas. ⁶ vuṭṭhitā, feminine, agreeing with its subject āpatti. Vin-a 1034 reasonably explains: "here, either, whatever monk there comes to be not falling into an offence, or, having fallen is removed from it, this is the meaning of 'if there is no offence'". Cf. āpattiyā vuṭṭhāna in Kd 1:38.10. ⁷ vedissāmi ... jānissāmi.

Should not reveal means: should not tell, should not make clear, should not open up, should not make plain in the midst of an Order or in the midst of a group or to one individual.

There comes to be conscious lying for him means: What is conscious lying? It is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

A thing called a stumbling-block by the Lord means: a stumbling block to what? It is a stumbling-block to the attainment of the first (stage in) meditation, it is a stumbling-block to the attainment of the second (stage in) meditation ... the third (stage in) meditation, ... the fourth (stage in) meditation, it is a stumbling-block to the attainment of the meditations, of the deliverances, of the contemplations, of the attainments², of the renunciations, of the escapes,³ of the aloofnesses, of states that are good.

Therefore means: for that reason.

By (a monk) who remembers means: by (one) knowing, by (one) perceiving.

By (a monk) who desires purity means: by (one) wishing to remove (an offence), by (one) wishing to be purified.

Existent offence means: either one comes to be committed, or, if fallen into, is not removed.

Should be revealed means: it should be revealed in the midst of an Order or in the midst of a group or to one individual.

For when it is revealed there comes to be comfort for him means: In what is there comfort? There comes to be comfort in the attainment of the first (stage in) meditation, there comes to be comfort in the attainment in the second (stage in) meditation ... the third (stage in) meditation ... the fourth (stage in) meditation; there comes to be comfort in the attainment of the meditations, of the deliverances, of the contemplations, of the attainments, of the renunciations, of the escapes, of the aloofnesses, of states that are good.¹

¹ In the *Pācittiya*s, however, conscious lying appears as the first offence in this class. Vinaya Texts i.245, note says that because of this “we cannot interpret here dukkaṭa in the technical sense of a dukkaṭa offence”. I think, however, that the difference in the penalties laid down for conscious lying may point to different stages in the growth of the legislation. ² Cf. Vin 3.91, Vin 3.92, Vin 4.25. ³ nissaraṇa. ‘Escapes’ mentioned at Ud 80; It p.37, It p.61; DN iii.275; AN iii.245, DN iii.239–DN iii.240; AN iii.290, DN iii.247; MN i.84ff., etc.

Now at that time monks, thinking: “The recital of the Pātimokkha is allowed by the Lord,” recited the Pātimokkha daily. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited daily. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha on an Observance day.”

Now at that time monks, thinking: “The recital of the Pātimokkha on an Observance day is allowed by the Lord,” recited the Pātimokkha three times during the half-month—on the fourteenth, on the fifteenth and on the eighth (days) of the half-month. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited three times in the half-month. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha once in the half-month: either on this fourteenth or on the fifteenth (day).”

Now at that time the group of six monks recited the Pātimokkha according to assembly, each one before his own assembly. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited according to assembly, each one before his own assembly, Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, a (formal) act of Observance for all together.”²

Then it occurred to the monks: “A (formal) act of Observance

¹ Cf. the forest or jungle dwelling monk who had comfort, phāsu, Kd 1.73.4. This example together with the one given above indicate that phāsu is by no means used exclusively to denote physical comfort. ² samaggānaṃ. Cf. samagga at Vin 4.52, “all come”, and see BD 2.267, n. 7; and cf. samagga saṅgha at Vin 4.154, Vin 4.218, Vin 4.231 meaning a complete Order.

for all together is allowed by the Lord. Now, how far does 'being all together'¹ (go)? As far as one residence, or the whole earth?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"I allow, monks, 'being all together' (to mean) as far as one residence."

THE STORY OF MAHĀKAPPINA

Now at that time the venerable Kappina the Great² was staying near Rājagaha at Maddakucchi in the deer-park. Then as the venerable Kappina the Great was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus: "Should I go to an Observance or should I not go, should I go to a (formal) act of the Order or should I not go, I, nevertheless, am purified with the highest purification."

Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind of the venerable Kappina the Great, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from Mount Vulture Peak appear in Maddakucchi in the deer-park before the venerable Kappina the Great. The Lord sat down on an appointed seat, and the venerable Kappina the Great, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance.

As the venerable Kappina the Great was sitting down at a respectful distance the Lord spoke thus to him: "Now, Kappina, as you were meditating in seclusion did not a reasoning arise in your mind thus: 'Should I go to an Observance or should I not go, should I go to a (formal) act of the Order or should I not go, I, nevertheless, am purified with the highest purification?'"

"Yes, Lord."

¹ sāmaggī. ² At AN.i.25 called chief of the exhorters of monks. Verses at Thag 547-Thag 556. See Psalms of the Bretheren p.254ff., and N.B. that on BD 4.256 "taught the sisters" (or nuns) should read "taught the brethren" (or monks), as noticed at Psalms of the Bretheren p.417. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names ii.475, article: Mahākappina, should be corrected accordingly. See Sakya, p.140ff., for MRS. RHYS DAVIDS' suggestion that Kappina was Assaji's teacher.

“But if you brahmins¹ do not reverence, revere, esteem, honour the Observance, who is there who will reverence, revere, esteem, honour the Observance? You go along, brahmin, to the Observance, do not not go; go likewise to a (formal) act of the Order, do not not go.”

“Yes, Lord,” the venerable Kappina the Great answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the venerable Kappina the Great with talk on dhamma, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from before the venerable Kappina the Great in Maddakucchi in the deer-park appear on Mount Vulture Peak.

PERMISSION FOR A BOUNDARY

Then it occurred to the monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that ‘being all together’ (means) as far as one residence. Now, how far does one residence (go)?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a boundary. And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: First, marks should be announced,² a mark consisting of a hillside, a mark consisting of a rock, a mark consisting of a grove, a mark consisting of a tree, a mark consisting of a road, a mark consisting of an anthill, a mark consisting of a river, a mark consisting of (a piece of) water. The Order, having announced the marks, should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, if it seems right to the Order the Order may agree upon a boundary in accordance with these marks for the same communion for one Observance. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, the Order is agreeing upon a boundary in accordance with these marks for the same communion, for one Observance. If the agreement upon a boundary in accordance with these marks for the same communion, for one Observance, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The boundary in accordance with these marks is agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

¹ Brahmin probably being used here in its Buddhist sense of “best, highest”. Kappina was older than Gotama. ² nimittā kittetabbā.

d2.7.1 Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: “An agreement upon a boundary is allowed by the Lord,” agreed upon very extensive boundaries, of four yojanas and five yojanas and six yojanas. Monks coming for Observance arrived while the Pātimokkha was being recited, and they arrived just after it had been recited, and they stayed (a night) on the way. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a very extensive boundary should not be agreed upon, of four yojanas or five yojanas or six yojanas. Whoever should (so) agree, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to agree upon a boundary of three yojanas at most.”¹ l2.7.2 Now at that time the group of six monks agreed upon the other side of a river as a boundary. Monks coming for Observance were carried away and their bowls were carried away and their robes were carried away. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the other side of a river should not be agreed upon as a boundary. Whoever should (so) agree, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, when there may be a reliable boat”² or a reliable bridge¹ to agree upon the other side of such a river as a boundary.”

¹ According to Vin-a 1046 this means that having established the middle of the proposed residence, the boundary should not be more than one and a half yojanas from it in each direction. A triangle may be agreed upon, three yojanas from corner to corner. ² dhuvanāvā. Vin-a 1046 gives various possibilities, one of which is a boat which plies regularly at the fords.

ON AN OBSERVANCE HALL

Now at that time monks recited the Pātimokkha in successive cells without (making) a rendezvous.² In-coming monks did not know or they thought, “Where will the Observance be carried out today?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in successive cells without (making) a rendezvous. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to carry out the Observance having agreed upon an Observance-hall that the Order desires: a dwelling-place or a curved house or a long house or a mansion or a cave.³ And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon:

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall. If the agreement upon such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall is agreed upon by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

¹ dhuvasetu. Vin-a 1047 says “made of a collection of trees or boards joined together or a bridge where a caravan can go or what is suitable for the crossing over of elephants and horses is a large bridge; or a ‘reliable bridge’ means having even at that moment cut down a tree, a bridge that is suitable for people to cross over by one at a time. But it is not a ‘reliable bridge’ if it is not possible to cross by holding the jungle-rope and creepers twined above it”. ² On samketa see BD 1.74, BD 1.88, BD 1.128, BD 1.135, BD 2.164, BD 2.239 (and n. 3), BD 2.291, BD 2.294. ³ Cf. above, Kd 1.30.4 (and notes) and Vin 1.284.

4.140 Now at that time in a certain residence two Observance-halls came to be agreed upon. Monks assembled together in both thinking: “Observance will be carried out here,” “Observance will be carried out here.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

2.8.4 “Monks, two Observance-halls in one residence should not be agreed upon. Whoever should (so) agree, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, having abolished¹ one, to carry out the Observance in one place (only).

“And thus, monks, should it be abolished: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may abolish such and such an Observance-hall. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is abolishing such and such an Observance-hall. If the abolition of such and such an Observance-hall is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such an Observance-hall is abolished by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

ON A MAXIMUM FOR OBSERVANCE

1.29.1 Now at that time in a certain residence a very small Observance-hall came to be agreed upon. A large Order of monks came to be assembled together on an Observance-day. Monks, sitting on ground that had not been agreed upon, heard the Pātimokkha. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance is to be carried out having agreed upon an Observance-hall, but we heard the Pātimokkha while we were sitting on ground that was not agreed upon. Now was the Observance carried out for us or was it not carried out?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if one is sitting on the ground, whether it has been agreed upon or not agreed upon, and hears the Pātimokkha from there, the Observance is carried out for him.

¹ Vin-a 1039 explains this to mean “having abolished one of the proclamations”, i.e. having rescinded one of the agreements so that one of the places already agreed upon as an Observance-hall is no longer regarded in this light.

“Well, monks, if an Order desires a maximum for Observance¹ of a certain size let it agree upon a maximum for Observance of that size. And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: First, marks should be announced. The Order, having announced the marks, should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, if it seems right to the Order the Order may agree upon a maximum for Observance in accordance with these marks. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, the Order is agreeing upon the maximum for Observance in accordance with these marks. If the agreement upon a maximum for Observance in accordance with these marks is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The maximum for Observance is agreed upon by the Order in accordance with these marks. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

Now at that time in a certain residence newly ordained monks,² being the first to have assembled together on an Observance day, saying: “The elders are not coming yet,” went away. The Observance was not at a right time.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow, monks, on an Observance day monks who are elders to assemble together first.”

¹ uposathapamukhaṃ. Not noticed in Pali-English Dictionary. It must refer to the size of a site for hearing the Observance by a maximum number of monks of which an Order might consist. ² These navakā bhikkhū were only “newly ordained” or junior in comparison with the majjhimā bhikkhū, those of middle standing and ordained for as long as five years, and with the theras, elders, ordained for as many as ten years. A monk is called navaka or nava for the first four years of his religious life after the date of his ordination. ³ I.e. not on the fourteenth or fifteenth day of a half-month.

Now at that time in Rājagaha several residences came to have the same boundary. Monks quarrelled about this, saying: “Let the Observance be carried out in our residence,” “Let the Observance be carried out in our residence.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“This is a case, monks, where several residences come to have the same boundary. Monks quarrel about this, saying: ‘Let the Observance be carried out in our residence’, ‘Let the Observance be carried out in our residence’. Monks those monks, one and all,¹ having assembled together in one place, should carry out the Observance, or, having assembled together they should carry out the Observance there where a monk who is an elder is staying. But the Observance should not be carried out by an incomplete Order.² Whoever should (so) carry it out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

PERMISSION FOR A “NOT SEPARATED” BOUNDARY

Now at one time the venerable Kassapa the Great, going from Andhakavinda³ to Rājagaha for Observance and crossing a river⁴ on the way, was nearly⁵ carried away, and his robes got wet. Monks spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Great: “Why are your robes wet, your reverence?”

“Now I, your reverences, coming from Andhakavinda to Rājagaha for the Observance and crossing a river on the way, was nearly carried away. Because of this my robes are wet.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Whatever boundary, monks, is agreed upon by an Order for the same communion, for one Observance, let the Order agree (to regard)

¹ sabbeḥ’eva. ² na tv eva vaggena saṅghena, as below, Kd 2.22.2; Kd 2.23.2 and subsequently. On vagga, see BD 2.269, n.10. ³ According to Vin-a 1049 Andhakavinda was at least a gāvuta from Rājagaha. Around Rājagaha were eighteen large vihāras having the same boundary, but the “being all together” of an Order took place in the Bamboo Grove. ⁴ Vin-a 1049 says the Sappinī (Sippinī), which they say rises in Mt. Vulture Peak, and because it flows quickly so near its source that is why the elder was nearly carried away. ⁵ manam, also at Ja i.149, Dh-p a iii.147.

that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes.¹

“And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary was agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance, if it seems right to the Order the Order may agree (to regard) that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary was agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance the Order is agreeing (to regard) that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes. If the agreement (to regard) this boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. This boundary is agreed upon the by Order (to be regarded as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

Now at that time monks, thinking: “An agreement (for a monk to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is allowed by the Lord,” laid aside robes in a house.² These robes were lost and burnt and eaten by rats. The monks became badly dressed, their robes worn thin. Monks spoke thus: “Why are you, your reverences, badly dressed, your robes worn thin?”

“Now we, your reverences, thinking: ‘An agreement (for a monk to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is allowed by the Lord,' laid aside robes in a house. These robes have been lost and burnt and eaten by rats. That is why we are badly dressed, our robes worn thin." They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ ticivarena avippavāsa. Cf. Bu-NP 2 where a monk incurs an offence if he is away from the three robes even for one night unless he has obtained the agreement of the monks. But one who is ill may obtain an agreement to be regarded as not separated from his robes, although in fact he is. The above ruling is to the same effect. See BD 2.14, n. ² In Bu-NP 29 monks, if staying in jungle lodgings are allowed to lay aside one of their three robes in a house. But, except with the agreement of the monks, they must not be away from their robes for more than six nights.

"Whatever boundary, monks, is agreed upon by an Order for the same communion, for one Observance, let the Order agree (to regard) that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes, except it be a village and the precincts of a village.¹

"And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon²: ... '... thus do I understand this'.

ABOLISHING A BOUNDARY

"When agreeing upon a boundary, monks, first the boundary for the same communion should be agreed upon, afterwards the (place where a monk is regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes should be agreed upon. In abolishing a boundary, monks, first the (place where a monk is regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes should be abolished, afterwards the boundary for the same communion should be abolished. And thus, monks, should the (place where the monk is regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes be abolished: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever was agreed upon by the Order (as a place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes, if it seems right to the Order, the Order may abolish that (place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever was agreed upon by the Order (as a place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes, the Order is abolishing (that place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes. If the abolition of (the place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. That (place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is abolished by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.

¹ Defined at Vin 3.46; see BD 1.74, n. 2. "Village having one precinct" defined at Vin 3.200, see BD 2.17 and note Vin-a 1051 says that the above ruling is not for nuns because they live in a village; see also Vinaya Texts i.256, n.1. ² The same as Kd 2.12.2 above, but after the words "away, separated from the three robes" add "except it be a village and the precincts of a village."

“And thus, monks, should a boundary for the same communion¹ be abolished: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary has been agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance, if it seems right to the Order, the Order may abolish that boundary. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary has been agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance, the Order is abolishing that boundary. If the abolition of that boundary for the same communion, for one Observance is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. That boundary for the same communion, for one Observance is abolished by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.

A VILLAGE BOUNDARY, ETC.

“Monks, when a boundary is not agreed upon, not established, whatever village or little town² (a monk) lives depending on, whatever is the village boundary of that village or the little town boundary of that little town, this in that case is (the boundary) for the same communion, for one Observance. If, monks, he is in what is not a village, in a jungle,³ in this case the same communion, one Observance, is seven *abbhantaras*⁴ all round. No river, monks, is a boundary, no sea is a boundary, no natural lake is a boundary. Where there is a river, monks, or a sea or a natural lake, that which in this case is (the boundary) for the same communion, one Observance, is the distance that a man of average (height) can throw water all round.”

¹ “For the same communion” omitted in Oldenberg’s text, but included in the Ceylon edition. ² nigama, see BD 2.63, n. 2. ³ “Jungle” defined at BD 1.74, BD 1.85. ⁴ See BD 2, Introduction, p.1.

2.13.1 Now at that time the group of six monks combined boundary with boundary.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon first, that (formal) act of theirs is legitimate, it is irreversible, fit to stand.² Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon afterwards, that (formal) act of theirs is not legitimate, it is reversible, not fit to stand. Monks, boundary should not be combined with boundary. Whoever should (so) combine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

2.13.2 Now at that time the group of six monks placed boundary within boundary.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon first, that (formal) act of theirs is legitimate, it is irreversible fit to stand. Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon afterwards, that (formal) act of theirs is not legitimate it is reversible, not fit to stand. Monks, a boundary should not be placed within a boundary. Whoever should (so) place within, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, when a boundary is being agreed upon, having left an interspace between boundaries,⁴ to agree upon a boundary.”

INCOMPLETE OBSERVANCE, ETC.

2.14.1 Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many Observance days are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these two Observance days, the fourteenth and the fifteenth. These, monks, are the two Observance days.”

2.14.2 Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many (formal) acts for

¹ sīmāya sīmaṃ sambhindanti. ² Cf. BD 3.161 (Vin 4.214,) and Vin 1.313, Vin 1.316f. The last two, akuppa and ṭhānāraha, are defined at Vb-a 330. ³ sīmāya sīmaṃ ajjhottharanti. ⁴ sīmantarika. This may be quite small: a hattha (on which see BD 2, Introduction, p.li.) according to Vin-a 1056; a span or four finger-breadths according to the two Sinhalese commentaries cited at Vin-a 1056.

Observance are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these four (formal) acts for Observance: a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) not by rule when an Order is incomplete¹; a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) not by rule when an Order is complete; a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is incomplete; a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is complete. Now, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance carried out not by rule when an Order is incomplete, such a (formal) act for Observance, monks, should not be carried out, nor is such a (formal) act for Observance allowed by me.

“Then, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) not by rule when an Order is complete, such a (formal) act for Observance, monks, should not be carried out nor is such a (formal) act for Observance allowed by me. Then, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is incomplete, such a (formal) act for Observance should not be carried out nor is such a (formal) act for Observance allowed by me. Then, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is complete, such a (formal) act for Observance, monks, may be carried out and such a (formal) act for Observance is allowed by me. Therefore, monks, thinking: ‘We will carry out a (formal) act for Observance like this, that is to say by rule when an Order is complete’ — thus you should train yourselves, monks.”

RECITING THE PĀTIMOKKHA IN BRIEF, ETC.

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many ways for the recital of the Pātimokkha are there?”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these five (ways for the) recital of the Pātimokkha: having recited the provenance,² the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard¹; this is the first (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. Having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving defeat, the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard; this is the second (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. Having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving defeat, having recited the thirteen offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard; this is the third (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. Having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving defeat, having recited the thirteen offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, having recited the two undetermined offences, the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard; this is the fourth (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. (Recital) in full is the fifth. Monks, these are the five (ways for the) recital of the Pātimokkha.”

¹ adhammena vaggam; cf. Vin 4.37, Vin 4.126, Vin 4.152, Vin 4.153, adhammena vā vaggena vā. See Kd 9.3 for elucidations of “not by rule” and “by rule”, and of “incomplete” and “complete assemblies”. ² nidāna, see above, BD 4.127.

Now, at that time, monks, thinking: “Recital of the Pātimokkha in brief is allowed by the Lord,” all the time recited the Pātimokkha in brief. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in brief. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time in a certain residence in the Kosala country there came to be a menace from savages² on an Observance day. The monks were unable to recite the Pātimokkha in full. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a danger, to recite the Pātimokkha in brief.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, although there was no danger, recited the Pātimokkha in brief. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, if there is no danger the Pātimokkha should not be recited in brief. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, if there is a danger, to recite the Pātimokkha in brief. In this connection these are dangers: a danger from kings,¹ a danger from thieves, a danger from fire, a danger from water, a danger from human beings, a danger from non-human beings, a danger from beasts of prey, a danger from creeping things, a danger to life, a danger to the Brahma-faring.² I allow you, monks, when there are dangers such as these, to recite the Pātimokkha in brief; in full if there is no danger.”

¹ avasesaṃ sutena sāvetaḥham. ² savara-bhaya; cf. Vin 1.168. Vin-a 1057 reads sañcarabhaya.

ON QUESTIONING REGARDING VINAYA

Now at that time the group of six monks, unbidden,³ spoke dhamma in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, dhamma should not be spoken, by one who is not bidden (to do so), in the midst of an Order.⁴ Whoever should (so) speak it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to speak dhamma by means of a monk who is himself an elder, or (for him) to bid another (to speak it).”⁵

Now at that time the group of six monks, (although) not agreed upon asked about discipline in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, discipline should not be asked about, by one not agreed upon, in the midst of an Order. Whoever should (so) ask, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ask about discipline, by means of one who is agreed upon, in the midst of an Order. And thus, monks, may he be agreed upon:

¹ Same list again at Vin 1.169, Vin 2.244. Cf. also Vin 1.148–Vin.1.149. See also list of seven dangers at Divyāvadāna 544. ² On brahmācariya, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Wayfarer’s Words ii.533, “A Technical Term”, where she regards it as a term taken over from the brahmins who used it to denote the student-day stage in their training.

³ By the elders. Vin-a 1058. ⁴ na bhikkhave saṅghamajjhe anajjhīṭṭhena dhammo bhāsitaṭṭho. These cases probably mean that dhamma is not to be spoken or vinaya asked about (by one not qualified to do so) in the midst of an Order. They probably do not mean that one not bidden or not agreed upon in the midst of an Order might not speak or ask questions. ⁵ Cf. AN iv.153 where if a monk “speaks dhamma himself or bids another (to do so)” it is one of the eight reasons for his development in the Brahma-faring.

either oneself may be agreed upon by oneself, or another may be agreed upon by another.¹

And how may oneself be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I could ask so and so about discipline’. Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself. And how may another be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, so and so could ask so and so about discipline’. Thus may another be agreed upon by another.”

Now at that time well behaved monks who were agreed upon asked about discipline in the midst of the Order. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to ask about discipline in the midst of the Order by means of one who is agreed upon, although³ having (first) looked round the assembly, having assessed⁴ (each) individual.”⁵

ON ANSWERING REGARDING VINAYA

Now at that time the group of six monks (although) not agreed upon answered questions on discipline in the midst of the Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, questions on discipline should not be answered in the midst of the Order by one not agreed upon. Whoever should (so) answer, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to answer questions in the midst of the Order by means of one who is agreed upon. And thus, monks, may he be agreed upon: either oneself may be agreed upon by oneself, or another may be agreed upon by another.

¹ Cf. above, BD 4.121, below, BD 4.150. ² vadhena, also meaning with slaughter, with destruction. ³ pi. ⁴ tulayitvā, literally having weighed. Cf. tulayitabbam at Vin 4.142. Vin-a 1059 says the one who is asking, having looked round the assembly, may ask about discipline if there is no risk for himself. ⁵ This allowance is an elaboration of that given in Kd 2.15.6. This still holds good, but the above safeguard is added.

And how may oneself be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, asked about discipline by so and so, could answer.’ Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself. And how may another be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, so and so, asked about discipline by so and so, could answer.’ Thus may another be agreed upon by another.”

Kd 2.15

Vin 1.11

Now at that time well behaved monks who were agreed upon answered questions on discipline in the midst of the Order. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to answer questions on discipline in the midst of the Order by means of one who is agreed upon, although having (first) looked round the assembly, having assessed (each) individual.”

Kd 2.15

ON REPROVING

Now at that time the group of six monks reprovved, on account of an offence, a monk who had not given (them) leave.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a monk who has not given leave should not be reprovved on account of an offence. Whoever should (so) reprove, there is an offence of wrong-dong. I allow you, monks, having obtained leave by saying: ‘Let the venerable one give me leave, I want to speak to you to reprove him on account of an offence.’”

Kd 2.16

¹ anokāsakata, “to make an occasion”, to give, to grant leave; okāsam kārāpeti, to make to give, thus to obtain leave. Cf. Vin 4.344 where nuns must not question monks unless they have obtained their leave to do so, and where anokāsakata is defined by anāpucchā, without having asked (for permission).

2.16.2
4.151
Now at that time well-behaved monks, having obtained the leave of the group of six monks, reproved them on account of an offence. The group of six months took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, even if leave is given, to reprove for an offence after you have assessed the individual."

2.16.3
Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: "Before¹ well-behaved monks obtain our leave," themselves obtained the pure monks' leave beforehand,² but there was no ground, no reason, since they were not offenders³. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, leave should not be obtained from pure monks when there is no ground, no reason, since they are not offenders. Whoever should (so) obtain it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to obtain leave after you have assessed the individuals."

PROTESTING AN ACT THAT IS NOT THE RULE, ETC.

2.16.4
1.115
Now at that time the group of six monks carried out a (formal) act that was not legally valid in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, a (formal) act that is not legally valid should not be carried out in the midst of the Order. Whoever should (so) carry one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing." Even so, they carried out a (formal) act that was not legally valid. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to protest⁴ when a (formal) act that is not legally valid is being carried out."

2.16.5
Now at that time well-behaved monks protested when a (formal) act that was not legally valid was being carried out by the group of six monks. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, merely to express an opinion." They expressed an opinion to these themselves. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, when there are four or five, to protest, when there are two or three to express an opinion, when there is one, to determine: 'I do not approve of this'."

¹ pure = paṭhamam, Vin-a 1059. Cf. Kd 4.16.3. ² paṭigacc'eva = paṭhamataram, Vin-a 1059. ³ anāpattika. ⁴ paṭikkosituṃ. Cf. BD 3.58.

Now at that time the group of six monks, when the Pātimokkha was being recited in the midst of the Order, intentionally did not hear. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, a reciter of the Pātimokkha should not intentionally not be heard. Whoever should not hear, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

REQUESTING THE RECITING OF THE PĀTIMOKKHA, ETC.

Now at that time the venerable Udāyin came to be reciter of the Pātimokkha for an Order, but his voice was like a crow's. Then it occurred to the venerable Udāyin: "It is laid down by the Lord that a reciter of the Pātimokkha should be heard, but my voice is like a crow's. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, the one who is the reciter of the Pātimokkha to exert himself, thinking: 'How can I be heard? 'There is no offence for one who exerts himself.'"

Now at that time Devadatta recited the Pātimokkha before an assembly that contained laymen. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited before an assembly that contains laymen. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Now at that time the group of six monks, unbidden, recited the Pātimokkha in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in the midst of an Order by one who is not bidden (to do so). Whoever (such) should recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, that the Pātimokkha be in charge of an elder.”¹

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Members of Other Sects

ALLOWANCE TO LEARN THE COUNTING OF THE FORTNIGHTS, ETC.

Then the Lord, having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Codanāvattu. In due course, walking on a tour, he arrived in Codanāvattu. Now at that time several monks were staying in a certain residence; the monk who there was the elder was ignorant, inexperienced, he did not know the Observance or a (formal) act for Observance or the Pātimokkha or the recital of the Pātimokkha.

Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Pātimokkha be in charge of an elder, but this elder of ours is ignorant, inexperienced, he does not know the Observance ... or the recital of the Pātimokkha. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, the Pātimokkha to be discharged² by whoever there is an experienced, competent monk.”

Now at that time several ignorant, inexperienced monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. These did not know the Observance or a (formal) act for Observance or the Pātimokkha or the recital of the Pātimokkha. These called upon an elder, saying: “Honoured sir, let the elder recite the Pātimokkha.” He spoke thus: “Your reverences, I am not able to do so¹.” They called upon a second elder ... He also spoke thus: ... They called upon a third elder ... In this way they called upon (all the monks) down to the most newly ordained in the Order, saying: “Let the venerable one recite the Pātimokkha.” He also spoke thus: “Honoured sirs, I am not able to do so.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ therādhikam Pātimokkham. Vin-a 1059 says that the elder should recite it himself or call upon another to do so. Cf. the ruling which arose from speaking dhamma unbidden, above, BD 4.148. ² tassādheyyam Pātimokkham. Ādheyya means “to be appropriated”.

“This is a case, monks, where several ignorant, inexperienced monks are staying in a certain residence ...² ... ‘Honoured sirs, I am not able to do so’. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks, saying: ‘Do go, your reverence; having mastered the Pātimokkha in brief or in full, come back’.”

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should he be sent?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder.” Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not go. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is not ill should not not go when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Codanāvattu for as long as he found suiting, returned again to Rājagaha. Now at that time people asked the monks as they were walking for almsfood: “Which (day) of the half-month is it, honoured sirs?” The monks spoke thus: “We, sirs, do not know.” The people ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, do not even know the calculation³ of the half-months, so how can they know anything else that is good?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, you, monks, to learn the calculation of the half-months.”

¹ na me vattati, it is not for me. ² As in Kd 2.17.3 above, but told in the present tense. ³ gaṇanā, see BD 2.176, n. 5.

Then it occurred to monks: “Now by whom should the calculation of the half-months be learnt?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, one and all¹ to learn the calculation of the half-months.”

2.18.3 Now at that time people asked the monks as they were walking for almsfood: “How many monks are there, honoured sirs?” The monks spoke thus: “We, sirs, do not know.” The people ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, do not even know one another, so how can they know anything else that is good?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to count the monks.”

2.18.4 Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how should the monks be counted?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, on an Observance day to count by way of groups² or to take (a count) by ticket³.”

2.19.1 Now at that time monks, not knowing, “Today is an Observance day,” walked to a distant village for almsfood. Not only did these come back while the Pātimokkha was being recited, but they came back just after it had been recited. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce, ‘Today is an Observance day’.”

4.15.5 Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should it be announced?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce it in good time through a monk who is an elder.” Now at that time a certain elder did not remember in good time. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce it even at meal-time.” He did not remember even at mealtime. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce it at whatever time he⁴ remembers.”

¹ sabbeh’eva. ² gaṇamaggena gaṇetuṃ. ³ salākaṃ gaḥetuṃ. ⁴ I.e. the elder.

ALLOWANCE FOR PRELIMINARY DUTIES

Now at that time the Observance-hall in a certain residence came to be soiled. Incoming monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these monks not sweep the Observance-hall?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to sweep the Observance-hall."

Then it occurred to monks: "Now, by whom should an Observance-hall be swept?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder." Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not sweep. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, one who is not ill should not not sweep when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not sweep, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Now at that time a seat was not prepared in an Observance-hall. Monks sat on the ground. Their limbs and robes became covered with dust. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to prepare a seat in the Observance-hall." Then it occurred to monks: "Now, by whom should a seat in the Observance-hall be prepared?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder." Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not prepare (a seat). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, one who is not ill should not not prepare (a seat) when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not prepare (a seat), there is an offence of wrong doing."

Now at that time there came to be no light in an Observance-hall. Monks trod on (one another's) bodies and robes in the dark. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to make a light¹ in an Observance-hall." Then it occurred to monks: "Now, by whom is the light to be made in an Observance-hall?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder." Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not light a lamp.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, one who is not ill should not not light a lamp when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not light a lamp, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

¹ padīpaṃ kātuṃ.

At that time in a certain residence resident monks neither set out drinking water nor did they set out water for washing. Incoming monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these resident monks neither set out drinking water nor set out water for washing?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to set out drinking water and water for washing."

Then it occurred to monks: "Now, by whom should drinking water and water for washing be set out?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder." Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not set out (the water). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, one who is not ill should not not set out (water) when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not set it out, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

THE STORY OF THOSE TRAVELLING TO DISTANT PARTS, ETC.

Now at that time ignorant inexperienced monks, travelling to distant parts,² did not ask teachers and preceptors (for permission). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "This is a case, monks, where several ignorant inexperienced monks, travelling to distant parts, do not ask teachers and preceptors (for permission). Monks, they should be asked by these teachers and preceptors: 'Where will you go? With whom will you go?' If, monks, these ignorant experi- enced ones should cite other ignorant inexperienced ones, then, monks, they should not be allowed to go by the teachers and preceptors. If they should allow them (to go), there is an offence of wrong-doing. And if, monks, these ignorant inexperienced ones should go (although) not allowed by¹ the teachers and preceptors, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ padīpeti, to light up, to light a lamp. ² disaṃgamikā; cf. Vin 1.263; and Kd 1.25.24 where those who share cells may not leave the district (disā) without asking the preceptors for permission.

“This is a case, monks, where several ignorant inexperienced monks are staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. These do not know the Observance or a (formal) act for Observance or the Pātimokkha or the recital of the Pātimokkha. A certain monk arrives there. He has heard much, he is one to whom the tradition has been handed down,² he is an expert on dhamma, an expert on discipline, an expert on the summaries³; he is wise, experienced, clever; he is conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. Monks, that monk should be furthered⁴ by those monks, he should be helped,⁵ he should be encouraged,⁶ he should be supported⁷ in regard to chunam, clay, tooth-wood, water for washing the face. If he should not be furthered, helped, encouraged, supported in regard to chunam, clay, tooth-wood, water for washing the face, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“This is a case, monks, where several ignorant, inexperienced monks are staying in a certain residence on an Observance-day. These do not know the Observance ... or the recital of the Pātimokkha. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks, saying: ‘Do go, your reverence, having mastered the Pātimokkha in brief or in full, come back’. If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, those monks, one and all, should go to a residence where they know the

¹ anānuññatā, defined at Vin 4.335 as anāpucchā, not asking (for permission). Permission has to be asked for before it can be given. ² āgatāgama. See BD 3.71, n. 1.

³ Cf. AN i.117, AN ii.147, AN iii.179f. ⁴ saṃgahetabbo. This word is used with the next (anuggahetabbo) above, BD 4.67. ⁵ anuggahetabbo. See definition of anuggaṇheyya at Vin 4.325 (BD 3.376). The word occurs above, BD 4.67. ⁶ upalāpetabbo. Cf. definition of upalāpeyya at Vin 4.140 (BD 3.34). ⁷ upaṭṭhāpetabbo. Cf. definition of upaṭṭhāpeyya at Vin 4.140 (BD 3.34).

1.120
2.21.4
Observance ... or the recital of the Pātimokkha. If they should not go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

This is a case, monks, where several ignorant, inexperienced monks are spending the rains in a certain residence. These do not know ... (as above in Kd 2.21.4) ... If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, one monk should be sent off for seven days (with the words): ‘Do go, your reverence, having mastered the Pātimokkha in brief or in full, come back’. If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, these monks should not spend the rains in that residence. If they should spend them (there), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ON GIVING ENTIRE PURITY

2.22.1
4.159
2.22.2
Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Gather together, monks, the Order will carry out the Observance.” When he had spoken thus, a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: “There is, Lord, a monk who is ill. He has not come.” He said: “I allow you, monks, to declare¹ entire purity² on behalf of a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be declared: That ill monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I will declare entire purity; convey entire purity for me, announce entire purity for me.’ If he makes it understood by gesture, if he makes it understood by voice, if he makes it understood by gesture and voice, the entire purity comes to be declared. If he does not make it understood by gesture, if he does not make it understood by voice, if he does not make it understood by gesture and voice, the entire purity does not come to be declared.

“If he thus manages this, it is good; if he does not manage it, then, monks, that ill monk, having been brought to the midst of the Order on a couch or a chair, the Observance may be carried out. If, monks, it occurs to the monks who are tending the ill one: ‘If we move the ill one from (this) place, either the disease will grow much worse or he will die’¹, monks, the ill one should not be moved from (that) place; the Order, having gone there, should carry out the Observance. The Observance should not be carried out by an incomplete Order.² If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ dātuṃ, literally to give. Cf. chandam dātuṃ at Vin 4.151 (BD 3.58) and below, BD 4.161.

² pārisuddhi, cf. above, BD 4.132. It means that the ill monk believes that he has committed none of the offences specified in the Pātimokkha, or that, if he has, he has confessed them, so that in regard to them he is pure.

“If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity goes away then and there,³ although the entire purity was declared (to him)⁴, the entire purity should be declared to another. If, monks, the conveyor of the entire purity leaves the Order then and there although the entire purity was declared (to him), if he passes away, if he pretends to be a novice,⁵ if he pretends to be a disavower of the training,⁶ if he pretends to be a committer of an extreme offence,⁷ if he pretends to be mad,⁸ if he pretends to be unhinged,⁹ if he pretends to have bodily pains,¹⁰ if he pretends to be one who is suspended¹¹ for not seeing an offence, if he pretends to be one who is suspended for not making amends for an offence, if he pretends to be one who is suspended for not giving up a wrong view, if he pretends to be a eunuch,¹² if he pretends to be one living in communion as it were by theft,¹³ if he pretends to be one who has gone over to another sect¹⁴, if he pretends to be an animal,¹ if he pretends to be a matricide,² if he pretends to be a parricide,³ if he pretends to be a slayer of one perfected,⁴ if he pretends to be a seducer of a nun,⁵ if he pretends to be a schismatic,⁶ if he pretends to be a shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood,⁷ if he pretends to be a hermaphrodite,⁸ the entire purity should be declared to another.

¹ kālamkiriya bhavissati, literally there will be a doing of (his) time. ² As above, Kd 2.11.1, and several times below. ³ tatth’eva. Vin-a 1062, if he goes elsewhere, not to the midst of the Order. ⁴ The one who has undertaken to convey the entire purity shelves his responsibility and does not carry out the message entrusted to him. ⁵ Cf. the following sequence and the three preceding items: going away and leaving the Order and passing away, with Vin 1.135, Vin 1.167–Vin.1.168, Vin 1.307, Vin 1.320, Vin 2.173. ⁶ See BD 1.40ff. At AN v.71 the presence of a “disavower of the training” is given as one of the reasons why the Pātimokkha may be suspended. ⁷ antimavatthum ajjhāpannako, meaning a Pārajika offence; cf. BD 4.180. ⁸ Reasons for exemption from the penalty for an offence as given in Suttavibhaṅga. ⁹ Reasons for exemption from the penalty for an offence as given in Suttavibhaṅga. ¹⁰ Reasons for exemption from the penalty for an offence as given in Suttavibhaṅga. ¹¹ ukkhitta, cf. BD 3.28, n. 4. ¹² Not to be ordained, above BD 4.109. ¹³ theyyasamvāsaka; not to be ordained, cf. above, BD 4.110. ¹⁴ titthiyapakkantaka; not to be ordained, see above, BD 4.110.

“If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity goes away while he is on the road,⁹ although the entire purity was declared (to him), the entire purity comes to be not conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity leaves the Order while he is on the road, although the entire purity was declared (to him), if he passes away ... if he pretends to be a hermaphrodite, the entire purity comes to be not conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, after the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order, then goes away, the entire purity comes to be conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, after the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order, then leaves the Order, passes away, ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite, the entire purity comes to be conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, after the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order does not announce it because he has fallen asleep, does not announce it because he is indolent, does not announce it because he is attaining (what is higher¹⁰), the entire purity comes to be conveyed; there is no offence for the conveyer of the entire purity. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, although the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order, intentionally does not announce it, the entire purity comes to be conveyed (but) there is an offence of wrong-doing for the conveyer of the entire purity.”

¹ Not to be ordained, above BD 4.111. ² Not to be ordained, above BD 4.112. ³ Not to be ordained, above BD 4.112 ⁴ Not to be ordained, above BD 4.113. ⁵ Not to be ordained, above BD 4.113. ⁶ Not to be ordained, above BD 4.113. ⁷ Not to be ordained, above BD 4.113. ⁸ Not to be ordained, above BD 4.113. ⁹ While he is on the way to the Order; if he goes elsewhere. ¹⁰ samāpanno, a term which has the technical sense of attaining the attainments, samāpatti. See BD 2.177, n. 5, n. 6.

ON GIVING CONSENT

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Gather together, monks, the Order will carry out a (formal) act.” When he had spoken thus a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, there is a monk who is ill; he has not come.” He said: “I allow you, monks, to give the consent¹ for a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I will give the consent, convey the consent for me, announce the consent for me’. If he makes it understood by gesture, if he makes it understood by voice, if he makes it understood by gesture and voice, the consent comes to be given. If he does not make it understood by gesture, if he does not make it understood by voice, if he does not make it understood by gesture and voice, the consent does not come to be given.

“If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, having taken that ill monk to the midst of the Order on a couch or a chair, a (formal) act may be carried out. If, monks, it occurs to the monks who are tending the ill one: ‘If we move the ill one from (this) place, either the disease will grow much worse or he will die’, monks, the ill one should not be moved from (that) place; the Order, having gone there, should carry out the (formal) act. A (formal) act should not be carried out by an incomplete Order. If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“If, monks, the conveyer of the consent goes away then and there although the consent was given (to him), the consent should be given to another. If, monks, the conveyer of the consent leaves the Order then and there, although the consent was given (to him), if he dies ... if he pretends to be a hermaphrodite, the consent should be given to another. If, monks, the conveyer of the consent goes away while he is on the road, although the consent was given to him, the consent comes to be not conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the consent leaves the Order while he is on the road ... (as in Kd 2.22.4) ... there is an offence of wrong-doing for the conveyer of the consent. I allow you, monks, on an Observance day, to give the consent also, by declaring the entire purity; they are the Order's business¹."

¹ chandariṃ dātuṃ, see BD 3.58, BD 3.61. It is here the ‘consent’ to send leave of absence by proxy.

ON BEING GRABBED BY RELATIVES

Now at that time his relations got hold of a certain monk on an Observance day. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "This is a case, monks, where his relations get hold of a monk on an Observance day. These relations should be spoken to thus by the monks: 'Please will you, venerable ones,² let go of this monk for a short time³ while this monk carries out the Observance?'

"If they manage this thus, it is good. If they do not manage it, these relations should be spoken to thus by the monks: 'Please will you, venerable ones, stand at a respectful distance for a short time while this monk declares his entire purity?' If they manage this thus, it is good. If they do not manage it, these relations should be spoken to thus by the monks: 'Please will you, venerable ones, take this monk outside the boundary⁴ for a short time while the Order carries out the Observance?' If they manage this thus, it is good. If they do not manage it the Observance should not be carried out by an incomplete Order. If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

"This is a case, monks, where kings get hold of a monk on an Observance day ... thieves ... men of abandoned life⁵ ... monks who are opponents of monks⁶ get hold of a monk on an Observance day. These monks who are opponents of monks should be spoken to thus by the monks: ‘Please will you ... (as in Kd 2.24.1, Kd 2.24.2) ... the Observance should not be carried out by an incomplete Order. If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.’

¹ santi saṅghassa karaṇīyaṃ. Same expression occurs at beginning of Kd 2.25.1. Karaṇīya is something to be done, a duty; cf. Kd 4.3.5. ² An occasion where monks address lay people with the honorific title āyasmā. ³ muhuttaṃ, for a moment.

⁴ While outside an Order's boundary a monk would not be a member of that Order, and so his absence or his failure to get his entire purity declared would not render that Order "incomplete". ⁵ dhutta. See BD 1.234, n. 1. ⁶ Cf. BD 1.49f.

AGREEMENT FOR THE MAD

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: ‘Gather together, monks, there is business for the Order.’¹ When he had spoken thus a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: ‘There is, Lord, the mad monk Gagga²; he has not come.’ He said: ‘There are, monks, these two (kinds of) madmen: there is the mad monk who now remembers the Observance, now does not remember it; who now remembers a (formal) act of the Order, now does not remember it. He is one who does not remember aright.³ (And there is the one) who now comes for the Observance, now does not come for it, who now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it. He is one who does not come aright.

‘In a case, monks, where this madman now remembers the Observance, now does not remember it ... now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it, I allow you, monks, to give the agreement for a madman⁴ to such a madman.

And thus, monks, should it be given: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The mad monk Gagga now remembers the Observance, now does not remember it, now remembers a (formal) act of the Order, now does not remember it; he now comes for the Observance, now does not come for it; now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should give the agreement for a madman to the mad monk Gagga, so that whether the monk Gagga⁵ remembers the Observance or does not remember it, whether he remembers a (formal) act of the Order or does not remember it, whether he comes for the Obser-

¹ atthi saṅghassa karaṇiyam. ² Cf. Vin 2.8off. ³ eva. ⁴ ummattakasammuti.

⁵ “mad” omitted here in text.

Vin 1.12

Kd 2.25

BD 4.11

Kd 2.25

Kd 2.25

vance or does not come for it, whether he comes for a (formal) act of the Order or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga can carry out the Observance, can carry out a (formal) act of the Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The mad monk Gagga now remembers the Observance ... now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it. The Order is giving the agreement for a madman to the mad monk Gagga so that whether the monk Gagga remembers ... or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga will carry out the Observance, will carry out a (formal) act of the Order. If the giving of the agreement for a madman to the mad monk Gagga so that whether he remembers ... or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga will carry out the Observance, will carry out a (formal) act of the Order, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The agreement for a madman is given by the Order to the mad monk Gagga, so that whether he remembers ... or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga will carry out the Observance, will carry out a (formal) act of the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this'."

THE OBSERVANCE BY AN ORDER, ETC.

Now at that time four monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: "It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance should be carried out, but we are (only) four persons.¹ Now how can the Observance be carried out by us?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (of you)."

Now at that time three monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: "It is allowed by the Lord to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (of us), but we are (only) three persons. Now how can the Observance be carried out by us?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity¹ when there are three (of you).²

¹ See the scope of the powers of the "five (kinds of) Order" at Vin 1.319.

"And thus, monks, should it be carried out: These monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Let the venerable ones listen to me. Today is an Observance day, the fifteenth. If it seems right to the venerable ones, let us carry out the Observance with one another by way of entire purity'. A monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to these monks: 'I, your reverences,³ am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverences, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverences, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure'.

"A newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms should speak thus to these monks: 'I, honoured sirs,⁴ am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, honoured sirs, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, honoured sirs, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure'."

Now at that time two monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: "It is allowed by the Lord to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (persons), to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are three, but we are (only) two persons. Now how can the Observance be carried out by us?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are two (of you).

¹ pārisuddhiuposatham. ² See next two paragraphs. ³ āvuso. It is apparently assumed that there is one elder at least and one or two juniors, otherwise the elder would doubtless have addressed the others as bhante. ⁴ bhante, because it appears to be assumed that at least one elder was present.

1.125 “And thus, monks, should it be carried out: The monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat 2.26.7 down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should 4.166 speak thus to the newly ordained monk: ‘I, your reverence, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverence, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverence, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure’.

“The newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to the monk who is an elder: ‘I, honoured sir, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I,
honoured sir, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, honoured sir, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure’.”

2.26.8 Now at that time one monk was staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to this monk: “It is allowed by the Lord to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (persons), to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are three, to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are two, but I am alone. Now how can the Observance be carried out by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

2.26.9 “This is a case, monks, where one monk is staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. That monk, having swept that place to which monks return—an attendance hall or a pavilion or the root of a tree—having put out drinking water and water for washing, having made ready a seat, having made a light, should sit down. If other monks arrive, the Observance should be carried out together with them; if they do not arrive, it should be determined¹, ‘Today is an Observance day for me’. If he should not (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

26.10 “Monks, there where four monks are standing, the Pātimokkha should not be recited by three (persons), having conveyed the entire purity for one. If they should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, there where three monks are staying, the Observance by way of entire purity should not be carried out by two, having conveyed the entire purity for one. If they should (so) carry it out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, there where two monks are staying, it should not be determined by one having conveyed the entire purity for the other. If he should (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ adhīṭṭhātabbāri; see BD 1.128, n. 3.

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS FOR OFFENCES

Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into an offence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance should not be carried out by an offender,¹ but I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have fallen into an offence on an Observance day. Monks, that monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I, your reverence, have fallen into such and such an offence, I confess² it’. It should be said by him³: ‘Do you see it?’ ‘Yes, I see it’. ‘You should be restrained in the future’.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk becomes doubtful of an offence on an Observance day. Monks, that monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I, your reverence, am doubtful as to such and such an offence. When I come to be without doubt, then will I make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.”

¹ See Kd 19.2. ² paṭidesemi. ³ I.e. by the monk whom the offender approached.

Now at that time the group of six monks confessed¹ a collective² offence. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a collective offence should not be confessed. Whoever should confess it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” At that time the group of six monks acknowledged a collective offence. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a collective offence should not be acknowledged. Whoever should acknowledge (such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

PROCEDURE FOR AN OFFENCE WITHOUT MAKING OBSTACLE

2.27.4
4.168
Now at that time a certain monk remembered an offence while the Pātimokkha was being recited. Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance should not be carried out by an offender, and I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk remembers an offence while the Pātimokkha is being recited. Monks, this monk should speak thus to the monk next to him: ‘I, your reverence, have fallen into such and such an offence. Having removed from here I will make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.

2.27.5
“This is a case, monks, where a monk becomes doubtful as to an offence while the Pātimokkha is being recited. Monks, this monk should speak thus to the monk next to him: ‘I, your reverence, am doubtful as to such and such an offence. When I come to be without doubt, then will I make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.”

¹ desenti. ² sabhāgā, shared in by them all, but whether acting together or singly is not clear. Vin-a 1064 instances eating at the wrong time or eating what has not been left over.

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS FOR A SHARED OFFENCE

Now at that time the whole Order in a certain residence came to have fallen into a collective offence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that a collective offence should not be confessed, that a collective offence should not be acknowledged, but this whole Order has fallen into a collective offence. Now what line or conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the whole Order comes to have fallen into a collective offence on an Observance day. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks, with the words: ‘Go along, your reverence, and come back having made amends for that offence, and we will make amends for the offence in your presence’.

“If they thus manage this, it is good. If they do not manage it, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This whole Order has fallen into a collective offence. When it shall see another monk, a pure one, not an offender, then it shall make amends for that offence in his presence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the whole Order comes to be doubtful about a collective offence on an Observance day. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This whole Order is doubtful about a collective offence. When it comes to be without doubt, then will it make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pāti-

Kd 2.27

Vin 1.12

Kd 2.27

BD 4.1

Kd 2.27

mokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the Order, entered on the rains, has fallen into a collective offence. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks with the words ... (as in Kd 2.27.6, Kd 2.27.7) ... If they do not manage it, one monk should be sent away for seven days, with the words: ‘Go along, your reverence, and come back having made amends for that offence, and we will make amends for that offence in your presence’.”

Now at that time in a certain residence the whole Order came to have fallen into a collective offence. It did not know the name or the class¹ of that offence. A certain monk came there; he had heard much, he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down²; he was an expert on dhamma, an expert on discipline, an expert on the summaries; he was wise, experienced, clever; he was conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training.³ A certain monk approached that monk; having approached, he spoke thus to him: “What kind of an offence does he fall into, your reverence, who does such and such a thing?”

He spoke thus: “Whoever does such and such a thing, your reverence, falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverence, have fallen into; make amends for this offence.” He spoke thus: “I, your reverence, have not fallen into this offence altogether alone; this whole Order has fallen into this offence.” He spoke thus: “What has it to do with you, your reverence, whether another has fallen or has not fallen? Please do you, your reverence, remove⁴ your own offence.”

Then that monk, having at that monk’s bidding made amends for that offence, approached those monks; having approached them, he spoke thus to those monks: “It is said, your reverences, that whoever does such and such a thing falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverences, have fallen into; make amends for this offence.” But these monks did not want to make amends for that offence at that monk’s bidding. They told this matter to the lord. He said:

¹ gotta. ² Cf. above, BD 4.157. ³ Cf. above, BD 4.157. ⁴ vuṭṭhaha.

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the whole Order comes to have fallen into a collective offence. It does not know the name or the class of that offence. A certain monk comes there; he has heard much ... desirous of training. A certain monk approaches that monk; having approached, he speaks thus to that monk: ‘What land of offence does he fall into, your reverence, who does such and such a thing?’

“He speaks thus: ‘Whoever does such and such a thing, your reverence, falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverence, have fallen into; make amends for this offence’. He speaks thus: ‘I, your reverence, have not fallen into this offence altogether alone; this whole Order has fallen into this offence’. He speaks thus: ‘What has it to do with you, your reverence, whether another has fallen or has not fallen? Please do you, your reverence, remove your own offence.’

“Then if that monk, having at that monk’s bidding made amends for that offence, approaches those monks and having approached them speaks thus to those monks: ‘It is said, your reverence, that whoever does such and such a thing falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverences, have fallen into; make amends for this offence’; and if, monks, these monks should make amends for that offence at that monk’s bidding, that is good. But if they should not make amends for it, then, monks, these monks need not be spoken to by that monk if he is not willing¹.”

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Codanāvattu

¹ akāmā, cf. Vin 3.186 (BD 1.328). If the offending monks do not wish to make amends, the other monk need not speak to them—perhaps meaning that he need not speak to them in the words given at the end of Kd 2.27.14 above. But cf. AN ii.113, “For this is destruction ... where a Truthfinder or his fellow Brahma-farers deem that he is one who should not be spoken to”.

FIFTY CASES OF NO OFFENCE

2.28.1 Now at that time in a certain residence several resident monks, four or more, collected together on an Observance day. They did not know 1.129 that there were other resident monks who had not arrived. Thinking¹ of the rule,² thinking of discipline, thinking that they were complete, they carried out the Observance, they recited the Pātimokkha while they were incomplete. While the Pātimokkha was being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number,³ arrived. They told 2.28.2 this matter to the Lord.

He said: “This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence
... (as in Kd 2.28.1 above) ... recite the Pātimokkha while they are incomplete. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by these monks,⁴ and there is no offence for the reciters.

2.28.3 “This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence ... (as in Kd 2.28.2 above) ... While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should be heard, and there is no offence for the reciters.

4.172 “This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd 2.28.2 above) ... While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should 2.28.4 be heard, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha may be recited again by these monks, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them, other resident monks, a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence,¹ and there is no offence for the reciters.

¹ saññīno. ² dhamma, i.e. the rules that Observance should be carried out by a complete assembly. ³ I.e. than those already assembled. ⁴ Presumably meaning by those already assembled together, and who have already recited part of it; cf. Kd 2.29.1 below, where they incur an offence of wrong-doing for reciting it when they know that they are incomplete.

“This is a case, monks, ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and the assembly has not risen, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha may be recited again by those monks, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks ... a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and part of the assembly has risen, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive ... (as in Kd 2.28.5 above) ... a like number ... a smaller number ...

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and the whole assembly has risen, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive ... (as in Kd 2.28.6 above) ... a like number ... a smaller number ...

Told are the Fifteen Cases in which there is No Offence

FIFTY CASES OF PERCEIVING IT IS A GROUP OR NOT A GROUP

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence several resident monks, four or more, collect together on an Observance day. They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Thinking of the rule, thinking of discipline, thinking that they are incomplete, they carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha while they are incomplete. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by those monks, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

¹ This means that the monks arriving late must announce their entire purity to the ones already assembled and who had recited the Pātimokkha.

2.29.2 “This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd 2.29.1) ... a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should be heard, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

This is a case, monks (as in Kd 2.29.1) ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should be heard, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

2.29.3 “This is a case, monks ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and the assembly has not risen ... part of the assembly has risen ... the whole assembly has risen, and other resident monks, a larger number ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Told are the Fifteen Cases on thinking that (an Assembly) is incomplete when it is incomplete

FIFTY CASES OF DOUBT

2.30.1 “This is a case, monks ... They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Thinking: ‘Now, is it allowable for us to carry out the Observance or is it not allowable?’ they carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha (although) they are in doubt. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by those monks ... (cf. Kd 2.29.2, Kd 2.29.3) ... an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... (cf. Kd 2.29.2, Kd 2.29.3) ... an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Told are the Fifteen Cases on being in Doubt

FIFTY CASES OF ACTING BADLY

“This is a case, monks, ... They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Thinking: ‘Indeed, it is allowable for us to carry out the Observance, it is not unallowable for us’, they, acting badly,¹ carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by these monks, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... (cf. Kd 2.29.2, Kd 2.29.3) ... an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Acting Badly

FIFTY CASES OF AIMING AT SCHISM

“This is a case, monks, ... They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Saying, ‘These are perishing, these are being destroyed, what good are these to you?’ they carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha aiming at a schism, ... (as in Kd 2.29.2, Kd 2.29.3; instead of offence of wrong-doing read grave offence.)

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Aiming at a Schism

Told are the Seventy-five Cases.²

¹ kukkucapakatā, explained at Vin-a 1065 as overcome, doing as they wished.

² Five times fifteen cases, in Kd 2.28-Kd 2.32.

ABBREVIATED REPETITIONS ON ENTERING A BOUNDARY

^{2,33,1} “This is a case, monks, ... They know that other resident monks are entering within the boundary. They know that other resident monks have entered within the boundary. They see other resident monks entering within the boundary. They see other resident monks entered within the boundary. They hear that other resident monks are entering within the boundary. They hear that other resident monks have entered within the boundary.

^{4,175} “From a hundred and seventy-five triads referring to resident (monks) with resident (monks); to incoming (monks) with resident (monks); to resident (monks) with incoming (monks); to incoming (monks) with incoming (monks), there come to be seven hundred triads by means of (these) sets.¹

^{2,34,1} “This is a case, monks, where the fourteenth is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the fifteenth for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the incoming ones should accommodate themselves to the resident ones. If they are equal in number, the incoming ones should accommodate themselves to the resident ones. If the incoming ones are larger in number, the resident ones should accommodate themselves to the incoming ones.

^{2,34,2} “This is a case, monks, where the fifteenth is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the fourteenth for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the incoming ones should accommodate themselves to the resident ones. If ... (as in Kd 2.34.1 above) ...

^{2,34,3} “This is a case, monks, where the first day of a lunar fortnight² is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the fifteenth for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the resident ones, if they are not willing, need not hold a meeting³ with the incoming ones. The Observance should be carried out by the incoming ones having gone outside the boundary. If they are equal in number, the resident ones, if they are not willing, need not hold a meeting with the incoming ones. The Observance should be carried out by the incoming ones having gone outside the boundary. If the incoming ones are larger in number, the resident ones should hold a meeting with the incoming ones or they should go outside the boundary.

¹ peyyālamukhena, as at Vism 46. Peyyāla = pariyāya, and is arrangement, order, disposition. Each “set” refers to each pair (resident with resident ... incoming with incoming) of triads in all its permutations and combinations: they know, they see, they hear, and they do not know, see and hear. ² pāṭipada, cf. BD 2.314, n. 1. ³ na dātābbā sāmaggī, need not give completion to.

“This is a case, monks, where the fifteenth is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the first day of the lunar fortnight for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the incoming ones should hold a meeting with the resident ones or they should go outside the boundary. If they are equal in number, the incoming ones should hold a meeting with the resident ones or they should go outside the boundary. If the incoming ones are larger in number, the incoming ones, if they are not willing, need not hold a meeting with the resident ones. The Observance should be carried out by the resident ones having gone outside the boundary.

SEEING CHARACTERISTICS, ETC.

“This is a case, monks, where incoming monks see signs of residence of resident monks, features of residence, marks of residence, indications of residence, carefully prepared couches and chairs, mattresses and squatting mats, carefully arranged water for drinking and water for washing, carefully swept cells; but having seen (these signs) they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there resident monks, or are there not?’

“If these, being doubtful, do not search and, not having searched, carry out the Observance, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched do not see (any monks), and if not having seen (any) they carry out the Observance, there is no offence. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched see (some monks), and if having seen (them) they carry out the Observance together, there is no offence. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched see (some monks), and if having seen (them) they carry out the Observance apart, there is an offence of wrongdoing. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched see (some monks), and if having seen (them) they say: 'You are perishing, you are being destroyed, what is the good of these to you?'¹ and carry out the Observance aiming at a schism, there is a grave offence.

^{234.7} “This is a case, monks, where incoming monks hear signs of residence of resident monks, features of residence, marks of residence, indications of residence, the sound of footsteps as they are pacing up and down, the sound of studying, the sound of coughing, the sound of sneezing; but having heard they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there resident monks or are there not?’ If these, being doubtful, do not search ... (=Kd 2.34.6) ... there is a grave offence.

^{4.177} “This is a case, monks, where resident monks see signs of incoming of incoming monks, features of incoming, marks of incoming, indications of incoming, unknown bowls, unknown robes, unknown pieces of cloth to sit upon, water for washing the feet sprinkled about; but having seen (these signs), they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there incoming monks or are there not?’ If these, being doubtful, do not search ... (=Kd 2.34.6) ... there is a grave offence.

^{234.8} “This is a case, monks, where resident monks hear signs of incoming of incoming monks, features of incoming, marks of incoming, indications of incoming, the sound of footsteps as they are arriving, the sound of sandals tapping, the sound of coughing, the sound of sneezing; but having heard they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there incoming monks or are there not?’ If these, being doubtful, do not search ... (=Kd 2.34.6) ... there is a grave offence.

PERFORMING OBSERVANCE WITH THOSE OF A DIFFERENT COMMUNION, ETC.

^{34.10} “This is a case, monks, where incoming monks see resident monks belonging to a different communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to the same communion; having got the (wrong) view that they belong to the same communion, if they do not ask, and not having asked carry out the Observance together, there is no offence. If they ask, and having asked pay no attention,¹ and having paid no attention carry out the Observance together, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they ask, and having asked pay no attention, and having paid no attention carry out the Observance apart, there is no offence.

“This is a case, monks, where incoming monks see resident monks belonging to the same communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to a different communion. Having got the (wrong) view that they belong to a different communion, if they do not ask, and not having asked carry out the Observance together, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they ask, and having asked pay attention, and having paid attention carry out the Observance apart, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they ask, and having asked pay attention, and having paid attention carry out the Observance together, there is no offence.

“This is a case, monks, where resident monks see incoming monks belonging to a different communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to the same communion ... (= Kd 2.34.10) ... there is no offence.

“This is a case, monks, where resident monks see incoming monks belonging to the same communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to a different communion ... (= Kd 2.34.11) ... there is no offence.

¹ As in BD 2.32 above. ¹ nābhivitaranti. Vin-a 1066 says “they are not able to neglect the status of a differing communion; the meaning is: they do not make them give up that wrong view”. Cf. Vin 3.73 where abhivitaritvā appears to mean “having committed”. Pali-English Dictionary gives for abhivitarati “to pay heed, to observe”, Critical Pali Dictionary merely says “to come to an end”.

PORTION ON SHOULD NOT GO

2:35:1 “Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks except with an Order,¹ except there be a danger.² Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence³ where there are no monks except with an Order, except there be a danger. Monks, you should not go ... either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks except with an Order, except there be a danger.

2:35:2 “Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks except ... Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from what is not a residence where, there are monks to what is not a residence where there are no monks except ... Monks, you should not go ... from what is not a residence where there are monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with an Order, except there be a danger.

2:35:3 “Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from either a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks except with an Order, except there be a danger. Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are no monks to what is not a residence where there are no monks except ... a danger. Monks, you should not go ... either from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are no monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except ... a danger.

2:35:4

¹ Unless there go sufficient monks to form an Order. Cf. 35 with Kd 12.1.3, Kd 12.1.4.

² See above, Kd 2.15.4, where ten “dangers” are enumerated. ³ Vin-a 1066 says to a place where a hall and so forth are undergoing repairs.

“Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with an Order, except there be a danger. Monks, you should not go ... from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion ... a danger. Monks, you should not go ... from a residence where there are monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks ... (cf. Kd 2.35.1, Kd 2.35.2, Kd 2.35.3) ... Monks, you should not go ... either from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there belong to a different communion, except with an Order, except there be a danger.

PORTION ON SHOULD GO

“Monks, you may go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks should the monks there belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day’. Monks, you may go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks should the monks there belong to the same communion, and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day’ ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks ... from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... to what is not a residence where there are monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks ... Monks, you may go on an Observance day from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... to what is not a residence where there are monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks should the monks there belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day’.

Kd 2.35

BD 4.1

SEEING A BLAMEWORTHY PERSON

2.36.1 “Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly (of monks) before a nun. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly (of monks) before a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... one who has disavowed the training ... who has committed an extreme offence. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

2.36.2 “The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before one suspended for not seeing an offence. Whoever should (so) recite it should be dealt with according to the rule.¹ The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before one suspended for not making amends for an offence ... before one suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Whoever should (so) recite it should be dealt with according to the rule.²

2.36.3 “The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before a eunuch.³ Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before one living in communion as it were by theft ... before one who has gone over to a sect ... before an animal ... before a matricide ... before a parricide ... before a slayer of one perfected ... before a seducer of a nun ... before a schismatic ... before a shedder of (a Truth-finder’s) blood ... before a hermaphrodite.⁴ Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

2.36.4 “Monks, Observance should not be carried out by declaring the entire purity of one on probation⁵ unless the assembly has not risen. And, monks, Observance should not be carried out on a non-Observance day unless the Order be unanimous”⁶

4.181

The Third Portion for Repeating in the Section on Observance

IN THIS SECTION ARE EIGHTY-SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

¹ Probably referring to Bu-Pc 69. See BD 3.28, n. 4. ² Probably referring to Bu-Pc 69. See BD 3.28, n. 4. ³ As in Kd 2.22.3 above. ⁴ As in Kd 2.22.3 above. ⁵ pārivāsika. Rules for monks under probation detailed in Kd 12, Kd 13. ⁶ See Kd 10.5.14.

Other sects and Bimbisāra, they assembled together in silence,
 on dhamma, in private,
 on the Pātimokkha, daily, thenceforth once,
 According to assembly, for all together, being all together, and Maddakucchi,
 a boundary, extensive, about a river, successive, two, and small ones,
 Newly ordained (monks), and then in Rājagaha, a boundary (as a place where a monk) is not away from (his robes), in agreeing first on the boundary,
 afterwards on abolishing the boundary,
 When not agreed upon a village boundary,
 the throwing of water in river,
 sea, lake, they combined, and likewise they placed within,
 How many? (formal) acts, recital, savages, and if there is not,
dhamma, discipline, they threatened, again a threat to discipline,
 Reproof, if leave is given,
 a protest against what is not legally valid, more than four or five, opinion, intentionally, and if he would exert himself,
 With laymen, unbidden, in Codanā (vatthu),
 he did not know,
 several did not know, immediately,
 and if he should not go,
 Which? how many? and to announce at a distance,
 he did not remember,
 Soiled, a seat, a light, distant parts,
 another who has heard much,
 Immediately, Observance day and the rains, and a (formal) act of entire purity, relations, Gagga, four and three, two and one,
 an offence, collective (offence), he remembered,
 The whole Order, doubtful, they did not know,
 one who has heard much,
 a larger, a like, a smaller (number),
 and when the assembly has not risen,
 Some have risen, all,
 and they know, they are doubtful,

Those (acting) badly say, 'Indeed it is allowable', knowing, seeing, and they hear,
Let them come if (a monk) is residing,
the four (sets of) fifteen (cases) again,
the first day of a fortnight (and) the fifteenth,
both communions (by) mark,
One on probation (and) a non-Observance day, unless the Order be unanimous.
These partitioned keys are needed for distinguishing the items.

3. RAINS (VASSA)

ALLOWANCE TO ENTER THE RAINS

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time (the use of) a rains-residence for monks had not come to be laid down by the Lord. So these monks¹ walked on tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains.

People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, walk on tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains, trampling down the crops and grasses, injuring life that is one-facultied and bringing many small creatures to destruction²? Shall it be that those members of other sects, whose rules are badly kept, cling to and prepare a rains-residence, shall it be that these birds, having made their nests in the tree-tops, cling to and prepare a rains-residence,³ while these recluses, sons of the Sakyans walk on a tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains, trampling down the crops and grasses, injuring life that is one-facultied and bringing many small creatures to destruction?"

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to enter upon the rains.”¹

¹ te'dha bhikkhū. Vin-a 1067 says that idha is only a conjunction; this is borne out by the several variant readings given at Vin 1.376. ² Cf. Vin 4.296 (BD 3.320) where it is made a pācittiya for nuns to walk on tour during the rains. ³ Quoted AN-a ii.97.

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, when should the rains be entered upon?” They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “I allow you, monks, to enter upon the rains in the rainy season².”

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, how many (periods) are there for beginning the rains³?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these two (periods) for beginning the rains: the earlier and the later.⁴ The earlier may be entered upon the day after (the full moon of) Āsāḷhī, the later may be entered upon a month after (the full moon of) Āsāḷhī.⁵ These, monks, are the two (periods) for beginning the rains.”

ON TOUR IN THE RAINS, ETC.

Now at that time the group of six monks, having entered upon the rains, walked on tour during the rains. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, walk on tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains, trampling down ... (as in Kd 3.1.2) ... bringing many small creatures to destruction?”

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, having entered upon the rains, walk on tour during the rains?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, having entered upon the rains, but not having kept either the first three months or the last three months, one should not set out on tour. Whoever should (thus) set out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ vassam upagantuṃ. ² vassāna. Cf. Vin 4.74, Vin 4.100, Vin 4.286. Vassāna, the rainy season, lasts for four months. Vassa, as meaning the rains-retreat for monks, had to be kept for three out of the four months of the rainy season. ³ vassupanāyikā. See GS i.47, n. 1, and Vinaya Texts i.299, n. 1. ⁴ Cf. AN i.51. AN-a ii.97 says that this was laid down twenty years after the lord had attained enlightenment. ⁵ These are two out of the three dates for allotting lodgings, Vin 2.167.

Now at that time the group of six monks did not want to enter upon the rains. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one should not enter upon the rains. Whoever should not enter upon (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, on a day for beginning the rains, not desiring to enter upon the rains, intentionally passed a residence by.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, on a day for beginning the rains, a residence should not be intentionally passed by one who does not desire to enter upon the rains. Whoever should pass one by, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, desiring to postpone the rains, sent a messenger to the monks, saying: “What if the masters could enter upon the rains at the next full-moon day?”² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to obey kings.”

ALLOWANCE FOR SEVEN DAYS BUSINESS

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour, in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. Then the Lord stayed there in Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time in the Kosala country a lay-follower, Udena,³ had had a dwelling-place built for an Order.¹ He sent a messenger to monks, saying: “Let the revered sirs come; I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks.”

¹ āvāsariṃ atikkamanti. ² juṇhe, explained at Vin-a 1068 as māse, month, and would therefore mean at the next period (a month later) for beginning the rains-retreat. This seems a better interpretation of juṇhe here than does the Pali-English Dictionary’s “bright fortnight of the month”. Cf. kāḷe and juṇhe below, BD 4.231. ³ Heard of nowhere but here I think.

Monks spoke thus: “It is laid down by the Lord, sir, that one should not set out on tour, having entered upon the rains and not having kept the first three months or the last three months. Let Udena, the lay-follower, wait until the monks have kept the rains; when they have finished the rains they will go. But if there is something urgent to be done,² let him establish³ the dwelling-place in the presence of resident monks who are already there.”⁴

The lay-follower, Udena, ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs, when sent for by me, not come, for I am a benefactor, a builder,⁵ a supporter of the Order?” Monks heard the lay-follower, Udena, as he ... spread it about Then these monks told this matter to the Lord.

Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to go if you are sent for by seven (classes of people), and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for: by a monk, a nun, a probationer, a novice, a woman novice, a lay-follower, a woman lay-follower. I allow you, monks, to go if you are sent for by these (seven classes of people) and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place for an Order comes to have been built by a lay-follower. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks’, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a curved house⁶ for an Order comes to have been built by a lay-follower ... a long house¹ ... a mansion² ... a cave³ ... a cell⁴ ... a porch ... an attendance hall⁵ ... a fire-hall ... a hut for what is allowable⁶ ... a privy ... a place for pacing up and down in⁷ ... a hall in the place for pacing up and down in⁸ ... a well ... a hall at the well ... a bathroom ... a hall in the bathroom ... a lotus pond ... a shed ... a monastery⁹ ... a site for a monastery comes to have been built by a lay-follower. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying:

¹ Cf. Vin 4.287 (BD 3.302), where “a certain lay follower” did likewise and wanted to give robe-material to both the Orders. ² accāyika karaṇīya, see BD 2.151, n. 6 for explanation and references. ³ patiṭṭhāpetu. At Vin 4.287 there was a “festival (maha) for the dwelling-place”, but patiṭṭhāpeti probably does not imply this. ⁴ tatth’eva.

⁵ kāraka, also a worker and a doer of good works. ⁶ Cf. above, BD 4.75.

‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks’, you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... a curved house ... a long house ... a site for a monastery (=Kd 3.5.6) ... for several monks, ... for one monk comes to have been built by a lay-follower ... The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... a site for a monastery¹⁰ for an Order of nuns, ... for several nuns ... for one nun ... for several probationers ... for one probationer ... for several novices ... for one novice ... for several women novices ... for one woman novice comes to have been built by a lay-follower. If he should send a messenger to monks¹¹ saying: ‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

¹ Cf. above, BD 4.75. ² Cf. above, BD 4.75. ³ Cf. above, BD 4.75. ⁴ This occurs again at Vin 2.159 with all except the last two of the following buildings. ⁵ upaṭṭhānasāla. See BD 2.194, n. 4. ⁶ kappiyakuṭi. Cf. same word at Vin 2.159, and see kappiyabhūmi at Vin 1.239 (below, BD 4.328.) Note that this is replaced in Kd 3.5.9 by “kitchen”. ⁷ caṅkama, monk’s walk. See Kd 15.14.2, Kd 15.14.3. ⁸ caṅkamanasālā. ⁹ ārāma, translated “park” in Kd 3.5.9 below. See BD 2.2, n. 2. ¹⁰ Same as the edifices given in Kd 3.5.6, except for the privy, bathroom and hall in a bathroom, the two former of which nuns are not to use (Vin 2.280). Editors of Vinaya Texts i.304, n. 1 say that they think the two cases referring to women novices should be excepted. ¹¹ Apparently monks had to accept gifts on behalf of the nuns.

4.188 “This is a case, monks, where a dwelling comes to have been built by a lay-follower for himself ... a sleeping-room ... a stable¹ ... a watch-tower² ... a quadrangular building³ ... a shop ... a hall for a shop ... a long house ... a mansion ... a cave ... a cell ... a porch ... an attendance ball ... a fire hall ... a kitchen⁴ ... a privy ... a place for pacing up and down in ... a hall in the place for pacing up and down in ... a well ... a hall at the well ... a bathroom ... a hall in the bathroom ... a lotus pond ... a shed ... a park⁵ ... a site for a park comes to have been built by a lay-follower for himself, or there comes to be his son’s marriage, or there comes to be his daughter’s marriage, or he becomes ill, or he speaks a well known discourse.⁶ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the revered sirs come, they will master this discourse before this discourse falls into oblivion’; or if he has some business, something to be done, and should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks’, you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

3.5.10 “This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place for an Order comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower. If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks’, you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

3.5.11 “This is a case, monks, where a curved house for an Order comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower ... (=Kd 3.5.6) ... a site for a monastery comes to have been built for an Order by a woman lay-follower. If she should send a messenger ... (=Kd 3.5.10) ... The return should be made in seven days.

¹ uddosita. See BD 2.16, n. 2, BD 3.177, n. 2. ² aṭṭa, see BD 2.16, n. 3. Mentioned also, with the next (māla) as a “lodging” at DN-a 209. ³ māla, see BD 2.16, n. 4. ⁴ rasavati, “possessing flavours”. Very likely the word occurs nowhere but here. Vin-a 1068 calls it bhattageha, food-house, perhaps “larder”. It replaces the kappiyakuṭi, hut for what is allowable, which in Kd 3.5.6 a lay follower may build for an Order. ⁵ ārāma, also meaning a monastery. ⁶ suttanta.

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... a site for a monastery for several monks ... for one monk ... for an Order of nuns ... for several nuns ... for one nun ... for several probationers ... for one probationer ... for several novices ... for one novice ... for several women novices ... for one woman novice comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower. If she should send a messenger ... (=Kd 3.5.8) ... The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower for herself ... (=Kd 3.5.9) ... or if she comes to be ill, or if she speaks a well known discourse. If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the masters come, and they will master this discourse before this discourse falls into oblivion or if she has some business, something to be done, and should send a messenger to monks, saying: “Let the masters come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... (=Kd 3.5.8) ... a site for a monastery for an Order ... for several monks, ... for one monk ... for an Order of nuns ... for several nuns ... for one nun ... for several probationers ... for one probationer ... for several novices ... for one novice ... for several women novices ... for one woman novice ... for him- (her-) self is built by a monk ... a nun ... a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice. If he (she) should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the revered sirs (masters) come. I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.”

ALLOWANCE FOR FIVE EVEN WHEN NOT SENT FOR

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill. He sent a messenger to monks, saying: “I, now, am ill, let monks come, I want monks to come”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, to five (classes of people): to a monk, a nun, a probationer, a novice, a woman novice. I allow you, monks, to go to these five (classes of people) even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.

3.6.2 “This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘I, now, am ill, let monks come, I want monks to come’, you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all 4.190 the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will look about for a meal for the invalid, or I will look about for a meal for the one who is tending the invalid, or I will look about for medicine for the invalid, or I will ask (after) him¹, or I will tend him’. The return should be made in seven days.

3.6.3 “This is a case, monks, where dissatisfaction comes to have arisen in a monk. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Dissatisfaction has arisen in me, let monks come, I want monks to come you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and it the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will allay his dissatisfaction or get (someone) to allay it, or I will give him a talk on dhamma’.² The return should be made in seven days.

3.6.4 “This is a case, monks, where remorse comes to have arisen in a monk. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Remorse has arisen in me ... I want monks to come’, you should go, monks, ... if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will dispel his remorse or get (someone) to dispel it, or I will give him a talk on dhamma’.³ The return should be made in seven days.

3.6.5 “This is a case, monks, where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a monk. If he should send ... if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will dissuade him from the wrong view or get (someone) to dissuade him, or I will give him a talk on dhamma'. The return should be made in seven days.

¹ pucchāmi, I think meaning to inquire after his health here (cf. “monks asking after ill ones”, BD 2.341, BD 2.399, BD 2.402), and not to “ask him (questions referring to the Dhamma)”, as at Vinaya Texts i.306, and which is more usually paripucchati. ² Cf. Kd 1.25. Kd 1.20, Kd 1.21; Kd 12.1-3. ³ Cf. Kd 1.25. Kd 1.20, Kd 1.21; Kd 12.1-Kd.12.3.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed an offence against an important rule and to deserve probation.¹ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'I have committed an offence against an important rule, I deserve probation, let monks come, I want monks to come', you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will make an effort for placing (him) on probation, or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group'.² The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk deserves to be sent back to the beginning.³ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'I deserve to be sent back to the beginning, let monks come, I want monks to come you should go monks, even if not sent for, ... if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will make an effort for sending (him) back to the beginning, or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group'. The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk deserves mānatta (discipline)⁴. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'I desire mānatta (discipline), let monks come, I want monks to come', you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will make an effort for inflicting mānatta discipline (on him), or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group'. The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk deserves rehabilitation.⁵ If he should send a messenger ... thinking: 'I will make an effort for (his) rehabilitation, or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group'. The return should be made in seven days.

¹ Cf. Kd 1.25, Kd 1.20, Kd 1.21; Kd 12.1–Kd.12.3. ² For placing him on probation, for granting or giving it, parivāsādāna. ³ mūlāya paṭikassanāraho. Cf. Kd 1.25.21; and Vin 2.7, Vin 2.34, Vin 2.162, AN i.99. ⁴ Cf. Kd 1.25.21, Kd 12.5. ⁵ Cf. Kd 1.25.21; Kd 12.9.

“This is a case, monks, where an Order becomes desirous of carrying out a (formal) act against a monk—either one of censure or one of guidance or one of banishment or one of reconciliation or one of suspension.¹ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘The Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against me, let monks come, I want monks to come’, you should go ... if the return can be made in seven days, thinking: ‘How then may the Order not carry out a (formal) act or may change it to something lighter?’ The return should be made in seven days.

“Or a (formal) act comes to be carried out against him by the Order—either one of censure ... or one of suspension. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘The Order carried out a (formal) act against me ... I want monks to come’, you should go monks, ... thinking: ‘How then may he conduct himself properly, be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order can revoke that (formal) act?’² The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a nun comes to be ill ... (=Kd 3.6.2.)
... where dissatisfaction comes to have arisen in a nun ... (=Kd 3.6.3.)
... where remorse comes to have arisen in a nun ... (=Kd 3.6.4.)
... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a nun ... (=Kd 3.6.5.)
... where a nun comes to have committed an offence against an important rule and to deserve mānatta (discipline).³ If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘I have omitted an offence against an important rule and deserve mānatta (discipline), let the masters come, I want the masters to come’, you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the lore if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will make an effort for inflicting mānatta discipline) on her.’⁴ The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a nun deserves to be sent back to the beginning. If she should send a messenger ... (=Kd 3.6.7) ... thinking: 'I will make an effort for sending (her) back to the beginning'. The return should be made in seven days.

¹ Cf. Kd 1.25.22. ² Cf. Kd 1.25.22. ³ Nuns did not undergo probation, parivāsa; cf. their Saṅghādisesas. ⁴ The monk does not say that he will make a proclamation or become one to complete a group.

"This is a case, monks, where a nun deserves rehabilitation (=Kd 3.6.9) ... thinking: 'I will make an effort for (her) rehabilitation'. The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where an Order becomes desirous of carrying out a (formal) act against a nun, either one of censure ... or one of suspension ... (=Kd 3.6.10) ... The return should be made in seven days.

"Or a (formal) act comes to be carried out against her by an Order—either one of censure ... or one of suspension ... (=Kd 3.6.11) ... The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a probationer comes to be ill ... (cf. Kd 3.6.2) ... in seven days.

"This is a case, monks where dissatisfaction comes to have arisen in a probationer ... where remorse comes to have arisen in a probationer ... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a probationer ... where a probationer's training comes to be interrupted.¹ If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'My training is interrupted, let the masters come, I want the masters to come', you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will make an effort for her to undertake the training'.² The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a probationer becomes desirous of being ordained.³ If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'I am desirous of being ordained ... I want the masters to come', you should go, monks, ... thinking: 'Either I will make an effort for her ordination or I will make a proclamation or I will become one who completes a group'.⁴ The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a novice becomes ill ... Kd 3.6.2 ... The return should be made in seven days.

¹ kupitā, see BD 3,366. ² sikkhāsamādānaṃ. ³ With the upasampadā ordination. See BD 3, Introduction, p. xlviff. ⁴ Nuns' upasampadā ordination takes place before an Order of monks.

4.194 “... where dissatisfaction ... where remorse ... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a novice ... where a novice becomes desirous of asking about his year’s standing.¹

3.6.26 If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘I am desirous of asking about my year’s standing ... I want monks to come’, you should go ... thinking: ‘I will ask or I will explain’. The return should be made in seven days.

3.6.27 “... where a novice becomes desirous of being ordained ... (as in Kd 3.6.22) ... The return should be made in seven days.

1.147 3.6.28 “This is a case, monks, where a woman novice comes to be ill ... Kd 3.6.2 ... The return should be made in seven days.

3.6.29 “... where dissatisfaction ... where remorse ... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a woman novice ... where a woman novice becomes desirous of asking about her year’s standing ... Kd 3.6.25 ... The return should be made in seven days.

“... where a woman novice becomes desirous of undertaking the training.² If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Now I am desirous of undertaking the training, let the masters come, I want the masters to come’, you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will make an effort for her to acquire the training’. The return should be made in seven days.”

ALLOWANCE FOR SEVEN WHEN SENT FOR

d3.7.1 Now at that time a certain monk’s mother became ill. She sent a messenger to her son, saying: “Now I am ill, let my son come, I want my son to come.” Then it occurred to that monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that, if the business can be done in seven days, one can go if sent for but not if not sent for to seven (classes of people); and, if the business can be done in seven days, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for to five (classes of people)¹; and my own mother² is ill, but she is not a lay-follower. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord.

¹ vassa. See above, BD 4.109. This must be the technical meaning of vassam pucchitum, which editors of Vinaya Texts i.310, note say “is unknown to us”. ² Balancing the “to be ordained” of probationers and male novices. The woman novice had to become a probationer and spend two years in training in the six rules for probationers before she could become ordained.

He said: "I allow you, monks, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, if the business can be done in seven days, to seven (classes of people): to a monk, a nun, a probationer, a novice, a woman novice, a mother, a father. I allow you, monks, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, if the business can be done in seven days, to these seven (classes of people). The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk's mother comes to be ill. If she should send a messenger to her son, saying: 'Now I am ill, let my son come, I want my son to come', you should go, monks, ... (=Kd 3.6.2) ... The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk's father comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to his son, saying: 'Now I am ill, let my son come, I want my son to come', you should go ... (=Kd 3.6.2) ... The return should be made in seven days.

ALLOWANCE ONLY WHEN SENT FOR

"This is a case, monks, where a monk's brother comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to his brother, saying: 'Now I am ill, let my brother come, I want my brother to come', you should go, monks, if sent for, but not if not sent for, if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk's sister comes to be ill. If she should send a messenger to her brother, saying: 'Now I am ill, let my brother come, I want my brother to come', you should go ... (=Kd 3.7.5) ... The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a monk's relative comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Now I am ill, let the revered sir come, I want the revered sir to come', you should go, monks, if sent for, but not if not sent for, if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.

¹ See above, BD 4.189. ² ayañ ca me mātā, and this my mother.

“This is a case, monks, where a person living with monks¹ comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Now I am ill, let monks come, I want monks to come’, you should go, monks, if sent for, but not if not sent for, if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.”

Now at that time an Order’s dwelling-place was falling to pieces. A certain lay-follower had the goods² removed into the jungle. He sent a messenger to monks, saying: “If the revered sirs would fetch away³ these goods, I would give them back these goods.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go away on business connected with an Order. The return should be made in seven days.”

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Rains-residence

PORTION ON NO OFFENCE FOR CUTTING SHORT THE RAINS WHEN THERE IS DANGER

Now at that time in the Kosala country monks who had entered upon the rains in a certain residence came to be molested by beasts of prey who seized them and attacked them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains come to be molested by beasts of prey who seize them and attack them. This is indeed a danger,⁴ and you should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains come to be molested by creeping things which bite them and attack them. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains.

¹ bhikkhugatika. Vin-a 1069 and Sinhalese edition read bhatika; Vin-a explains as “a man (purisa) living in one dwelling-place together with monks”. ² bhaṇḍam chedāpitaṃ hoti. No justification for “had a quantity of wood cut” as at Vinaya Texts i.312. Vin-a 1069 explains by dabbasambhārabhaṇḍa, goods forming a substantial collection. Cf. bhaṇḍaka at Vin 4.304 referring to the goods or “things”, property that some nuns wanted to receive from Thullananda’s burning dwelling. ³ Oldenberg’s text avahareyyuṃ; Sinhalese edition avahāpeyyuṃ. ⁴ See above, BD 4.148, where this and some of the following dangers are enumerated although not in quite the same order.

“This is a case, monks, where monks ... are molested by thieves who rob them and thrash them. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks ... are molested by demons¹ who take possession of² them and sap their vitality.³ This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where the village of monks who have entered upon the rains comes to be burnt by fire and the monks go short of almsfood. This is indeed a danger ... in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where the lodgings of monks who have entered upon the rains come to be burnt by fire and the monks go short of lodgings. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where the village of monks who have entered upon the rains comes to be carried away by water and the monks go short of almsfood. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where the lodgings of monks who have entered upon the rains come to be carried away by water and the monks go short of lodgings. This is indeed a danger, and you should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.”

Now at that time the village of certain monks who had entered upon the rains in a certain residence was removed⁴ on account of thieves. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go to that village.” The village was split in two. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go where there are the more (people).” The majority came to be of little faith, not believing. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go to those who have faith and are believing.”

¹ pisāca. Not among the “ten dangers”. ² āvisanti, explained at Vin-a 1070 as “they enter into the body”. ³ ojam haranti, they carry off the life-strength. ⁴ vuṭṭhāsi, arose, got up; thus, went away.

Now at that time in the Kosala country monks who had entered upon the rains in a certain residence did not obtain a sufficiency, as much as they needed, of coarse or of sumptuous food. They told this matter to the Lord. He said “This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains do not obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food. This is indeed a danger,¹ and they should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food, but they do not obtain beneficial foods. This is indeed a danger ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food, they obtain beneficial foods, but they do not obtain beneficial medicines. This is indeed a danger ... the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food, they obtain beneficial foods, they obtain beneficial medicines, but they do not obtain a suitable attendant. This is indeed a danger ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where a woman invites a monk who has entered upon the rains, saying: ‘Come, honoured sir, I will give you gold² or I will give you gold ornaments³ or I will give you a field or I will give you a site⁴ or I will give you a bull⁵ or I will give you a cow or I will give you a slave or I will give you a slave woman or I will give you (my) daughter as wife or I will be your wife or I will lead another wife to you.’ If it then occurs to the monk: ‘The mind is called quickly-changing⁶ by the Lord, and this may be a danger to my Brahma-faring’, he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

¹ This is a “danger to life”, the ninth danger listed at Vin 1.113. ² hirañña suvaṇṇa. See BD 1.28, n. ³ hirañña suvaṇṇa. See BD 1.28, n. ⁴ vatthu. Probably meaning a site for a hut or a dwelling-place, as in Bu-Ss 6, Bu-Ss 7. ⁵ gāvurū. ⁶ lahuparivatta citta. For this sentiment, cf. SN ii.95, Thag 4; also the expression vibbhantacitta at It p. 91; and lahucittakata, BD 4.101, above.

“This is a case, monks, where a low class woman ... a grown girl¹ ... a eunuch invites a monk who has entered upon the rains ... where relations invite ... kings ... thieves ... men of abandoned life invite a monk who has entered upon the rains, saying: ‘Come, honoured sir, we will give you gold ... or we will give you a daughter as wife or we will lead another wife to you’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘The mind is called quickly-changing by the Lord ...’ ... There is no offence in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains sees a treasure² without an owner. If then it occurs to the monk: ‘The mind is called quickly changing ...’ ... There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

PORTION ON NO OFFENCE FOR CUTTING SHORT THE RAINS WHEN THERE IS SCHISM IN THE SAṄGHA

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains sees several monks striving for a schism in the Order. If then it occurs to the monk: ‘A schism in an Order is called serious by the Lord,³ do not let the Order be divided in my presence’, he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several monks are striving for a schism in the Order’. If then it occurs to that monk ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several monks in a certain residence are striving for a schism in the Order’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these monks are my friends. I should speak to them, saying: Indeed, your reverences, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord, please do not let a schism in the Order be promoted by the venerable ones and if he thinks: 'They will do my bidding, they will attend, they will give ear he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

¹ thullakumārī; cf. above, BD 4.87, n. 6. ² nidhi; store, hoardings, treasure at Snp 285, DhP 76, Kp 8.2, Kp 8.9. At Ja vi.79 explained as vākacīranivāsana, putting on a bark dress. Cf. the ruling as to picking up treasure (ratana) at Bu-Pc 84. ³ At Vin 2.198, in speaking to Devadatta.

3.11.7 "This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: 'It is said that several monks in a certain residence are striving for a schism in the Order'. If it then occurs to the monk: 1.15.1 'Now these monks are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them,¹ saying: Indeed, your reverences, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord ...' (=Kd 3.11.6) ... in cutting short the rains.

3.11.8 "This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: 'It is said that the Order in a certain residence is divided by several monks'. If it then occurs to the monk: 'Now these monks are friends of mine. I should speak to them, saying: ... (=Kd 3.11.6) ... 4.200 in cutting short the rains.

3.11.9 "This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: 'It is said that an Order in a certain residence is divided by several monks'. If it then occurs to the monk: 'Now these monks are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them, saying: Indeed, your reverences, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord ...' (=Kd 3.11.6) ... There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

1.11.10 "This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: 'It is said that several nuns in a certain residence are striving for a schism in the Order'. If it then occurs to the monk: 'Now these nuns are friends of mine. I should speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord, please do not let a schism in the Order be promoted by the sisters', and if he thinks: 'They will do my bidding, they will attend, they will give ear', he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

3.11.11 ¹ I.e. to the schismatic monks.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several nuns in a certain residence are striving for a schism in the Order’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these nuns are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order ...’ (=Kd 3.11.10) ... there is no offence in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that the Order in a certain residence is divided by several nuns’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these nuns are friends of mine. I should speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order ...’ (=Kd 3.11.10) ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case ... hears: ‘It is said that the Order in a certain residence is divided by several nuns’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these nuns are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order ...’ (=Kd 3.11.10) ... in cutting short the rains.”

ENTERING THE RAINS IN A COW PEN, ETC.

Now at that time a certain monk became desirous of entering on the rains in a cow-pen.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enter on the rains in a cow-pen.” The cow-pen was removed.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go to that cow-pen.”

Now at that time, as the beginning of the rains was approaching, a certain monk became desirous of going in a caravan. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enter on the rains in a caravan.” Now at that time, as the beginning of the rains was approaching, a certain monk became desirous of going in a boat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enter on the rains in a boat.”

¹ vaja. Vin-a1071 explains as the dwelling-place of cowherds. Word occurs at AN iii.393, Vism 166, Vism 279 in meaning of “cow-pen”. ² vuṭṭhāsi; cf. above BD 4.197, n. 1.

PLACES FOR NOT ENTERING THE RAINS

^{3.12.3} Now at that time monks entered on the rains in hollow trees. People looked down on, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like demon-worshippers.”¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in hollow trees. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

^{3.12.4} Now at that time monks entered on the rains in forks of trees. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like hunters.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in the forks of trees. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

^{3.12.5} Now at that time monks entered on the rains in the open air. When the gods rained they ran up to the foot of trees and to the shelter of a nimb tree.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in the open air. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

^{3.12.6} Now at that time monks entered on the rains without lodgings. They suffered from cold and they suffered from heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains without lodgings. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ pisācillika, or perhaps aborigines. See Vinaya Texts i.318, n., and Kd 15.10.2; Kd 15.27.5. Cf. pisāca above, BD 4.196. ² nimbakosa. Kosa can mean cavity, thus the hollow of a tree, or it might mean a sheath or enclosure, thus the shelter, the cover of a tree.

Now at that time monks entered on the rains in a charnel-house. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like those who burn corpses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in a charnel-house. Whoever ... wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks entered on the rains under a sunshade.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like cowherds”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains under a sunshade. Whoever ... wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks entered on the rains in a water-jar.² People ... spread it about, saying: “Like followers of other sects”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in a water-jar. Whoever ... of wrong-doing.”

UNLAWFUL AGREEMENT

Now at that time an agreement came to be made by an Order in Sāvattthī that no one should be allowed to go forth during the rains. A nephew of Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, having approached monks, asked for the going forth. Monks spoke thus: “Sir, an agreement was made by the Order that during the rains no one should be allowed to go forth. Wait, sir, until the monks have kept the rains; when they have kept the rains they will allow you to go forth.” Then these monks, having kept the rains, spoke thus to the nephew of Visākhā, Migāra’s mother: “Come now, sir, go forth.” He spoke thus: “Honoured sirs, if I could have gone forth, I should have been pleased. But now, I, honoured sirs, will not go forth.”

Visākhā, Migāra’s mother ... spread it about, saying: “How can the masters make an agreement to the effect that no one should be allowed to go forth during the rains? At what time should dhamma not be followed?” Monks heard Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, as she ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, an agreement that no one should be allowed to go forth during the rains should not be made. Whoever should make (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ chatta is the regular word for sunshade. It can also mean a canopy. ² cāṭi, some big vessel; used for containing and transporting water at Ja i.99. Ja i.101. Perhaps above the long bath-like stone vessels still to be seen at Anurādhapura.

OFFENCE OF WRONG-DOING IN ASSENT

^{3.14.1} Now at that time a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala came to be assented to for the earlier period¹ by the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans. As he was going to that residence, he saw on the way two residences with many robes. It occurred to him: “Now, suppose I should spend the rains in these two residences? Thus would many robes accrue to me.” He spent the rains in these two residences. King Pasenadi of Kosala ... spread it about, saying: “How can this master Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having assented to our rains-residence, break his word? Is not lying condemned in many a figure by the Lord and restraint from lying extolled?”

^{3.14.2} Monks heard King Pasenadi of Kosala as he ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having assented to a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala, break his word? Is not lying condemned in many a figure by the Lord and restraint from lying extolled?”

^{3.14.3} Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, saying: “Is it true, as is said, Upananda, that you, having assented to a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala, broke your word?”

^{4.204} “It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord, rebuked him, saying:

¹ purimikāya, that is, for the first three months of the rainy season.

“How can you, foolish man, having assented to a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala, break your word? Foolish man, is not lying condemned in many a figure by me and restraint from lying extolled? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the earlier period. As he is going to that residence he sees on the way two residences with many robes. It occurs to him: ‘What now if I should spend the rains in these two residences? Thus would many robes accrue to me.’ He spends the rains in these two residences. Monks, the earlier period is not valid for that monk, and also there is an offence of wrong-doing in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the earlier period. As he is going to that residence he carries out Observance outside it, he reaches a dwelling-place on the day after the Observance day, he prepares a lodging, he sets out drinking-water and water for washing, he sweeps a cell, and, having nothing to do, he departs that self-same day. Monks, the earlier period is not valid for that monk, and also there is an offence of wrong-doing in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... (=Kd 3.14.5) ... he sweeps a cell, and, having something to do, he departs that self-same day. Monks, ... in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having nothing to do, he departs, having spent two or three days. Monks, ... in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having something to do he departs, having spent two or three days. Monks, ... in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having stayed two or three days, he departs on some business that can be done in seven days. But he passes those seven days outside. Monks, ... in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having stayed two or three days, he departs on some business that can be done in seven days. He returns

Kd 3.14

Kd 3.14

Kd 3.14

BD 4.2

Vin 1.15

within seven days. Monks, the earlier period is valid for that monk, and there is no offence in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and having something to do before the Invitation,¹ he departs for seven days. Monks, whether that monk returns or whether he does not return to that residence, the earlier period is valid for that monk, and also there is no offence in the assent.

- “This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the earlier period. Having arrived at that residence he carries out the Observance, he reaches a dwelling-place on the day after the Observance day² ...

“This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the later period. As he is going to that residence he carries out Observance outside it ... (*the whole passage is identical with Kd 3.14.5–Kd.3.14.10; for earlier period read later period; for before the Invitation read before the komudī cātumāsini*³) ... and also there is no offence in the assent.”

The Third Section: that on beginning the Rains

THIS IS ITS KEY

To enter on (the rains), and just when? how many?
and during the rains,
and they did not want to, intentionally, to postpone, a lay-follower,
Ill, and a mother, a father, and a brother, then a relation,
a person living with monks, a dwelling-place,
and also beasts of prey, creeping things,
And so thieves, and demons, burnt,

¹ Pavāraṇā, a ceremony held at the end of the third month of the rains. See Kd 4.

² Kd 3.14.5–Kd.3.14.7 are repeated, the only difference being that there the monk held Observance outside the residence to which he was going; here he holds it when he has arrived. ³ Cf. BD 4.231, below. This is the full moon day of the month Kattika, marks the end of the later period for keeping the rains, and thus the end of the fourth month of the rainy season. See Vinaya Texts i.324. n. 2 and Dialogues of the Buddha i.66, n. 1. According to DN-a 139 the white lotus, kumuda, blooms then.

and in regard to both¹, carried away by water, was removed,
 and the majority, benefactors²,
 And about coarse and sumptuous (foods), beneficial medicines, an attendant,
 a woman, a low class woman,
 and a grown girl, a eunuch, and about a relation,
 Kings, thieves, men of abandoned life,
 a treasure, schisms, and by what is eightfold³,
 a cow-pen, and a caravan,
 and a boat, in a hollow, and in a fork,
 A rains-residence in the open air, and about one who had no lodgings,
 a charnel-house, and under a sunshade, and these went upon (the rains) in a water-jar,
 An agreement, having assented, and Observance days outside,
 the earlier, the later,
 one should combine them after the same fashion⁴,
 He departs having nothing to do,
 and likewise because he has something to do, spending two or three days⁵,
 and on business that can be done in seven days,
 And then going away for seven days,
 whether he should return or should not come back,
 In the key to the items the order⁶

¹ tadubhayena. Word is not in the text. Reference is to Kd 3.9.3, where the case is taken of both a village and monks' lodgings being burnt. ² dāyaka. Word not in the text, but it probably refers to the minority who, because believing, may be presumed to have given alms to the monks, Kd 3.10.1. Indeed these three headings: "was removed, and the majority, benefactors" refer to one and the same episode, and should therefore not be counted as separate items in reckoning the total of "fifty-two items" in this Chapter. ³ I.e. the eight ways of making a schism which the monk hears about, Kd 3.11.6–Kd.3.11.13. The first way which he sees, Kd 3.11.5, has as its key-word the word "schisms" which also includes the next heading—"by what is eightfold". ⁴ yathānāyena yojāyē, referring to the similar permutations of events which are repeated for the later as for the earlier period of the rains. ⁵ The Sinhalese reading of dvīhatihāṃ vasitvāna is to be preferred to Oldenberg's dvīhatihā ca puna, "after two or three days and again", as it corresponds more closely to Kd 3.14.6. The latter, however, might be justified by the three cases there mentioned of "two or three days". ⁶ antarikā, sphere, compass; interval, i.e. the intervals between the items, the range they cover, hence their order.

should observe the woven way.¹

*In this Chapter there are fifty-two items.*²

¹ tantimagga, the way that is strung or woven together, so the sacred text or tradition. Cf. DN-a 2, MN-a i.2. Tantibhadda at Vin 1.312, tantidhara at Vism 99. ² This number is perhaps arrived at by (1) omitting “in regard to both” as a separate heading, being already included under “burnt”; (2) taking “was removed, majority, benefactors” as one heading (see BD 4.206 n. 2); (3) taking line 7 as one heading referring to Kd 3.11.1, Kd 3.11.2; (4) taking “schisms, and what is eightfold” as one heading (see BD 4.206 n. 3); (5) taking “the earlier, the later, one should combine them after the same fashion” as one heading (see BD 4.206 n. 4); (6) taking the last line but one as referring to one and the same eventuality, in Kd 3.14.7.

4. INVITATION (PAVĀRAṆĀ)

DWELLING NOT IN COMFORT

At one time the enlightened one, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several monks, friends and associates, entered on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. Then it occurred to these monks: "Now by what means can we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood?"

Then it occurred to these monks: "If we should neither address one another nor converse, but whoever should return first from the village for almsfood¹ should make ready a seat, should put out water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a footstand, having washed a refuse-bowl² should set it out, should set out drinking water and water for washing.

Whoever should return last from the village for almsfood, if there should be the remains of a meal and if he should so desire, he may eat them; but if he does not so desire, he may throw them away where there is but little green grass³ or he may drop them into water where there are no living creatures,⁴ he should put up the seat, he should put away the water for (washing) the feet, the footstool, the footstand, he should put away the refuse-bowl having washed it, he should put away the drinking water and the water for washing, he should sweep the refectory.

¹ From here to near the end of Kd 4.1.4 cf. Kd 10.4.5; Kd 18.5.3; MN i.207. ² This is a receptacle for the leavings of meals. ³ appaharita, or few crops, or no green grass, MN-a i.94 explaining by tiṇāni, grasses, and referring to Bu-Pc 11. ⁴ This sentence occurs also at Kd 6.26.6, SN i.169, Snp p.15, MN i.13.

Whoever should see a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after evacuation,¹ void and empty, should set out (water); if it is impossible for him (to do this) he should set out (water) by signalling with his hand, having invited a companion (to help him) by a movement of his hand²; but he should not for such a reason break into speech. Thus may we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood.”

Then these monks neither addressed one another nor conversed. Whoever returned first from the village for almsfood made ready a seat, put out water for (washing) the feet, a foot-stool, a footstand, set out a refuse-bowl having washed it, set out drinking water and water for washing.

Whoever returned last from the village for almsfood, if there were the remains of a meal ate them if he so desired; if he did not so desire he threw them away where there was but little green grass or he dropped them into water where there were no living creatures, he put up the seat, he put away the water for (washing) the feet, the footstool, the footstand, he put away the refuse-bowl having washed it, he put away the drinking water and the water for washing, he swept the refectory.

Whoever saw a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after evacuation, void and

¹ Cf. MN-a ii.242. ² MN-a ii.242 says that if any of these vessels is empty, having taken it to a pond and washed it inside and outside, having filtered water (into it), having set it down on the bank, they invite another monk (to help them) by a movement of the hand.

I think that hatthavikārena (“by a movement of the hand”) and hatthavilañghakena (“by signalling with the hand”) are complementary and are used to emphasise the gesture-language needed in place of speech. I therefore think that there should be no comma, as in Oldenberg’s edition, after hatthavikārena (there is none at MN i.207) since this makes the passage read “if it is impossible for him (to do this) by a movement of the hand”, i.e. if he is not able to move the vessel single-handed. This is of course a possible reading, but it is not elegant Pali and balance and emphasis are lost.

empty, set out water. If it was impossible for him (to do this) he set out water by signalling with his hand, having by a movement of his hand invited a companion (to help him); but not for such a reason did he break into speech.

Now it was the custom for monks who had kept the rains to go and see the Lord.¹ Then these monks, having kept the rains, at the end of the three months packed away their lodgings and taking their bowls and robes, set out for Sāvattthī. In due course they approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery and the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for Lords to exchange friendly greetings with in-coming monks.

Then the Lord spoke thus to these monks: "I hope that you were well, monks, I hope that you kept going, I hope that, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, you passed a comfortable rainy season and did not go short of almsfood?"

"We were well, Lord, we kept going, Lord, and we, Lord, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, passed a comfortable rainy season and did not go short of almsfood."

Now, Truthfinders (sometimes) ask knowing, and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask, knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask, knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truthfinders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal; there is bridge-breaking for Truthfinders in whatever does not belong to the goal. In two ways do awakened ones, Lords question monks, either: "Shall we teach dhamma?" or "Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?"² Then the Lord spoke thus to these monks:

"But in what way did you, monks, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood?"

"In that connection did we, Lord, several friends and associates, enter on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. Then

¹ For following passage, cf. BD 1.153f.

² As at Vin 1.59, Vin 1.250, Vin 3.6,

Vin 3.88-Vin 3.89.

1.159 it occurred to us, Lord: ‘Now by what means can we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood?’ Then it occurred to us, Lord: ‘If we should neither address one another¹ ... Thus could we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood.’ So we, Lord, neither addressed one another nor conversed. Whoever returned first from the village for almsfood made ready a seat² ... but not for such a reason did he break into speech. Thus did we, Lord, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood.”

4.211
4.1.12 Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Indeed, monks, these foolish men, having spent an uncomfortable time, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. Indeed, monks, these foolish men, having spent communion like beasts, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. Indeed ... like sheep, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. Indeed ... having spent communion in indolence, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. How, monks, can these foolish men observe an observance of members of (other) sects: the practice of silence?³”

4.1.13 “It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, an observance of members of other sects, the practice of silence, should not be observed. Whoever should observe it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, monks who have kept the rains to ‘invite’⁴ in regard to three matters: what has been seen or heard or suspected. That will be what is suitable for you in regard to one another, a removal of offences¹, an aiming at (grasping) the discipline.²

¹ As in Kd 4.1.2–Kd.4.1.4. ² As in Kd 4.1.5–Kd.4.1.7. ³ mūgabbata, custom of being dumb (mūga), according to Vin-a 1073, for three months. Cf. the monks who sat like dumb swine, mūgasūkarā, when they might have been speaking dhamma, above, BD 4.131. ⁴ pavāretum, a technical term used for a monk to “invite” others at the end of the rains to tell him if he has been seen or heard or suspected to have committed any offences. If they do so, and he acknowledges an offence by seeing it and making amends for it, he becomes rid of it, and is therefore pure to take his place in the Order’s business.

And thus, monks, should one invite. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Today is an Invitation day.³ If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite.’ A monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak to it thus: ‘Your reverences, I invite the Order in respect of what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable ones speak to me out of compassion, and seeing I will make amends.⁴ And a second time ... And a third time, your reverences, I invite the Order in respect of what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable ones speak to me out of compassion, and seeing I will make amends.’ A newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak to it thus: ‘Honoured sirs, I invite the Order in respect of what has been seen ... And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing I will make amends.’”

Now at that time the group of six monks remained⁵ on seats while monks who were elders, sitting down on their haunches, were themselves inviting. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks remain on seats while monks who are elders, sitting down on their haunches, are themselves inviting?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks remained on seats ... were themselves inviting?”

¹ āpattivuṭṭhānatā, or a rising up from an offence (or offences). Cf. āpattivuṭṭhitā at Kd 2.3.5, and vuṭṭhāsi at Kd 3.10.1, a village was removed. ² Vinaya-purekkhāratā. Cf. atthapurekkhāra dhammapurekkhāra at e.g. Vin 3.130, Vin 4.11, Vin 4.277. ³ pavāraṇā, invitation. MN-a i.93 distinguishes four kinds of pavāraṇā and places first this one held at the end of the rains. ⁴ I.e. for the offence imputed to him and “seen” by him. ⁵ acchanti. Vin-a 1074 says they were sitting down, they did not stand up.

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men remain on seats ... are themselves inviting? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not remain on seats while monks who are elders, sitting down on their haunches, are themselves inviting. I allow you, monks, to invite while each and every one is sitting down on his haunches.”

4.2.2 Now at that time a certain elder, feeble with age, thinking: “Until all have invited”, while sitting down on his haunches and waiting, fell down in a faint. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, (each one) to sit down on his haunches during the period until he invites, and having invited, to sit down on a seat.”

DIVISION OF THE INVITATION

4.3.1 Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many Invitation (days) are there?” They told this to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these two Invitation (days), the fourteenth and the fifteenth. These, monks, are the two Invitation (days).”¹

4.3.2 Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many (formal) acts for the Invitation are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these four (formal) acts for the Invitation: a (formal) act for the Invitation (carried out) not by rule and when an assembly is incomplete... (=Kd 2.14.2, Kd 2.14.3; read act for the Invitation instead of act for Observance) ... you, monks, should train yourselves thus”.

ALLOWANCE TO GIVE INVITATION

433 Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: "Gather together, monks, the Order will invite."¹ When he had spoken thus a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: "There is, Lord, a monk who is ill. He has not come." He said: "I allow you, monks, to give the Invitation on behalf of a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: 'I will give the Invitation, convey the Invitation for me, invite on my behalf.' If he makes it understood by gesture, if he makes it understood by voice, if he makes it understood by gesture and voice, the Invitation comes to be given. If he does not make it understood by gesture ... by gesture and voice, the Invitation does not come to be given.

If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it then, monks, that ill monk, having been brought to the midst of the Order on a couch or a chair, should invite. If, monks, it occurs to the monks who are tending the ill one ... (=Kd 2.22.2) ... the ill one should not be moved from (that) place; the Order having gone there may invite, but one should not invite if an Order is incomplete. Whoever should so invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

"If, monks, the conveyor of the Invitation goes away then and there ... (=Kd 2.22.3, Kd 2.22.4; read Invitation, although the Invitation, the conveyor of the Invitation instead of entire purity, although the entire purity, the conveyor of the entire purity) ... there is an offence of wrong-doing for the conveyor of the Invitation. I allow you, monks, on an Invitation day to give the consent also by giving the Invitation; they are the Order's business."²

ON BEING GRABBED BY RELATIVES

Now at that time his relations got hold of a certain monk on an Invitation day ... (as in Kd 2.24.1-Kd.2.24.3; read Invitation day for Observance day, and gives the Invitation for declares his entire purity, and invites for carries out the Observance) ...

DIVISION OF INVITATION BY SAṄGHA, ETC.

Now at that time five monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: "It is laid down by the Lord that an Order may invite¹, but we are (only) five persons. Now, how can we invite?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to invite in an Order of five."²

Now at that time four monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: "It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five, but we are (only) four persons. Now, how can we invite?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to invite one another when you are (only) four.

"And thus, monks, should one invite: These monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Let the venerable ones listen to me. Today is an Invitation day. If it seems right to the venerable ones, let us invite one another.' These monks should be spoken to thus by a monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms: 'I, your reverences, invite the venerable ones in regard to what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable ones speak to me out of compassion, and seeing, I will make amends. And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.’ These monks should be spoken to thus by a newly ordained monk, having arranged ... ‘I, honoured sirs, invite the venerable ones in regard to what has been seen or heard or suspected ... And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.’”

¹ Cf. Kd 2.14.1. ¹ Cf. Kd 2.22.1. ² Cf. Kd 2.23.3. ¹ Cf. Kd 4.1.14. ² The procedure for inviting an Order has been given in Kd 4.1.14 and is not repeated here. "Inviting one another" when there are only four, three or two persons has not yet been explained, and so directions for the right method are given in the next paragraphs. Various sizes of saṅghas are given at Kd 9.4.1, with the formal acts they may not carry out. This whole passage should be compared with Kd 2.26.1-Kd.2.26.10.

Now at that time three monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five persons, and to invite one another when there are four, but we are (only) three persons. Now how can we invite?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite one another when you are (only) three. And thus, monks, should one invite: These monks should be informed ... (= Kd 4.5.3) ... I will make amends.’”

Now at that time two monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five (persons), to invite one another when there are four, to invite one another when there are three, but we are (only) two persons. Now, how can we invite?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite one another when you are (only) two.

“And thus, monks, should one invite: The monk who is the elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to the newly ordained monk: ‘I, your reverence, invite the venerable one in regard to what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable one speak to me out of compassion, and seeing, I will make amends. And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.’ The newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe ... with joined palms, should speak thus to the monk who is the

Kd 4.5.

Vin 1.16

Kd 4.5.

Kd 4.5.

elder: 'I, honoured sir, invite the venerable one ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.'”

4.5.7
4.216
4.5.8
Now at that time one monk was staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to that monk: “It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five (persons), to invite one another ... when there are (only) two, but I am alone. Now, how can I invite?” They told this matter to the Lord.

4.5.9
He said: “This is a case, monks, where one monk is staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Monks, that monk, having swept the place to which monks return—an attendance hall or a pavilion or the root of a tree—having put out drinking water and water for washing, having made ready a seat, having made a light, should sit down. If other monks arrive, he may invite together with them; if they do not arrive, he should determine: ‘Today is an Invitation day for me’. If he should not (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“Monks, there where five monks are staying, four should not invite in an Order, having conveyed the invitation for one. If they should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“Monks, there where four monks are staying, three should not invite one another, having conveyed the invitation for one. If they should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

1.164
“Monks, there where three monks are staying, two should not invite one another, having conveyed the invitation for one. If they should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“Monks, there where two monks are staying, one should not determine, having conveyed the invitation for the other. If he should (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS

14.6.1

Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into an offence on an Invitation day.¹ Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that an offender should not invite,² and I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, ... (cf. Kd 2.27.1, Kd 2.27.2; read Invitation day for Observance day)) ... When he has spoken thus, he may invite, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Invitation from such a cause.”

PROCEDURE FOR NO OBSTACLE FROM OFFENCE

Now at that time a certain monk, as he was himself inviting, remembered an offence.³ Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that an offender should not invite, and I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk, as he is himself inviting, remembers an offence. Monks, this monk should speak thus to the monk next to him: ‘I, your reverence, have fallen into such and such an offence; removing from here,⁴ I will make amends for that offence.’ When he has spoken thus, he may invite, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Invitation from such a cause.

Kd 4.6.
BD 4.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk as he is himself inviting, becomes doubtful about an offence. Monks ... (cf. Kd 2.27.5) ... When he has spoken thus he may invite, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Invitation from such a cause.”

Kd 4.6.

¹ Cf. Kd 2.27.1. ² Cf. below, BD 4.223. ³ Cf. Kd 2.27.4. ⁴ Or, having risen up from here. ⁵ OLDENBERG, Vin 1.164, and Vinaya Texts i:336 compare this to Kd 2.27.4–Kd 2.27.8, which would mean that a monk also invited the Order collectively.

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS FOR SHARED OFFENCE

(Note by Sujato: this section, which repeats the material from the corresponding section of the Uposathakkhandhaka, is not included in Horner's translation. See previous footnote.)

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

FIFTY CASES OF NO OFFENCE

Now at that time several resident monks, five or more, collected together in a certain residence on an Invitation day.¹ They did not know that the other resident monks had not arrived. Thinking of the rule, thinking of discipline, thinking that they were complete, they invited while they were incomplete. While they were inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrived. They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: "This is a case, monks, where several resident monks ... (as in Kd 4.7.1 above) ... While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, those monks should invite again; there is no offence for those who have invited."²

"This is a case, monks, ... other resident monks, a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; the remainder should invite, and there is no offence for those who have invited.

"This is a case, monks, where several resident monks, five or more, collect together in a certain residence on an Invitation day ... When they have just finished inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, those monks should invite again; there is no offence for those who have invited.

"This is a case, monks, ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive.

¹ Cf. Kd 2.28.1-Kd 2.28.7. ² pavāritānam, ¹ for the inviters, corresponding to the "reciters" of Kd 2.28.2.

Those who have invited have duly invited; they¹ should invite in their presence, and there is no offence for those who have invited.

“This is a case, monks, ... When they have just finished inviting but the assembly has not risen ... (=Kd 4.7.5) ... no offence for those who have invited.

“This is a case ... and part of the assembly has risen ... (=Kd 4.7.5) ... no offence for those who have invited.

“This is a case, monks, where ... the whole assembly has risen, and other resident monks, a larger number ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; they should invite in their presence, and there is no offence for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases in which there is No Offence

FIFTY CASES OF PERCEIVING IT IS A GROUP OR IS NOT A GROUP

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence several resident monks, five or more, collect together on an Invitation day.² They know that other resident monks have not arrived. Thinking of the rule, thinking of discipline, thinking that they are incomplete they invite while they are incomplete. While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, these monks should invite again, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

“This is a case, monks, ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; the remainder should invite and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

“This is a case, monks, ... When they have just finished inviting ... and the assembly has not risen ... part of the assembly has risen ... the whole assembly has risen, and other resident monks, a larger number ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; they should invite in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

¹ I.e. the resident monks who arrive late. ² Cf. Kd 2.29.

Told are the Fifteen Cases on being Aware that an Assembly is incomplete when it is incomplete

FIFTY CASES OF DOUBT

^{4.9.1} “This is a case, monks, where several resident monks five or more, collect together on an Invitation day.¹ They know that other resident monks have not arrived. Thinking: ‘Now, is it allowable for us to invite or is it not allowable?’ they invite (although they are in doubt). While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, these monks should invite again, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

^{4.9.2} “This is a case, ... (cf. Kd 4.8.2, Kd 4.8.3) ... they should invite in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Being in Doubt

FIFTY CASES OF ACTING BADLY

^{4.10.1} “This is a case,² ... (as in Kd 4.9.1) ... Thinking, ‘Indeed, it is allowable for us to invite, it is not unallowable for us’, they, acting badly, invited. While they are inviting ... offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

^{4.10.2} “This is a case,³ ... (cf. Kd 4.8.2, Kd 4.8.3) ... they should invite in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Acting Badly

¹ Cf. Kd 2.30. ² Cf. Kd 2.31.1. ³ Cf. Kd 2.31.2.

FIFTY CASES OF AIMING AT SCHISM

“This is a case,¹ They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Saying: ‘These are perishing, these are being destroyed, what good are these to you?’ they invite, aiming at a schism. While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, those monks should invite again, and there is a grave offence for those who have invited.

“This is a case, ... (cf. Kd 4.8.2, Kd 4.8.3; Read grave offence instead of offence of wrong-doing; in the case of a like number a smaller number read those who have invited have duly invited, the rest should invite.) ... they should invite in their presence, and there is a grave offence for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases on aiming at a Schism

Told are the Seventy-five Cases

ABBREVIATED REPETITIONS ON ENTERING A BOUNDARY

“This is a case,² ... They know that other resident monks are entering within the boundary. They know that other resident monks have entered within the boundary. They see other resident monks entering within the boundary. They see other resident monks entered within the boundary. They hear other resident monks entering within the boundary. They hear other resident monks who have entered within the boundary.

“From a hundred and seventy-five triads referring to resident (monks) with resident (monks); to incoming (monks) with resident (monks); to resident (monks) with incoming (monks); to incoming (monks) with incoming (monks), there come to be seven hundred triads by means of (these) sets.

¹ Cf. Kd 2.32. ² Cf. Kd 2.33.

VARIOUS DAYS

^{4.13.1} “This is a case, monks, where the fourteenth is (the Invitation day) for resident monks, the fifteenth for incoming monks ... (= Kd 2.34.1-2.35.5. Read they should invite, they invite, on an Invitation day instead of Observance should be carried out, they carry out the Observance, on an Observance day.) ... if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day’.

VISIBLE CHARACTERISTICS

(Note by Sujato: this section, which repeats the material from the corresponding section of the Uposathakkhandhaka, is not included in Horner’s translation.)

INVITATION WITH THOSE OF DIFFERENT COMMUNION, ETC.

(Note by Sujato: See previous note.)

PORTION ON SHOULD NOT GO

(Note by Sujato: See previous note.)

PORTION ON SHOULD GO

(Note by Sujato: See previous note.)

SEEING A BLAMEWORTHY PERSON

^{4.14.1} “Monks, one should not invite in a seated assembly before a nun ...¹
^{4.14.2}

^{4.14.3} ...

^{1.168}
^{1.14.4} ¹ See Kd 2.36.1, Kd 2.36.3.

“Monks, one should not invite by giving the Invitation of one on probation unless the assembly has not risen.¹ And, monks, one should not invite on a non-Invitation day unless the Order be unanimous.”

INVITATION WITH TWO STATEMENTS, ETC.

Now at that time in a certain residence in the Kosala country there came to be a menace from savages on an Invitation day.² The monks were unable to invite by using the threefold formula.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite by using a two-fold formula.” The menace from the savages became even greater. The monks were unable to invite by using the two-fold formula. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite by using a onefold formula.” The menace from the savages became even greater. The monks were unable to invite by using the onefold formula. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite those who keep the rains (all) together.”

Now at that time in a certain residence people were giving gifts on an Invitation day until the night was almost ended. Then it occurred to those monks: “People are giving gifts until the night is almost ended. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd 4.15.2) ... before dawn breaks’. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. People are giving gifts until the night is almost ended. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’

¹ Cf. Kd 2.36.4. ² Cf. Kd 2.15.3. ³ See Kd 4.1.14. As Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1077 seems to imply the motion (ñatti) could be shelved if the Order approves. Then the inviting monk had merely three times to repeat his request to invite the Order. Above, he is allowed to curtail the number of times he makes the request. Cf. dvevācika and tevācika above Kd 1.4.5, Kd 1.7.10.

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence on an Invitation day monks are speaking dhamma, those versed in the discourses are chanting a discourse, the discipline experts are propounding discipline, the talkers on dhamma are discussing dhamma, monks are quarrelling¹ until the night is almost ended. If it then occurs to these monks: ‘Monks are quarrelling until the night is almost ended. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks’, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Monks are quarrelling ... the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’”

Now at that time in a certain residence in the Kosala country a large Order of monks came to have collected together on an Invitation day, and (only) a small (place) was sheltered from the rain and a great cloud had come up. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now this large Order of monks has collected together, and (only) a small (place) is sheltered from the rain and a great cloud has come up. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before this cloud pours down rain. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence a large Order of monks has collected together on an Invitation day, and (only) a small (place) ... (as in Kd 4.15.5 above) ... If it then occurs to these monks: ‘Now this large Order of monks ... pours down rain’, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This large Order of monks ... pours down rain. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’

¹ “Quarrelling” really means arguing and disputing about points of dhamma and discipline.

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence on an Invitation day there comes to be a danger from kings ... from thieves ... from fire ... from water ... from human beings ... from non-human beings ... from beasts of prey ... from creeping things ... to life ... to the Brahma-faring.¹ It then occurs to these monks: ‘Now this is a danger to the Brahma-faring. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before there is a danger to the Brahma-faring.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This is a danger to the Brahma-faring. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before there is a danger to the Brahma-faring. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’”

SETTING ASIDE THE INVITATION

Now at that time the group of six monks invited (while they were) offenders. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, an offender should not invite. Whoever (such) should invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, having obtained leave from whatever offender is inviting, to reprove him for the offence.”²

Now at that time the group of six monks, (although) obtaining leave, did not wish to give leave. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to suspend the invitation³ of one not giving leave. And thus, monks, should it be suspended: If on an Invitation day, whether the fourteenth or the fifteenth, one should say in the presence of that individual, in the midst of the Order: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The individual so-and-so is an offender; I am suspending his invitation; one should not invite in his presence', the invitation comes to be suspended."

¹ Cf. above BD 4.148. ² Cf. Kd 2.16.1. ³ pavāranam ṭhapetuṃ, cf. Vin 2.5, Vin 2.22, Vin 2.32.

4.16.3 Now at that time the group of six monks, saying: "Before well behaved monks suspend our invitation"¹, themselves suspended beforehand, without ground, without reason, the invitation of pure monks who were not offenders, and they also suspended the invitation of those who had (already) invited. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, one should not suspend without ground, without reason, the invitation of pure monks who are not offenders. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrongdoing. Nor, monks, should one suspend the invitation of those who have invited. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrongdoing."

4.16.4
4.224 "Monks, an invitation comes to be (duly) suspended thus, not (duly) suspended thus. And how, monks, does an invitation come to be not (duly) suspended? If, monks, one suspends an invitation when the invitation has been spoken, uttered and brought to a close by the threefold formula, the invitation comes to be not (duly) suspended. If, monks, one suspends an invitation when the invitation has been spoken, uttered and brought to a close by a twofold formula ... by a onefold formula ... by those keeping the rains together, an invitation comes to be not (duly) suspended. It is thus, monks, that an invitation comes to be not (duly) suspended.

1.171
4.16.5 "And how, monks, does an invitation come to be (duly) suspended? If, monks, one suspends an invitation when the invitation has been spoken, uttered, but not brought to a close² by the threefold formula, the invitation comes to be (duly) suspended. If, monks, one suspends ... but not brought to a close by the twofold formula ... by the onefold formula ... by those keeping the rains together, the invitation comes to be (duly) suspended. It is thus, monks, that an invitation comes to be (duly) suspended.

¹ Cf. Kd 2.16.3. ² Correct in the Pali text pariyositāya to apari-, as noted at Vinaya Texts i.342, n. 1.

“This is a case, monks, when on an Invitation day a monk suspends (another) monk’s invitation. If other monks know concerning this monk: ‘This venerable one is not pure in the conduct of his body, he is not pure in the conduct of his speech, he is not pure in his mode of livelihood; he is ignorant, inexperienced; he is not competent when being himself questioned to give an explanation¹,’ and if having snubbed² him, they say: ‘That’s enough, monk, let there be no strife, let there be no quarrel, let there be no dispute, let there be no contention’, the Order may invite.

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd 4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body, but he is not pure in the conduct of his speech, he is not pure in his mode of livelihood) ... to give an explanation’, ... the Order may invite.

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd 4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body, he is pure in the conduct of his speech, but he is not pure in his mode of livelihood) ...’. the Order may invite.

“This is a case, monks ... (as in Kd 4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body, pure in the conduct of his speech, pure in his mode of livelihood; but he is ignorant, inexperienced; he is not competent when himself being questioned) ...’ ... the Order may invite.

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd 4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body) ... pure in his mode of livelihood; he is learned, experienced; he is competent when being himself questioned to give an explanation’, one should speak thus to him: ‘If you, your reverence, suspend this monk’s invitation, why do you suspend it? Do you suspend it on account of a falling away from moral habit³? Do you suspend it on account of a falling away from good habits⁴? Do you suspend it on account of a falling away from (right) view¹?

¹ anuyogaṃ dātumī. ² omadditvā, having crushed. Vin-a 1078 says that it is here a verbal crushing. ³ Defined at AN i.268 as onslaught on creatures, taking what is not given, wrong conduct in sense-pleasures, lying, slandering, using harsh words, babbling. These three “falling aways” or failures are mentioned above BD 4.82f.

⁴ AN i.268 has cittavipatti for ācāravipatti of above.

“If he should speak thus: ‘I suspend it on account of a falling away from moral habit ... a falling away from (right) view’, one should speak thus to him: ‘But does your reverence know what is a falling away from moral habit ... a falling away from (right) view?’ If he should speak thus: ‘I know, your reverence, what is a falling away from moral habit ... a falling away from (right) view’, one should speak thus to him: ‘But which, your reverence, is a falling away from moral habit, which is a falling away from good habits, which is a falling away from (right) view?’

“If he should speak thus: ‘This is a falling away from moral habit: the four offences involving defeat, the thirteen offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. This is a falling away from good habits: a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech. This is a falling away from (right) view: a wrong view, taking up an extreme view²’, one should speak thus to him: ‘But if you, your reverence, suspend this monk’s invitation, do you suspend it on account of what was seen, do you suspend it on account of what was heard, do you suspend it on account of what was suspected?’

“If he should speak thus: ‘I am suspending it on account of what was seen, or, I am suspending it on account of what was heard, or, I am suspending it on account of what was suspected', one should speak to him thus: 'But, if you, your reverence, are suspending this monk's invitation on account of what was seen, how have you seen, when have you seen, where have you seen? Have you seen him committing an offence involving defeat? Was he seen committing an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order? Was he seen committing a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech? And where were you? And where was this monk? And what were you doing? And what was this monk doing?'

¹ Defined at AN i.268 in the terms of Ajita Kesakambalin’s annihilationist views (cf. DN i.55). ² antaggāhikā diṭṭhi. See MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society, 1884, p.70, “the (heretical) doctrine of maintaining or holding the three antas or goals, which, according to the Sangīti Suttanta (DN iii.216) are sakkāyo anto, sakkāyasamuddo anto, sakkāyanirodho anto”. With DN iii.216, cf. AN iii.401, and see Pali-English Dictionary which questions Morris’ interpretation of anta as goal. Antaggāhikā diṭṭhi also occurs at DN iii.45, AN i.154, AN ii.240, AN iii.130, Vb 367. Various such “extreme views” are mentioned at SN ii.17, SN ii.19, SN ii.63, Ps.i.151ff. DN-a iii.839 explains: “this view is called ‘taking up an extreme’ through taking up the extreme (anta) of the annihilationists.” AN-a ii.254 explains “a view established having taken up the extreme (anta) of what is founded on the ten” (“doctrines of the annihilationist”, GS i.138, n. 1). AN-a iii.279 explains: “established having taken up (the position of) the eternalist or the annihilationist.” Ten “diverse views” are mentioned at SN iii.258, while ten “extreme views” are differentiated from ten “wrong views” at Nd-a i.162. These two sets of ten are mentioned at Mnd 113, with twenty sakkāyadiṭṭhi (Mnd 112).

"If he should speak thus: 'But I, your reverences, am not suspending this monk's invitation on account of what was seen, but I am suspending the invitation on account of what was heard', one should speak to him thus: 'But, if you, your reverence, suspend this monk's invitation on account of what was heard, what have you heard, how have you heard, when have you heard, where have you heard? Did you hear that he had committed an offence involving defeat? Did you hear that he had committed an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order? Did you hear that he had committed a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech? Did you hear from a monk? Did you hear from a nun ... a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... a lay-follower ... a woman lay-follower ... kings ... king's ministers ... from leaders of (other) sects ... from disciples of (other) sects?'

"If he should speak thus: 'But I, your reverences, am not suspending this monk's invitation on account of what was heard, but I am suspending the invitation on account of what was suspected one should speak to him thus: 'But, if you, your reverence, are suspending this monk's invitation on account of what was suspected, what did you suspect, how did you suspect, when did you suspect, where did you suspect? Did you suspect that he had committed an offence involving defeat? Did you suspect that he had committed an offence

Kd 4.16

BD 4.2

Kd 4.16

Vin 1.17

entailing a formal meeting of the Order? Did you suspect that he had committed a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech? Did you suspect, having heard from a monk ... from disciples of (other) sects?

“If he should speak thus: ‘But I, your reverences, am not suspending this monk’s invitation on account of what was suspected, moreover I do not know on account of what I am suspending this monk’s invitation’, and if, monks, the reproving monk does not satisfy his intelligent fellows in the Brahma-faring with his explanation, it is sufficient to say that the reprovved monk is blameless. But if the reproving monk satisfies his intelligent fellows in the Brahma-faring with his explanation, it is sufficient to say that the reprovved monk is blameworthy.

“If that reproving monk, monks, admits that he has defamed (another monk) with an unfounded charge of an offence involving defeat, then the Order, having charged him with an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order,¹ may invite. If, monks, that reproving monk admits that he has defamed (another monk) with an unfounded charge of an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the Order, having had him dealt with according to the rule,² may invite. If, monks, that reproving monk admits that he has defamed (another monk) with an unfounded charge involving a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong doing, an offence of wrong speech, the Order, having had him dealt with according to the rule,³ may invite.

“If, monks, that reprovved monk admits that he has committed an offence involving defeat, the Order, having expelled him, may invite. If, monks, that reprovved monk admits that he has committed an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the Order, having charged him with an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, may invite. If, monks, that reprovved monk admits that he has committed a grave offence ... an offence of wrong speech, the Order, having had him dealt with according to the rule, may invite.

¹ See Bu-Ss 8. ² See Bu-Pc 76. ³ Cf. Bu-Ss 9 (Vin 3.170). Vin-a 1078 says that offences incurred in all these cases are those of wrong-doing.

BASIS FOR A GRAVE OFFENCE, ETC.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed a grave offence on an Invitation day. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. Monks, those monks who view it as a grave offence, having led that monk to one side, having had him dealt with according to the rule, having approached the Order, should speak to it thus: ‘Your reverences, the monk who has fallen into that offence has made amends for it according to rule. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite.’

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed a grave offence on an Invitation day. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence of expiation. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence which ought to be confessed. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence of wrong-doing. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence of wrong speech. Monks, those monks who view it as a grave offence ... (=Kd 4.16.19) ‘... the Order may invite’.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed an offence of expiation on an Invitation day ... an offence which ought to be confessed ... an offence of wrong-doing ... an offence of wrong speech. Some monks view it as an offence of wrong speech, other monks view it as an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. Monks, those monks who view it as an offence of wrong speech ... (=Kd 4.16.19) ‘... the Order may invite’.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed an offence of wrong speech on an Invitation day. Some monks view it as an offence of wrong speech, other monks view it as a grave offence; some monks ... as an offence of wrong speech, other monks ... of

Kd 4.16

Kd 4.16

Vin 4.17

Kd 4.16

BD 4.2

Kd 4.16

expiation; some monks ... offence of wrong speech, other monks ... which ought to be confessed; some monks view it as an offence of wrong speech, other monks view it as an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, those monks who view it as an offence of wrong speech ... (= Kd 4.16.19) '... the Order may invite'.

16.23 "This is a case, monks, where if on an Invitation day a monk should speak in the midst of the Order, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This matter is known but not the individual'¹. If it seems right to the Order, the Order, having set aside the matter, may invite'², and he should be spoken to thus: 'Your reverence, Invitation is laid down by the Lord for those who are pure. If the matter is known but not the individual, speak about that now at once.'

16.24 "This is a case, monks, where if on an Invitation day a monk should speak in the midst of the Order, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This individual is known but not the matter. If it seems right to the Order, the Order, having set aside the individual, may invite; and he should be spoken to thus: 'Your reverence, Invitation is laid down by the Lord for those who are complete.'³ If the individual is known but not the matter, speak about that now at once.'

16.25 "This is a case, monks, ... 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This matter is known and the individual. If it seems right to the Order, the Order, having set aside the matter and the individual, may invite', and he should be spoken to thus: 'Your reverence, Invitation is laid down by the Lord for the pure and for those who are complete. If the matter is known and also the individual, speak about that now at once.'

16.26 "If, monks, the matter is known before an Invitation day, the individual afterwards, it is right to say so. If, monks, the individual is known before an Invitation day, the matter afterwards, it is right to say so. If, monks, both the matter and the individual are known before an Invitation day, and (a monk) opens up (the cases) after the

¹ I.e., the person who committed the offence or "matter", vatthu. ² Vin-a 1078 says "when we know the person, then we will reprove him, but let the Order invite now". ³ A complete Order.

Invitation is finished, there is an offence of expiation for opening up.”¹

THE STORY OF MAKERS OF STRIFE

Now at that time several monks, friends and associates, entered on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. In their neighbourhood other monks, makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of dispute, makers of contention, makers of legal questions in an Order, entered on the rains, saying: “When these monks have kept the rains we will suspend the invitation on an Invitation day.” But those monks heard: “It is said that in our neighbourhood other monks ... entered on the rains, saying: ‘When these monks ... on an Invitation day. ‘Now, what line of conduct should be followed by us?’ They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “This is a case, monks, where several monks, friends and associates, enter on the rains in a certain residence. In their neighbourhood ... (as in Kd 4.17.1) ‘... on an Invitation day’ I allow you, monks, to carry out two or three Observances with these monks on the fourteenth (day),² thinking: ‘How can we invite before those monks (invite)?’ If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, arrive at a residence, then, monks, those resident monks, having gathered together quickly, may invite; and having invited, they should say (to the others): ‘We, your reverences, have invited; let the venerable ones do what seems fitting.’

“If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, arrive unexpectedly at that residence,

¹ See Bu-Pc 63, where, it is an offence to open up for further discussion a matter already settled. ² Vin-a 1079 says, “here, the fourth and fifth are the two ‘fourteen (days)’, but there is usually a third ‘fourteenth’; therefore the third and fourth, or the third, fourth and fifth are the two or three ‘fourteenths’ that should be carried out. Thus there come to be two ‘fourteenths’. Proceeding thus—the thirteenth or fourteenth for the makers of strife—these will invite on an Invitation day that is a fifteenth (day)”.

those resident monks should make ready a seat, they should bring forward water for washing the feet, a footstool, a footstand, having gone to meet them they should receive their bowls and robes, they should offer them drinking water; having looked after them, (then) having gone outside the boundary, they may invite; having invited, they should say (to the others): ‘We, your reverences, have invited; let the venerable ones do what seems fitting.’

“If they should thus manage this, it is good. But if they do not manage it, the resident monks should be informed by an experienced, competent resident monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones who are residents listen to me. If it seems right to the venerables ones, we may now carry out the Observance, we may recite the Pātimokkha, we may invite on the next new-moon day¹’. If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, should speak thus to these monks: ‘All right, your reverences, but let us invite now at once’, they should be spoken to thus: ‘But you, your reverences, are not masters of our Invitation (-day), we will not invite yet’.

“If, monks, these monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, should stay on until that new-moon day, then, monks, the resident monks should be informed by an experienced, competent resident monk ... ‘... let us invite on the next full-moon day²’ ... (as in Kd 4.17.4) ‘... we will not invite yet’.

“If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... should stay on until that full-moon day, then monks, these monks, each and every one, must invite on the next full-moon day of the komudī cātumāsini,³ (even if) they are unwilling.

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, an ill one suspends the invitation of one who is not ill, he should be spoken to thus: ‘The venerable one is ill, and it is said by the Lord that one who is ill is not able to endure being questioned. Wait, your reverence, until you are well, when you are well you can reprove him if you desire to do so’. If being spoken to thus, he (nevertheless) reproves him, in disrespect there is an offence of expiation.¹

¹ kāle. ² junḥe; cf. above, BD 4.185. ³ See above, BD 4.205, n. 3.

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, one who is not ill suspends an ill one’s invitation, he should be spoken to thus: ‘Your reverence, this monk is ill, and it is said by the Lord that one who is ill is not able to endure being questioned. Wait, your reverence, until this monk is well; when he is well you can reprove him if you desire to do so’. If being spoken to thus, he (nevertheless) reproves him, in disrespect there is an offence of expiation.

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, an ill one suspends an ill one’s invitation, he should be spoken to thus: ‘The venerable ones are ill ... being questioned. Wait, your reverence, until you are (both) well; when he is well you can reprove him if you desire to do so’. If, being spoken to thus, he (nevertheless) reproves him, in disrespect there is an offence of expiation.

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, one who is not ill suspends the invitation of (another) who is not ill, the Order having questioned both closely and cross-questioned them, having had them dealt with according to the rule, may invite.”

HARMONIOUS INVITATION

Now at that time several monks, friends and companions, entered on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. While these were staying together on friendly terms and harmonious, a certain comfort was arrived at. Then it occurred to these monks: “While we are staying together ... arrived at. But if we should invite now, it may be that (some) monks, having invited, may set forth on tour, and so we will come to lose² this comfort. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “This is a case, monks, where several monks friends and companions, enter on the rains in a certain residence. While these are staying together ... arrived at. If it then occurs to these monks:

¹ Cf. also Bu-Pc 54. ² paribāhirā, external to, outside; as a noun, outsiders.

‘While we are staying together so we will come to lose this comfort’.
I allow you, monks, to make a protection of an Invitation day.¹

“And thus, monks, should it be made: Each and every one should gather together in the same place; when they have gathered together, the Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were staying together ... so will we come to lose this comfort. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may make a protection of an Invitation day, it may carry out the Observance, it may recite the Pātimokkha now; the Order may invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day. This is the motion.

“‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were staying together ... so will we come to lose this comfort. The Order is making a protection of the Invitation day; it will carry out the Observance, it will recite the Pātimokkha now; it will invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day. If the making a protection of the Invitation day (by the Order) is pleasing to the venerable ones (so that) it will carry out the Observance, will recite the Pātimokkha now, and will invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day, you should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. A protection of the Invitation day is made by the Order, it will carry out the Observance, it will recite the Pātimokkha now, and it will invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

“If, monks, when these monks have made a protection of an Invitation day, any monk should speak thus: ‘I want, your reverences, to set forth on a tour of the country, I have business to do in the country’, he should be spoken to thus: ‘Very well, your reverence, you can go when you have invited.’ And if, monks, that monk, while he is inviting, suspends another's invitation, he should be spoken to thus: 'You, your reverence, are not master of my Invitation day, I will not invite yet'. And if, monks, any monk suspends that monk's invitation while that monk is inviting, the Order, having questioned both closely and cross-questioned them, should have them dealt with according to the rule.

¹ pavāraṇāsaraṅgaha. Vin-a 1080 says that “when the pavāraṇāsaraṅgaha has been given, there comes to be as it were an avoidance during the rains; incoming monks can not take their (the resident ones’) lodgings, nor should the rains be cut short by them, for, having invited, they get the chance to set out on tour even during (the rains)”. The monks protect their harmony by postponing the Invitation day to the end of the rainy season.

"If, monks, that monk, having concluded his business in the country, returns again to that residence before the komudī cātumāsinī day and if, monks, while those monks are inviting, any monk suspends that monk's invitation, he should be spoken to thus: 'You, your reverence, are not master of my Invitation day, I have invited (already)'. If, monks, while those monks are inviting, that monk suspends any monk's invitation, the Order, having questioned both closely and having cross-questioned them, and having had them dealt with according to the rule, may invite."

The Fourth Section: that on Invitation

THIS IS ITS KEY

Having kept the rains they went to see the teacher in Kosala, communion that was uncomfortable (and) like beasts, suitable in regard to one another,
Inviting on a seat,¹ and two, (formal) act, ill one, relations, kings, and thieves, and men of abandoned life, likewise monks who are enemies of monks,
Five, four, three, two, one, fallen,
he doubted, he remembered,
the whole Order, being in doubt, greater, like, smaller (number),
Resident monks, the fourteenth,
the two communions by mark,
should arrive, not in a seated (assembly), giving leave of absence, non-invitation,
About savages, almost ended, great cloud, and an obstacle, invitation, they do not give (leave), 'in case our',
and not (duly) suspended, for a monk,
'Or on what?', and which in regard to what is seen, heard, suspected,

¹ pavārentāpaṇā. I follow the reading pavārent āsane of Sinhalese edition, and as suggested by OLDENBERG at Vin 1.379 (see Kd 4.18.2).

reproving and reprov'd, grave offence, matter, strife,
And a protection of an Invitation day, not master, may invite.

5. LEATHER (CAMMA)

THE STORY OF SOᅇA KOᅇIVISA

At one time the awakened one, the Lord, was staying at Rājagaha on Mount Vulture Peak. Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha ruled with supreme authority over eighty thousand villages. Now at that time, at Campā, a merchant's son called Soᅇa Koᅇivisa¹ was delicately nurtured and down came to have grown on the soles of his feet. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having had those eighty thousand village overseers² convened, sent a messenger to Soᅇa Koᅇivisa on some business, saying: "Let Soᅇa come, I want Soᅇa to come."

Then Soᅇa Koᅇivisa's parents spoke thus to Soᅇa Koᅇivisa: "The king, dear Soᅇa, wants to see your feet. Do not you, dear Soᅇa, stretch out your feet towards the king; sit down cross-legged in front of the king, and as you are sitting down the king will see your feet." Then they sent Soᅇa Koᅇivisa away in a palanquin. Then Soᅇa Koᅇivisa approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having approached, having greeted. King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, he sat down cross-legged in front of the king. So King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha saw the down that was growing on the soles of Soᅇa Koᅇivisa's feet.

¹ This Soᅇa episode recurs, in a shorter form, at AN iii.374-AN iii.379. Soᅇa's verses at Thag 632-644. Legend of how he came to be called Soᅇa (golden) given in Thag A. (see Psalms of the Bretheren p. 275f.), and AN-a i.233f. At AN i.24 he is called foremost of those who put forth energy; his clan name is there spelt Koᅇivīsa. ² Vin-a 1081 speaks of these as sons of (respectable) families living in these villages.

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having instructed those eighty thousand village overseers in matters concerning this world, dismissed them, saying: “You, good sirs, are now instructed by me in matters concerning this world; go along, pay homage to this Lord, and our Lord will instruct you in transcendental matters.” Then those eighty thousand village overseers approached Mount Vulture Peak.

5.1.4
4.237
1.180
Now at that time the venerable Sāgata¹ was the Lord’s attendant. Then those eighty thousand village overseers approached the venerable Sāgata; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Sāgata: “Honoured sir, these eighty thousand village overseers are approaching here to see the Lord. It were good, honoured sir, if we might have a chance to see the Lord.”

“Well, then, do you, venerable ones, remain² here for a moment until I have let the Lord know.”

d5.1.5
Then the venerable Sāgata, having stepped down³ from the moonstone (step)⁴ in front of the eighty thousand watching village overseers, having stepped up in front of the Lord, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, these eighty thousand village overseers are approaching here to see the Lord. Lord, does the Lord think it is now the right time for this?”

“Well, then, do you, Sāgata, make a seat ready in the shade of the dwelling-place.”

d5.1.6
“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Sāgata having answered the Lord in assent, having taken a chair, having stepped down from in front of the Lord, having stepped up on the moonstone (step) in front of the eighty thousand watching village overseers, made ready a seat in the shade of the dwelling-place. Then the Lord, having issued from the dwelling-place, sat down on the seat made ready in the shade of the dwelling-place.

¹ Cf. Vin 4.108, where Sāgata’s behaviour gave rise to the offence of drinking strong drink. See BD 2.382, n. 6. ² hotha. ³ nimujjitvā ... ummujjitvā. These two verbs are often used of plunging into and emerging from water. Here they seem to mean getting off one step and on to another. ⁴ pāṭikā, such as is (in the old cities of Ceylon) an architectural feature placed at the bottom of a short flight of steps leading up to a vihāra or a “temple”. See Mahāvamsa 31, Mahāvamsa 61. Nowadays it is called “moonstone step”, although in shape it is half a circle. It is called “half-moon stone”, aḍḍhacandapāsāna, at Vin-a 1081.

Then those eighty thousand village overseers approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Then those eighty thousand village overseers paid respect only to the venerable Sāgata, not likewise to the Lord. Then the Lord, knowing by reasoning of mind the minds of those eighty thousand village overseers, addressed the venerable Sāgata, saying: “Well then, do you, Sāgata, abundantly show a state of further-men,¹ a wonder of psychic power.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Sagata, having answered the Lord in assent, having risen above the ground,² paced up and down in the air, in the atmosphere, and he stood, and he sat down, and he lay down, and he smoked³ and he blazed,⁴ and then he vanished.

Then the venerable Sagata, having shown in the air, in the atmosphere, various states of further-men and wonders of psychic power, having inclined his head towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple; Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple”. Then those eighty thousand village overseers, saying: “Indeed it is marvellous, indeed, it is wonderful, that even a disciple can be of such great psychic power, of such great might. What must the teacher be?” paid respect only to the Lord, not likewise to the venerable Sagata.

Then the Lord, knowing by reasoning of mind the minds of those eighty thousand village overseers, talked a progressive talk,⁵ that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that their minds were ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to them that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as those eighty thousand village overseers were (sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose: that, “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

¹ uttarimanussadhamma. See BD 1, Introduction, p.xxivff. ² See BD 1.79, n. 6.

³ dhūpāyati. At Vin 4.109 a verb used to describe his activities is padhūpāsi, he blew forth smoke. ⁴ He is also said to have blazed at Vin 4.109 ⁵ Cf. Vin 1.15-Vin.1.16.

These, having seen dhamma,¹ attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, Lord, it is excellent, Lord. Just as, Lord, one should set upright what has been upset or should uncover what is covered or should point out the way to one who is astray or should bring a lamp into the darkness so that those with eyes might see forms, even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. We, Lord, are those going to the Lord for refuge, to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord receive us as lay-followers gone for refuge on this day for as long as life lasts.”

Then it occurred to Soṇa Koḷivisa: “In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord it is not easy for those who live in a house to lead the Brahma-faring that is wholly complete, wholly pure, and polished like a conch-shell. What now if I, having cut off hair and beard, having donned yellow robes, should go forth from home into homelessness?” Then those eighty thousand village overseers, delighted with the Lord’s speech, having given thanks for it, having risen from the seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping their right sides towards him.

Then Soṇa Koḷivisa, soon after those eighty thousand village overseers had departed, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Soṇa Koḷivisa spoke thus to the Lord: “In so far as I, Lord, understand dhamma taught by the Lord it is not easy for those who live in a house to lead the Brahma-faring that is wholly complete, wholly pure and polished like a conch-shell. I want, Lord, having cut off hair and beard, having donned yellow robes, to go forth from home into homelessness. Lord, may the Lord let me go forth.” So Soṇa Koḷivisa received the going forth in the Lord’s presence, he received ordination. And soon after he was ordained the venerable Soṇa stayed in the Cool Grove.

¹ Cf. Vin 1.12.

Because of his great output of energy in pacing up and down his feet broke, the place for pacing up and down in became stained with blood as though there had been slaughter of cattle. Then as the venerable Soṇa was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Those who are the Lord’s disciples dwell putting forth energy; I am one of these, yet my mind is not freed from the cankers with no grasping, and moreover there are my family’s possessions. It might be possible to enjoy the possessions and to do good. Suppose that I, having returned to the low life, should enjoy the possessions and should do good?”

Then the Lord, knowing by mind the venerable Soṇa’s reasoning of mind, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, or might bend back his outstretched arm, so did he, vanishing from Mount Vulture Peak, appear in the Cool Grove.¹ Then the Lord, touring the lodgings together with several monks, approached the venerable Soṇa’s place for pacing up and down in. The Lord saw that the venerable Soṇa’s place for pacing up and down in was stained with blood, and seeing (this), he addressed the monks, saying:

“Now why, monks, is this place for pacing up and down in stained with blood as though there has been slaughter of cattle?”

“Lord, because of the venerable Soṇa’s great energy in pacing up and down his feet broke, and this place for pacing up and down in is stained with his blood as though there had been slaughter of cattle.”

Then the Lord approached the venerable Soṇa’s dwelling-place, and having approached he sat down on an appointed seat. And the venerable Soṇa, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord spoke thus to the venerable Soṇa as he was sitting at a respectful distance:

¹ AN iii.374 adds, after Cool Grove, “in front of the venerable Soṇa”. This would balance end of Kd 5.1.17 below.

“Soṇa, as you were meditating in private did not a reasoning arise in your mind like this: ‘Those who are the Lord’s disciples dwell putting forth energy ... (as in Kd 5.1.13) ... Suppose that I, having returned to the low life, should enjoy the possessions and should do good?’”

“Yes, Lord.”

“What do you think about this, Soṇa? Were you clever at the lute’s stringed music when formerly you were a householder?”

“Yes, Lord.”

“What do you think about this, Soṇa? When the strings of your lute were too taut, was your lute at that time tuneful and fit for playing?”

“No, indeed, Lord.”

What do you think about this, Soṇa? When the strings of your lute were too slack, was your lute at that time tuneful and fit for playing?”

“No, indeed, Lord.”

“What do you think about this, Soṇa? When the strings of your lute were neither too taut nor too slack, but were keyed to an even pitch,¹ was your lute at that time tuneful and fit for playing?”

“Yes, Lord.”

“Even so, Soṇa, does too much output of energy conduce to restlessness, does too feeble energy conduce to slothfulness.

“Therefore do you, Soṇa, determine upon evenness² in energy and pierce the evenness of the faculties³ and reflect upon it.⁴”

¹ same guṇe paṭiṭṭhitā. ² On the readings samataṃ (as here) and samathaṃ, see gs iii.267, n. 3. The former is perhaps the more likely to be meant, and would carry out the idea of the “even pitch”. ³ indriyānaṃ ca samataṃ paṭivijjha. Commentary says: “pierce the evenness, the even nature of the faculty of faith and so on, the evenness of the faculties that are connected: so faith with wisdom and wisdom with faith, energy with contemplation and contemplation with energy.” ⁴ tattha ca nimittaṃ gaṇhāhi. Nimittaṃ gaṇhāti can mean to grasp a sign, a salient feature; or to reflect on a mental object. Vin-a 1081 says: mindfulness as to this evenness should arise; seize on that characteristic of (or, reflect on) tranquillity, insight, the ways, the fruits, and practise these.

“Yes, Lord,” the venerable Soṇa answered the Lord in assent. Then the Lord, having exhorted the venerable Soṇa with this exhortation,¹ as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, so did he, vanishing from in front of the venerable Soṇa in the Cool Grove, appear on Mount Vulture Peak.

After that² the venerable Soṇa determined upon evenness in energy and he pierced the evenness of the faculties and reflected upon it. Then the venerable Soṇa, dwelling alone, aloof, earnest, ardent, self-resolute, having soon realised here and now by his own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, abided in it, and he understood: Destroyed is birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such and such. And so the venerable Soṇa became one of the perfected ones.

When the venerable Soṇa had attained perfection, it occurred to him: “Suppose I were to declare profound knowledge³ in the Lord’s presence?” Then the venerable Soṇa approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Soṇa spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, that monk who is one perfected, who has destroyed the cankers, lived the life, done what was to be done, shed the burden, won his own goal, destroyed utterly the fetter of becoming, and is wholly freed by profound knowledge, he comes to be intent upon⁴ six matters: he comes to be intent upon renunciation, he comes to be intent upon aloofness, he comes to be intent upon non-harming, he comes to be intent upon the destruction of grasping, he comes to be intent upon the destruction of craving, he comes to be intent upon non-confusion.

“Perhaps, Lord, one of the venerable ones here might think: ‘Could it be that this venerable one is intent upon renunciation depending upon mere faith alone?' But this, Lord, is not to be regarded thus. Lord, the monk who has destroyed the cankers, has lived the life, done what was to be done, not seeing aught in himself to be done or to be added to what has been done, being passionless comes to be intent on renunciation because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred comes to be intent on renunciation because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion comes to be intent on renunciation because of the destruction of confusion.

¹ Referred to at AN-a i.237 as vinovāda, the exhortation on the lute; cf. Psalms of the Bretheren p.276. ² aparena samayena. ³ aññā, gnosis. ⁴ adhimutta, striving for.

“Perhaps, Lord, one of the venerable ones here might think: ‘Could it be that this venerable one is intent on aloofness while hankering after gains, honour, fame?’ But this, Lord, is not to be regarded thus. Lord, the monk who has destroyed the cankers ... or to be added to what has been done, being passionless comes to be intent on aloofness because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred ... being without confusion comes to be intent on aloofness because of the destruction of confusion.

“Perhaps, Lord, one of the venerable ones here might think: ‘Could it be that this venerable one is intent on non-harming, is backsliding from the essence to the contagion of habit and custom¹?’ But this, Lord, is not to be regarded thus. Lord, the monk who has destroyed the cankers ... or to be added to what has been done, being passionless comes to be intent on non-harming because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred ... being without confusion comes to be intent on non-harming because of the destruction of confusion.

“Being passionless he comes to be intent on the destruction of grasping because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred he comes to be intent on the destruction of grasping because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion he comes to be intent on the destruction of grasping because of the destruction of confusion; being passionless he comes to be intent on the destruction of craving because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred

¹ sīlabbataparāmāsa. Vin-a 1082 explains: silañ ca vatañ ca parāmasitvā gahitaṃ gahaṇamattaṃ, “the mere holding on to what is held to, having rubbed up against (come into contact with) moral habit (or, good works) and custom” (as though this were enough).

he comes to be intent on the destruction of craving because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion he comes to be intent on the destruction of craving because of the destruction of confusion; being passionless he comes to be intent on non-confusion because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred he comes to be intent on non-confusion because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion he comes to be intent on non-confusion because of the destruction of confusion.

“Thus, Lord, even if¹ shapes cognisable by the eye come very strongly into the field of vision of a monk whose mind is wholly freed, they do not obsess his mind for his mind comes to be undefiled,² firm, won to composure, and he notes its passing hence.³ If sounds cognisable by the ear ... if scents cognisable by the nose ... if tastes cognisable by the tongue ... if touches cognisable by the body ... if mental objects⁴ cognisable by the mind⁵ come very strongly into the field of thought of a monk whose mind is wholly freed, they do not obsess his mind for his mind comes to be undefiled, firm, won to composure, and he notes its passing hence.

“It is as if, Lord, there were a rocky mountain slope without a cleft, without a hollow, of one mass, and as if wild wind and rain should come very strongly from the eastern quarter—it would neither tremble nor quake nor shake violently; and as if wild wind and rain should come very strongly from the western quarter ... from the northern quarter ... from the southern quarter—it would neither tremble nor quake nor shake violently. Even so, Lord, if shapes cognisable by the eye come very strongly into the field of vision of a monk whose mind is wholly freed ... if mental objects cognisable by the mind come very strongly into the field of thought of a monk whose mind is wholly freed, they do not obsess his mind, for his mind comes to be undefiled, firm, won to composure, and he notes its passing hence.”

¹ As also at AN iv.404. ² amissikata. Vin-a 1082 explains this to mean unmixed with (or, undefiled by) the kilesas (obstructions). ³ Vin-a 1083 says this means: “he sees the arising and passing away of that mind”, tassa cittassa uppādam pi vayam pi passati. ⁴ dhammā. ⁵ mano.

If one is intent upon renunciation and mind's aloofness¹,
 If one is intent upon non-harming and destruction of grasping,
 If one is intent on destruction of craving and mind's non-confusion,
 Having seen sensations' rise, his mind is wholly freed.
 For that monk whose mind is calmed and wholly freed
 There is nothing to add to what has been done, there is naught to be done.

As a rock of one mass by wind is never moved,²
 So shapes, tastes, sounds, scents, touches and all Pleasant and unpleasant mental objects³ stir not a man like this.
 His mind is firm, well freed,⁴ and he notes its passing hence.

REJECTION OF DOUBLE-LINED SANDALS

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: "Thus, monks, do young men of family declare profound knowledge. The goal is spoken of but the self is not obtruded. But then it seems to me that there are some foolish men here who declare profound knowledge for fun; these ¹ These lines, to the end, form the conclusion of the verses ascribed to Soṇa Koḷivisa at Thag 640–Thag 644. They also occur at AN iii.378f. Metrical translations are at Psalms of the Bretheren 277 and Gs iii.269f. Version above, and that at Vinaya Texts ii.12 are rather more literal in places; but none of the others recognises that dhammā means mental objects (last line but one), and already referred to by Soṇa (as the sixth "sense-datum"). ² This line occurs at Dhp 81. ³ See note at Kd 1.11.2 (above) for further references. ⁴ Thag 644 reads visaññuttam instead of vippamuttam (as above and at AN iii.379).

afterwards come to disaster.”¹

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Soṇa, saying: “You, Soṇa, have been delicately nurtured. I allow for you, Soṇa, sandals with one lining.”

“But I, Lord, gave up eighty cartloads of gold² when I went forth from home into homelessness, and a herd of seven elephants.³ Because of this there will be speakers against me, saying: ‘Soṇa Koḷivisa gave up eighty cartloads of gold when he went forth from home into homelessness, and a herd of seven elephants; and now this very (person) is clinging on to⁴ sandals with one lining.’

“If the Lord will allow them to the Order of monks, I too will make use of them, but if the Lord will not allow them to the Order of monks, neither will I make use of them.” Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, I allow sandals with one lining. Monks, doubly lined⁵ sandals should not be worn, trebly lined⁶ sandals should not be worn, sandals with many linings⁷ should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

REJECTION OF ALL DARK GREEN, ETC.

“Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals that were entirely dark green⁸ ... that were entirely yellow ... that were entirely red ... that were entirely crimson ... that were entirely black

¹ This paragraph occurs at AN iii.359. Cf. AN i.218; GS i.198, n. 2; MN i.396. Vin-a 1083 explains “the goal is spoken of” by saying “if he is called an arahant, that is the goal spoken of. But properly (eva) it should be taken as ‘the meaning of a sutta from the explanation of a suttanta’” (attha means both goal and meaning). It explains “the self is not obtruded” as “if (the profound knowledge) is declared thus, ‘I am an arahant’, the self is not obtruded” (or mentioned or brought forward, na upanīta).

² Misprint at Vin 1.185 has been corrected at Vinaya Texts ii.13, n. 3 to aṣṭisaṅgaṭṭavāhe hiraññam. ³ Vin-a 1083 says that here this herd (retinue, array, anīka) is called six cow-elephants and one bull-elephant. ⁴ satto (with instrumental), or ‘is enamoured of’. ⁵ diguṇa ... tiguṇa. ⁶ diguṇa ... tiguṇa. ⁷ gaṇaṅgaṇupāhanā: Vin-a 1083 says “sandals with upwards of four linings”. ⁸ nilīka. See BD 2.407, n. 2, BD 2.408, n. 1, n. 2.

... that were dyed entirely orange¹ ... that were dyed entirely multi-coloured.² People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, sandals that are entirely dark green are not to be worn ... that are dyed entirely multi-coloured are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals with dark green straps³ ... with yellow straps ... with red straps ... with crimson straps ... with black straps ... with dyed orange straps ... with dyed multi-coloured straps. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, sandals with dark green straps ... sandals with dyed multi-coloured straps are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals with heel-coverings⁴ ... sandals that were knee-boots⁵ ... sandals that were top-boots⁶ ... sandals that were filled with cotton⁷ ... sandals of (many hues., like) partridges’ wings⁸ ... sandals pointed with rams’ horns ... sandals pointed with goats’ horns ... sandals (ornamented) with scorpions' tails ... sandals sewn round with peacocks' tail feathers ... embroidered¹ sandals. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses". They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ mahāraṅgaratta. Vin-a 1083, “the colour of a centipede’s back”. ² mahānāmaratta. Vin-a 1083 says, “it is when the colours are mixed, the colours of pale foliage, but the Kurundiya calls it the colours of the paduma-lotus flowers”. These could be red or white. Mahānāma may be the name of a plant, however. ³ vaṭṭikā. Vin-a 1084 reads vaḍḍhikā, and explains by vaddha. ⁴ khallakabaddha. Cf. Pv-a 127. See note at Vinaya Texts ii.15 on doubtful meaning of the nature of all these forms of foot-covering, so curiously called upāhana, sandals or slippers. ⁵ puṭabaddha. Vin-a 1084 says “it is called a Greek (yonaka) sandal; it covers the whole foot as far as the knee”. ⁶ pālīguṇṭhima. These covered the upper pāda, foot or leg, but not the knee, Vin-a 1084. ⁷ tūlapuṇṇika. On the three kinds of cotton, tūla, see BD 3.92, and n. 2 there. ⁸ tittirapattika. Vin-a 1084 explains by tittirapattasadisā vicittavaddhā, which is followed in above translation, although “dyed multi-coloured” has already been dealt with.

"Monks, sandals with heel-coverings should not be worn ... embroidered sandals should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals decorated with lion-skins² ... with tiger-skins ... with panther-skins ... with black antelope-skins ... with otter³-skins ... with cat-skins ... with squirrel-skins ... with owl-skins⁴. People ... spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, sandals decorated with lion-skins ... with owl-skins are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these) there is an offence of wrong-doing."

ALLOWANCE FOR CAST OFF SANDALS WITH MANY LININGS

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood with a certain monk as his attendant. Then that monk went limping along behind the Lord. A certain lay follower, having put on sandals with many linings, saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him, having taken off his sandals, he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, ¹ citra; often means variously coloured or gaily coloured. Cf. citrūpāhana at DN i.7.

² Vin-a 1084 "they are made having joined the lion-skin to the edges, as to a seam of a robe". ³ udda. Meaning uncertain, see Vinaya Texts ii.16, n. 5. Both COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol. 4, No.2, p.133, and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names sub. article Dabbapuppha Jātaka, take udda as otter. Cf. uddapota at Cariyāpiṭaka 1.x.2. ⁴ Vin-a 1084 explains ulūka, owl, by pakkhibiḷāla, flying fox.

he approached that monk; having approached, having greeted that monk, he spoke thus:

“Why, honoured sir, does the master limp?”

“My feet are split, sir.”

“See, honoured sir, here are sandals.”

“No, sir, sandals with many linings are objected to¹ by the Lord.”

“Take these sandals, monk.”² Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, sandals with many linings that have been cast off. Monks, new sandals with many linings are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

REJECTION OF SANDALS INSIDE A MONASTERY

Now at that time the Lord was pacing up and down without sandals in the open air. Monks who were elders, thinking: “The teacher is pacing up and down without sandals”, also paced up and down without sandals. The group of six monks, while the teacher was pacing up and down without sandals and while monks who were elders were pacing up and down without sandals, paced up and down with sandals on. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: How can this group of six monks, while the teacher is pacing up and down without sandals, and while monks who are elders are pacing up and down without sandals, pace up and down with sandals on?”

Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, while the teacher ... with sandals on?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How monks, can these foolish men, while the teacher was pacing up and down without sandals, and while monks who are elders were pacing up and down without sandals, pace up and down with sandals on? For, monks, even these white-frocked householders, on account of procuring a craft for their livelihood, will be respectful, deferential, courteous¹ towards their teachers.

¹ paṭikkhittā. Note that he does not say “not allowed”. ² As pointed out at Vinaya Texts ii.17, n. 1, this must be understood as spoken by Gotama. A layman did not address a monk as “monk” but Gotama is constantly recorded to do so.

“Herein, monks, let your light shine forth so that you who have thus gone forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught may be² respectful, deferential, courteous towards teachers,³ grades of teachers,⁴ preceptors, grades of preceptors.⁵ It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not pace up and down with sandals while teachers, grades of teachers, preceptors, grades of preceptors are pacing up and down without sandals. Whoever should (so) pace up and down, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And, monks, you should not wear sandals within a monastery. Whoever should wear them (there), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to have an affliction of corns on his feet.⁶ Having taken hold of that monk, they made him go out to relieve himself. As the Lord was touring the lodgings he saw those monks who, having taken hold of that monk, were making him go out to relieve himself, and seeing (this), he approached those monks, having approached, he spoke thus to those monks:

“What, monks, is this monk’s disease?”

“Lord, this venerable one has an affliction of corns on the feet,

¹ These three words also at Vin 1.45; AN iii.15. ² Cf. Kd 10.2.20. ³ The four teachers meant here, according to Vin-a 1085, are those for the going forth, for ordination, for the resources, for the recitation (of the Pātimokkha). Cf. Vism 94. ⁴ ācariyamatta. Vin-a 1085 says that one of six years’ standing is for one (i.e. to teach one) of no (full) year’s standing; so one of seven years’ standing will be for one of one year’s standing, one of eight for one of two, one of nine for one of three, one of ten for one of four years’ standing. ⁵ upajjhāyamatta. Vin-a 1085: these are monks who are friends and companions of a preceptor, or of any who are ten years one’s senior (in the Order). ⁶ pādakhilābādha. Khīla may here mean an eruption. Vin-a 1085: the flesh comes to have stood out from (or left, nikkhanta) the foot, like a stake (reading khīla; cf. Ja v.204 khīlāni, variant reading khilāni, meaning “sharp stakes”).

4.250 and having taken hold of him, we are making him go out to relieve himself.” Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, he whose feet are painful or he whose feet are split or he who has an affliction of corns on the feet, to wear sandals.”

15.6.1 Now at that time monks got up on to couches and chairs with unwashed feet, and robes and lodgings were soiled.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, when you think: ‘I will get up now on to a couch or a chair’, to wear sandals.”

15.6.2 Now at that time, monks, going to an Observance-hut² and to a meeting-place at night, in the dark trod upon stumps of trees and on thorns, and their feet became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to use sandals within a monastery, a torch, a light, a staff.³”

REJECTION OF WOODEN SANDALS

15.6.3 Now at that time the group of six monks, getting up in the night towards dawn, having put on wooden shoes,⁴ paced up and down in the open air talking in high, loud, rasping⁵ tones a variety of worldly talk,⁶ that is to say talk of kings, talk of thieves, talk of great ministers, talk of armies, talk of dangers, talk of battles, talk of food, talk of drink, talk of clothes, talk of beds, talk of garlands, talk of scents, talk of relations, talk of vehicles, talk of villages, talk of little towns, talk of towns, talk of the country, talk of women, talk of heroes,⁷

¹ Cf. Vin 2.174. ² uposathagga; cf. Vin 3.66. There is also uposathāgāra, translated above, e.g. Kd 2.9.1 as “Observance-hall”. ³ kattaradaṇḍa; cf. Vin 2.76, Vin 2.217, Vin 3.160. The last part of the rule of Kd 5.4.3 appears to be nullified by this rule at Kd 5.6.2. ⁴ kaṭṭhapāduka. ⁵ khaṭṭakhaṭṭasaddā, sounds of clearing the throat. ⁶ tiracchānakathā; cf. BD 3.82 for notes. ⁷ sūrakathā here; see BD 3.82, n. 5.

talk of streets, talk of wells, talk of those departed before, talk of diversity, speculation about the world, speculation about the sea, talk on becoming and not becoming thus or thus; and they both killed insects, having trodden on them, and also made monks fall away from contemplation.¹

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticized, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks getting up in the night towards dawn, having put on wooden shoes, pace up and down in the open air talking in high, loud rasping tones a variety of worldly talk ... and both kill insects, having trodden on them, and also make monks fall away from contemplation?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, getting up in the night towards dawn ... and made monks fall away from contemplation?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, wooden shoes are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Benares. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Benares. The Lord stayed there near Benares at Isipatana in the deer-park. Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking, “Wooden shoes are objected to by the Lord”, having had young palmyra palms² cut, wore shoes of palmyra palm leaves; those young palmyra palms which were cut, withered. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, having had young palmyra palms cut, wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves?”

¹ Cf. AN iii.343, AN iv.343. ² tālataruṇa, possibly meaning the shoots of the palm trees; but I think not, for it was probably the young trees themselves that withered once the monks had had some of their leaves cut off, and not just the cut leaves or sprouts or shoots.

These young palmyra palms which were cut, are withering. These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are harming life that is one-facultied¹".

Monks heard these people who looked down upon, criticised, spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, having had young palmyra palms cut, wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves, and that those young palmyra palms which were cut are withering?" "It is true, Lord." The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can these foolish men, having had young palmyra palms cut, wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves (so that) the young palmyra palms wither? For, monks, people think that there are living things in a tree.² It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, you should not wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves. Whoever should wear (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: "Shoes of palmyra palm leaves are objected to by the Lord", having had young bamboos cut, wore shoes of bamboo leaves; those young bamboos that were cut withered ... (as in Kd 5.7.1, Kd 5.7.2. Read bamboo instead of palmyra palm) ... Monks, you should not wear shoes of bamboo leaves. Whoever should wear (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Then the Lord, having stayed at Benares for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Bhaddiya. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Bhaddiya. The Lord stayed there at Bhaddiya in the Jātiyā Grove.³ Now at that time the monks of Bhaddiya were addicted to the practice of ornamenting their shoes in a variety of ways. They made tiṇa-grass shoes and had them made ... muñja-grass shoes and had them made ... shoes of reeds and had them made ... marshy date-

¹ Cf. BD 2.223, BD 2.226, BD 3.320. ² Cf. BD 2.223, BD 2.227. (omitted by mistake: insert before "It is not, foolish men ..."). ³ Mentioned at Vin 1.241, Vin 3.37; AN iii.36.

palm¹ shoes and had them made ... kamala-grass² shoes and had them made, they made woollen shoes and had them made; they neglected the recitation, the interrogation, the higher morality, the higher thought, the higher wisdom.³

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks of Bhaddiya be addicted to the practice of ornamenting shoes in a variety of ways, and make tiṇa-grass shoes and have them made ... and neglect the recitation, the interrogation, the higher morality, the higher thought, the higher wisdom?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monks of Bhaddiya are addicted to the practice of ... and neglect the recitation ... the higher wisdom?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men be addicted to the practice of ornamenting shoes ... and neglect the recitation ... the higher wisdom? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...”

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, shoes of tiṇa grass should not be worn, shoes of muñja grass ... shoes of reeds ... marshy date-palm shoes ... kamala grass shoes ... woollen shoes should not be worn, shoes made with gold ... shoes made with silver ... shoes made with gems⁴ ... shoes made with lapis lazuli¹ ... shoes made with crystal² ... with bronze ... with glass³ ... with tin⁴ ... with lead⁵ ... shoes made with copper should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing. And any shoes, monks, that can be handed on⁶ should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, three (kinds of) shoes that are in fixed places and that cannot be handed on⁷: privy shoes, urinal shoes, rinsing shoes.⁸”

¹ hintāla. Monier Williams gives: “the marshy date tree, a species of palm, Phoenix or Elate Paludosa.” Vin-a 1085 says they are shoes made of the leaves of khajjūri (not in Pali-English Dictionary, but Childers gives “the wild date palm tree, Phoenix Sylvestris”), but not the leaves of the hintāla itself. ² kamala seems not to be “lotus” here. Vin-a 1085 says, there is a grass (tiṇa) called kamalavaṇṇa (kamala-coloured, with variant reading of -tiṇa for -vaṇṇa), therefore they call the made-up shoes khus-khus shoes. For khus-khus, usīra, see BD 2.228, n. 1. ³ Cf. BD 2.94. ⁴ At DN i.7 it is said that Gotama abstains from using maṇi, gems or precious stones. Sometimes meaning crystal. At Vin 2.112 bowls made of any of these materials are not allowed.

Then the Lord, having stayed in Bhaddiya for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattihī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvattihī. The Lord stayed there in Sāvattihī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks caught hold of cows, which were crossing the river Aciravatī, by their horns, and they caught hold of them by their ears, and they caught hold of them by their dewlaps, and they caught hold of them by their tails, and they mounted on their backs, and they touched their privy parts with lustful thoughts, and having ducked young calves, they killed them.

People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, catch hold of cows, which are crossing the river Aciravatī, by their horns ... like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks caught hold of cows ... and having ducked young calves, killed them?”

¹ veḷuriya, or beryl. See Vinaya Texts iii.82, n. 1. Ja iv.141 speaks of veḷuriya as vaṃsarāga, and Vb-a 64 as vaṃsavaṇṇamaṇi, a jewel the colour of bamboo. A word-play on veḷuriya and veḷu (bamboo) is probably the origin of such definitions. ² phalika, or quartz. ³ kāca. See Vinaya Texts iii.82, n. 2. ⁴ tipu. At Vin 2.112 tin and lead supports for bowls are allowed. At SN v.92 tin and lead are among the five corruptions (alloys) of gold, jātarūpa. Vb-a 63 classifies gold (suvaṇṇa as above), tin, lead, and the next, copper (tambuloḥa) under jātiloḥa, (seven) natural metals. It calls tipu white tipu, and sīsa dark tipu. ⁵ sīsa. ⁶ kāci saṃkamaṇīyā pādukā. ⁷ Vin-a 1085 says: well fixed to the ground, immovable, not to be folded up (or put away, collected, gathered up, asamhāriya). ⁸ For further references, see Vinaya Texts ii.24, n. 3.

“It is true, Lord.”

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not catch hold of cows by their horns ... (or) ... ears ... (or) ... dewlaps ... (or) ... tails, nor should you mount on their backs. Whoever should (so) mount, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor should you touch their privy parts with lustful thoughts. Whoever should (so) touch them, there is a grave offence. Nor should you kill young calves. Whoever should kill them should be dealt with according to the rule.¹”

REJECTION OF VEHICLES, ETC.

Now at that time² the group of six monks went in a vehicle, and there was a bull in the middle yoked with cows and there was a cow in the middle yoked with bulls.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “As at the festival of the Ganges and Mahī⁴”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, you should not go in a vehicle. Whoever should (so) go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁵”

Now at that time a certain monk, going through the Kosala country to Sāvattthī in order to see the Lord, became ill on the way. Then that monk, stepping aside from the road, sat down at the root of a certain tree. People, seeing that monk, spoke thus: “Where, honoured sir, will the master go?”

¹ Bu-Pc 61. ² From here to end of Kd 5.10.3 cf. Vin 2.276, which refers to the group of six nuns. ³ As Vinaya Texts ii.25, n. 2 remarks: “Buddhaghosa explains this passage in a different way.” He says, Vin-a 1085: itthiyuttenā ti dhenuyuttana (yoked with milch cows); purisantarenā ti purisasārathinā (with a male charioteer or driver); purisayuttenā ti goṇayuttana (yoked with oxen); itthantarenā ti itthisārathinā (with a female charioteer). ⁴ Gangā-mahiyāya. Vinaya Texts ii.25, n. 3 says that by Mahī is probably meant “the well-known affluent of the Ganges”. Vin-a 1085 explains by Gangā-Mahikīlikā (variant reading kīlikāya). ⁵ At Vin 4.339 (BD 3.403) any nun who was not ill fell into an offence of expiation if she went in a vehicle. “Vehicle” is defined e.g. at Vin 3.49, Vin 4.201.

5.10.2 “I will go to Sāvattthī, sirs, in order to see the Lord.”

“Come, honoured sir, we will go along.”

“I am not able to, sirs, I am ill.”

“Come, honoured sir, get into a vehicle.”

“No, sirs, a vehicle is objected to by the Lord,” and being scrupulous, he did not get into a vehicle. Then that monk, having arrived at Sāvattthī, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

5.10.3 “I allow, monks, a vehicle to one who is ill.”

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, should (the vehicle be) yoked with cows or yoked with bulls¹? “They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

1.192
4.256 “I allow you, monks, a handcart yoked with a bull.²”

Now at that time a certain monk became extremely uncomfortable owing to the jolting of a vehicle. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow, monks, a palanquin,³ a sedan-chair⁴.”

REJECTION OF HIGH AND BROAD SEATS

5.10.4 Now at that time the group of six monks used high and broad things to recline upon,⁵ that is to say: a sofa,⁶ a divan,⁷ a long-haired coverlet,⁸

¹ itthiyuttaṃ nu kho purisayuttaṃ nu kho. ² purisayuttaṃ hatthavaṭṭakaṃ. Vin-a 1085 says: here yoked with men (of a man or bulls or a bull, purisa), a woman (itthi) or a man (purisa) may be the driver. For a handcart rolls along whether itthiyo or purisā move it. ³ sivikā. Vin-a 1085: piṭaka-sivikā, basket palanquin.

⁴ pāṭaṅki. Vin-a 1085: a woven cloth (? paṭapoṭṭalika, variant reading paṭalika) made up having hung it out on bamboos; perhaps what in South India is called a dooly.

⁵ uccāsayanamahāsayana. List recurs at Vin 2.163, DN i.7, AN i.181; some of the items only at MN i.76 = AN i.137. Cf. also MN-a ii.39. Vin-a 1086 says “uccāsayana is a couch exceeding the (right) measure” (the height of the legs of a couch is given as eight finger-breadths at Vin 4.168), and “mahāsayana is a sheet (paccattharaṇa) that is not (made) allowable”. ⁶ āsandi, see BD 3.326, n. 1, Dialogues of the Buddha i.11, n. 4. The use of this and of a divan is forbidden to nuns at Vin 4.299 (BD 3.326f.). ⁷ pallaṅka. See BD 3.271, n. 3, Dialogues of the Buddha i.11, n. 5. ⁸ gonaka (also spelled goṇaka).

Vin-a 1086 says a long-haired wide kojava (fleece counterpane or cover with long hair). On kojava, see below, BD 4.397, n. 5, a many-coloured coverlet,¹ a white coverlet,² a wool coverlet besprent with flowers,³ a cotton quilt,⁴ a wool coverlet decorated with animals' forms,⁵ a wool covering with hair on the upper side,⁶ a wool covering with hair at one side,⁷ a silken sheet studded with jewels,⁸ a sheet made with silk threads and studded with jewels,⁹ a dancer's carpet¹⁰, an elephant rug, a horse rug, a chariot rug, rugs of black antelope skins, a splendid sheeting of the hide of the kadali-deer,¹¹ a sheet with an awning above¹², a couch with a red cushion at either end.¹³ People, engaged in touring the dwelling-places, having seen (all this), looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: "Monks, high and broad things to recline upon should not be used, that is to say: a sofa ... a couch with a red cushion at either end. Whoever should use (any of these) there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ cittaka, Vin-a 1086 says a coverlet (attharaka) made of wool of various colours (citta) (embroidered with) wild beasts (vāla, variant reading vāna; DN-a 86 reads vāna, with variant readings cāna, vāta). ² paṭikā. Vin-a 1086: a white (seta) coverlet made of wool. ³ paṭalikā. I follow WOODWARD's translation at GS i.164. Vin-a 1086 gives the meaning as "a covering made of wool, a mass of flowers", and further calls it a "cloth of the Greeks (Yonaka) and Tamils", with variant reading (as at AN-a ii.293) yo āmalakapaṭṭo ti pi vuccati. Perhaps a better reading for āmalaka (emblem myrobalan) occurs at DN-a i.87: āmilāka ("a woollen cover into which a floral pattern is woven," Pali-English Dictionary). ⁴ tūlikā. Vin-a 1086 says "just an ordinary tūlikā", while DN-a 87 and AN-a ii.293 say "a tūlikā stuffed with a certain one of the three kinds of cotton". These three kinds are given at Vin 2.150, Vin 4.170 as cotton from trees, from creepers and from the poṭaki-grass; see BD 3.93, n. 2. ⁵ vikatikā. Vin-a 1086 says, "a covering made of wool, ornamented (vicitta) with forms of lions, tigers, etc.". ⁶ Vin 1.192 and Vin-a 1086 both read uddha- (upper) lomin as against udda- (both) of DN i.7, AN i.181. ⁷ ekantalomin. ⁸ kaṭṭhissa. Commentaries say "a sheet (paccattharaṇa) made of kaṭṭhissa (?) and silk and sewn round with (parisibbita) jewels (ratana)". ⁹ koseyya. I take above rendering from Vin-a 1086. ¹⁰ Vin-a 1086, "a sheet made of wool suitable for the dances of sixteen dancing girls". ¹¹ kadalimigapavarapaccattharaṇa. Vin-a 1086, "it is called the hide of the kadali-deer; a splendid (pavara) sheet is made from this. It means the best (uttama) kind of sheet. They say they make it having spread out the deerhide and sewn it above white hangings" (vattha, also meaning clothes). ¹² sauttaracchada. Vin-a 1086 explains as "together with a dyed (or red, ratta) awning attached above", and mentions sheet (paccattharaṇa) in this connection. ¹³ ubhatolohitakūpadhāna. Vin-a 1087 explains as above.

REJECTION OF ALL LEATHER

^{5.10.6} Now at that time the group of six monks thinking, “High and broad things to recline upon are objected to by the Lord”, used large hides: a lion’s hide, a tiger’s hide, a panther’s hide, These were cut to the measurement of a couch and they were cut to the measurement of a chair, and they were laid inside the couches and they were laid outside the couches and they were laid inside the chairs and they were laid outside the chairs. People, touring the dwelling-places, having seen (this), looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, large hides should not be used: a lion’s hide, a tiger’s hide, a panther’s hide. Whoever should use (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

^{5.10.7} Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: “Large hides are objected to by the Lord”, used cow-hides. These were cut to the measurement of a couch ... (as in Kd 5.10.6 above) ... and they were laid outside the chairs.

^{4.25.8} A certain depraved monk came to be dependent upon a certain depraved lay-follower. Then that depraved monk, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of that depraved lay-follower; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. Then that depraved lay-follower approached that depraved monk; having approached, having greeted that depraved monk, he sat down at a respectful distance.

^{5.10.8} Now at that time that depraved lay-follower had a young calf, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; it was marked¹ like a panther cub. Then that depraved monk gazed longingly at and thought about² that calf. Then that depraved lay-follower spoke thus to that depraved monk: “Why, honoured sir, does the master gaze longingly at and think about this calf?”

¹ citra, variegated, beautiful. ² Cf. BD 2.30 and n. 3 there.

“Sir, this calf’s hide is of use to me.” Then that depraved lay follower, having slaughtered that calf, having skinned it, bestowed the hide upon that depraved monk. Then that depraved monk, having hidden the hide in his outer cloak, went away.

Then that cow, longing for her calf¹, followed close after that depraved monk. Monks spoke thus: “Why, your reverence, is this cow following close after you?”

“I don’t know, your reverences, why this cow is following close after me.”

Now at that time this depraved monk’s outer cloak became stained with blood. Monks spoke thus: “But this outer cloak of yours, your reverence—what has happened to it?” Then that depraved monk told this matter to the monks. They said:

“But did you, your reverence, incite (someone) to onslaught on creatures?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this monk incite (someone) to onslaught on creatures? Is not onslaught on creatures condemned in many a figure by the Lord, restraint from onslaught on creatures extolled?” Then these monk told this matter to the Lord.

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned that depraved monk, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, incited (someone) to onslaught on creatures?”

“It is true, Lord.”

“How can you, foolish man, incite (someone) to onslaught on creatures? Foolish man, has not onslaught on creatures been condemned by me in many a figure, restraint from onslaught on creatures extolled? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ vacchagiddhini, cf. SN iv.181.

“Monks, there should be no inciting (anyone) to onslaught on creatures. Whoever should (so) incite, should be dealt with according to the rule.¹ Nor, monks, should a cow-hide be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should any hide be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ALLOWANCE FOR WHAT IS DISPLAYED BY HOUSEHOLDERS, ETC.

Now at that time people's couches and chairs came to be covered up² with hides, covered over with hides. Monks being scrupulous, did not sit down on them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to sit down on what is displayed by householders³, but not to lie down on it.”

Now at that time dwelling-places were lashed together⁴ with thongs of hide. Monks, being scrupulous, did not sit down (in them). They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Bu-Pj 1, where it is as bad to incite someone to cause the death of a human being as oneself to murder one. Cf. also Bu-Pc 11, Bu-Pc 61, Bu-Pc 62. ² onaddha ... Vinaddha. Cf. Vin 2.150 where onaddhamañca and onaddhapīṭha are allowed. Cf. also Vin 2.270; and tūlonaddha at Vin 2.163. ³ gihivikata. “To display” is one of the meanings of vikartum given by Monier-Williams. Same “allowance” made at Vin 2.163.

⁴ ogumphiyanti. Vin-a 1087 (reading ogupphiyanti, a variant reading not noticed in Pali-English Dictionary) says bhittidaṇḍakādīsū veṭhetvā bandhanti, having twisted them (the thongs) round, they tie them to wall-posts, etc. A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Early Indian Architecture, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p.266, says “this would seem to have been natural in the case of the wattle and daub walls of the simple pañṇasālās; but we do also find early pillars decorated with designs of interlacing ropes or thongs which may be vestigial ornament ... Atharva Veda, 9.3 refers to the parts of a house that are knotted and tied”.

“I allow you, monks, to sit down against¹ what is used only for lashing² (things together).”

Now at that time the group of six monks entered a village with their sandals on. People looked down upon, criticised spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter a village with your sandals on. Whoever should (so) enter it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk became ill; he was not able to enter the village without his sandals. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a monk if he is ill to enter a village with his sandals on.”

THE STORY OF SOṆA KUṬIKAṆṆA

Now at that time³ the venerable Kaccāna the Great⁴ was staying among the people of Avanti⁵ at Osprey’s Haunt⁶ on Steep Rock mountain slope.¹ Now at that time the lay-follower, Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa², was a supporter of the venerable Kaccāna the Great. Then the lay-follower, Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa, approached the venerable Kaccāna the Great; having approached, having greeted the venerable Kaccāna the Great, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the lay-follower, Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa, spoke thus to the venerable Kaccāna the Great:

¹ Vin-a 1087, to sit leaning against. ² bandhanamatta. Cf. Vin 1.254. Word occurs also at Vin 2.135, but there seems to have a different meaning. See also its use at Kd 7.1.5, “only by tacking”. ³ To end of Kd 5.13.10, cf. Ud 5.6, Dh-p-a iv.101ff. ⁴ At AN i.23 called foremost of the expounders in full of what was spoken in brief. Verses at Thag 494. One of the eleven or twelve leading theras; cf. Vinaya Texts, ii.317, Vinaya Texts, ii.359, BD 2.295, GS iii.215. See Gotama the Man, p. 113. ⁵ See S. DUTT, Early History of the Spread of Buddhism, Vol.1, p. 187ff. He points out that Avanti “under the guidance of Mahākaccāyana helped by Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa ... became an important centre of Buddhism” (p.189). On Avanti see also B.C. LAW, Geography of Early Buddhism, p. 3, n. 1, 22f., p. 61. ⁶ Kuraraghara, the name of a town (nagara) or village where Kaccāna went for alms (gocaragāma), Vin-a 1087.

“In so far as I, honoured sir, understand dhamma taught by the master, Kaccāna the Great, it is no easy matter for one living in a house to lead the Brahma-faring which is utterly complete, utterly pure and polished like a conch-shell. I want, honoured sir, having cut off hair and beard, having donned yellow robes, to go forth from home into homelessness. Honoured sir, may the master Kaccāna the Great let me go forth.”

He said: “Difficult, Soṇa, for as long as life lasts are the solitary sleeping-place,³ the one meal (a day), the Brahma-faring. Please do you, Soṇa, being a householder as before,⁴ practise the instruction of the awakened ones for a short time⁵: the solitary sleeping-place, the one meal (a day), the Brahma-faring.”

Then the lay follower Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa’s strong aspiration for the ¹ He is recorded to stay here also at SN iii.9, SN iii.12, SN iv.115, AN v.46, Ud 57. Our text reads papāte pabbate; the others pavatte (with variant readings) pabbate. At Vin-a 1087, papāta is said to be the name of a mountain slope. Cf. however SN-a ii.258, which recognises the two readings, papāte and pavatte, and says of papāte pabbate that “it was steep (or had a precipice) on one side: it was as though one flank had been hewn off”. ² Chief of those of clear utterance, AN i.24. Verses at Thag 365. Vin-a 1087, AN-a i.237 say he wore ornaments worth a crore (koṭi) in his ears, and also give the reading koṭikaṇṇa, which can mean equally “Crore-eared” or “Pointed-eared, Prick-eared”; see Vinaya Texts ii.32, n. 3, Psalms of the Bretheren p.202, GS i.18, n. 4, Verses of Uplift, p.68. ³ ekaseyyā, exact significance obscure. At BD 2.196 a monk is allowed to lie down in a sleeping place for two or three nights with one who is not ordained. It seems as if he might also do so with an ordained monk, for on this occasion there is no offence if he thinks a person is ordained and he is. At BD 2.201 there is an offence if a monk so lies down with a woman. ⁴ tatth’eva. ⁵ kālayutta. This is to show how difficult these things are. Kālayutta could also signify connected with the right time (for doing things), and would then emphasise that now is not a right time for Soṇa to go forth, being not sufficiently ready spiritually to do so.

going forth abated.¹ But a second time ... a third time did the lay follower Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa approach the venerable Kaccāna the Great ... (as in Kd 5.13.1) “... Honoured sir, may the master Kaccāna the Great let me go forth.” Then the venerable Kaccāna the Great let the lay-follower Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa go forth. Now at that time the southern region of Avanti² came to be short of monks. Then did the venerable Kaccāna the Great at the end of three years, with difficulty, with trouble, having had convened from here and there an Order of monks consisting of ten,³ ordain the venerable Soṇa.

THE FIVE BOONS FOR MAHĀKACCANA

Then as the venerable Soṇa was keeping the rains and meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “I have only heard that this Lord is such and such a one, but I have not seen him face to face. I would go and see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one, if a preceptor would allow me.” Then the venerable Soṇa, emerging from seclusion towards the evening, approached the venerable Kaccāna the Great; having approached, having greeted the venerable Kaccāna the Great, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Soṇa spoke thus to the venerable Kaccāna the Great:

“Now, as I, honoured sir, was meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in my mind thus: ‘I have only heard that this Lord is such and such a one, but I have not seen him face to face. I would go to see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one, if a preceptor would allow me.’ I, honoured sir, would go to see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one, if the preceptor allows me.”

¹ pabbajjābhisāṅkhāra. Cf. gamikābhisāṅkhāra at Vin 1.233. ² Avantīdakkhīṇāpatha, as at Vin 2.298, Ja iii.463. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names under Dakkhīṇāpatha, RHYS DAVIDS, Buddhist India, p.30, and B.C. LAW, Geography of Early Buddhism, p.22. At the time of the Council of Vesālī, about eighty-eight monks of Avantīdakkhīṇāpatha, some of them followers of ascetic practices, dhutaṅga, are said to have collected on the Ahogaṅgā mountain slope, Vin 2.299. ³ Vin 1.319 says that an Order may consist of four, five, ten, twenty or more than twenty monks, and that various maximum numbers are required for carrying out various specific formal acts, ten monks being able to perform them all, except rehabilitation; but five monks were not able to ordain in the Middle Districts.

“Good, it is good, Soṇa. Do you, Soṇa, go to see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one.

“You, Soṇa, will see this Lord, who is pleasant and inspires one to be pleased,¹ who is calmed in his sense-organs, calmed in mind, who has attained the uttermost taming and peace, the hero² tamed, guarded, controlled in his sense-organs. Well then, do you, Soṇa, in my name salute the Lord’s feet with your head, saying: ‘Lord, my preceptor, the venerable Kaccāna the Great, salutes the Lord’s feet with his head’,³ and then speak thus: ‘Lord, the southern region of Avantī is short of monks. At the end of three years (he), with difficulty, with trouble, having had convened for me from here and there an Order of monks consisting of ten, I received ordination. Perhaps the Lord would allow ordination by a smaller group in the southern region of Avantī.

“‘Lord, in the southern region of Avantī the surface-soil is dark, hard, trampled by the hooves of cattle.⁴ Perhaps the Lord would allow sandals with many linings in the southern region of Avantī. Lord, in the southern region of Avantī people attach importance to bathing, to purification by water.⁵ Perhaps the Lord would allow constant bathing⁶ in the southern region of Avantī. Lord, in the southern region of Avantī hides (are used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide. As, Lord, in the middle districts,⁷ eragu, moraḡu, majjhāru,

¹ pasādaniya, i.e. to be pleased with his teaching. ² nāga, explained at Vin-a 1087 as “empty of guilt (āgu), empty of the obstructions (kilesa)”. Cf. Snp 522: āgu na karoti ... nāgo, and Cnd 337. ³ Udāna version omits from here to end of Kd 5.13.7 and then proceeds much as Vinaya version to end of Kd 5.13.10. ⁴ kharā gokaṇṭakahatā; cf. AN i.136. ⁵ udakasuddhika. Cf. SN i.182 (KS i.231); also Vin 4.262, where however “purification by water” is not a rite, but a necessary ablution. ⁶ Cf. Bu-Pc 57, where it is an offence for a monk to bathe at intervals of less than a fortnight except “at a right time”, specified. ⁷ Not Majjhimadesa here, but majjhimesu janapadesu.

*jantu*¹ (are used), so, Lord, in the southern region of Avanti hides (are used as) coverings. Perhaps the Lord would allow hides (to be used as) coverings in the southern region of Avanti: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide.

“At present, Lord, people give robe-material to monks who have gone outside the boundaries, saying: “We are giving this robe material for so and so.” When these have come back (the others) announce: “Your reverences, robe-material was given for you by the people so and so”. But these, being scrupulous, do not consent to it, thinking: “Let there not be an offence involving forfeiture for us.”² Perhaps the Lord would explain the procedure³ in regard to robe-material.”

“Yes, honoured sir”, and the venerable Soṇa having spoken in assent to the venerable Kaccāna the Great, rising from his seat, having greeted the venerable Kaccāna the Great, having kept his right side towards him, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Sāvattthī.

In due course he approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anātha-piṇḍika’s monastery, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Ānanda, make ready a lodging for this incoming monk”. Then the venerable Ānanda thought:

“The Lord desires to stay in the same dwelling-place together with this monk, the Lord desires to stay in the same dwelling-place together with the venerable Soṇa; it is he in regard to whom the Lord enjoined me, saying: ‘Ānanda, make ready a lodging for this incoming monk’,” and he made ready a lodging for the venerable Soṇa in that dwelling-place where the Lord was staying.

¹ Vin-a 1088 says these are four kinds of grasses, tiṇa, from which are made kaṭasāraka (? , part of a monk’s lodging or bedding, see Vin-a 1088 under senāsanam paññāpesi) and straw mats. Eragu is also called erakatiṇa and is coarse. Moraḡu is copper coloured at the head, fine, pliable and pleasant to touch, and straw mats are made from it. They make upper cloaks from majjāru (Vin-a 1088 reading majjāru). The colour of jantu is like pearls. ² Cf. Bu-NP 1, where if a monk’s kaṭhina privileges have been removed he may use an extra robe for ten days. One of the grounds for removal of the privileges depends on a monk’s having gone outside the boundary, Vin 1.255. ³ pariyāya.

Then the Lord, having spent a great part of that night in the open air, entered the dwelling-place. The venerable Soṇa also, having spent a great part of that night in the open air, entered the dwelling-place. Then the Lord, getting up in the night towards dawn, requested the venerable Soṇa, saying:

“May (some) dhamma occur to you to speak, monk.”¹

“Very well, Lord”, and the venerable Soṇa, having replied in assent to the Lord, spoke from memory everything belonging to the Divisions in the Eights.² Then the Lord at the end of the venerable Soṇa’s recital³ expressed his approbation saying:

“Good, it is good, monk, that by you, monk, the Divisions in the Eights are well learnt, well attended to, well reflected upon, and that you are endowed ¹ paṭibhātu taṃ bhikkhu dhammo bhāsituṃ, as at Ud-a 312, AN-a i.241. WOODWARD, Verses of Uplift, p. 71, n. 1, would translate this as “let dhamma arise in your mind for recital”. He notes that paṭibhātu is “let it occur to you, placeat”, but owing to dhamma being in the nominative the sentence cannot mean “let it occur to you to speak dhamma”. Vin-a 1088 says, “may there be (or become, bhavatu) an inclination (abhimukha) to speak of knowledge; of what is called understanding”. Ud-a 312 says “Monk, may dhamma to speak arise in you, let it come to the forefront of knowledge, recite dhamma as you have heard it, as you have learnt it”. Cf. Vin 2.200, Ud 59, SN i.155. N.B. the Lord addresses Soṇa as “monk” and not by his name. ² Aṭṭhakavaggikāni. Aṭṭhakavagga is the name of the fourth Vagga in the Sutta Nipāta. Cited at SN iii.12, Ud 59. This latter (and also Dh-p-a iv.101–Dh-p-a iv.102) have the “specific amplification that Soṇa recited (or ‘intoned’) ‘all the sixteen’ Aṭṭhakavaggika Suttas”, as CHALMERS remarks, Buddha’s Teachings, p. xvi, n. 1; and Ud-a 312 the still further amplification that the sixteen Suttas begin with the Kāmasutta. AN-a i.241 reads Aṭṭhakavaggiyāni, one manuscript adding suttāni. See Journal of the Pali Text Society 1895, p. 93 on identification of Divyāvādāna’s (p. 20) arthavadgiyāni (recited by Soṇa) with the “sixteen poems”, aṭṭhakavaggikāni, of the Aṭṭhakavagga. The work is also mentioned at Divyāvādāna 35. For references to Chinese versions see ANESAKI, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1906–1907, p. 50; and ÉTIENNE LAMOTTE, Le Traité de la Grande Vertu de Sagesse, Vol. i, p. 39, n. 2. ³ sarabhañña. Pali-English Dictionary calls this “intoning, a particular mode of reciting”. Cf. Vin 2.108, where the Lord “allows” sarabhañña, but not the singing of dhamma in a singing voice. Oldenberg quotes Vin-a at Vin 2.316: sarabhaññan ti sarena bhaṇanam, which means “sarabhañña is called repeating (or reciting) by intonation (sara)”. There is perhaps in the text a play upon the word sara, which also means remembering.

with lovely speech, distinct, without hoarseness, so as to make the meaning clear.¹ Of how many years' standing are you, monk?"²

"I, Lord, am of one year's standing."

"But what have you, monk, done thus long?"

"For long, Lord, I have seen peril in pleasures of the senses, but household lives are crowded,³ there is much to be done, much business." Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

"Having seen peril in the world, having known dhamma without attachment, / the noble one delights not in evil, the pure one delights in instruction."⁴

Then the venerable Soṇa, thinking: "The Lord is much pleased with me, this is the time for that for which the preceptor prepared⁵ me," rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having inclined his head to the Lord's feet, spoke thus:

"Lord, my preceptor, the venerable Kaccāna the Great, salutes the Lord's feet with his head, and speaks thus: 'The southern region of Avanti, Lord ... (as in Kd 5.13.5, Kd 5.13.6) ... perhaps the Lord would explain the procedure in regard to robe-material.'" Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, the southern region of Avanti is short of monks. I allow, monks, in all border districts ordination by a group⁶ with, as fifth, an expert on discipline.

¹ Stock as at DN i.114, SN i.189, SN ii.280, AN ii.51, AN iii.114. ² I.e. how many years since his ordination. Cf. above, BD 4.76f. ³ sambādhā gharāvāsā. Ud 59, SN ii.219, SN v.350, DN i.63, DN i.250 read sambādhō gharāvāso. ⁴ sāsane ramati sucī; Ud 59 reading pāpe na ramati sucī, ⁵ paridassi. Vin-a 1088, "this should be the time for that which the preceptor made known to me, saying: 'You should say this and that'; come, I will give the message now". ⁶ Usually two to four monks.

“For this purpose,¹ these are the border districts²: the little town³ called Kajaṅgala⁴ is in the eastern direction, beyond it is Mahāsālā,⁵ further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The river called Sallavatī⁶ is in the south-eastern direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The little town called Setakaṅṅika is in the southern direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The brahmin village called Thūṇa⁷ is in the western direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The mountain slope called Usīraddhaja⁸ is in the northern direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). I allow, monks, in such border districts as these, ordination by a group with, as fifth, an expert on discipline.

“In the southern region of Avantī, monks, the surface-soil is dark, hard, trampled by the hooves of cattle. I allow, monks, in all border districts, sandals with many linings. In the southern region of Avantī, monks, people attach importance to bathing, to purification by water. I allow, monks, in all border districts, constant bathing. In the southern region of Avantī, monks, hides (are used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide. As, monks, in the middle districts eragu, moraḡu, majjhāra, jantu (are used), so, monks, in the southern region of Avanti hides (are used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide.¹ I allow, monks, in all border districts, hides (to be used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide. And moreover, monks, people give robe-material for monks who have gone outside the boundaries, saying: ‘We are giving this robe-material for so and so’. I allow you, monks, to consent (to it). That reckoning is not necessary until it reaches the hand.^{2”}

¹ tatra. ² This passage is quoted at Ja i.49, DN-a 173, Kh-a 132, MN-a ii.200, AN-a i.97 in order to define the boundaries of majjhima (pa)desa, the Middle Country, i.e. the middle of Jambudīpa (India). See B.C. LAW Geography Of Early Buddhism, p. 2, for some of the place-names mentioned below. ³ nigama, see BD 2.63, n. 2. ⁴ Occurring at AN v.54, MN iii.298, DN-a 429. Also Ja iii.226, Ja iv.310 The scholiast tells us (Ja iv.311) that it was a town where materials were easily got, dabbasambhārā sulabhā, not where they “were hard to be got” (Jātaka translation iv.195, n. 1). ⁵ Called Mahāsālā at Ja i.49. ⁶ Spelled Salalavatī at Ja i.49, DN-a 173, Kh-a 132, Salaṭavatī at MN-a ii.200 (with variant readings) and in Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. See variant readings at DN-a 173; these do not include Sallavatti as at AN-a i.97. ⁷ Mentioned at Ud 78, Ud-a 377 as belonging to the Mallas: also at Ja vi.62 (with variant reading Dhunna). B.C. LAW, India as Described in Early Texts of Buddhism and Jainism, p. 21, n. 1 says “Consult CUNNINGHAM, Ancient Geography of India, Introduction xliii, n. 2 as to the identification of Thūṇa with Sthānesvara”. ⁸ According to B.C. LAW, India as Described in Early Texts, p. 21, n. 2, “it may be said to be identical with Usiragiri, a mountain to the north of Kaṅkhal, I.A., 1905, 179”.

The Fifth Section: that on Hides

IN THIS SECTION THERE ARE SIXTY-THREE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

The King of Magadha, Soṇa, and eighty-thousand chieftains,
Sāgata showed much that was further on Vulture Peak, /
They were broken by his output (of energy) on going forth, the lute, with one lining, dark green, yellow, red, crimson, and indeed black, / Orange, multi-coloured, and he objected to edgings, heels, knee-boots, top-boots, cotton, partridges, rams, goats, /
Scorpions, peacocks, and embroidered, decorated with lions, tigers and panthers, antelopes, beavers and cats, squirrels, owls, / Sandals for split (feet), corns, unwashed, tree-stumps, rasping,

¹ Vin-a 1088 here gives a list of six kinds of deer, and says their hides may be used, but not the hides of other kinds of deer, miga, including the kadalīmiga, nor (with a play on words) the hides of beasts of prey, vālamiga, which it defines as lions, tigers, panthers, bears and hyenas. Skins of cows, buffaloes, hares and cats may not be used either. ² na tāva taṃ gaṇanūpaḡaṃ yāva na hatthaṃ gaḡchati. This refers to Bu-Pc 1, where an extra robe may be worn for at most ten days. The above phrase means that a monk need not begin to count these ten days until he has actually received the robe-material. Vin-a 1089 says, “So long as having conveyed but not given, or (so long as) having sent but not announced that ‘This robe-material has accrued for you, honoured sirs’; he does not begin the reckoning (gaṇanaṃ na upeti), it (i.e. the robe-material) is not allotted, one does not begin to take up what is not allotted. But when, having conveyed it it is given, or when having sent it it is announced, or when having heard that it has accrued, from then on there is occasion for attention to the ten days”. On upaga, see BD 2.7, n. 4; and on anadhīṭṭhita, “not allotted” see ibid., n. 1.

palm, bamboo, and indeed grass, munja; babbaja, marshy date-palm, / Kamala, woollen, golden, silver, gems, lapis lazuli, crystal, bronze, and glass, and tin, lead, copper, /
Cows, a vehicle and ill,
4.268 yoked with bulls, a palanquin, things to recline on, large hides, and the depraved one with a cowhide, /
On what belongs to householders, with thongs of hide, they enter, on one being ill,¹ Kaccāna the Great, Soṇa (recites) from memory what belongs to the Divisions in the Eights, /
A group of five for ordination, many linings, constant bathing,² he allowed hides (to be used as) coverings, reckoning not necessary until:
1.199 The leader gave these five boons to the Elder Soṇa.

¹ gilāyano; Sinhalese edition gilānakā.

² Sinhalese edition upasampadam pañcahi

gaṇamgaṇā dhuvasināyanā.

6. MEDICINE (BHESAJJA)

ON FIVE MEDICINES

At that time the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time monks, afflicted by an affection occurring in the autumn, brought up the conje^y they had drunk and brought up the rice they had eaten; because of this they became lean, wretched, of a bad colour, yellowish, the veins standing out on their limbs. The Lord saw these monks who were lean ... standing out on their limbs; seeing them, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: "Now, how is it Ānanda, that at present monks are lean ... standing out on their limbs?"

"At present, Lord, monks, afflicted by an affection occurring in the autumn, bring up the conje^y they have drunk and bring up the rice they have eaten; because of this they are lean ... standing out on their limbs."

Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in his mind thus: "At present monks, afflicted by an affection occurring in the autumn, bring up ... standing out on their limbs. What now if I should allow medicine for monks—whatever is medicine as well as what may be agreed upon as medicine—and although it may serve as nutriment for people¹ yet could not be reckoned as substantial food?" Then it occurred to the Lord: "These five medicines, that is to say ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses, are medicines² and are also agreed upon as medicines, and although they serve as nutriment for people yet they cannot be reckoned as substantial food. What now if I should allow monks to make use of these five medicines at the right time, if they have accepted them at a right time?"

¹ lokassa. ² Cf. Bu-NP 23, where a monk, having accepted these five medicines may keep them in store for at most seven days. They are defined at Vin 3.251.

Then the Lord, having emerged from seclusion towards the evening, having given reasoned talk on this occasion, addressed the monks, saying:

"Now, monks, as I was meditating in seclusion ... '... yet could not be reckoned as substantial food'. Monks, concerning this, it occurred to me: 'These five medicines, that is to say ... Suppose I were to allow monks to make use of these five medicines at the right time, if they have accepted them at a right time?' I allow you, monks, to make use of these five medicines at the right time, if you have accepted them at a right time."

Now at that time monks, having accepted these five medicines at a right time, made use of them at the right time. But even with these they did not digest ordinary coarse meals, much less greasy ones. And because of this they were afflicted by the affection occurring in the autumn, and in consequence there was also a loss of appetite, and as a result of both these (factors) they became increasingly lean, wretched, of a bad colour, yellowish, with the veins standing out on their limbs. The Lord saw these monks who were increasingly lean ... standing out on their limbs; seeing them, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

"Now, why is it, Ānanda, that at present monks are increasingly lean ... standing out on their limbs?"

"At present, Lord, monks, having accepted those five medicines at a right time, make use of them at the right time ... and as a result of both of these (factors) they are increasingly lean ... standing out on their limbs."

Then the Lord, having given reasoned talk on this occasion, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, having accepted these five medicines,¹ to make use of them both at the right time and also at the wrong time.”²

Now at that time ill monks had need of tallows as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make use of tallows as medicines by using them with oil: tallow from bears, tallow from fish, tallow from alligators, tallow from swine, tallow from donkeys,³ (if each) is accepted at a right time, cooked at a right time, mixed at a right time.”⁴

“If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a wrong time, cooked at a wrong time, mixed at a wrong time, there is an offence of three wrong-doings. If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a right time, cooked at a wrong time, mixed at a wrong time, there is an offence of two wrong-doings. If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a right time, cooked at a right time, mixed at a wrong time, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a right time, cooked at a right time, mixed at a right time, there is no offence.”⁵

ON ROOT MEDICINE, ETC.

Now at that time ill monks had need of roots as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of roots as medicines: turmeric,⁶ ginger, orris root, white orris root, garlic, black hellebore, khus-khus, nut-grass, ¹ N.B. “at a right time” does not occur here. ² This must refer to the right time and the wrong time for eating solid foods and soft foods. When “solid food” is defined at Vin 4.83 by excluding “food that may be eaten during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life”, there is reason to suppose that these expressions refer to medicines, see BD 2.330, n. 1, n. 2, n. 3. ³ Quoted at Vin-a 714. This passage explains that tallow from the flesh of all animals which it is allowable to eat is allowed, and also, with the exception of human tallow, the tallow of the ten animals which it is not allowable to eat. These ten are prohibited at Vin 1.218ff. ⁴ Quoted at Vin-a 714, which, in reference to tallow, regards “the right time” as before a meal, “the wrong time” as after. ⁵ Quoted at Vin-a 714. ⁶ This list of roots also given at Vin 4.35. For notes, see BD 2.227f. Cf. also Vin-a 833.

or whatever other roots there are that are medicines, if they do not serve, among solid foods, as a solid food, if they do not serve, among soft foods, as a soft food; and having accepted them, to preserve¹ them for as long as life lasts.² If there is no reason, there is an offence of wrong-doing for one who makes use of (any of these medicines)."

16.3.2
4.27.2
Now at that time ill monks had need, as medicines, of what was pounded off roots. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, a (lower) grindstone, a (small) grindstone."³

16.4.1
Now at that time ill monks had need of astringent decoctions as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of astringent decoctions as medicines: astringent decoctions from the nimb-tree, astringent decoctions from the kuṭaja,⁴ astringent decoctions from the pakkava,⁵ astringent decoctions from the nattamāla,⁶ or whatever other astringent decoctions there are that are medicines if they do not serve, among solid foods, as a solid food, if they do not serve, among soft foods, as a soft food; and having accepted them, to preserve them for as long as life lasts. If there is no reason, there is an offence of wrong-doing for any one who makes use of (any of these medicines)".

16.5.1
Now at that time ill monks had need of leaves as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of leaves as medicines: nimb-leaves, kuṭaja-leaves, cucumber¹-leaves, basil²-leaves, cotton-tree leaves, or whatever other leaves there are that are medicines if they do not serve ... (any of these medicines).”³

¹ pariharitum. ² Passage quoted at Vin-a 833. See BD 2.330, n. 3, on this expression, "as long as life lasts". The medicines mentioned in Bu-NP 23 may, unlike the root medicines which may be stored for life, be stored for at most seven days. ³ nisada nisadapota. Vin-a 1090 says piṃsanasilā ca piṃsanapotako ca, a stone for grinding and a small (thing) for grinding. This latter must be a pounder to use in the hand on the larger grindstone. ⁴ Wrightia antidysenterica or Nericum antidysentericum (Pali-English Dictionary), Holarrhena antidysenterica (Watt's Commercial Products of India). ⁵ A creeper, Vin-a 1090 (reading paggava as at Ja ii.105, where it is called vallī, a creeping plant). ⁶ At Vin-a 1090 called karañja which, according to Pali-English Dictionary, is the tree Pongamia glabra.

Now at that time ill monks had need of fruits as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason to make use of fruits as medicines: vilaṅga,⁴ pepper,⁵ black pepper,⁶ yellow myrobalan,⁷ beleric myrobalan,⁸ emblic myrobalan, goṭha-fruit⁹ or whatever other fruits there are that are medicines if they do not serve ... (any of these medicines).”

Now at that time ill monks had need of resins as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of resins as medicines: hiṅgu,¹⁰ hiṅgu-resin, hiṅgu-gum,¹¹ gum,¹² gum-patti,¹³ gum-paṇṇī, or whatever other resins there are that are medicines if they do not serve ... (any of these medicines).”¹⁴

Now at that time ill monks had need of salts as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of salts as medicines: sea(-salt), black salt,¹ rock-salt,² culinary-salt, red-salt³ or whatever other salts there are that are medicines if they do not serve, among solid foods, as a solid food, if they do not serve, among soft foods, as a soft food; and having accepted them, to preserve them for as long as life lasts. If there is no reason, there is an offence of wrong-doing for one who makes use of (any of these medicines).”

¹ paṭola, a kind of cucumber, Trichosanthes Dioeca. ² sulasī; cf. Sanskrit surasī, given by Böhtlingk-Roth as “basilienkraut”. The word translated as “basil” at BD 2.228 is ajjuka. ³ Quoted at Vin-a 835. ⁴ Erycibe paniculata. ⁵ pippala, see Vinaya Texts ii.46, n. 6. ⁶ marica. ⁷ harītaka, cf. BD 3.245, n. 4 (Vin 4.259). ⁸ vibhī-taka, also at Ja vi.529. WATT, Commercial Products of India, under Terminalia belerica, says “it has various medicinal qualities ascribed to it; and the oil expressed from the seed is used by the Natives”. Under Phyllanthus emblica Watt says “the fresh ripe fruits are largely employed as astringent and laxative medicines”. ⁹ goṭhaphala. Pali-English Dictionary says “medicinal seed”. Monier Williams, under gotravriksha compares to dhanvana. This he gives as the “plant Alhagi Maurorum which grows in a dry soil”. ¹⁰ Assafoetida. ¹¹ hiṅgu-sipāṭikā. Pali-English Dictionary says that this is a sipāṭikā (pod pericarp) yielding gum. Monier Williams says it is the same as varṇsa-patṭrī. This he calls a “particular kind of grass = nāḍī-hiṅgu”. Vin-a 1090 says that hiṅgu, hiṅgu-jatu, hiṅgu-sipāṭikā are just kinds of hiṅgu. ¹² taka, a medicinal gum. ¹³ Vin-a 1090 says that taka and these two varieties are all of them kinds of lac or resin. ¹⁴ Quoted at Vin-a 835.

Now at that time⁴ the venerable Belaṭṭhasīsa,⁵ the venerable Ānanda’s preceptor, had an affliction of thick scabs.⁶ Because of the discharge his robes stuck to his body. Monks, having repeatedly moistened these with water, loosened them. As the Lord was touring the lodgings he saw these monks loosening the robes, having repeatedly moistened them with water; and seeing (this) he approached these monks; having approached, he spoke thus to these monks: “What, monks, is this monk’s affliction?”

“Lord, this venerable one has an affliction of thick scabs; because of the discharge, his robes stick to his body; having repeatedly moistened them with water, we are loosening them.”

Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, for one who has itch⁷ or a small boil or a running sore or an affliction of thick scabs or for one whose body smells nasty, chunams as medicines; for one who is not ill dung, clay, boiled colouring matter.⁸ I allow you, monks, a pestle and mortar.⁹”

¹ Vin-a 1090 calls this common salt. ² This is white in colour, Vin-a 1090. ³ Vin-a 1090: cooked together with all kinds of ingredients, it is red in colour. ⁴ Opening part of this story = Vin 1.295. ⁵ See BD 2.338, n. 1. ⁶ Cf. Bu-Pc 90.2. ⁷ At Vin 4.172 (BD 3.97) “itch-cloth” is defined as: for covering anyone who has any of these afflictions. ⁸ rajana-nipakka. Vin-a 1090 says rajana-kasaṭa, acrid colouring matter or dye-stuff. But kasaṭa can also mean dregs or leavings, and this sense is more likely here. Vin-a 1090 explains: “having ground ordinary chunam, having moistened it with water, one may wash (or bathe with it).” These three things were for applying to the body and not for taking as a medicine. ⁹ udukkhala musala, different from the grinding stones of Kd 6.3.2.

Now at that time ill monks had need of sifted chunams as medicines ... “I allow you, monks, a chunam-sifter.¹” They had need of very fine ones. “I allow you, monks, a cloth sifter.”

Now at that time a certain monk had an non-human affliction. Teachers and preceptors, although nursing him, were unable to get him well. He, having gone to the swine’s slaughter-place, ate raw flesh and drank raw blood, and his non-human affliction subsided.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, when one has a non-human affliction, raw flesh and raw blood.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to have an illness affecting his eyes. Having taken hold of that monk, they made him go out to ease himself. As the Lord was touring the lodgings, he saw those monks who, having taken hold of that monk, were making him go out to ease himself; seeing (this) he approached those monks; having approached, he spoke thus to those monks:

“What, monks, is this monk’s affliction?”

“Lord, this venerable one has an illness affecting his eyes; we, having taken hold of him, are making him go out to ease himself.” Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, these ointments³: black collyrium,⁴ rasa-ointment,⁵

¹ cunṇacālani. ² There seems at Vin-a 1090 the idea that a non-human being “possessed” the monk. For it explains that it was not the monk who ate and drank the raw things, but the non-human being; on its departing, his (the monk’s) non-human affliction is said to have subsided. ³ añjana is here a generic term, as is clear from the first three to be specified: kāḷañjana rasañjana sotañjana. Vin-a 1090 also says of añjana, “comprising all”. ⁴ Vin-a 1090 says “one kind of añjana, cooked with all ingredients”. ⁵ Vin-a 1090 says “made from a variety of ingredients”. Böhtlingk-Roth say it is made with vitriol.

sota-ointment,¹ yellow-ochre,² lamp-black.”³ They had need of ointment powders.⁴ ... “I allow, monks, the use of sandal-wood, rosebay, black gum,⁵ tālisa,⁶ nut-grass.”⁷

6.12.1 Now at that time monks used to place pulverised ointments in small bowls and saucers. They were littered with powdered grass and dust ... “I allow, monks, an ointment-box.”⁸ Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of ointment-boxes, made of gold, made of silver. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

4.276 “Monks, various kinds of ointment-boxes should not be used. Whoever should use (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone,⁹ made of reed, made of bamboo, made of a piece of stick, made of lac, made of crystal,¹⁰ made of copper, made of the centre of a conch-shell.”

6.12.2 Now at that time ointment-boxes were not covered. They were littered with powdered grass and dust ... “I allow, monks, a lid.”¹¹ A lid fell off ... “I allow you, monks, having tied it with thread, to tie it to the ointment-box.” An ointment-box split open.¹² ... “I allow you, monks, to sew it round with thread.”

6.12.3 ¹ Vin-a 1090–91 says “an ointment originating in rivers and streams”. Böhlingk-Roth say it is made with antimony. ² geruka, or red chalk. ³ kapalla taken from the flame of a lamp, Vin-a 1091. Pali-English Dictionary says kapalla is here in error for kajjala. ⁴ añjanupapisana, as at Vin 2.112. ⁵ See GS v.17, n. 1. ⁶ Flacourtia cataphracta. ⁷ As in Kd 6.3.1, and Vin 4.35. See BD 2.228, n. 2. ⁸ añjanī. See BD 3.89, n. 2. Allowed also at Vin 2.135. ⁹ At Vin 4.167 these three materials are allowed for making needle-cases. “Bone” is there defined as whatever is bone. But Vin-a 1091 says “made of bone” means of every kind of bone with the exception of human bone. This list recurs at Vin 2.117. ¹⁰ Pali-English Dictionary suggests that phalamaya “stands in all probability for phalikamaya”. ¹¹ Allowed also at Vin 2.122 for a well. ¹² Reading phalati with Sinhalese edition instead of Oldenberg’s nipalati.

Now at that time monks put on ointment with (their) fingers. (Their) eyes became painful ... “I allow, monks, an ointment-stick.”¹ Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of ointment sticks, made of gold, made of silver. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” ... “Monks, various kinds of ointment sticks should not be used.”² Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the centre of a conch-shell.”

Vin 1.2

Now at that time an ointment-stick, falling to the ground, became rough ... “I allow, monks, a case for the sticks.”³ Now at that time monks carried about ointment-boxes and ointment-sticks in their hands ... “I allow, monks, a bag for the ointment-box.” There was no strap at the edge⁴ ... “I allow, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying⁵.”

Kd 6.12

Bd 4.2

THE STORY OF PILINDAVACCHA

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha⁶ had a head-ache⁷ ... “I allow, monks, a small quantity of oil for the head.” He did not get better ... “I allow, monks, (medical) treatment through the nose”.⁸

Kd 6.13

¹ Allowed again, with ointment-box, at Vin 2.135. At Vin 4.168 there is “no offence” if an ointment-stick is used as a needle-case. ² Cf. above Kd 6.12.1. ³ Vin-a 1091 says, “because they put down the sticks, I allow a piece of hollow wood or a bag for them”. ⁴ amisa-bandhaka (variant readings vadhaka, vaddhaka). Vin-a 1091 says this is for (or, on) the ointment-bag. The same thing allowed at Vin 2.114 for a bowl. At Kd 6.13.2 there is a similar “allowance” for a bag for tubes for steam. Thus the monks had different bags for different portable articles. It would seem as if each bag had a strap attached to its edge, rather than that monk, carried the bags by means of straps going over the shoulder (also called amisa). ⁵ bandhana-suttaka, probably for tying the box to the strap. Cf. Vin 2.114. ⁶ See BD 1.112, n. 2. ⁷ A “certain monk” had this, sisābhitāpa, at Vin 3.83 (BD 1.143). ⁸ natthukamma. Cf. natthum adamsu at Vin 3.83 (see BD 1.143, n. 2). Mentioned also at MN i.511.

His nose ran ... “I allow, monks, a nose-spoon.”¹ Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of nose-spoons, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” ... “Monks, various kinds of nose-spoons should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the centre of a conch-shell.”

They poured it up the nose in uneven quantities.² ... “I allow, monks, a double nose-spoon.”³ He did not get better ... “I allow you, monks, to inhale steam.”⁴ So they inhaled it after they had lit a wick.⁵ It burnt their throats ... “I allow you, monks, a tube for the steam.”⁶ Now at that time the group of six monks used all kinds of tubes for the steam ... (as in Kd 6.13.1) ... “I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the centre of a conch-shell.” Now at that time tubes for the steam were not covered, and small creatures got in. “I allow, monks, a lid.” Now at that time monks carried about tubes for the steam in their hands. “I allow, monks, a bag for the tubes for the steam.” They got rubbed together ... “I allow, monks, a double bag.” There was no strap at the edge.⁷ ... “I allow, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha had an affliction of wind. Physicians spoke thus: “Oil must be boiled.” ... “I allow, monks, a decoction of oil.” Now strong drink had to be mixed in that decoction of oil. “I allow you, monks, to mix strong drink in a decoction of oil.” Now at that time the group of six monks boiled oils mixed with too much strong drink. Having drunk these, they were intoxicated.¹ “Monks, oil mixed with too much strong drink should not be drunk. Whoever should (so) drink should be dealt with according to the rule.² I allow you, monks, if neither the colour nor the smell nor the taste of strong drink³ appears in any decoction of oil, to drink oil mixed with strong drink if it is like this.”

¹ natthu-karaṇī. I translate as at Vinaya Texts ii.54. Pali-English Dictionary gives “pocket-handkerchief”, but next sentence makes this unlikely. ² natthum visamaṇ āsiṅcanti. In pouring the medicament up the nose, monks probably poured more up one nostril than the other. The spoon, therefore, was not to catch the discharge from the nose but was to hold it up “so that the medicinal oil does not run out” (Vinaya Texts ii.54, n. 1); it was an instrument with which to pour up the medicinal oil itself. ³ I.e. one giving an equal stream in respect of its two measures, Vinaya 1091. ⁴ dhūmaṇ pātuṇ, literally to drink steam, or smoke. Below, Kd 6.14.5, cf. dhūmaṇ kātuṇ. Cf. “drinking” (not smoking) a huqqa, by reason of the water in it. ⁵ Cf. Vinaya Texts ii.54, n. 3, which states that they smeared a wick with the drugs and then burnt them. ⁶ dhūmanetta. Also at Ja iv.363; translated Jātaka Translation iv.229 as “smoking-pipe”. ⁷ As in Kd 6.12.4.

Now at that time monks came to have much boiled oil mixed with too much strong drink. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now what course of conduct should be followed when there is oil mixed with too much strong drink?” ... “I allow you, monks, to employ it as an unguent.”⁴ Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha came to have a quantity of boiled oil, but there was no receptacle for oil. “I allow you, monks, three kinds of vessels: a copper vessel, a wooden vessel, a vessel (made of) fruit.”

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha had rheumatism in the limbs. “I allow, monks, the sweating-treatment.”⁵ He got no better ... “I allow, monks, sweating by the use of all kinds of herbs.”⁶ He got no better. “I allow, monks, the great sweating.”⁷ He got no better. “I allow, monks (the use of) hemp-water.”⁸ He got no better. “I allow monks, (the use of) a water-vat.”⁹

¹ majjanti, or “were elated”. ² Bu-Pc 51. ³ Cf. Bu-Pc 51.2.3. ⁴ abbhañjana, an oiling. Cf. the same word in the “key” at Vin 3.79 used in referring to abbhañjimsu, they oiled or rubbed (an ill monk), on BD 4.83. ⁵ sedakamma. ⁶ sambhāraseda. Vin-a 1091, “sweating by the use of hemp and a variety of leaves”. ⁷ mahāseda. Vin-a 1091 explains that they heap charcoal into a pit the size of a man, cover it with dust, sand and leaves, and the patient lies down there with his limbs smeared with oil and sweats by rolling round. ⁸ bhaṅgodaka, i.e. hemp leaves boiled in water. The patient should sweat by repeatedly sprinkling himself with this preparation, Vin-a 1091. See Vinaya Texts ii.57, n. 1. ⁹ udakakoṭṭhaka. “I allow the application of the sweating treatment (sedakammakaraṇa), having got into a vessel or vat filled with hot water.” Vin-a 1091. Koṭṭhaka is usually a store-room.

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha had rheumatism in the joints. “I allow you, monks, to let blood.”¹ He got no better. “I allow you, monks, having let blood, to cup with a horn.”² Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha’s feet came to be split. “I allow you, monks, an unguent for the feet.” He got no better. “I allow you, monks, to prepare a foot-salve.”³ Now at that time a certain monk came to have boils. “I allow, monks, treatment with a lancet.”⁴ There was need of astringent water. “I allow, monks, astringent water.” There was need of sesamum paste. “I allow, monks, sesamum paste.”

There was need of a compress.⁵ “I allow, monks, a compress.” There was need of a piece of cloth for tying over the sore. “I allow, monks, a piece of cloth for tying over the sore.” The sore itched. “I allow you, monks, to sprinkle it with mustard-powder.”⁶ The sore festered. “I allow you, monks, to make a fumigation.”⁷ The flesh of the sore⁸ stood up. “I allow you, monks, to cut it off with a piece of salt-crystal.” The sore did not heal. “I allow, monks, oil for the sore.” The oil ran. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a linen bandage⁹ (and) every treatment for curing a sore.”

Now at that time a certain monk was bitten by a snake.¹⁰ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give the four great irregular things¹¹: (a decoction of) dung, urine, ashes, clay.”¹² Then it occurred to the monks: “(May they be used) even if they are not (formally) received, or should they be (formally) received?"¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to make use of them if someone to make them allowable² is there (formally) to offer³ them to you; having taken them yourselves, if there is no one to make them allowable."

¹ By using a knife (or lancet), Vin-a 1091. ² See Vinaya Texts ii.57, n. 3, which, quoting Wise, says, “bad blood may be removed by means of cupping, which is performed by a horn”. ³ pajja, cf. DN ii.240. ⁴ sattakamma. ⁵ kabaḷikā. ⁶ sāsapakuṭṭa. Cf. Vin 2.151 sāsapakuḍḍa, as at Vin-a 1092, where explained as “ground (piṭṭha) mustard”. ⁷ dhūmaṃ kātuṃ. Cf. Kd 6.13.2. ⁸ vaṇamaṃsa, Vin-a 1092 reading vaḍḍhamaṃsa, and saying that the upper or covering (adhika) flesh stood up like a peg. ⁹ vikāsika; Vin-a 1092, “a piece of cloth for covering up the sore”. ¹⁰ Cf. Vin 4.166. ¹¹ mahāvikaṭāni. Mentioned at Vin 4.90, where a monk may himself take these even if there is no one to make them “allowable”, for they do not count as “nutriment”. Also at MN i.79, DN i.167. ¹² These things are, or are by Indians, regarded as great purifiers.

Now at that time a certain monk came to have drunk poison. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to make him drink (a concoction of) dung." Then it occurred to the monks: "(May it be drunk) even if it is not (formally) received, or should it be (formally) offered?"⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, that if he receives (formally) that which (someone) is making allowable,⁵ when he has once (formally) received it that it need not be (formally) offered again."

Now at that time a certain monk had an affliction resulting from drinking something poisonous.⁶ "I allow you, monks, to make him drink (a decoction of) mud turned up by the plough."⁷

Now at that time a certain monk was constipated. "I allow you, monks, to make him drink raw lye."

Now at that time a certain monk had jaundice. "I allow you, monks, to make him drink (a compound of cow's⁸) urine and yellow myrobalan."⁹

¹ paṭiggahetabbāni. Oldenberg proposes to read paṭiggahāpetabbāni, Vin 1.382. ² Cf. BD 2.346, n. 1, n. 2. ³ paṭiggahāpetuṃ. ⁴ paṭiggahāpetabbo; see BD 2.122. ⁵ yaṃ karonto paṭiggaṇhāti. ⁶ Vin-a 1092 takes this to mean he was suffering from the results of sorcery, i.e. from a disease arising from drinking under the mastery of another. ⁷ sītāloḷi, explained at Vin-a 1092 as "I allow you to make him drink, mixed with water, the clay clinging to the ploughshare when tilling with a plough". ⁸ So Vin-a 1092. ⁹ Cf. Vin 1.276 where Jīvaka gave ghee as a cure for jaundice.

Now at that time a certain monk had a skin disease. “I allow you, monks, to make a perfume-paste.”

Now at that time a certain monk’s body came to be full of (bad) humours.¹ “I allow him, monks, to drink a purgative.” There was need of clarified conje. “I allow, monks, clarified conje.” There was need of unprepared broth.² “I allow, monks, unprepared broth.” There was need of prepared and unprepared.³ “I allow, monks, prepared and unprepared.” There was need of meat-broth.⁴ “I allow, monks, meat-broth.”

6.15.1 Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha,⁵ desiring to make a cave, had a (mountain) slope cleared near Rājagaha. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the venerable Pilindavaccha; having approached, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the venerable Pilindavaccha: “What, honoured sir, is the elder having made?”

1.207 “Sire, desiring to make a cave, I am having a (mountain) slope cleared.”

“Honoured sir, does the master require an attendant for a monastery?”

“Sire, an attendant for a monastery is not allowed by the Lord.”

“Well, honoured sir, having inquired of the Lord, you should tell him of me.”

6.15.2 “Very well, sire,” the venerable Pilindavaccha answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent.

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha gladdened, roused, rejoiced, delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, gladdened ... delighted by the venerable Pilindavaccha's talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the venerable Pilindavaccha sent a messenger to the Lord to say: "Lord, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha desires to present an attendant for a monastery. Now, Lord, what line of conduct is to be followed?" Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks saying:

¹ abhisannakāya. Cf. Vin 2.119, also Kd 8.1.30, kāya dosābhisanna. ² akaṭayūsa. Vin-a 1092 says “a beverage cooked with beans but not oily”. ³ kaṭākaṭa. Vin-a 1092 reads so’va thokaṇ (variant reading dhota) siniddho, this is only a little oily. ⁴ paṭicchādaniya. Cf. below, Kd 6.23.3. Vin-a 1092 explains by maṃsarasa, flavour of meat. ⁵ From here towards end of Kd.6.15.10 = Vin 3.248–Vin.3.251. See BD 2.126ff. for notes.

BD 4.2

"I allow, monks, a monastery attendant."

And a second time did King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approach the venerable Pilindavaccha; having approached, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was fitting down at a respectful distance King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the venerable Pilindavaccha:

Kd 6.15

"Honoured sir, has the Lord allowed a monastery attendant?"

"Yes, sire."

"Well then, honoured sir, I will give the master a monastery attendant."

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having promised the venerable Pilindavaccha a monastery attendant, (but) having forgotten, having recalled it after a time, addressed a chief minister who was concerned with all the affairs, saying: "My good sir, has that monastery-attendant whom I promised to the master been given?"

"Your majesty, a monastery attendant has not been given to the master."

"My good sir, how long is it since it was considered?"

Kd 6.15

Then that chief minister, having counted up the days, spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: "It is five hundred days, your majesty."

"Well then, give five hundred monastery attendants to the master."

"Yes, your majesty," and the chief minister having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, bestowed five hundred monastery attendants on the venerable Pilindavaccha, and a distinct village established itself. They called it “The Village of the Monastery Attendants” and they also called it “Pilinda Village”. Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha frequented families in that village. Then the venerable Pilindavaccha, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Pilinda Village for almsfood.

1.208
4.283
6.15.5

Now at that time there came to be a festival in this village; young girls wearing ornaments, adorned with garlands, were celebrating it. Then the venerable Pilindavaccha as he was walking for almsfood on unbroken round¹ in Pilinda Village, approached the dwelling of a certain monastery attendant; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. Now at that time the daughter of the monastery attendant’s wife, having seen other little girls wearing ornaments, adorned with garlands, cried and said: “Give me a garland, give me an ornament.”

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha said to that monastery attendant’s wife: “Why is this little girl crying?”

6.15.6
“Honoured sir, this little girl is crying because, having seen other little girls wearing ornaments, adorned with garlands, she says: ‘Give me a garland, give me an ornament.’ Whence is there a garland for us who are poor, whence an ornament?”

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha, having taken a roll of grass, spoke thus to that monastery attendant’s wife: “Now set this roll of grass on this little girl’s head.” Then that monastery attendant’s wife, having taken that roll of grass, set it on that little girl’s head. It became a golden chaplet, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; there was no golden chaplet like it even in the king’s women’s quarters. People spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

“Your majesty, in the house of a certain monastery attendant there is a golden chaplet, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; there is no golden chaplet like it even in your majesty's women's quarters. As he is poor, where (could he have got it) from? Undoubtedly it was taken by theft." Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha had that monastery attendant's family imprisoned.

¹ sapadānam, derivation uncertain. Enjoined at Bu-Sk 33. Explanations given at Vin-a 893 (cited BD 3.129, n. 3); SN-a i.205: the houses reached, one walking to them successively (in succession, in order); Snp-a 118: one who walks successively, not having rejected (departed from) the order (succession) of the houses, entering a rich household and a poor household without interruption (without a break, “just as it comes”), for almsfood.

And a second time did the venerable Pilindavaccha, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, enter Pilinda Village for almsfood. As he was walking in Pilinda Village on unbroken round for almsfood he approached the dwelling of that monastery attendant; having approached, he asked the neighbours: "Where has this monastery attendant's family gone?"

"Honoured sir, they have been imprisoned by the king on account of that golden chaplet."

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha approached the residence of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the venerable Pilindavaccha; having approached, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha he sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Pilindavaccha spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

"How is it, sire, that the monastery attendant's family is imprisoned?"

"Honoured sir, in that monastery attendant's house there was a golden chaplet, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; there is no golden chaplet like it even in our women's quarters. Where (could he have got it) from, as he is poor? Undoubtedly it was obtained by theft."

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha exercised volitional force, and said: "The palace of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha is golden," and it became made all of gold. He said: "Now, sire, from where have you got so much gold?"

Saying: "I understand, honoured sir, this is the master's majesty of psychic power," he set free the monastery attendant's family.

People, delighted, full of satisfaction because they heard that a state of further men, a wonder of psychic power had been shown by master Pilindavaccha to the king and his retinue, presented the five (kinds of) medicine to the venerable Pilindavaccha, that is to say ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey and molasses. Now the venerable Pilindavaccha was customarily a receiver, so whenever he received the five (kinds of) medicine he gave them away among his company. And his company came to live in abundance; whatever they received, filling pots and pitchers, they put them away, and filling water strainers and bags, they hung them up in the windows. These (pots, etc.) leaked, and the dwelling-places became beset and overrun by rats. People, having seen (this) as they were touring the dwelling-places, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are storing up goods indoors, like King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.”

Monks heard these people who were ... spreading it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks strive after abundance like this?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks are striving after abundance such as this?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them,¹ having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Those medicines which may be partaken of by ill monks, that is to say ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses—having accepted these, they may be used as a store for at most seven days. He who exceeds that (period) should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

The First Portion for Repeating: that on Medicines that are Allowed

ALLOWANCE FOR SUGAR, ETC.

Then the Lord, having stayed at Sāvathī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha. And on the way the venerable ¹ Vin 3.251 (BD 2.131) reads: The lord rebuked them saying: “... this rule of training should be set forth ...” ² Bu-NP 23.

Revata the Doubter¹ saw a sugar-factory; having stepped aside, (he saw the men) putting flour and syrup² into the sugar; seeing this and thinking: “Sugar with food³ is unallowable; it is not allowable to make use of sugar at a wrong time,” being scrupulous,⁴ he and his company did not make use of the sugar, neither did those make use of the sugar who deemed that he should be listened to. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Why, monks, did they put flour and syrup into the sugar?”

“So as to make it firm, Lord.”

“If, monks, they put flour and syrup into the sugar so as to make it firm, and if it is still called ‘sugar’, I allow you, monks, to make use of as much sugar as you like.”⁵

Then on the way the venerable Revata the Doubter saw a kidney-bean growing on a dunghill; having seen it and thinking: “Kidney-beans are not allowable, for ripe kidney-beans are also growing,”⁶ being scrupulous he and his company did not make use of the kidney-bean, neither did those who deemed that he should be listened to make use of the kidney-bean. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, even if ripe kidney-beans are growing, I allow you to make use of kidney-beans as much as you like.”

¹ Kankhārevata. At AN i.24 called “chief of musers”; verses at Thag 3, Thi-ap 491. Mentioned at Ud 5.7, MN i.212, MN i.462. He was scrupulous about and doubted what was allowable, kappiya. Cf. Thag-a 37, Ud-a 314, AN-a i.230, MN-a ii.247, GS i.18, n. 2. ² chārikam cannot here be ashes, which is its most usual meaning. But cf. Sanskrit kṣāra, treacle, molasses. Perhaps some confused reference back to the “four irregular things” of Kd 6.14.6 is intended here. The allowability of the first two has been emphasised in specific cases (in Kd 6.14.6 and Kd 6.14.7), and “mud turned up by the plough” (of Kd 6.14.7) is probably intended as an example of the fourth irregular thing, namely clay. Here occurs the same word as is used for the third irregular thing, chārika, there translated “ashes” where syrup or treacle would hardly fit; but here translated “syrup”, as people would not put ashes into sugar to stiffen it, nor would ashes be called “food”, āmisā. ³ sāmisa; cf. Vin 4.198. ⁴ kukkuccāyanta. AN-a i.230, in explanation of Kaṅkhārevata’s name, says “doubting means, having scruples; the meaning is being scrupulous”. ⁵ yathāsukhaṃ. ⁶ Meaning of this passage is not clear. Vin-a 1092 says, “if ripe kidney-beans are also growing they may be used as much as you like, for these are allowed just because they are ripe”. On mugga see BD 1.83, n. 4.

Now at that time a certain monk had an affliction of wind in the stomach. He drank salted sour gruel.¹ Because of this his affliction of wind in the stomach subsided. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, salted sour gruel for one who is ill; when one is not ill to make use of it by using it as a beverage mixed with water.”

ON REJECTION OF WHAT IS PREPARED INDOORS, ETC.

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there in Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place. Now at that time the Lord came to have an affliction of wind in the stomach. Then the venerable Ānanda, thinking: “On a former occasion the Lord’s affliction of wind in the stomach was eased by conje^y containing the three pungent ingredients,”² having himself prepared sesamum and rice-grain and kidney-bean, having cured³ them indoors, having himself cooked them indoors, brought them to the Lord, saying: “Lord, drink the conje^y containing the three pungent ingredients.”

Now Truth-finders (sometimes) ask knowing,⁴ and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truth-finders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal; bridge-breaking for Truth-finders is among what does not belong to the goal. Awakened ones, Lords question monks concerning two matters: either, “Shall we teach dhamma?” or “Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?” Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Where does this conje^y come from, Ānanda?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord.

¹ *loṇasovīra*ka. At Vin 3.86 it is called *suvīra*ka. See BD 1.149, n. 3. ² tekaṭṭulayāgu. See BD 1.111, n. 1. ³ vāsetvā. I follow Pali-English Dictionary (under vāseti) rather than the “kept” of Vinaya Texts ii.68. Monks are allowed to cure (or purify) clay at Vin 2.120. ⁴ Cf. BD 1.12, and see there n. 3 for further references.

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not becoming, Ānanda, it is not fitting, it is not suitable, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. And how can you, Ānanda, strain after abundance such as this? Moreover, Ānanda, that which is cured indoors is unallowable, and that which is cooked indoors is also unallowable, and that which is cooked by oneself is also unallowable. It is not, Ānanda, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one should not use what is cured indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself. Whoever should make use (of any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of three wrong-doings. If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked indoors, (but) cooked by others, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of two wrong-doings. If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked out of doors, cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of two wrong-doings.

“If, monks, it is cured out of doors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of two wrong-doings. If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked out of doors, cooked by others, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, monks, it is cured out of doors, cooked out of doors, (but) cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, monks, it is cured out of doors, cooked out of doors, cooked by others, and one should make use of it, there is no offence.”

Now at that time, monks, thinking: “Cooking for oneself¹ is objected to by the Lord,” were doubtful about² a second cooking.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cook a second cooking.”

¹ sāmañpāka. ² kukkuccāyanti. ³ punapāka, i.e. a reheating of food already cooked once.

6.17.7
Now at that time Rājagaha became short of food. People conveyed salt and oil and husked rice and solid food¹ to the monastery. The monks cured these out of doors, but vermin² ate them and also thieves carried them off.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cure indoors.”⁴ When they had cured (the things) indoors, they cooked them out of doors, (but) those who live on the remains of food⁵ crowded round. The monks, not trusting them, made use of (the food). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cook indoors.” When food was short those who made it allowable carried away the larger (portion) and gave the monks the lesser (portion). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, yourselves to cook. I allow you, monks, what is cured indoors, what is cooked indoors, what is cooked by yourselves.”

1.212
4.289

PICKED UP AND RECEIVED

6.17.8
Now at that time several monks, having spent the rains in Kāsi, going to Rājagaha to see the Lord, did not obtain on the way sufficient mediocre or fine meals, as much as they needed. Yet there was much solid food that was fruit,⁶ but there was no one to make it allowable.⁷ So these monks weary in body, approached Rājagaha, the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels’ feeding place, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for Lords, to exchange friendly greetings with incoming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to these monks: “I hope, monks, things are going well with you, I hope you are keeping going, I hope you have come here with but little fatigue on the journey? And where, monks, do you come from?”

¹ These four items are mentioned also at Vin 1.220, Vin 1.238, Vin 1.243, Vin 1.249.

² ukkapiṇḍaka. Vin-a 1093 explains as cats, mice, lizards, mongeese (? maṅgusā).

³ As at Vin 1.239. ⁴ This, and subsequent allowances, refer only to times of scarcity, and were all rescinded for times of plenty, see Kd 6.32.1, Kd 6.32.2. ⁵ Here called damakā. Vin-a 1093 explains by vighāsādā, a word which occurs at e.g. Kd 6.24.1 below, and Vin 4.91. See BD 2, Introduction, p. xliii and BD 4.347, n. 3. ⁶ phalakhā-daniya. See note on piṭṭhakhādaniya at Kd 6.36.6 below. ⁷ kappiyakāraka. These make things allowable by offering them. See Kd 6.21.1; Kd 6.38.1.

“Things are going well with us, Lord, but we, Lord, having spent the rains in Kāsi, coming to Rājagaha to see the Lord ... no one to make it allowable; thus we have come on the journey weary in body.”

Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, if one anywhere sees solid food that is fruit, but if there is no one to make it allowable, having taken¹ it oneself, having carried it away, having seen someone to make it allowable, having laid it down on the ground, to make use of it, (he) having (formally) offered² it to you. I allow you, monks, to receive (formally) what you have picked up.”³

Now at that time fresh sesamum and fresh honey had accrued to a certain brahmin. Then it occurred to that brahmin: “Suppose I were to give the fresh sesamum and fresh honey to the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head?”

Then that brahmin approached the Lord; having approached, he exchanged friendly greetings with the Lord. Having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy he stood at a respectful distance; and standing at a respectful distance, that brahmin spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, may the revered⁴ Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me to-morrow.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then that brahmin departed, having understood the Lord’s consent.

Then that brahmin having had, towards the end of that night, sumptuous solid food and soft food prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready”. Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached that brahmin’s dwelling; having approached, he sat down together with the Order of monks on the appointed seat. Then that brahmin, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous solid food and soft food the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. While that brahmin was sitting down at a respectful distance the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted him with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

¹ gahetvā. ² paṭiggahāpetvā. Cf. note on patta-gāhāpaka at BD 2.122, and above, BD 4.280. ³ uggahitaṃ. This is an “allowance” only for a time of scarcity. See the much simpler “allowance” at Kd 6.21.1 for more normal times. ⁴ bhavaṃ, as at Vin 3.2.

Then it occurred to that brahmin soon after the Lord had departed: “I forgot to give those things for the sake of which I invited the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, thinking: ‘I will give fresh sesamum and fresh honey.’ Suppose I were to have the fresh sesamum and the fresh honey conveyed to the monastery in pots and pitchers?” Then that brahmin, having had the fresh sesamum and the fresh honey conveyed to the monastery in pots and pitchers, approached the Lord; having approached, he stood at a respectful distance; and as he was standing at a respectful distance this brahmin spoke thus to the Lord:

“I forgot to give those things, good Gotama, for the sake of which I invited the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, thinking: ‘I will give fresh sesamum and fresh honey’. May the revered Gotama accept from me fresh sesamum and fresh honey?”

“Well, then, brahmin, give them to the monks.”

Now at that time because food was scarce¹ and they offered them only a little, monks considerately refused. But a whole Order was offered (food); the monks, being scrupulous, did not accept it.² (The ¹ dubbhikkhā means scarcity of food and of (in consequence) almsfood. ² See Bu-Pc 32 and its definition of “great scarcity”, and its saying that at such a time a “group-meal” may be eaten (BD 2.312).

Lord said:)

“Accept (the food), monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, having eaten and being satisfied,¹ to make use of food that is not left over,² if it was taken back from there”.³

ALLOWANCE FOR WHAT IS RECEIVED, ETC.

Now at that time the family who supported the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, sent solid food for the Order,⁴ saying: “Having pointed it out as for master Upananda, it should be given to the Order.” Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, had entered the village for almsfood. Then these people, having gone to the monastery, asked the monks: “Where, honoured sirs, is master Upananda?”

“Sirs, this venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, has entered the village for almsfood.”

“Honoured sirs, having pointed out this solid food as for master Upananda, it should be given to the Order.”

They told this matter to the Lord.⁵ He said: “Well, then, monks, having accepted it, put it aside until Upananda comes back.”

Then the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having visited the families before the meal, came back during the day.⁶ Now at that time because food was scarce and they offered them only a little, monks considerately refused; but a whole Order was offered (food); the monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:)

¹ See BD 2.326, n. 2 and definitions at BD 2.328. ² See Bu-Pc 35, to which the above allowance is an exception made in a time of scarcity. See BD 2.328, n. 4, and definition of “what is not left over” at BD 2.329. ³ tato nīhatam, i.e. having taken the food to the monastery from the place where it was received. Cf. tato niharitvā at Vin 4.80 and its “definition” at Vin 4.81. ⁴ As at Vin 4.98–Vin.4.98 \(BD 2.363f.\). ⁵ Here Vin 4.99 inserts: “Then the Lord on that occasion, in that connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Well then ...” ⁶ At Vin 4.99 Upananda is represented as thinking it to be forbidden by the Lord to call upon families before a meal, so having visited them after a meal he returned during the day. “Before a meal”, “after a meal” are defined at Vin 4.100, and differently at Vin 4.272, Vin 4.273. Nuns’ Bu-Pc 15, Bu-Pc 16 seem to take it for granted that nuns approach families before and after meals.

“Accept (the food), monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, having eaten and being satisfied, to make use of (food) that is not left over if it was accepted before a meal.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on a tour for Sāvattthī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvattthī. Then the Lord stayed there at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta had fever. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great approached the venerable Sāriputta; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

“When you, reverend Sāriputta, previously had fever, by what means was it eased?”

“I had lotus fibres and stalks, your reverence.”

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from the Jeta Grove appear on the banks of the Mandākinī lotus-tank.¹

A certain elephant² saw the venerable Moggallāna the Great coming in the distance; seeing him he spoke thus to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

“Honoured sir, let master Moggallāna the Great come; there is a welcome, honoured sir, for master Moggallāna the Great. What, honoured sir, does the master need? What can I give him?”

“I need lotus fibres and stalks, friend.” Then that elephant commanded another elephant, saying:

“Well now, good fellow, give the master as many lotus fibres and stalks as he needs.” Then that elephant, having plunged into the Mandākinī lotus-tank, having with his trunk pulled lotus fibres and stalks, having washed them clean,³ having tied them into a bundle, approached the venerable Moggallāna the Great.

¹ One of the seven great lakes of the Himalayas, part of it being covered with white lotuses. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ² nāga, elephant, rather than serpent here; the soṇḍā, trunk, is mentioned a little later.

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from the bank of the Mandākinī lotus-tank, appear in the Jeta Grove. And that elephant too, vanishing from the bank of the Mandākinī lotus-tank, appeared in the Jeta Grove. Then that elephant, having offered the venerable Moggallāna the Great the lotus fibres and stalks, vanishing from the Jeta Grove, appeared on the bank of the Mandākinī lotus-tank. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great brought the lotus fibres and stalks to the venerable Sāriputta. Then as the venerable Sāriputta was making use of the lotus fibres and stalks, his fever abated. Many lotus fibres and stalks came to be left over.

Now at that time because food was scarce and they offered them only a little,¹ monks considerably refused; but a whole Order was offered (food). The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:)

“Accept (the food), monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, having eaten and being satisfied, to make use of (food) that is not left over if it grows in a wood, if it grows in a lotus-tank.”²

Now at that time there was a great quantity of solid food that was fruit³ at Sāvattihī, but there was no one to make it allowable. The monks, being scrupulous, did not make use of the fruit. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to make use of fruit that is without seed (or) whose seed is discharged,⁴ (even if) it is not made allowable.”

³ Cf. Vin 2.201, SN ii.269. ¹ As above, Kd 6.18.4 and Kd 6.19.2. ² This therefore seems an exception to Bu-Pc 11, which makes the destruction of vegetable growth an offence. ³ Cf. above Kd 6.17.8; below Kd 6.38.1, and note on piṭṭhakhādanīya at Kd 6.36.6. ⁴ nibbattabīja. Vin-a 1093 says bījaṃ nibbatetvā (variant reading nippaṭṭetvā) apānetvā, having got rid of the seed, having discharged it. The idea seems to be that monks must not eat the seeds of fruits. At Kd 6.38.1 all solid food that is fruit is allowed.

ON REJECTION OF SURGERY

6.22.1 Then the Lord, having stayed at Sāvattthī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Rājagaha. And the Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time a certain monk was afflicted by an ulcer.¹ The surgeon, Ākāsagotta,² lanced it. Then the Lord, as he was touring the lodgings, approached this monk's dwelling-place.

6.22.2 The surgeon, Ākāsagotta, saw the Lord coming in the distance; seeing him, he spoke thus to the Lord: "Let the revered Gotama come, let him see this monk's orifice; it is like a lizard's mouth." Then the Lord, thinking, "This foolish man is making fun of me", becoming silent, having turned back, having had the Order of monks convened, on this occasion, in this connection, questioned the monks, saying: "Is there, as is said, monks, an ill monk in such and such a dwelling-place?"

1.216 "There is, Lord."

"What, monks, is this monk's affliction?"

6.22.3 "Lord, the venerable one's affliction is an ulcer. The surgeon, Ākāsa-gotta, lanced it."

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

"It is not becoming, monks, in this foolish man, it is not suitable, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it should not be done. How, monks, can this foolish man let a lancing be done on the private parts? The skin, monks, is tender at the private parts, a wound is hard to heal, a knife hard to guide. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, one should not let a lancing be done on the private parts. Whoever should let it be done, there is a grave offence."

5.22.4
4.295 Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: "Lancing is objected to by the Lord”, let a clyster be used. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks let a clyster be used?” Then monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Cf. Vin 1.272. ² Mentioned, I think, nowhere but here.

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks let a clyster be used?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one should not have lancing done within a distance of two finger-breadths of the private parts nor a clyster-treatment. Whoever should have either of these things done, there is a grave offence.”

ON REJECTION OF HUMAN FLESH

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Benares. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Benares. The Lord stayed there near Benares at Isipatana in the deer-park. Now at that time in Benares the lay-follower, Suppiya, and the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā,¹ were both pleased²; they were benefactors, servitors,³ supporters of the Order. Then the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā, having gone to the monastery, having approached dwelling-place after dwelling-place, cell after cell, asked the monks: “Who, honoured sirs, is ill? What may be conveyed for whom?”

Now at that time a certain monk had drunk a purgative. Then that monk spoke to the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā, thus:

“I have drunk a purgative, sister. I need meat-broth.”⁴ She said:

¹ Suppiyā is at AN i.26 called chief of the laywomen disciples who tend the sick, a position she had resolved to achieve during a life in the time of Padumuttara Buddha, AN-a i.453-AN-a i.454. Her name occurs in a list of eminent women at AN iv.348. At Mil 115 she is mentioned with seven other persons as experiencing ease (sukha) here and now. ² I.e. with the teaching. ³ kāraṅkā, literally doers. ⁴ Allowed at Kd 6.14.7.

“Very well, master, it shall be conveyed (to you),” and having gone to her house, she enjoined a servant,¹ saying:

“Go, good fellow, find meat that is to hand.”²

“Yes, lady,” but that man, having answered the woman lay-follower Suppiya in assent, touring the whole of Benares, saw no meat that was to hand. Then that man approached the woman lay-follower Suppiyā; having approached the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, he spoke thus: “There is no meat, lady, that is ready to hand; today is a non-slaughter (day).”³

Then it occurred to the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā: “If that ill monk is unable to obtain meat-broth his affliction will greatly increase or he will pass away. It is not fitting in me, that I, having answered him in assent, should not have meat-broth conveyed”, and having taken a butcher’s knife,⁴ having cut flesh from her thigh, she gave it to a slave-woman, saying:

“Come now, having prepared⁵ this meat—in such and such a dwelling place there is an ill monk, you may give it to him, and if anyone asks for me, let it be known that I am ill,” and having wrapped her upper robe round her thigh, having entered an inner room, she lay down on a couch.

Then the lay-follower, Suppiya, having gone to the house, asked the slave-woman, saying: “Where is Suppiyā?”

“She, master, is lying down in an inner room.” Then the lay follower Suppiya, approached the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, and having approached he spoke thus to the woman lay-follower Suppiyā:

“Why are you lying down?”

¹ antevāsin. Cf. Bu-Pc 84 (Vin 4.162) where Anāthapiṇḍika enjoins his antevāsin to prepare rice for the monks. ² pavattamaṃsa, i.e. already killed, and not to be killed on purpose for the monk. For monks might eat no fish or meat which they saw, heard or suspected had been specially killed for them, Vin 3.172. ³ māghāta. Cf. Ja iii.428, Ja iii.434; also Asoka’s Pillar Edict V, where “on fifty-six days in the year the capture and sale of fish was prohibited, and on the same days, even in game-preserves, animals might not be destroyed (VINCENT SMITH, Asoka, 3rd edition, p.57). Vin-a 1094 says “on this day it is not possible for anyone to deprive anything of life”. ⁴ potthanikā. At Vin-a 1094 it is called “a knife for cutting meat”. ⁵ sampādetvā, as at Vin 3.208.

“I am ill,” she said.

“What is your affliction?” Then the woman lay-follower Suppiyā told this matter to the lay-follower Suppiya. Then the lay-follower Suppiya, thinking: “Indeed, it is marvellous, indeed, it is wonderful, that this Suppiyā is so faithful and believing that she gives up even her own flesh. What other thing could there be that she would not give?” and joyful, elated, he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the lay-follower Suppiya spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks”. The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the lay-follower Suppiya, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the lay-follower Suppiya, towards the end of that night, having had sumptuous solid foods, soft foods, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready”. Then the Lord, dressing in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the lay-follower Suppiya; having approached, he sat down together with the Order of monks on the appointed seat.

Then the lay-follower Suppiya approached the lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As the lay-follower Suppiya was standing at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him:

“How is Suppiyā?”

“She is ill, Lord.”

“Well then, let her come.”

“She is not able to do so, Lord.”

“Well then, having taken hold of her, bring her along.” Then the lay-follower Suppiya, having taken hold of the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, brought her along. When the Lord saw her, even that great wound became healed, the skin was (made) good with (small) hairs growing on it.

Then the lay-follower Suppiya and the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, saying: “Wonderful indeed, marvellous indeed are the great psychic power and the great potency of the Truth-finder, inasmuch as when the Lord sees (someone) even a great wound will be healed, the skin (made) good with (small) hairs growing on it,” and joyful, elated, having with their own hands served, and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, they sat down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the lay-follower Suppiya and the woman lay-follower Suppiya with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Who, monks, asked the woman lay-follower Suppiyā for meat?” When he had spoken thus, that monk spoke thus to the Lord:

“I, Lord, asked the woman lay-follower Suppiyā for meat.”

“Has it been conveyed (to you), monk?”

“It has been conveyed, Lord.”

“Did you, monk, make use of it?”

“I, Lord, made use of it.”

“Did you, monk, inquire about¹ it?”

“I, Lord, did not inquire about it.”

The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “How an you, foolish man, make use of meat without having inquired about it? Foolish man, human flesh has been made use of by you. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“There are, monks, people who are faithful and believing; even their own flesh is given up by these. Monks, you should not make use of human flesh. Whoever should make use of it, there is a grave offence. Nor, monks, should you make use of flesh without inquiring about it. Whoever should (so) make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ paṭivekkhi, which Vin-a 1094 explains by vīmaṃsi, examined, considered, and by paṭipucchi, questioned. It explains appaṭivekkhitvā by appaṭipucchitvā not having questioned.

ON REJECTION OF ELEPHANT FLESH

Now at that time a king's elephant died. Because food was scarce people made use of elephant-flesh; they gave elephant-flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood, and the monks made use of the elephant-flesh. The people looked down upon,¹ criticised, spread it about, saying:

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make use of elephant-flesh? Elephants are a king's emblem; if the king should find out, not for these would be his favour.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, you should not make use of elephant-flesh. Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Now at that time a king's horses died ... (same as Kd 6.23.10 reading horses, horse-flesh for elephants, elephant-flesh) “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time, because food was scarce people made use of dog-flesh; they gave dog-flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood, and the monks made use of the dog-flesh. The people looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make use of dog-flesh? A dog is loathsome, disgusting.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ From this passage it would appear that the people did not as a rule eat elephants' flesh; and it is to my mind not clear whether any did so even in a time of scarcity, but merely used it for offering to monks. Those who criticised monks could hardly have eaten it themselves. The same applies to the cases following.

Above at Kd 6.23.9 a monk is blamed for accepting uncritically what was offered him. In the case of robes, on the contrary, monks might put forward no suggestions (see Bu-NP 8, Bu-NP 9, Bu-NP 27).

“Monks, dog-flesh should not be made use of.¹ Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time, because food was scarce people made use of snake-flesh; they gave snake-flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood, and the monks made use of the snake-flesh. The people ... spread it about, saying:

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make use of snake-flesh? A snake is loathsome, disgusting.”

Then Supassa, the serpent-king, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance Supassa, the serpent-king, spoke thus to the Lord:

“There are, Lord, serpents who are without faith, unbelieving, and these might do harm to monks even for a trifle. It were good, Lord, if the masters did not make use of snake-flesh.”

Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Supassa, the serpent-king, with talk on dhamma; and Supassa, the serpent-king, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, snake-flesh should not be used. Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time hunters, having killed a lion, made use of its flesh; they gave the lion's flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood. The monks, having made use of the lion's flesh, stayed in a jungle (but) lions attacked the monks because they smelt of lion's flesh. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, lion's flesh should not be made use of. Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Vin-a 1094 says the flesh of jungle wolves may be used; but the flesh of the offspring of a wolf and village dog may not be used.

Now at that time hunters, having killed a tiger ... having killed a panther ... having killed a bear ... having killed a hyena,¹ made use of its flesh; they gave the hyena's flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood. The monks, having made use of the hyena's flesh, stayed in a jungle (but) hyenas attacked the monks because they smelt of hyena's flesh. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, hyena's flesh should not be used. Whoever should use it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ALLOWANCE FOR CONJEU AND HONEY-LUMPS

Then the Lord, having stayed in Benares for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Andhakavinda² together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Now at that time the country people, having loaded much salt and oil and husked rice and solid food into wagons, followed close after the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, saying:

“When we get our turn, then we will make a meal (for them),”³ and there were at least five hundred of those who eat the remains of food. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Andhakavinda.

Then it occurred to a certain brahmin who did not receive his turn: “For the last two months I have been following the Older of monks with the awakened one at its head, thinking: ‘When I get my turn, I will make a meal (for them),’ but I do not get my turn. I am alone, and many of my household affairs are going to ruin. Suppose I were to look into the refectory⁴ and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?” Then that brahmin, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: conje and honey-lumps.¹

¹ Names of wild animals occur in this order at Vin 3.151, AN iii.101. Cf. Vin 3.58 where “bears” drop out and “wolves” follow hyenas. There is a longer list at Mil 267 = Ja v.416.

² A village in the Magadha country. ³ Cf. Kd 6.33.1. ⁴ Cf. Kd 6.36.6-Kd 6.36.8.

Then that brahmin approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Now, it occurred to me, good Ānanda, as I did not get a turn: ‘For the last two months ... Suppose I were to look into the refectory and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?’ So I, good Ānanda, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: conje and honey-lumps. If I, good Ānanda, were to prepare conje and honey-lumps, would the revered Gotama accept them from me?”

“Well then, brahmin, I will ask the Lord.”

Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, Ānanda, let him prepare them.” (Ānanda) said: “Well then, brahmin, prepare them”. Then that brahmin towards the end of that night, having had a quantity of conje and honey-lumps prepared, brought them to the Lord saying: “May the revered Gotama accept conje and honey-lumps from me.”

“Well then, brahmin, give them to the monks.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept them. (The Lord said:) “Accept them, monks, make use of them.” Then that brahmin, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with a quantity of conje and honey-lumps, when the Lord had washed his hand² and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance.

Then as this brahmin was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him:

“Brahmin, there are these ten advantages from conje. What ten? In giving conje one gives life, one gives beauty, one gives ease, one gives strength, one gives intelligence; conje when it is drunk checks hunger, keeps off thirst, regulates wind, cleanses the bladder, digests raw remnants of food.¹ These, brahmin, are the ten advantages of conjei.”

¹ madhugoḷaka, perhaps honey-combs. At Mahāvaiṃsa 22.42; Mahāvaiṃsa 34.52 we find madhugaṇḍa, translated by Geiger as “honey-combs”. ² dhotahattha, an unusual expression occurring at Kd 6.35.4; Kd 6.36.8. Used in explanation of allapāṇi at Pv-a 116. Technically hattha is the forearm from elbow to finger-tip, see BD 2, Introduction, p.li. Perhaps pāṇi is the hand itself.

“To the discerning whoso gives conjei duly
At the right time to one who lives on others’ food,
It confers ten things on him:
Life and beauty, ease and strength;²

“For him intelligence arises from it,
It dispels hunger, thirst and wind,
It cleanses the bladder, it digests food;
This medicine is praised by the well-farer.

“Therefore conjei should be given constantly
By a man longing for ease,
By those aspiring to deva-like joys
Or wanting human prosperity.”

Then the Lord having given thanks to that brahmin in these verses, rising from his seat, departed. Then the Lord, having on this occasion given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, conjei and honey-lumps.”

THE STORY OF THE MINISTER YOUNG IN FAITH

The people heard: “It is said that conjei is allowed by the Lord and honey-lumps.” These prepared eating-conjei³ and honey-lumps early in the morning. The monks, (each) satisfied⁴ in the early morning with eating-conjei and a honey-lump, did not eat as much as expected in the refectory. Now at that time a certain chief minister, ¹ The last five advantages occur also at AN iii.250. ² Cf. AN ii.64, where a similar verse occurs, but reading bhojana, food, instead of yāgu, conjei, and “four things” instead of “ten”. ³ bhojjayāgu, apparently as opposed to the more ordinary, and presumably more liquid, conjei which was drunk. Bhojja therefore here must be meant to stand for stiff, set, firm. ⁴ dhātā, in the sense of having eaten their fill, rather than in the sense of having been offered, and therefore satisfied, as is the meaning conveyed by pavārta.

young in faith came to have invited the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head for the morrow. Then it occurred to that chief minister, young in faith: “Suppose I were to prepare twelve hundred and fifty bowls of meat for the twelve hundred and fifty monks, and should take one bowl of meat up to each monk?”

Then that chief minister, young in faith, towards the end of that night, having had sumptuous solid food, soft food, prepared and twelve hundred and fifty bowls of meat, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “Lord, it is time, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of that great minister, young in the faith; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

Then that chief minister, young in faith, attended on the monks in the refectory. The monks spoke thus: “Give a little,¹ sir, give a little, sir.” (He said) “Do not you, honoured sirs, accept so very little thinking: ‘This chief minister is young in faith.’ Much solid food, soft food, and twelve hundred and fifty bowls of meat have been prepared by me, thinking: ‘I will take one bowl of meat up to each monk’. Accept, honoured sirs, as much as you want.”

“Sir, it is not for this reason that we are accepting so very little, but we were (each) satisfied in the early morning with eating-conjey and a honey-lump; that is why we are accepting so very little.”

Then that chief minister, young in faith, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs make use of someone else’s² eating-conjey? It is not that I am not competent to give as much as they want”³ and angry, displeased, longing to insult the monks, he went round filling their bowls and saying: “Eat it or take it away”. Then that chief minister, young in faith, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl. As this chief minister, young in faith, was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted him with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

¹ Cf. Vin 3.66, Vin 4.76, Vin 4.81. ² Here aññasa, not aññatra, “elsewhere”, as in the cases cited in the previous note. ³ Reading here na cāham na paṭṭibalo; see

But soon after the Lord had departed, that chief minister, young in faith, became remorseful and conscience-stricken and thought: “For me it is unprofitable, for me it is not profitable, for me it is ill-gotten, for me it is not well-gotten, that I, angry, displeased, longing to insult the monks, went round filling their bowls and saying: ‘Eat it or take it away’. Now, is much merit produced for me or demerit?”

Then that chief minister, young in faith, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that chief minister, young in faith, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Now I, Lord, soon after the Lord had departed, became remorseful and conscience-stricken, thinking: ‘For me it is unprofitable ... Now, Lord, is much merit produced for me or demerit?’”

“From the time when, sir, the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head was invited by you for the morrow much merit was produced for you; from the time when one of your lumps of boiled rice¹ was accepted by each monk much merit was produced for you. Heaven worlds are assured for you.”

Then that chief minister, young in faith, thinking: “It is said that it was profitable for me, it is said that it was well-gotten by me, it is said that much merit was produced for me, it is said that heaven worlds are assured for me,” joyful, elated, rising up from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks, (although) invited elsewhere,² made use of someone else’s eating-conjey?”

¹ sittha, instead of, as before, maṃsapāti. Cf. sitthāni at Vin 2.165 and sa-sittha-ka at Vin 2.214, and sitthāvākāraka at Vin 2.214, Vin 4.196. ² aññatra here.

“It is true, Lord.”

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men, invited elsewhere, make use of someone else’s eating-conjey? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, if one is invited elsewhere, someone else’s eating-conjey should not be made use of. Whoever should (so) make use of it should be dealt with according to the rule.”¹

THE STORY OF BELAṬṬHAKACCĀNA

Then the Lord, having stayed at Andhakavinda for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha together with the large order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks. Now at that time Belaṭṭha Kaccāna² was going along the highroad from Rājagaha to Andhakavinda with five hundred wagons all filled with jars of sugar. Then the Lord saw Belaṭṭha Kaccāna from afar, and seeing him, he stepped aside from the road and sat down at the root of a certain tree.

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna approached the Lord, having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, Belaṭṭha Kaccāna spoke thus to the Lord:

“I, Lord, want to give one jar of sugar to each monk.”

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, bring just one jar of sugar.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having answered the Lord in assent, bringing just one jar of sugar approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “The jar of sugar is brought, Lord. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

¹ Vin-a 1095 says “he should be dealt with for the offence of paramparabhojana,” an out-of-turn meal, i.e. not taking the invitations in the order in which they were issued; made an offence in Bu-Pc 33. See BD 2.317, n. 3. ² Mentioned, I think, nowhere but here. Buddhaghosa has no note. The absence of a descriptive epithet is unusual. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names calls him “a sugar-dealer”, which seems likely.

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, give the sugar to the monks.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, having given the sugar to the monks, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, the sugar is given to the monks, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, Kaccāna, give the monks as much sugar as they want.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, having given the monks as much sugar as they wanted, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, as much sugar as they wanted has been given to the monks, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, serve the monks with sugar.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, served the monks with sugar. Some monks filled bowls and they filled water-strainers and bags.

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having served the monks with sugar, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the monks are served with sugar, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, give sugar to those who eat the remains of food.”¹

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, having given sugar to those who eat the remains of food, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, sugar has been given to those who eat the remains of food, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, Kaccāna, give those who eat the remains of food as much sugar as they want.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having answered the Lord in assent, having given those who eat the remains of food as much sugar as they wanted, spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ Mentioned above in Kd 6.24.1. It seems as if they had attached themselves to the company of monks, doing the journeys from Benares to Andhakavinda and from there to Rājagaha.

“Lord, as much sugar as they wanted has been given to those who eat the remains of food, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, Kaccāna, do you serve with sugar those who eat the remains of food.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, served with sugar those who eat the remains of food. Some of those who eat the remains of food filled pots and pitchers and they filled baskets and (their) clothes.¹

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having served with sugar those who eat the remains of food, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, those who eat the remains of food have been served with sugar, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“I do not see anyone,² Kaccāna, in the world with its devas, Māras, and Brahmās, nor in the race of recluses and brahmins, devas and men who having made use of that sugar could digest it properly except a Truth-finder or a Truth-finder’s disciple.³ Well then, Kaccāna, throw away that sugar where there is but little green grass or drop it into water where there are no living creatures.”⁴

“Yes, lord”, and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, dropped that sugar into water where there were no living creatures.

Then that sugar, thus placed in the water, sizzled and hissed and sent forth steam and smoke. As a ploughshare heated the live-long day if placed in water sizzles and hisses and sends forth steam and smoke, so did this sugar when placed in the water sizzle and hiss and send forth steam and smoke. Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, alarmed and with his hair standing on end, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

¹ ucchariga, lap or hip. Here probably meaning that they knotted the sugar into the cloths they were wearing. This is still a customary way of carrying packages in India. At MN i.366 the word appears to have the same meaning as above. ² For following passage, cf. SN i.168–9, Snp p.15. ³ For explanation of this “curious reply” see KS i.211, n. 3. ⁴ Cf. Kd 4.13, where this sentence also occurs.

As Belaṭṭha Kaccāna was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk to him,¹ that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven; he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of Belaṭṭha Kaccāna was ready, pliable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop”.

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, as one who had seen dhamma,² attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, who had crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, who had attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Even, Lord, as one might set upright what had been upset ... even so is dhamma explained by the Lord in many a figure. I myself, Lord, am going to the Lord for refuge, to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place. At that time there was abundant sugar in Rājagaha. Monks, thinking, “Sugar is allowed by the Lord only to one who is ill, not to one who is not ill”, being scrupulous, did not partake of sugar. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ From here to end of Kd 6.26.8 cf. above, e.g. Kd 1.7.5–Kd 1.7.6. ² For this passage see Kd 1.6.32, etc.

“I allow, monks, sugar for one who is ill, sugar-water for one who is not ill.”¹

THE STORY OF PĀṬALIGĀMA

Then the Lord,² having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Pāṭaligāma³ together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Pāṭaligāma. Lay-followers at Pāṭaligāma heard: “It is said that the Lord has reached Pāṭaligāma.” Then the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma with talk on dhamma as they were sitting down at a respectful distance.

Then the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, spoke thus to the Lord⁴: “Lord, may the Lord consent (to come) to our rest-house⁵ together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, having understood the Lord’s consent,⁶ rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, having kept their right sides towards him, approached that rest-house; having approached, having spread that test-house so that a spreading was spread everywhere,¹ having made ready seats,² having had a water-jar set up, having prepared an oil lamp, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they stood at a respectful distance.

¹ Note that above, when the monks received a quantity of sugar from Belaṭṭha, the verb used was paribhuñjati, (to make use of). In the story of Kd 6.27.1, it is said that they did not partake of, (na bhuñjanti,) any sugar. ² Chapters 28–30 are, with a few unimportant variations, word for word the same as the Mahāparinibbāna Sutta DN16.1.19–DN16.2.3; DN16.2.16–DN16.2.24. See RHYSDAVIDS’ Introduction to his translation of the Mahāparinibbāna Sutta, pp. xxxiv seq., and his note there at DN16.2.16, thus Vinaya Texts ii.97, n. Also from here to end of 28 is, again with a few minor variations, the same as Ud 85–Ud 90. ³ The modern Patna. On pāṭali, see below, BD 4.312, n. 4. ⁴ This passage occurs also at DN ii.84ff. ⁵ āvasathāgāra, as at Vin 4.17; see BD 2.198 for Buddhaghosa’s interpretation. ⁶ For preamble to the discourse see also MN i.354, SN iv.182.

As they were standing at a respectful distance, the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma spoke thus to the Lord: “The rest-house is spread with a spreading everywhere, Lord, seats are made ready, a water-jar is set up, an oil lamp is prepared; Lord, the Lord does that for which it is now the right time.” Then the Lord, dressing in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached that rest-house together with the Order of monks; having approached, having washed his feet, having entered the rest-house, he sat down leaning against a central pillar facing the east. The Order of monks too, having washed their feet, having entered the rest-house, sat down leaning against the western wall facing the east with the Lord in view. The lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma too, having washed their feet, having entered the rest-house, sat down leaning against the eastern wall, facing the west with the Lord in view.

Then the Lord addressed the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, saying: “There are these five disadvantages,³ householders, to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit. What five? Now, householders, one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, suffers great diminution of wealth owing to sloth; this is the first disadvantage to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit.

Then again, householders, an evil reputation is noised abroad of one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit; this is the second disadvantage ...

Then again, householders, if one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, approaches any company, whether a company of nobles, a company of brahmins, a company of householders, a company of recluses, he approaches it diffidently, being ashamed; this is the third disadvantage ...

¹ sabbasanthariṃ santhataṃ āvasathāgāraṃ santharivā. On santharati and santhata see BD 2, Introduction, p. xxiif. Ud 86 omits santhataṃ. ² All these processes are described at MN-a iii.18f., Ud-a 409f. ³ As at AN iii.252f., DN ii.85–DN ii.86, DN iii.236, Ud 86. Noticed at Vism 54.

“Then again, householders, one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, passes away bewildered; this is the fourth disadvantage ...

“Then again, householders, one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, at the breaking up of the body after dying arises in the waste, the Bad-bourn, the Downfall, Niraya Hell; this is the fifth disadvantage to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit. These, householders, are the five disadvantages to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit.

“There are these five advantages, householders, to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit. What five? Now, householders, one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, acquires a great mass of wealth owing to zeal; this is the first advantage to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit.

“Then again, householders, a lovely reputation is noised abroad of one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit; this is the second advantage ...

“Then again, householders, if one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, approaches any company, whether a company of nobles, a company of brahmins, a company of householders, a company of recluses, he approaches it confidently, not being ashamed; this is the third advantage ...

“Then again, householders, one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, passes away unbewildered; this is the fourth advantage

...

“Then again, householders, one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, at the breaking up of the body after dying arises in the Happy-bourn, in a heaven-world; this is the fifth advantage to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit. These, householders, are the five advantages to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit.”

When the Lord had gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma far into the night with talk on dhamma, he dismissed them, saying: “The night is now far spent, householders; now do that for whatever it is the right time.”

“Yes, Lord,” and the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, having answered the Lord in assent, rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping their right sides towards him.

Then the Lord, soon after the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma had departed, entered into solitude.¹

THE STORY OF SUNIDHA AND VASSAKĀRA

Now at that time Sunidha² and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, were building a (fortified) town³ at Pāṭaligāma for repelling the Vajjis. Then the Lord, getting up at the end of that night towards dawn, saw with deva-sight, pure and surpassing that of men, many⁴ devatās occupying the sites at Pāṭaligāma. Now in whatever region powerful devatās occupy sites, they bend the minds of powerful kings and the kings’ chief ministers to build dwellings there; in whatever region devatās of middling (power) occupy sites, they bend the minds of kings of middling (power), and the kings’ chief ministers to build dwellings there; in whatever region devatās of lowly (power) occupy sites, they bend the minds of kings of lowly (power) and the kings’ chief ministers to build dwellings there.

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Now, who, Ānanda, are these who are building a (fortified) town at Pāṭaligāma?”

“Sunidha and Vassakāra, Lord, chief ministers in Magadha, ... for repelling the Vajjis.”

“As though, Ānanda, having consulted together with the Devas of the Thirty, even so, Ānanda, do Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, build a (fortified) town at Pāṭaligāma for repelling the Vajjis. Now I, Ānanda, getting up at the end of this night towards dawn, saw with deva-sight ... in whatever region devatās of lowly (power) occupy sites, they bend the minds of kings of lowly (power) and the kings' chief ministers to build dwellings there. Ānanda, as far as the ariyan region¹ (extends), as far as there is trading,² this will be a leading town, Pāṭaliputta³, (where there was) the breaking of the seed-boxes.⁴ But, Ānanda, there will be three dangers to Pāṭaliputta: from fire or from water or from internal dissension."⁵

¹ suññāgāra, see above, Kd 1.78.5, and Minor Anthologies ii, p.107, n. 1. ² Sunidha at DN ii.86 and Ud 87. ³ nagara, see BD 2.63, n. 2. ⁴ sambahulā, often in Vinaya when used of monks being equivalent to gaṇa, a group of from two to four monks. DN ii.87, Ud 88 say sambahulā devatāyo sahaṣṣassa, many devatās (in companies) of a thousand.

Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, approached the Lord; having approached they exchanged friendly greetings with the Lord; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, they stood at a respectful distance. As they were standing at a respectful distance, Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, spoke thus to the Lord: "May the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with us today." The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, departed⁶ having understood the Lord's consent.

Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, having had sumptuous solid food and soft food prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: "It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready." Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the food distribution⁷ of Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha; having approached, he sat down together with the Order of monks on the appointed seat. Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, having with their own hands served and satisfied with sumptuous food, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance; and as Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, were sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord gave thanks in these verses:

¹ ariya āyatana. Cf. AN iii.441. Vin-a 1095 says "as far as the place where ariyan people go to". ² vaṇṇipatha. ³ The modern Patna. The name is omitted at Ud 88. ⁴ (This footnote proved troublesome to typeset due to its length, so it has been moved to an appendix with other long notes on page 2984.) ⁵ On the event prophesied here. Pāṭaliputta's becoming the capital of the Magadha empire, and the possibility of the notice of the event's late insertion into the text, see Vinaya Texts ii.102, n and Dialogues of the Buddha ii.92, n. 3. ⁶ DN ii.88, Ud 89 say they went to their own residence, āvasatha. ⁷ parivesanā; DN ii.88, Ud 89 read āvasatha. Cf. Snp p.13, SN i.172.

“Wherever the prudent man shall take up his abode, Having offered food to those here of moral habit, good Brahma-farers, if he makes an offering
To those¹ devatās who may be there—
These revered, do revere, honoured, do honour him.
Hence they sympathise with him,
as a mother with her own child.
The man with whom devatās sympathise, ever sees good luck.”

Then the Lord, having in these verses given thanks to Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, rising from his seat, departed.

Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, following close behind the Lord, thought: “By whichever gate the recluse Gotama goes out today, that shall be called Gotama’s Gate; by whichever ford he crosses the river Ganges, that shall be called Gotama’s Ford.” Accordingly the gate by which the Lord departed came to be called Gotama’s Gate.

Then the Lord approached the river Ganges. Now at that time the river Ganges was full, level with the banks, so that a crow could drink² (from it). Since they were desirous of going from the hither to the further (bank),³ some people looked about for a boat, some looked about for a float,⁴ others put together a raft.⁵

¹ Cf. Thig.307, Thig.211; Mil 294. ² As at MN i.435; SN ii.134; DN i.244; AN iii.27. ³ orā pāraṃ; DN: aparāparaṃ; Ud: apārā paraṃ, which WOODWARD (Minor Anthologies ii.109, n. 4) proposes to correct to DN reading. ⁴ uḷumpa. This may be a wooden or a bamboo raft. Vin-a 1096 says that it is made, having knocked in pegs. ⁵ kulla. Vin-a 1096 says that it is made, having put together reeds and so on.

The Lord saw these people, of whom some were looking about for a boat, some were looking about for a float, others were putting together a raft since they were desirous of going from the hither to the further (bank). Seeing them, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from the hither bank¹ of the river Ganges, reappear² on the further bank together with the Order of monks. Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this solemn utterance:

“Those cross the deeps, the rivers,³ making a bridge, spanning the swamps.
See! people tie their rafts—but crossed over⁴ are the wise.”⁵

ON THE TRUTHS AT KOṬIGĀMA

Then the Lord approached Koṭigāma. The Lord stayed there at Koṭigāma. Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, it is by not understanding, not penetrating the four ariyan truths that there is this long long running-on and faring-on both for me and for you. What four? Monks, it is through not understanding, not penetrating the ariyan truth of ill that there is this long long running-on and faring-on both for me and for you. Monks, it is through not understanding, not penetrating the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill, the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill, the ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill that there is this long long running-on and faring-on both for me and for you.

“Therefore, monks, if the ariyan truth of ill is understood, is penetrated, if the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill ... if the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill ... if the ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill is understood and penetrated, then cut off is the craving for becoming,¹ destroyed is the conduit for becoming,² there is not now again-becoming.”

¹ orimatīre. ² paccuṭṭhāsi, instead of the more usual pāturaḥosi. ³ sara, here a river, Vin-a 1096. ⁴ tiṇṇa, a technical term frequent in the Suttas, meaning “crossed over” the four-fold flood of sense-pleasures, becoming, false view and ignorance, or over some other undesirable state, and so “crossed over” Māra’s stream, a river of death. See my Man Perfected, Ch. 8. ⁵ To here, from beginning of Kd 6.28.1, the same as Ud 85, with a few minor variations.

Not seeing the four ariyan truths as they really are Long is the journey fared-on in birth after birth;
When these are seen, removed is the conduit for becoming,
The root of ill cut off, there is not now again-becoming.³

THE STORY OF AMBAPĀLĪ

Then the courtesan Ambapālī⁴ heard⁵: “They say that the Lord has reached Koṭṭigāma”. Then the courtesan Ambapālī, having had very magnificent vehicles harnessed, having mounted a magnificent vehicle, went off with the very magnificent vehicles from Vesālī to see the Lord. Having gone by vehicle as far as the ground was (suitable) for a vehicle, she alighted from the vehicle and approached the Lord on foot; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance.

The Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the courtesan Ambapālī with talk on dhamma as she was sitting down at a respectful distance. The courtesan Ambapālī, having been, gladdened ... delighted with talk on dhamma by the Lord, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. The courtesan Ambapālī, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from her seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him.

¹ bhavataṇhā. ² bhavanetti. ³ To here from 28.1 = DN ii.84–91. ⁴ Her verses are at Thig. 252–Thig.270. See also Thig-a 206–Thig-a 7, Thig-a 213; Thi-ap 613ff. She was the mother of Vimāla-Koṇḍañña, while Bimbisāra is said to have been his father, Thag-a 156. Mentioned below, BD 4.379. ⁵ From here to Kd 6.30.6 = DN ii.95. See Dialogues of the Buddha ii.102, n. for some remarks on the discrepancies shown by the two versions in their localisation of the incidents narrated.

THE STORY OF THE LICCHAVĪS

Then the Licchavis of Vesālī heard: “They say that the Lord has reached Koṭṭigāma”. Then the Licchavis of Vesālī, having had very magnificent vehicles harnessed, having (each) mounted a magnificent vehicle, went off with the very magnificent vehicles from Vesālī to see the Lord. Some Licchavis were dark green,¹ dark green in colour, their clothes were dark green, their ornaments were dark green. Some Licchavis were yellow, yellow in colour ... their ornaments were yellow. Some Licchavis were red, red in colour ... their ornaments were red. Some Licchavis were white, white in colour, their clothes were white, their ornaments were white. Then the courtesan Ambapālī drove up against the many young Licchavis, pole to pole, yoke to yoke, wheel to wheel, axle to axle.

Then these Licchavis spoke thus to the courtesan Ambapālī: “Now then,² why do you, Ambapālī, drive up against the many young Licchavis pole to pole, yoke to yoke, wheel to wheel, axle to axle?”

“Indeed, young gentlemen,³ it is because the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head is invited by me for the morrow.”

“Now then, Ambapālī, give up this meal to us for a hundred thousand.”⁴

“But if, young gentlemen, you were to give up Vesālī with its produce,⁵ I would not give up this meal.”

Then these Licchavis snapped their fingers,⁶ saying: “Truly we are beaten by this mango-girl,¹ truly we are defeated by this mango-girl.”

¹ nila is defined at Vin 4.120. Vin-a 1096 says that these colours are for the sake of distinguishing the Licchavis. They are not “dark green” and so on by nature, but are coloured with a dark green cosmetic—as some of the faces of the Ajanta frescoes are meant to be. ² je. ³ ayyaputta. ⁴ Probably kahāpaṇas are to be understood. ⁵ sāhāra = sa-āhāra, with its food. Vin-a 1097, DN-a 545 explain by sa-janapada. No justification for “with its subject territory” of Vinaya Texts ii.107, Dialogues of the Buddha ii.103. ⁶ aṅgulī pothesuṃ. Vin-a 1097 explains by cālesuṃ, to move, to shake.

Then these Licchavis approached the Lord. The Lord saw these Licchavis coming from afar, and seeing them, he addressed the monks, saying:

“By whatever monks, monks, the Devas of the Thirty have not been seen before, look, monks, at the Licchavi company, look again, monks, at the Licchavi company, compare, monks, the Licchavi company to the company of the Devas of the Thirty.” Then these Licchavis, having gone by vehicle as far as the ground ... (as in Kd 6.30.1, Kd 6.30.2 down to:): “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with us on the morrow?”

“I have promised, Licchavis, (to take) a meal with the courtesan Ambapālī to-morrow.” Then these Licchavis snapped their fingers, saying:

“Truly we are beaten by this mango-girl; truly we are defeated by this mango-girl.”

Then these Licchavis, having approved of what the Lord had said and having given thanks for it, rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping their right sides towards him.

Then the Lord, having stayed in Koṭigāma for as long as he found suiting, approached Ñātikā. The Lord stayed there at Ñātikā in the Brick Residence. Then the courtesan Ambapālī, having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night in her own park, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: ... (as in Kd 6.28.10 down to:²) ... sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, the courtesan Ambapālī spoke thus to the Lord: “I, Lord, would give this Ambapālī Grove to the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head.”

The Lord accepted the park. Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the courtesan Ambapālī with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat,¹ approached the Great Grove. The Lord stayed there at Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Hall with the Peaked Gable.

¹ ambakā, with probably intended a play on her name, itself connected with the mango-grove she owned. See Dialogues of the Buddha ii.103, n. 1; Vinaya Texts ii.107, n.

² Replace “Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers of Magadha” by “the courtesan Ambapālī,” and “good Gotama” by “Lord”.

Told is the Portion for Repeating on the Licchavis

THE STORY OF GENERAL SĪHA

6.31.1 Now at that time² many distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in a mote-hall, were in many a figure speaking praise of the awakened one, praise of dhamma, praise of the Order. Now at that time the general Sīha,³ a disciple of the Jains,⁴ came to be sitting in that company. Then it occurred to the general Sīha: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, a perfected one, a wholly awakened one, since these distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in the mote-hall, are in many a figure speaking praise of the awakened one, praise of dhamma, praise of the Order. Suppose I were to go up to see this Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened one?”

6.31.2 Then the general Sīha approached Nātaputta the Jain⁵; having approached, he spoke thus to Nataputta the Jain: “I want, honoured sir,⁶ to go along to see the recluse Gotama.”

“But how can you, Sīha, being one who asserts an ought- to-be-done,⁷ go along to see the recluse Gotama who asserts an ought-not-to-be-done⁸? For, Sīha, the recluse Gotama asserts an ought-not-

¹ To here from Kd 6.30.1 is in all material respects the same as DN ii.95. The DN version says the Lord went to Beluva. ² From there to nearly the end of Kd 6.31.14 = AN iv.179. ³ Cf. AN iii.38f., AN iv.79. His interest in giving gifts may have been due to Gotama’s talk to him (below Kd 6.31.11) just after he became a lay-follower. ⁴ Nigaṇṭhas. Literal meaning “without bonds”. See GS iv.124, n. 2.

⁵ The leader of the Nigaṇṭhas, identified by Bühler and Jacobi with Mahāvīra (Vinaya Texts ii.109, n. 1). His views are given at DN i.57. ⁶ bhante. ⁷ kiriya-vāda. This and akiriya-vāda each had its own adherents. Gotama put his own interpretation on each theory, see below Kd 6.31.6 and Vin 3.2. Thus he is able to say, as at AN i.62, kiriya-vādī c’aham akiriya-vādī ca. At Vin 1.71 he is reputed to say of the Jāṭilas that they are kiriya-vādino and kammavādino, and it is apparently for this reason that he grants them a concession. ⁸ akiriya-vāda. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol. iv, No. 2, July 1939, p. 119ff.

to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done and in that he trains¹ disciples.” Then that which had been the strong aspiration of general Siha for going² to see the Lord abated.

Then a second time did the distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in the mote-hall ... And a second time did it occur to the general Sīha: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, a perfected one ... Suppose I were to go up to see this Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened one?” And a second time did the general Siha approach Nātaputta the Jain “... and in that trains disciples”. And a second time did that abate which had been the strong aspiration of the general Siha for going to see the Lord. And a third time it occurred to the general Sīha: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened one, since these distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in the mote-hall, are in many a figure speaking praise of the awakened one, praise of dhamma, praise of the Order. What can these Jains do to me whether I have asked for permission or have not asked for permission? Suppose that I, although I have not asked for permission from the Jains, were to go along to see this Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened one?”

Then the general Sīha with some five hundred chariots departed from Vesālī in broad daylight to see the Lord. Having gone by vehicle as far as the ground was (suitable) for a vehicle, having alighted from the vehicle, he approached the Lord on foot; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, general Sīha spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, I have heard this: ‘The recluse Gotama affirms an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done, and in that trains disciples.’ I assume that these, Lord, who say: ‘The recluse Gotama affirms an ought-not-to-be-done ... and in that trains disciples,’ are, Lord, asserting (fairly) what the Lord affirms,³ and are not misrepresenting the Lord by what is not fact, but are putting forth a doctrine which conforms to¹ his doctrine. I assume that no one who is his fellow dhamma-man, a holder of his views, comes to a position incurring blame. Indeed, we, Lord, do not want to misrepresent the Lord.”²

¹ Vineti, to lead away, and so to pervert, divert, avert. Cf. below Kd 6.34.12, where in the same terms leaders of other sects try to dissuade Menḍaka from going to see the Lord. ² gamikābhisamkhāra. Cf. pabbajjābhisamkhāra at Vin 1.194 (above, Kd 5.13.2).

³ bhagavato vuttavādī.

“There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say³: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts an ought-to-be-done⁴ ... trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts annihilation ... trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who detests, he teaches a doctrine of detestation, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is a leader away, he teaches a doctrine of leading away, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is a “burner up”, he teaches a doctrine of “burning up”, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is not destined to another (kind of) becoming, he teaches a doctrine of no other kind of becoming, and in this he trains disciples. There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is confident,⁵ he teaches a doctrine of confidence,⁶ and in this he trains disciples.’

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who asserts an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, assert of misconduct in body, speech and thought that it ought not to be done; I assert of manifold evil and wrong states (of mind) that they ought not to be done. This is the way, Sīha, in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts what ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of what ought-not-to-be-done and in this he trains disciples.’

¹ anudhamma, explained by anukāraṇa, perhaps meaning “minor tenet”, at Vin-a 1097, DN-a 349, MN-a iii.46. ² Stock, e.g. at DN i.161, DN iii.115; MN i.368, MN i.482; AN i.161; SN ii.33. SN iii.6, SN iv.340; Vin 2.297. ³ Cf. Vin 3.2–Vin.3.3 for this passage, and for notes see BD 1.4–BD.1.6. ⁴ Not included at Vin 3.2. Cf. AN i.62. ⁵ Not included at Vin 3.2. “Confident” is Pali assattha, rendered at GS iv.127 “found consolation”. ⁶ assāsa. Cf. one who has assāsa in dharmavinaya at SN ii.50; translated at KS ii.38 as “comfort”.

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts what ought-to-be-done ... trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, assert of good conduct in body, speech and thought that it ought to be done; of manifold right states (of mind) that they ought to be done. This is the way, Sīha ...

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts annihilation ... trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, assert the annihilation of passion, hatred, stupidity; I assert the annihilation of manifold evil and wrong states (of mind). This is the way, Sīha ...

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who detests, he teaches a doctrine of detestation and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed, Sīha, I detest misconduct in body, speech and thought; I teach a doctrine of detestation for entering upon manifold evil wrong states (of mind). This is the way, Sīha ...

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who is a leader away, he teaches a doctrine of leading away and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, teach a doctrine of the leading away of passion, hatred, stupidity; I teach a doctrine of the leading away of manifold evil wrong states (of mind). This is the way, Sīha ...

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who is a “burner-up”, he teaches a doctrine of burning up and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, speak of evil wrong states which are searing: misconduct in body, speech and thought. He for whom, Sīha, evil wrong states that axe searing are destroyed, cut off at the root, made like a palm-tree, so utterly done away with that they can come to no future existence—him I call one who is

4.322 a 'burner-up'. For a Truth-finder, Sīha, evil wrong states that are searing ... existence. This is the way, Sīha, in which one ... could say: 'The recluse Gotama is one who is a "burner-up", he teaches a doctrine of burning-up, and in this he trains disciples.'

1.236
6.31.9 "And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: 'The recluse Gotama is one who is not destined to another (kind of) becoming, he teaches a doctrine of no other (kind of) becoming and in this he trains disciples'? He for whom, Sīha, future conception in a womb, becoming again and rebirth are destroyed, cut off at the root, made like a palm-tree, so utterly done away with that they can come to no future existence—him I call one not destined to another (kind of) becoming. For a Truth-finder, Sīha, future conception ... can come to no future existence. This is the way, Sīha ...

"And what, Sīha, is the way in which one speaking truly of me could say: 'The recluse Gotama is one who is confident, he teaches a doctrine of confidence and in this he trains disciples'? Indeed I, Sīha, am confident with the highest confidence,¹ I teach a doctrine of confidence and in this I train disciples.² This is the way, Sīha, in which one speaking truly of me could say: 'The recluse Gotama is confident, he teaches a doctrine of confidence and in this he trains disciples'."

31.10 And when he had spoken thus,³ Sīha, the general, spoke thus to the Lord: "Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! ...⁴ May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts."

"Now, Sīha, make a proper investigation. Proper investigation is good in the case of well-known men like yourself."⁵

"I, Lord, am even exceedingly pleased, satisfied with that which ¹ AN-a iv.98 says "with the highest confidence in the four ways and the four fruits".

² Cf. DN iii.39 where wanderers are recorded to ask Gotama the name of the doctrine in which he trains disciples and in which they, trained and attained to confidence, assāsa, acknowledge a desire for (or a support in) the Brahma-faring. DN-a iii.835 explains assāsa by tuṭṭhi, joy, and somanassa, happiness. ³ From here to middle of Kd 6.31.12 = MN i.378f., in connection with Upāli the householder. ⁴ Stock; as at Kd 1.7.10. ⁵ As at MN i.379, AN iv.185.

the Lord said to me: 'Now, Siha, make a proper investigation ... like yourself.' For if, Lord, members of other sects had secured me as a disciple, they would have paraded a banner all round Vesālī, saying: 'Siha, the general, has joined our discipleship.' But then the Lord spoke to me thus: 'Now, Siha, make a proper investigation ... like yourself.' So I, Lord, go for a second time to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts."

"For a long time, Siha, your family¹ has been a well-spring² to the Nigaṇṭhas. You will bethink you to give alms to those who approach you?"

"I, Lord, am even exceedingly pleased, satisfied with that which the Lord said to me: 'For a long time, Siha, your family ... those who approach you? I have heard, Lord: The recluse Gotama speaks thus: 'Gifts should be given to me only, not to others should gifts be given; gifts should be given to my disciples only, not to the disciples of others should gifts be given. What is given to me is alone of great fruit, what is given to others is not of great fruit; what is given to my disciples is alone of great fruit, what is given to the disciples of others is not of great fruit.' But then the Lord urged upon me giving to the Nigaṇṭhas too. Indeed, Lord, we shall know the right time for that. So I, Lord, go for a third time to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts."

Then the Lord talked a progressive talk³ to Siha, the general, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven; he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of Siha, the general, was ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves

¹ kula, explained by nivesana, a dwelling, at Vin-a 1097, MN-a iii.89. ² opānabhūta. See Dialogues of the Buddha i.177, n. 3 for further references. ³ As at Kd 1.7.5-Kd 1.7.6.

4.324 discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Sīha, the general, that “whatever is of the nature to uprise all that is of the nature to stop”. Then Sīha, the general, as one who¹ had seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, who had crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, who had attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord²: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Sīha, the general, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then Sīha, the general, enjoined a certain man, saying: “Go, good fellow, find out if there is meat to hand.”³ Then Sīha, the general, towards the end of that night having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of Sīha, the general; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

3.1.13 Now at that time many Nigaṇṭhas, waving their arms, were moaning⁴ from carriage road⁵ to carriage road, from cross road⁶ to cross road in Vesālī: “Today a fat beast,⁷ killed by Sīha, the general, is made into a meal for the recluse Gotama, the recluse Gotama makes use of this meat, knowing that it was killed on purpose (for him),⁸ that the deed was (done) for his sake.”⁹ Then a certain man approached Sīha, the general; having approached he whispered into Sīha, the general's ear:

¹ As at Kd 1.6.32. ² To here from Kd 6.31.10 = MN i.378. ³ As at Vin 1.217 (above, Kd 6.23.2). ⁴ kandanti. ⁵ Defined at Vin 4.271 (BD 3.268). ⁶ Defined at Vin 4.271 (BD 3.268). ⁷ pasu, meaning uncertain, but not necessarily an animal of the cow-tribe. AN-a iv.102 says: “a fat beast with a large body such as an elk or buffalo or pig”. Vin-a 363 says of pasuka that all four-footed animals beginning with the elephant should be called pasuka. ⁸ Cf. Ja ii.262: the Telovāda-jātaka was spoken concerning Sīha. ⁹ paṭicchakamma.

“Please, honoured sir, you should know that many of these Ni-gaṇṭhas, waying their arms, are moaning from carriage road to carriage road, from cross road to cross road in Vesālī:

“Today a fat beast ... the deed was (done) for his sake’.”

“Enough, master, for a long time now these venerable ones have been desiring dispraise of the awakened one, have been desiring dispraise of dhamma, have been desiring dispraise of the Order. But these venerable ones, bad, vain, lying, do not harm this Lord because they are misrepresenting him by what is not fact—why, even we, for the sake of our livelihood, would not intentionally deprive a living thing of life.”¹

Then Siha, the general, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Siha, the general, with talk on dhamma as he was sitting down at a respectful distance, rising from his seat, departed.² Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one should not knowingly make use of meat killed on purpose (for one). Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, fish and meat that are quite pure in three respects: if they are not seen, heard, suspected (to have been killed on purpose for a monk).”³

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc 61. ² To here from Kd 6.31.1 = AN iv.179. ³ Cf. Vin 3.172 (BD 1.298) where Devadatta, wanting a schism, tries to make the Lord say that monks should eat no fish or meat. But Gotama answers him that fish and meat are “pure” if they have the three points which are also mentioned above. Macchamamsa is I think not “the flesh of fish” (as at GS iv.130, n. 1) but “fish and meat”. The story leading up to this allowance is concerned with meat; and many instances show that monks ate this without incurring criticism or blame.

ALLOWANCE FOR A PLACE FOR WHAT IS ALLOWABLE

6:32.1 Now at that time Vesālī was well off for food, crops were good, alms-food was easy to obtain, and it was easy to keep oneself going by gleaning and by favour. Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Those things which were allowed by me to monks when food was scarce, crops bad, and almsfood difficult to obtain: what was cured indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself¹; receiving (formally) what was picked up²; what was taken back from there³; what was accepted before a meal⁴; what grows in a wood, what grows in a lotus-tank⁵—do the monks still make use of these things today?”

Then the Lord, arising from his meditation towards evening, addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Those things which were allowed by me to monks when food was scarce ... do the monks still make use of these things today?”

“They make use of them, Lord.”

5:32.2 Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Those things, monks, allowed by me to monks when food was scarce, crops bad and almsfood difficult to obtain: what was cured indoors ... what grows in a lotus-tank—these things I object to from this day forth. Monks you should not make use of what is cured indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by yourselves; of (formally) receiving what is picked up (by you). Whoever should make use of (any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor should you, monks, having eaten, being satisfied, make use of food that is not left over if it is brought back from there; if it is accepted before a meal; if it grows in a wood, grows in a lotus-tank. Whoever should make use of (any of these things) should be dealt with according to the rule.”⁶

6:33.1 Now at that time country people, having loaded much salt and oil, and husked rice and solid food into wagons,⁷ having made an enclosure for the wagons in a porch outside a monastery, waited, thinking: “When our turn comes, then we will make a meal,”¹ but a great cloud came up. Then these people approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

¹ Kd 6.17.7. ² Kd 6.17.9. ³ Kd 6.18.4. ⁴ Kd 6.19.2. ⁵ Kd 6.20.4. ⁶ Bu-Pc 35.

⁷ As at Kd 6.24.1, Kd 6.34.17.

“Now, honoured Ānanda, having loaded much salt ... solid food into wagons, they are standing (there), but a great cloud has come up. What line of conduct, honoured Ānanda, should be followed by us?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord.

“Well then, Ānanda, the Order having agreed upon a place for what is allowable² near³ a dwelling-place: a dwelling-place or a curved house or a long house or a mansion or a cave,⁴ let there be kept⁵ there whatever the Order desires. And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon such and such a dwelling-place as a place for what is allowable. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon such and such a dwelling-place as a place for what is allowable. If the agreement on such and such a dwelling-place as a place for what is allowable is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such a dwelling-

¹ As at Kd 6.24.1, Kd 6.34.17. ² kappiyabhūmi. The commentary does not explain this word, but in commenting on the three kinds of places allowed at the end of Kd 6.33.4, Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1098f., uses the word kappiyakuṭī, hut for what is allowable. It seems probable that the kappiyabhūmi was a place for doing certain operations some of which were allowable only in times of scarcity: cooking for oneself, cooking indoors and curing indoors. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1099 appears to connect these with a kappiyabhūmi. It should however be noticed that at Kd 3.5.9 the “kitchen” which a lay follower may build for himself replaces the kappiyakuṭī which he may build for an Order or a member of it at Kd 3.5.6. For in normal times monks did not cook, and hence a place for doing allowable operations (of this nature) would be superfluous. A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p. 260 calls kappiyabhūmi an “outhouse site”. ³ paccantima. Vin-a 1098 says this is only an expression. ⁴ For these five “abodes” cf. above, Kd 1.30.4 and notes. ⁵ vāsetu.

place is agreed upon by the Order as a place for what is allowable. Therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

6:33:3
Now at that time the people boiled conjeys, boiled rice, prepared soups, cut up meats, chopped wood, just there at a place for what was allowable and which had been agreed upon. As the Lord was getting up at the end of the night towards dawn he heard a loud noise, a great noise, a noise (like) the cawing of crows,¹ and hearing it, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “What, Ānanda, is this loud noise, this great noise, this noise (like) the cawing of crows?”

5:33:4
4:32:8
“At present, Lord, people boil conjeys ... chop sticks just there at a place for what is allowable and which has been agreed upon. It is this loud noise, great noise, noise (like) the cawing of crows that the Lord (hears).”² Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one should not make use of a place for what is allowable that has been agreed upon.³ Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, three places for what is allowable: that depending upon a proclamation,⁴ that connected with what is fortuitous,¹ that (given by) a householder.”²

¹ = Vin 4.82. ² so eso bhagavā uccāsaddo ... kākoravasaddo. One would have expected bhante here instead of bhagavā, and the sentence then to be translated: it is this, Lord, that is the loud noise ... ³ Presumably there is the risk of being in the lay-people’s way and also of being disturbed by the noise they make. ⁴ ussāvanantika. Ussāvana is not a proclamation in a technical sense and has nothing to do with proceedings at formal acts of the Order. But Buddhaghosa explains, Vin-a 1098, that having made all preparations with pillars, walls and stones, the people utter the phrase (vācam nicchārenti) “We are making a kappiyakuṭi”. The two Commentaries which he quotes also mention a kappiyakuṭi as being spoken about or resolved upon. Antika is used in the same sense as above at Kd 7.1.7.

Now at that time the venerable Yasoja³ came to be ill. Medicines were conveyed for him. Monks put these outside, but vermin ate them and also thieves carried them off.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make use of a place for what is allowable⁵ and which has been agreed upon. I allow four places for what is allowable: that depending upon a proclamation, ¹ gonisādika. Cf. gonisādi at Vin 3.46, where a village arranged “fortuitously” comes into the definition of village. Gonisādi is not an ox-stall (Vinaya Texts ii.121). Vin-a 298 explains that as two or three cows sit down here and there, so, having built two or three houses, they are arranged here and there. The idea is that something is left to a haphazard element. Vin-a 1099 explains that there are two kinds of gonisādika: one of the monastery (type), one of the dwelling-place. Wherever neither the monastery itself is fenced in nor the lodgings, this is the monastery-type of what is “fortuitous”. Wherever all or some of the lodgings are fenced in but not the monastery, this is the dwelling-place type. So in both kinds the non-fencing in of the monastery is a criterion. The commentary does not say which kind is intended here; perhaps both are. ² gahapati. Vin-a 1099 says, “people having built a residence say, ‘we are giving a kappiyakutl, make use of it’—this is called gahapati. It means this too if they say, ‘We are giving (something) to build a kappiyakuṭi’”. Vin-a on this whole passage uses kappiyakuṭi and never kappiya-bhūmi. Cf. kappiyakuṭiyo which, among other things, Anāthapiṇḍika caused to be built in the Jeta Grove, at Vin 2.159, and the kappiyakuṭi which a lay disciple might cause to be built for an Order, at Vin 1.139 (above, BD 4.186). ³ Verses at Thag 243–Thag 245. There is a story about five hundred monks with Yasoja at their head at Ud 24–Ud 27. The lord dismissed them for making a great noise; they spent the rains in earnest endeavour and realised the three knowledges; they were then able to spend a whole night in as concentrated meditation as the Lord himself. Vin-a 1098 says “At the conclusion of the Kapilasutta he (Yasoja) was the chief person of the five hundred who had gone forth”. Snp-a i.312, Dh-p-a iv.45 call these five hundred “fishermen’s sons”. See Dh-p-a iv.37ff. (Kapilamacchavatthu), Snp-a i.305ff. (both of which tell about the golden fish, Kapila), Ud-a 179. Psalms of the Bretheren, p.166 for the circumstances in which the Kapilasutta was spoken to Yasoja. This Sutta is referred to at Dh-p-a iv.42 as being in the Suttanipāta. Kapilasutta is there (Snp p. 49) a variant reading for Dhammacariyasutta, but the Commentary (Snp-a i.312) refers to it as Kapilasutta. ⁴ As at Kd 6.17.7. ⁵ This paragraph probably refers to allowable medicines. See too Vin-a 1101 which refers to sappi, ghee, which was a medicine.

that connected with what is fortuitous, that given by a householder, that which is agreed upon.”

Told is the Twenty-fourth Portion for Repeating

THE STORY OF THE HOUSEHOLDER MEṄḌAKA

634.1 Now at that time the householder Meṅḍaka¹ lived in the town of Bhaddiya.² He came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: having washed his head, having had a granary swept, he sat down just outside the door, and a shower of grain, having fallen down through the air, filled the granary. His wife³ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: having sat down beside only one bowl of the capacity of an *ālḥaka*⁴ and one helping of curry and condiments, she served food⁵ to slaves, workmen and servants⁶; not until she got up was it exhausted. His son⁷ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: having taken hold of only one purse containing a thousand,¹ he gave six months' wages to (each) slave, workman and servant; not until he removed his hand was it² exhausted.

4.330
¹ Father of Dhanañjaya, who was Visākhā's father. At Dhp-a i.384 Meṅḍaka is called “householder”, at Dhp-a i.385, Vism 383 “merchant”, seṭṭhi, and he and his wife, son, daughter-in-law and slave are said to be five people of great merit. His story is told in detail at Dhp-a iii.363ff. Cf. Dhp-a iv.203, Dhp-a iv.217. According to Dhp-a iii.363 the Dhammapada verse (252) was spoken by the Lord while he was staying in the Jātiyā Grove at Bhaddiya concerning Meṅḍaka. ² In the Aṅga kingdom. ³ Her name was Candapadumā (because she came to have the moon and the lotus represented on the palms of her hands and the soles of her feet), Dhp-a i.385, Dhp-a iii.363; or Candapadumasirī at Vism 383. Her meritorious act is noticed at Dhp-a iii.369. ⁴ ālḥakathālikā. See BD 1.103, n. 1. ⁵ bhatta can also mean rice, the staple dish, but here in all likelihood meaning food, for probably no implication that she served rice without the curry and condiments is intended. ⁶ dāsa-kammakara-porisā. Same compound at AN i.145, AN i.206, AN ii.78, AN iii.45 (puttadārādāsa-), AN iii.260. AN-a ii.241 explains as “slaves as well as workmen earning a daily wage of food, and people living in dependence on (one)”, jīvamānapurisā. See definitions of “slave” and “workman” at BD 3.180. ⁷ Called Dhanañjaya the merchant, seṭṭhi, at Dhp-a i.386ff., Dhp-a iii.363, Vism 383, and Meṅḍaka's eldest son at Dhp-a i.385. His psychic power is referred to at Dhp-a iii.370. He was lent by Bimbisāra to Pasenadi; and the latter built Sāketa to house Dhanañjaya's retinue during the night's halt on the way to Sāvattḥī, Dhp-a i.386f. Dhanañjaya was the father of Visākhā and of her youngest sister, Sujātā, in respect of whom the Sujāta-Jātaka Ja 269 was told.

His daughter-in-law³ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power; having sat down beside only one basket of the capacity of four *doṇas*⁴ she gave six months' food⁵ to (each) slave, workman and servant; not until she got up was it exhausted. His slave⁶ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: when he ploughed with one ploughshare seven furrows came from (it).⁷

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha heard: "They say that the householder Meṇḍaka is living in our kingdom in the town of Bhaddiya. He has this kind of eminence in psychic power ... (as in Kd 6.34.1, Kd 6.34.2) ... when he ploughs with one ploughshare seven furrows come from (it)."

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha addressed a certain chief minister who was concerned with all the affairs,⁸ saying: "It is said, my good man,⁹ that the householder Meṇḍaka is living in our kingdom in the town of Bhaddiya; he has this kind of psychic power: having washed his head ... seven furrows come from (it). Go along, my good man, and find out. When you have seen, it will be the same as if I myself saw."

"So be it, your majesty", and that chief minister, having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, marched forth¹⁰ for Bhaddiya with a four-winged army.¹¹

In due course he approached Bhaddiya and Meṇḍaka the house-

¹ The word kahāpaṇa supplied at Dhp-a iii.370. ² I.e., the contents of the purse.

³ Called Sumanādevī at Dhp-a i.384, Sumanadevī at Dhp-a iii.363, Vism 383. She was Dhanañjaya's chief wife, aggamahesi, Dhp-a i.384, and Visākhā's mother, SN-a i.148. Her act of psychic power referred to at Dhp-a iii.370. ⁴ A measure of capacity, generally equivalent to four *āḷhaka*s, see BD 1.103, n.

⁵ bhatta, see above, BD 4.329, n. 7. ⁶ Called Puṇṇa at Dhp-a i.385, Dhp-a iii.363, Vism 383. His psychic gift referred to at Dhp-a iii.370. ⁷ According to Dhp-a iii.370 one in the middle and three at each side.

⁸ sabbatthaka mahāmatta as at Vin 3.249. ⁹ bhaṇe, as at Vin 3.249 where Bimbisāra is again recorded to be addressing a chief minister concerned with all the affairs. Bhaṇe is a common mode of address from a superior to an inferior.

¹⁰ pāyāsi. Cf. payāta at Vin 4.105. ¹¹ Elephants, horses, chariots and infantry. See definition of army at Vin 4.105; and BD 2.375, n. 3.

holder; having approached he spoke thus to Menḍaka the householder: “Now I, householder, have been enjoined by the King, saying: ‘It is said, my good man, that the householder Menḍaka is living in our kingdom ... When you have seen, it will be the same as if I myself saw.’ Let us see, householder, your eminence in psychic power.” Then the householder Menḍaka, having washed his head, having had a granary swept, sat down outside the door, and a shower of grain, having fallen down through the air, filled the granary. “Your eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your wife’s eminence in psychic power.”

Then the householder Menḍaka enjoined his wife, saying: “Well now, serve this four-winged army with food.” Then the wife of Menḍaka the householder, having sat down beside only one bowl of the capacity of an ālhaka and one helping of curry and condiments, served food to the four-winged army; not until she got up was it exhausted. “Your wife’s eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your son’s eminence in psychic power.”

Then the householder Menḍaka enjoined his son, saying: “Well now, my dear, give this four-winged army six months’ wages.” Then the son of Menḍaka the householder, having taken hold of only one purse containing a thousand, gave the four-winged army six months’ wages; not until he removed his hand was it exhausted. “Your son’s eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your daughter-in-law’s eminence in psychic power.”

Then Menḍaka the householder enjoined his daughter-in-law, saying: “Well now, give this four-winged army six months’ food.” Then the daughter-in-law of Menḍaka the householder, having sat down beside only one basket of the capacity of four doṇas, gave six months’ food to the four-winged army; not until she got up was it exhausted. “Your daughter-in-law’s eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your slave’s eminence in psychic power.”

“Our slave’s eminence in psychic power, sir,¹ can be seen in the field.”

¹ sāmi.

“Enough, householder, your slave’s eminence in psychic power has been seen.”

Then that chief minister went back again to Rājagaha with the four-winged army, and approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, he told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.

Then the Lord, having stayed in Vesālī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Bhaddiya with the large Order of monks, together with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Bhaddiya. The Lord stayed there in Bhaddiya in the Jātiyā Grove.¹

Then the householder Meṇḍaka heard: “Verily,² the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, who has gone forth from a Sakyan family, has reached Bhaddiya and is staying at Bhaddiya in the Jātiyā Grove. A lovely reputation has gone forth concerning the Lord Gotama, thus: he is indeed Lord, perfected one, fully awakened one, endowed with knowledge and conduct, well-farer, knower of the worlds, unrivalled charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and mankind, the awakened one, the Lord. Having realised by his own super-knowledges, he makes known this world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, a race with recluses and brahmins, with devas and men. He teaches dhamma, lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle and lovely at the ending. He explains with the spirit and the letter the Brahmā-life completely fulfilled and wholly pure. Good indeed it were to see perfected ones like this.”

Then the householder Meṇḍaka, having had many magnificent vehicles harnessed,³ having mounted a magnificent vehicle, went off with the magnificent vehicles from Bhaddiya to see the Lord. But many members of (other) sects⁴ saw the householder Meṇḍaka coming in the distance, and seeing him they spoke thus to the householder Meṇḍaka: “Where are you going, householder?”

¹ Mentioned at Vin 1.189f., Vin 3.37; AN iii.36. ² To end of Kd 6.34.11 is stock and recurs at e.g. Vin 1.35, Vin 1.245, Vin 3.1. DN i.87. For notes on above passage, see BD 1.1ff. ³ As in Kd 6.30.1, Kd 6.30.3. ⁴ A highly compressed version of the following incidents occurs at Dhp-a iii.374f.

“I am going, honoured sirs, to see the Lord, the recluse Gotama.”

“But how can you, householder, being one who asserts an ought-to-be-done,¹ go along to see the recluse Gotama who asserts an ought-not-to-be-done? For, householder, the recluse Gotama asserts an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done and in this he trains disciples.”

Then it occurred to the householder Meṇḍaka: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, a perfected one, a fully awakened one² inasmuch as these members of (other) sects are jealous of him,” and having gone by vehicle as far as the ground was (suitable) for a vehicle, having alighted from the vehicle, he approached the Lord on foot; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As Meṇḍaka the householder was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk³ to him, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... Then the householder Meṇḍaka, as one who had ... attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord!⁴ ... May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts; Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then the householder Meṇḍaka, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then Meṇḍaka the householder towards the end of that night having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the householder Meṇḍaka; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

¹ As in Kd 6.31.2. ² As in Kd 6.31.1. ³ As in Kd 6.31.12. ⁴ Stock, as at Kd 1.7.10; Kd 6.31.10.

Then the wife and son and daughter-in-law and slave of the householder Meṇḍaka approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say talk on giving ... Then these as ones who had ... attained without another's help to full confidence in the teacher's instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: "Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! ... We, Lord, are going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept us as lay-followers going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts."

Then the householder Meṇḍaka, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous food, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Meṇḍaka the householder spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, for as long as the Lord stays at Bhaddiya, for so long will I (supply) with perpetual food the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head." Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the householder Meṇḍaka with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

ALLOWANCE FOR FIVE DAIRY PRODUCTS, ETC.

Then the Lord, having stayed at Bhaddiya for as long as he found suiting, without asking the householder Meṇḍaka (for permission)¹ set out on tour for Aṅguttarāpa² together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Then Meṇḍaka the householder heard: “They say that the Lord is setting out on tour for Aṅguttarāpa together with a large Order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks.” Then Meṇḍaka the householder enjoined slaves and workmen saying: “Well now, my good men, having loaded much salt and oil and husked rice and solid food into wagons,¹ come along, and let there come along twelve hundred and fifty cowherds bringing twelve hundred and fifty milch cows. Wherever we see the Lord there will we offer him fresh milk.”

¹ anāpucchā, not asking (for permission) is defined, at Vin 4.343, by anapaloketvā, not having obtained permission, while this is defined at Vin 4.226, Vin 4.232, Vin 4.316 by anāpucchā. ² An Aṅga country north of the river Mahī (MN-a iii.34, Snp-a 437). Mentioned at Snp p.102, MN i.359, MN i.447, Dh-p a iii.363.

Then Meṇḍaka the householder met the Lord on a wilderness road. Then Meṇḍaka the householder approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, Meṇḍaka the householder spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Meṇḍaka the householder, having understood the Lord’s consent, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then Meṇḍaka the householder, towards the end of that night having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.”

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the food distribution of Meṇḍaka the householder; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then Meṇḍaka the householder enjoined the twelve hundred and fifty cowherds, saying: “Well now, my good men, let each one (of you) having each taken a milch cow, look after a monk, and we will offer them fresh milk.” Then Meṇḍaka the householder with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, and (offered² them) fresh milk. The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept the milk. (The Lord said:) “Accept it, monks, make use of it.”

¹ As at Kd 6.24.1; Kd 6.33.1. ² I think this verb, bhojeti (literally to make to eat, to feed, so to offer, to regale, to entertain with), which Meṇḍaka has already used, should be inserted here. For the monks refused the milk until told, as recorded, to accept it. So long as they refused it, it cannot be said that they were “served and satisfied with” it.

Then Meṇḍaka the householder, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft and with fresh milk, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance Meṇḍaka the householder spoke thus to the Lord:

“There are, Lord, wilderness roads with little water, with little food¹; it is not easy to go along them without provisions for the journey.² It were good, Lord, if the Lord allowed monks provisions for the journey.” Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the householder Meṇḍaka with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, five products of the cow: milk, curds, butter-milk, butter, ghee. There are, monks, wilderness roads with little water, with little food; it is not easy to go along them without provisions for the journey. I allow you, monks, to look about for provisions for a journey: husked rice for him who has need of husked rice; kidney-beans for him who has need of kidney-beans; beans for him who has need of beans; salt for him who has need of salt; sugar for him who has need of sugar; oil for him who has need of oil; ghee for him who has need of ghee. There are, monks, people who have faith and are believing; these deposit gold (coins)³ in the hands of those who make things allowable,⁴ saying: ‘By means of this give the master that which is allowable.’ I allow you, monks, thereupon⁵ to consent to that which is allowable. But this, monks, I do not say:

¹ To these kinds of wilds, kantāra, three others are added at Ja i.99 (which gives a short explanation of each), SN-a ii.103: cora°, vāḷa°, amanussa°. See BD 1.147, n. 1.

² As at Vin 1.270. Cf. Vin 4.79f. ³ hirañña, see BD 1.28, n. ⁴ kappiyakāraka, see Kd 6.17.8. ⁵ tato.

that by any method¹ may gold and silver² be consented to, may be looked about for.”

THE STORY OF KENIYA THE MATTED-HAIR ASCETIC

6:35:1 Then the Lord, walking on tour,³ in due course arrived at Āpaṇa.⁴
4:33:2 The matted hair ascetic Keniya⁵ heard: “Verily, the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, who has gone forth from a Sakyan family, has reached Āpaṇa and is staying in Āpaṇa. A lovely reputation⁶ has gone forth concerning the Lord Gotama, thus: ... He explains with the spirit and the letter the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled and wholly pure. Good indeed it were to see perfected ones like this.” Then it occurred to Keniya the matted hair ascetic: “Now, what could I get conveyed to the recluse Gotama?”

6:35:2 Then it occurred to Keniya the matted hair ascetic: “Now, those who were⁷ formerly seers,⁸ of the brahmins, makers of mantras,⁸ preservers of mantras, whose ancient mantras as sung, taught,⁹ and composed the brahmins of today still sing, still speak; they still speak what was spoken, they still teach what was taught, that is to say (by)

¹ pariyāya, perhaps here “in any circumstances”. ² jātarūparajata. See BD 1.28, n.; BD 2.100, n. 2, BD 2.102, n. 1. If a monk takes gold and silver or gets another to do so for him or consents to its being kept in deposit for him, he incurs a Nissaggiya offence (No.18). ³ From here to end of Kd 6.35.5, cf. Snp 102ff. = MN ii.146ff. ⁴ This is called a market town, nigama, of Aṅga at SN v.225; a market town of Aṅguttarāpa at Snp 103, MN i.359, MN i.447. Āpaṇa was so named because it had a quantity of shops, Snp-a ii.440, MN-a iii.37. ⁵ Spelt Keniya at Snp p.103, MN-a iii.399. He is mentioned at Tha-ap 318. According to Snp-a 440, MN-a iii.399 he was a very wealthy (mahāsāla) brahmin who became a jaṭila (matted hair) ascetic so as to protect his wealth, and he was also the protector of five thousand families; but although he wore the yellow robes by day, by night he indulged in pleasures of the senses. At DN-a i.270 he is given as an example, among eight types of ascetics, of the type who supports wife and children (sa-puttabhāriya). See also Dh-p-a i.323, Ud-a 241. ⁶ As above, BD 4.332. ⁷ Down to the name Bhagu = DN i.104, DN i.238, DN i.242; AN iii.224, DN i.229; MN ii.169, DN i.200. ⁸ I.e. the Vedas. ⁹ pavutta, explained at DN-a 273 as “spoken for others,” taught (vācīta, made to speak).

Aṭṭhaka,¹ Vāmaka,² Vāmadeva,³ Vessāmitta, Yamataggi,⁴ Angirasa, Bhāradvāja, Vāseṭṭha, Kassapa,⁵ Bhagu—these abstaining from food at night, restrained from eating at the wrong time,⁶ (yet) consented to such things as drinks.

“The recluse Gotama also abstains from food at night and is restrained from eating at the wrong time⁷; the recluse Gotama also is worthy⁸ to consent to such things as drinks,” and having had abundant drinks prepared, having had them taken on carrying-poles,⁹ he approached the Lord; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy with the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, Keniya the matted hair ascetic spoke thus to the Lord: “Let the revered Gotama accept drink from me.”

“Well then, Keniya, give it to the monks.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept it. (The Lord said:) “Accept it, monks, make use of it.”

Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with abundant drinks sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had washed his hand¹⁰ and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. Then as Keniya the matted hair ascetic was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted him with talk on dhamma. Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, spoke thus to the Lord: “May the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me on the morrow.”

¹ On the names of these ṛṣis or seers, see Vinaya Texts ii.130, n. 3. Aṭṭhaka is usually identified with Aṣṭaka, mentioned as author of Ṛg Veda 10.104. ² Cf. Ṛg Veda 10.99. ³ Cf. Ṛg Veda 4.26. ⁴ Under Jamadagni in Vedic Index he is connected with Ṛg Veda 362, Ṛg Veda 318; Ṛg Veda 8101, Ṛg Veda 88; Ṛg Veda 962, Ṛg Veda 924; Ṛg Veda 965, Ṛg Veda 925. ⁵ Cf. Ṛg Veda 9.114.2. ⁶ “Wrong time” for eating defined at Vin 4.86 as “after noon has passed until sunrise”. ⁷ Cf. DN i.5. ⁸ arahati samaṇo pi Gotamo. The meaning is that he is worthy enough to confer a boon on the giver of the things which he consents to accept. ⁹ kāja, cf. MN iii.148. ¹⁰ As at Kd 6.24.4; Kd 6.36.8.

“But, Keniya, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and you are in favour of the brahmins.” Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic spoke a second time to the Lord thus: “Although, good Gotama, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and I am in favour of the brahmins, (yet) may the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me on the morrow.”

“But, Keniya, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and you are in favour of the brahmins.” Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic spoke a third time to the Lord thus:

“Although, good Gotama, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and I am in favour of the brahmins, (yet) may the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me on the morrow.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat departed.

Then the Lord, on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, eight (kinds of) drinks¹: mango drink,² rose-apple drink, plantain³ drink, banana⁴ drink, honey drink, grape drink, edible lotus root drink,⁵ *phārusaka*⁶ drink. I allow you, monks, the juice of all fruits except the juice of the fruit of corn.¹ I allow you, monks, the juice of all leaves except vegetable² juice. I allow you, monks, the juice of all flowers except liquorice³ juice. I allow you, monks, sugarcane juice.”⁴

¹ At Mnd 372 two lists of eight drinks each are given, the first being the same as this Vinaya list. These drinks occur in a controverted point at Kv 552. ² Made from raw or cooked mangoes. Vin-a 1101.

³ coca, which may however be coconut or cinnamon. But Vin-a 1102 = Nd-a ii.396 declare this to be a drink made from the fruit of bananas (or plantains, kadali) which have kernels, aṭṭhika (stone or kernel of a fruit). The meaning therefore is not clear, and is further confused by the next drink, moca, which Vin-a 1102 = Nd-a ii.396 say is made of plantain fruits without kernels, anaṭṭhika. See Vinaya Texts ii.132, n. ⁴ moca, Musa sapientum. ⁵ sāluka-pāna. Vin-a 1102 = Nd-a ii.396 say it is a drink that is made having crushed the edible roots of the red and the blue lotuses and so on. ⁶ Vinaya Texts ii.133, n. 2 says “this is Grewia Asiatica of Linnaeus”, Monier Williams (under parūsha(ka)) adding “from the berries of which a cooling beverage is prepared”. Phārusaka occurs also at Dhp-a iii.316.

Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, towards the end of that night having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared in his own hermitage,⁵ had the time announced to the Lord saying: “It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the hermitage of Keniya the matted hair ascetic; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl.

As Keniya the matted hair ascetic was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord thanked him in these verses:

“Sacrifices⁶ are chief in fire-worship,⁷
Sāvitrī⁸ chief of (Vedic) metres,

¹ Vin-a 1102 refers to the seven kinds of grain or corn, dhañña, which probably are those enumerated at Vin 4.264, Nd-a ii.396. See BD 1.83, n. 4. Toddy and arrack are prepared from grain. The use of toddy was one of the ten points not allowed by the Council of Vesālī, Vin 2.301. ² ḍāka (= Sanskrit sāka), vegetable, herb, potherb. Vin-a 1102 explains as cooked ḍāka. See below, Kd 6.36.8 where all kinds of vegetables are allowed. ³ madhuka. This is the tree Bassia latifolia. ⁴ Vin-a 1103 says “in allowing these drinks (mango drink and so on), these four (kinds of) juices are allowed as well”. ⁵ Snp p.104 here breaks off the account, although it adds, before going on to the Sela story, that Keniya’s friends, servants and relations helped him in all kinds of ways in the preparation of the meal. Snp p.110 then takes up the account again, as Vinaya above, and thus includes the two verses appearing below. The Sutta Nipāta version naturally does not include the “allowances” of Kd 6.35.6.

⁶ These two verses = Snp 568–Snp 569. ⁷ The Jaṭilas were fire-worshippers. Yañña, sacrifice, became under Buddhist usage an alms-gift to an Order or to monks, a deyyadhamma, gift of faith, Cnd 523. ⁸ A Vedic metre. Cf. Snp 457, “three lines (pada) twenty-four syllables”. Snp-a ii.403 states that Sāvitrī in the discipline of the nobles would be: buddhaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi / dhammaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi / saṅghaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi.

A king is chief of men,
the ocean chief of waters,

“The moon is chief of the lamps of night,¹ the sun chief of luminaries,²
For those giving alms, desiring merit, the Order is indeed the chief.”

Then the Lord, having thanked Keniya the matted hair ascetic in these verses, rising from his seat, departed.

THE STORY ROJA THE MALLA

Then the Lord, having stayed in Āpaṇa for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Kusinārā with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. The Mallas of Kusinārā heard: “It is said that the Lord is coming to Kusinārā³ together with a large Order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks.” These made a compact that, ‘Whoever does not go out to meet the Lord is fined five hundred’.⁴ Now at that time Roja the Malla was a friend of the venerable Ānanda.⁵ Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Kusinārā.

Then the Mallas of Kusinārā went out to meet the Lord. Then Roja the Malla, having gone out to meet the Lord approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, he stood at a respectful distance. As Roja the Malla was standing at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to him: “This is splendid of you, friend Roja, that you have come out to meet the Lord.”

¹ nakkhatta, usually meaning a constellation or lunar mansion. Snp-a ii.456 says, “According to the conjunction of the moon, so that from a sign, from its brightness (ālokakaraṇa) and from its gentleness one can say, “Today is Kattikā, today is Rohinī” (name of two months or lunar mansions) it is said “The moon is chief of the nakkhattas”.” ² tapataṃ = tapantānaṃ, of shining, of bright, of radiant (things).

³ One of the two capitals of the Malla country, the other being Pāvā. The Lord died at Kusinārā, and the Pāvēyyaka Mallas sent to claim their share of his relics (DN ii.165), showing that the Malla country was divided into two separate parts (see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names). ⁴ Doubtless kahāpaṇas. ⁵ As at Vin 1.296. The Vacchanakha-jātaka (Ja 235) is said to have been spoken concerning Roja.

“I, honoured Ānanda, am not much impressed by¹ the awakened one or dhamma or the Order, but a compact was made among the kinsfolk that whoever does not go out to meet the Lord is fined five hundred. It was only from fear of the kinsfolk’s compact that I, honoured Ānanda, went out to meet the Lord.” Then the venerable Ānanda was disappointed and thought: “How can this Roja the Malla speak thus?”

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this Roja the Malla is a distinguished, well-known man. Surely the faith² in this dhamma and discipline of well-known men like this is very efficacious.³ It were well, Lord, if the Lord acted in such a way that Roja the Malla could have faith in this dhamma and discipline.”

“But, Ānanda, it is not difficult for a Truthfinder (to do) that by which Roja the Malla could have faith in this dhamma and discipline.”

Then the Lord, having suffused Roja the Malla with a mind of love,⁴ rising from his seat, entered a dwelling-place. Then Roja the Malla, suffused by the Lord with a mind of love, even as young calves (follow) kine, so having approached dwelling-place after dwelling-place, cell after cell, he asked the monks: “Where, honoured sirs, is this Lord staying at present. the perfected one, the fully awakened one? For I long to see this Lord, perfected one, all awakened one.”⁵

“This,⁶ friend Roja, is his dwelling-place, the door is closed; having approached quietly, having entered the verandah¹ (but) without crossing it, having coughed, tap on the door-bolt.² The Lord will open the door to you.”

¹ bahukata. Vin-a 1103 says this means, “I have not come here out of respect for and belief in the awakened one and the rest” (i.e. dhamma and the Order). ² pasāda. This phrase is the same as that put into the mouth of Anāthapiṇḍika concerning Prince Jeta, Kd 16.4.10. ³ mahiddhiya. Here having no connection with psychic powers. Cf. iddha, effective, at Vin 4.50, Vin 4.54, Vin 4.313. ⁴ See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, What was the Original Gospel in Buddhism?, p. 92ff., Sakya, p. 222ff., Outlines, p. 30. Amity, mettā, is the first of the brahmavihāras. ⁵ As at MN ii.119, AN v.65; cf. DN i.89. ⁶ As at DN i.89, spoken by monks to Ambaṭṭha; MN ii.119, AN v.65 by monks to Pasenadi.

Then Roja the Malla, having quietly approached that dwelling-place with its closed door, having entered the verandah (but) not crossing it, having coughed, tapped on the bolt. The Lord opened the door. Then Roja the Malla, having entered the dwelling-place, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord talked a progressive talk³ to Roja the Malla as he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of Roja the Malla was ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Roja the Malla, that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop”. Then Roja the Malla, as one who had seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, who had crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, who had attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

“It were well, Lord, if the masters might receive the requisites of

¹ ālinda, terrace or verandah in front of the door of a dwelling-place. COOMARASWAMY questions this meaning (Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p.252) as used by GEIGER in Mahāvamsa translation, p.246. Geiger cites DN i.89 (=above passage) as evidence that ālinda “is the terrace before the house-door”. There is also the word pamukha meaning verandah as at Vin 4.45. But DN-a 252 = MN-a iii.351 explain ālinda by pamukha. Ālinda allowed at Vin 2.153, while at Vin 2.169 Visākḥā wanted to build a palace with an ālinda supported on pillars with elephant capitals (hatthinakha); in this passage therefore ālinda may have the meaning of a gallery or balcony.

² aggaḷa, bolt or crossbar, but explained at DN-a 252 = MN-a iii.351 by kavāta, i.e. the door itself, that which closes the aperture. ³ As at Vin 1.15.

robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick only from me, not from others.”

“But those, Roja, who with the knowledge of a learner with the vision of a learner have seen dhamma, as you have done, would also think: ‘Now indeed the masters should receive the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick only from us, not from others.’ Well then, Roja, they shall receive them from you as well as from others.”

Now at that time in Kusinārā a succession of meals of sumptuous foods came to be arranged.¹ Then because Roja the Malla did not obtain a turn,² he thought: “Suppose I were to look into the refectory and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?”³ Then Roja the Malla, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: vegetables⁴ and solid food (made) with flour.⁵ Then Roja the Malla approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

“Now, honoured Ānanda, it occurred to me because I did not obtain a turn: ‘Suppose I were to look into the refectory and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?’ So I, honoured Ānanda, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: vegetables and solid food (made) with flour. If I, honoured Ānanda, were to prepare vegetables

¹ As at Vin 1.57 (at Rājagaha), Vin 2.119, Vin 4.75 (at Vesālī). “Succession of meals” is bhatta-paṭipāti. Paṭipāti is succession, order; but “turn” (place in the succession) is the better English rendering in the next sentence above and at Vin 1.220 (above, BD 4.300). Cf. paṭipātiya, one after the other, successively, in order, at Vin 4.91.

² paṭipāti. ³ Cf. Kd 6.24.2–6.24.4. ⁴ ḍāka, as above in Kd 6.35.6. ⁵ piṭṭhakhādaniya. Pali-English Dictionary gives “‘flour-eatables’, i.e. pastry”. But we cannot assume that the only thing made with flour is pastry. Khādaniya has two meanings, the technical one of “solid food”, and the untechnical one of what may be eaten, edible. The definition of solid food, Khādaniya, at Vin 4.83 by the exclusion of soft foods and certain medicines raises the question whether in many cases where khādaniya occurs it should not be translated as “solid” food in preference to “edible”. Thus at Vin 1.215 we should get “solid food that is fruit” (or “fruit that is solid food”) and not “edible fruit”. Vin-a 1193 explains piṭṭhakhādaniya as piṭṭhamayakhādaniya, “solid food (or something edible) made with flour”.

and solid food (made) with flour, would the Lord accept them from me?”

“Well then, Roja, I will inquire of the Lord.”

Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, Ānanda, let him prepare them.” (Ānanda said:) “Well then, Roja, prepare them.” Then Roja the Malla towards the end of that night having had a quantity of vegetables and solid food (made) with flour prepared, brought them to the Lord, saying: “Lord, may the Lord accept from me vegetables and solid food (made) with flour.”

“Well then, Roja, give them to the monks.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept them. (The Lord said:) “Accept them, monks, make use of them.”

Then Roja the Malla, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with a quantity of vegetables and solid food (made) with flour, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had washed his hand¹ and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. The Lord, rising from his seat, departed, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Roja the Malla with talk on dhamma as he was sitting down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, all (kinds of) vegetables² and all (kinds of) solid food (made) with flour.”

THE STORY OF ONE GONE FORTH WHEN OLD

Then the Lord having stayed in Kusinārā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Ātumā³ together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Now at that time a certain (person), formerly a barber,¹ who had gone forth when old, was living in Ātumā. He had two boys, sweet-voiced,² intelligent,³ skilled, accomplished in their craft,⁴ in the barber's profession (as learnt from) their own teachers.⁵

¹ dhotahattha, as above, e.g. Kd 6.35.4. ² See Kd 6.35.6 where the juice of vegetables forms an exception to an “allowance”. Vin-a 1103 says “whatever is a vegetable, whether it is cooked or not with ghee”. ³ Mentioned also at DN ii.131.

Then that (man) who had gone forth when old⁶ heard: "They say that the Lord is coming to Ātumā together with a large Order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks". Then that (man) who had gone forth when old spoke thus to his boys: "It is said, my dears,⁷ that the Lord is coming to Ātumā together with a large Order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks. Do you go, my dears, ¹ vuḍḍhapabbajito nahāpitapubbo, identified by Buddhaghosa at DN-a 599 with the Subhadda mentioned at DN ii.162 who felt relief at the Lord's death. In neither the Dīgha Nikāya passage nor above is he called āyasmā, the venerable, and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names says that at the time of the Buddha's visit to Ātumā he had been a sāmaṇera. DN-a 599f. refers to the above Vinaya episode at some length. ² mañjuka. I see no reason to object, as does Vinaya Texts ii.140, n. 2, to Buddhaghosa's exegesis as madhuravacana, sweet-voiced. ³ paṭibhāneyyaka, explained at Vin-a 1103 as "endowed with paṭibhāna in their own craft". Here again Vinaya Texts ii.140, n. 3 objects to Buddhaghosa's exegesis, and translates as "skilled in discourse". Cf. AN i.25, paṭibhāneyyakānaṃ (of Radha), translated at GS i.21 as "of impromptu speakers". CHILDERS, besides giving "understanding, intelligence, wisdom; readiness or confidence of speech, promptitude, wit", refers to Ja i.60 and translates paṭibhāna as "skill", a rendering followed by RHYS DAVIDS in Buddhist Birth Stories, p.79. The whole Vinaya context above suggests the meaning of "persuasive". ⁴ At Vin 4.6 the barber's is placed among the "low crafts". ⁵ sake ācariyake. Cf. sakaṃ ācariyakam uggahetvā at DN ii.104. DN-a ii.556 explains as "the speech of their own teachers", attano ācariyavādānaṃ. ⁶ Vinaya Texts ii.140 now and henceforth calls him "dotard" on the grounds that "it is impossible to repeat this long phrase" (translated at Vinaya Texts ii.140 in the first instance as "a certain man who had entered the Order in his old age"), and that vuḍḍhapabbajita "connotes contempt, and even censure", thus justifying the translation "dotard". At AN iii.78 there are two not entirely disparate lists of things hard to attain by one gone forth in old age. But it would be against the whole spirit of Buddhism to censure or penalise anyone for not having entered the Order when young. ⁷ tāta, not tātā, although more than one person is being addressed, as pointed out at Vinaya Texts ii.141, n. 1. But tātā at DN-a 599 where this passage is quoted.

and taking a barber's equipment,¹ tour from house to house for nāti measures of offerings,² and collect salt and oil and husked rice and solid food, and when the Lord comes we will make him a conje drink."

"Very well, father," and these boys, having answered him who had gone forth when old in assent, taking a barber's equipment toured from house to house for nāti measures of offerings, collecting salt and oil and husked rice and solid food. Those people who, having seen these sweet-voiced, intelligent boys, but had not wanted to have (offerings) made, even they had them made, and having had them made, also gave much. So these boys collected much salt and oil and husked rice and solid food.

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Ātumā. The Lord stayed there in Ātumā in the House with the threshing-floor.³ Then he who had gone forth when old having had a quantity of conje prepared towards the end of that night, brought it to the Lord, saying: "Lord, may the Lord accept conje from me." Now Truthfinders (sometimes) ask knowing,⁴ and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask, knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask, knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truthfinders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal; there is bridge-breaking for Truthfinders in whatever does not belong to the goal. Awakened ones, Lords, question monks concerning two matters, either: "Shall we preach dhamma?" or, "Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?" Then the Lord spoke ¹ khurabhaṇḍa. That this is not "a barbers' lad" (Vinaya Texts ii.141) is made clear at Vin 2.134: "I allow a razor (khura), a whetstone (khurasilā), a razor-case (khurasipātikā), a piece of felt (namataka), a whole barber's equipment (sabba khurabhaṇḍa)." It is a shaving set, the outfit for a razor. ² nāḷiyāvāpakena. Vin-a 1103 says nāḷiyā ca āvāpakena ca, and adds that āvapaka is also wherever they offer (āvapanti), deposit what is received. On nāti see BD 1.12, n. 2; BD 1.103, n. 1. ³ Reading here and in Siamese edition bhūsāgāra. Sinhalese edition and DN ii.131 read bhusāgāra, as also Dictionary of Pali Proper Names under Bhusāgāra, but bhūsāgāra under Ātumā; cf. bhusāgāra at AN i.241. DN-a ii.569, AN-a ii.355 explain by khala-sālā, hall with a threshing-floor, which I follow. Bhūsāgāra would mean the House with the Ornaments. ⁴ As at Vin 1.59, Vin 1.158, Vin 3.6, etc.

thus to him who had gone forth when old:

“Where is this conje from, monk?” Then he who had gone forth when old told this matter to the Lord.

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not suitable, foolish man, it is not fitting, it is not becoming, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. For how can you, foolish man, one who has gone forth, cause (others) to take what is not allowable? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one who has gone forth should not make (others) take what is not allowable. Whoever should make (others) take (these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should one who was formerly a barber carry about a barber’s equipment. Whoever should carry it about, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Ātumā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvathī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvathī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvathī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time there was a great quantity of solid food that was fruit¹ at Sāvathī. Then it occurred to monks: “Now, what solid food that is fruit is allowed by the Lord, what is not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, all solid food that is fruit.”

Now at that time seeds belonging to an Order were sown on ground belonging to an individual, and seeds belonging to an individual were sown on ground belonging to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “When, monks, seeds belonging to an Order are sown on ground belonging to an individual, having given back a portion,¹ (the rest) may be made use of. When seeds belonging to an individual are sown on ground belonging to an Order, having given back a portion, (the rest) may be made use of.”

¹ phalakhādaniya. Cf. above, Kd 6.17.8, Kd 6.17.9; Kd 6.21.1, and cf. piṭṭhakhādaniya and note at above Kd 6.36.6.

ON THE FOUR GREAT REFERENCES

5.40.1 Now at that time scruples arose in the monks as to this and that occasion, thinking: “Now, what is permitted by the Lord? What is not permitted?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Whatever, monks, has not been objected to by me, saying: ‘This is not allowable’, if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, that is not allowable to you. Whatever, monks, has not been objected to by me, saying: ‘This is not allowable’, if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, that is allowable to you. And whatever, monks, has not been permitted by me, saying: ‘This is allowable’, if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, that is not allowable to you. Whatever, monks, has not been permitted by me, saying: ‘This is allowable if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, that is allowable to you.’”

5.40.2
4.348 Then it occurred to monks: “Now, is (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night² allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a short period,³ or it is not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during seven days⁴ allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a short period or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during life⁵ allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a short period or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during seven days allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during life allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during life allowable with (food that may be eaten) during seven days or is it not allowable?" They told this matter to the Lord.

¹ bhāgaṃ datvā. There is no justification for Vinaya Texts ii.143 “half the produce, O bhikkhus, you may have”. Vin-a 1103 says “having given a portion that is a tenth. This, they say, is an old practice in India, therefore having made ten shares, one share should be given to the owners of the ground”. So presumably if the Order is the owner it gets one share. ² yāmakālika, see BD 2.330, n. 1. These “foods” really refer to medicines. ³ yāvakālika, see BD 2.330, n1I. ⁴ sattāhakālika, see BD 2.330, n. 2. ⁵ yāvajīvika, see BD 2.330, n. 3.

He said: "Monks, (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night with (food that may be eaten) during a short period is allowable at the right time¹ on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable at the wrong time.² Monks, (food that may be eaten) during seven days with (food that may be eaten) during a short period is allowable at the right time on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable at the wrong time. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during life with (food that may be eaten) during a short period is allowable at the right time on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable at the wrong time. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during seven days with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night is allowable in a watch of the night on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable after the watch of the night is ended. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during life with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night is allowable in a watch of the night on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable after the watch of the night is ended. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during life with (food that may be eaten) during seven days is allowable for (the length of) seven days; it is not allowable after the seven days are ended."

The Section on Medicines: the Sixth

IN THIS SECTION THE ITEMS ARE ONE HUNDRED AND SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

In the autumn, also at the wrong time, tallow, roots, (they had need of) what was pounded off, of astringent decoctions, leaves, fruits, resin, salt, and dung, / chunam, sifter,³ and flesh, ointment, powder, ointment-box, all kinds,⁴ not covered,⁵ sticks, case for sticks, /

¹ Before noon from sunrise. ² After noon until sunrise, Vin 4.86, Vin 4.166.

³ Reading here cālinī, above cālanī. ⁴ Reading here ucca-parutā. ⁵ Reading here ucca-parutā.

A bag, strap at the edge, thread, oil for the head, and the nose, nose-spoon, and steam, a pipe, and a lid, a bag,¹ / Decoction of oil, and strong drink, too much, an ointment, a vessel,
 sweating, and all kinds of herbs, thereupon the great (sweating), hemp-water, /
 Water-vat, and blood, a horn, foot-unguent, foot-salve, lancet, and astringent (water), sesamum paste, a compress, /
 Piece of cloth, and mustard-powder, fumigation, and crystal, oil for the sore, linen bandage, and the irregular things, and what is (formally) received, / A (decoction of) dung, is making,
 and mud turned up by the plough, lye, urine and yellow myrobalan, perfumes, and a purgative, clarified, unprepared, prepared-unprepared, /
 Meat-broth, (mountain-) slope, monastery attendant, and for seven days,² sugar, kidney-bean, sour gruel, cooking for oneself, one may cook again,³ /
 He allowed it however,⁴ short of almsfood, and fruit, sesamum, solid food,
 before a meal, fever, and discharged, an ulcer, /
 And clyster-treatment and Suppi(yā),⁵ and indeed human flesh, elephants, horses, and a dog, a snake, lion, tiger, leopard, /
 And the flesh of bears (and) hyenas, and a turn, and conjei, a certain one who was young, sugar, Sunidha, rest-house, /
 And Ambapālī, the Licchavis, the Ganges, the Koṭi(gāma) talk on truths, killed on purpose,
 he objected when (they were) well off again for food, /
 A cloud, Yasoja, and Meṇḍaka, products of the cow, and provisions for a journey,
 Keni(ya), mango, rose-apple, plantain, banana, honey, grape, edible lotus root, / Phārusakas, vegetables, flour, the barber at Ātumā, fruit and seed at Sāvattthī, and On what occasion?, as to the right time.

¹ Reading thavi. Sinhalese edition reads yamakaththavī, double bag Kd 6.13.2.

² Sinhalese edition ārāmā satā pañcāhi, referring to the five hundred monastery attendants of Kd 6.15.4. ³ punā pace, replacing the punapakā of Kd 6.17.6.

⁴ punānuññāsi. ⁵ Reading Suppi, as below Koti and Keni.

7. KAṬHINA

ALLOWANCE FOR KAṬHINA

At that time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time as many as thirty monks of Pāvā,¹ all forest-dwellers, all almsmen, all wearers of rag-robes,² all wearers of the three robes,³ going to Sāvattḥī so as to see the Lord when the beginning of the rains was approaching, were unable to reach Sāvattḥī for the beginning of the rains; they entered upon the rains on the way, at Sāketa. They spent the rains

¹ tiṃsamattā Pāṭheyyakā bhikkhū, mentioned also at SN ii.187, where called Paveyyakā, and also described as sabbe sasamyojanā, all (still) with the fetters; it is said that they all became freed from the āsavas (cankers) with no substrate remaining after the Lord had given them a discourse on the incalculability of the beginning of this faring-on, anamataggāyaṃ saṃsāro, which is part of the Anamatagga-saṃyutta. This event is referred to at Vin-a 1106; and also at Dh-p-a ii.32 (called anamataggadhammadesanā), from which it appears that Dh-p 65 was uttered in connection with these monks. See also above, BD 4.31, n. 2 for their identification with the tiṃsamattā bhaddavaggiyā sahāyakā.

Dictionary of Pali Proper Names takes Pāveyyakā (also a variant reading at Vin 1.253) as the right one and says that it is the "name given to the inhabitants of Pāvā". Pāvā is mentioned at e.g. DN ii.162. At DN iii.207 it is called a city of the Mallas, the people being referred to as Pāveyyakā Mallā. According to Vin-a 1105 Pāṭheyya is a kingdom situated to the west of the Kosala country. See Vinaya Texts ii.146, n. ² Cf. Vin 3.230ff., where it is specifically stated in an "allowance" ascribed to Gotama that the first three of these types of monks may, if they so wish, come up to see the Lord. Cf. also MN iii.40ff. These three, combined with the monk who is tecīvariko, wearer of the three robes, occur at MN i.214; and cf. AN i.38. These four practices (aṅga) are explained in much detail at Vism 59ff. At AN ii.26 it is said that "among robes, rag-robes are trifling, easy to get, blameless", quoted at Vism 64. ³ Prescribed at Bu-NP 1. The three robes would be made of rags. See also Kd 8.12.

in a state of longing,¹ thinking: “The Lord is staying close² to us, six yojanas from here, but we are not getting a chance to see the Lord.”

Then these monks having, after the lapse of three months, kept the rains, after the Invitation³ had been carried out, while the god was raining, while waters were gathering, while swamps were forming,⁴ with drenched robes and in a state of weariness approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance.

Now it is the custom⁵ for awakened ones, for Lords to exchange friendly greetings with in-coming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to these monks:

“I hope, monks, that things went well with you, I hope you had enough to support life, I hope that, in unity, being on friendly terms and harmonious, you spent a comfortable rainy season and did not go short of almsfood?”

“Things did go well with us, Lord, we had enough to support life, Lord, and in unity we, Lord, being on friendly terms and harmonious, spent the rainy season⁶ and did not go short of almsfood. Here are we, Lord, as many as thirty monks of Pāvā, coming to Sāvattthī so as to see the Lord, (but) when the beginning of the rains was approaching, we were unable to reach Sāvattthī for the beginning of the rains; we entered on the rains on the way, at Sāketa. We spent the rains, Lord, in a state of longing for you, thinking: ‘The Lord is staying close to us, six yojanas from here, but we are not getting a chance to see the Lord.’ Then we, Lord, having, after the lapse of three months, kept the rains, and after the Invitation had been carried out, while the god was raining, while waters were gathering, while swamps were forming, with drenched robes and in a state of weariness came along on the journey.”

¹ ukkaṅṭhitarūpā. ² āsanneva, right near. ³ Pavāraṇā; see Kd 4; also BD 1.283, n. 5; GS iv.183, n. 3. ⁴ udakacikkhale. ⁵ Cf. Vin 3.88 (BD 1.154). ⁶ Vin-a 1106 says that on account of their longing to see the Lord, they did not say that they had spent a “comfortable” rainy season.

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given dhamma-talk¹ addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to make up kaṭhina-cloth² when monks have completed the rains. Five (things) will be allowable to you, monks, when the kaṭhina-cloths have been made up: going (to families for alms) without having asked for permission,³ walking (for alms) not taking the three robes,⁴ a group-meal,⁵ as many robes as you require,⁶ and whatever robe-material accrues⁷ there, that will be for them.¹ These five (things) will be allowable to you, monks, when the kaṭhina-cloths have been made. And thus, monks, should kaṭhina cloth be made:

¹ According to Vin-a 1106 this was the talk on the incalculability of the beginning of this faring-on, see above, BD 4.351, n. 1. ² kaṭhinaṃ attharituṃ, i.e. the formal or ceremonial making of the kaṭhina-cloth, given by the laity, into robes. See BD 2.5, n. 1; BD 2.26, n. 3. ³ anāmantacāra. Vin-a 1106 says that “so long as the kaṭhina privileges are not removed, it is allowable to go (to families for alms) anāmantetvā”, i.e. not having asked for permission, “and it will be no offence in regard to the Cārit-tasikkhāpada”, i.e. Bu-Pc 46. In this Pācittiya, if a monk, although invited, nimantita, but not having asked (for permission, anāpucchā) if a monk be there, should call upon families, except at a right time, there is a Pācittiya offence. One of the right times is the time of making robes, although the making up of the kaṭhina-cloth is not specifically mentioned in this Pācittiya rule. Vinaya Texts ii.150, n. 1 says that āmanteti must be equal to āpucchati; while Critical Pali Dictionary, under anāmantacāra, refers to Vin 4.100, santaṃ bhikkhuṃ anāpucchā. The Sanskrit Dictionaries give “invitation” and “interrogation” among the meanings of āmantraṇa. The word occurs at AN iii.259; AN-a iii.330 quotes Vin 4.100. ⁴ asamādānacāra. Vin-a 1107 says “walking not taking with one the three robes, ticivaraṃ asamādāya, the meaning is that it will be allowable to be away, separated from a robe”. This therefore is a relaxation of Bu-NP 2. At Vin 1.298 it is also said that an outer cloak may be laid aside when the kaṭhina cloth has been made. ⁵ gaṇabhojana; thus a relaxation of Bu-Pc 32, although as the formulation of this rule developed, one of the exceptions to its general terms came to be the legality of eating a group-meal at the time of making robes. ⁶ yāvadatthacīvaraṃ. Vin-a 1107 says that as many robes as are required will be allowable as long as they are not allotted, not assigned. Cf. Bu-NP 1 where it is said that an extra robe may be worn for at most ten days when the kaṭhina privileges have been removed and the robes settled. “Till that has taken place, a bhikkhu may use (temporarily, and without actually appropriating them) as many robes as he likes” (Vinaya Texts ii.151, n. 3. q.v.). According to Vism 64f. the strict wearer of the three robes, tecīvarika, should not accept a fourth robe, which, to less ascetic monks, would be of use when washing and dyeing the set of three robes. ⁷ cīvaruppāda.

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This material for kaṭhina-cloth² has accrued to the Order. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should give this material for kaṭhina-cloth to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth.³ This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This material for kaṭhina-cloth has accrued to the Order. The Order is giving this material for kaṭhina-cloth to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth. If the giving of this material for kaṭhina-cloth to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent. He to whom it is not pleasing should speak. This material for kaṭhina-cloth is given by the Order to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this.’

“Monks, kaṭhina-cloth becomes made thus, not made thus. And how, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth become not made? kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by marking it,⁴ kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by washing it; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by calculating (the number of) robes (that it will make)⁵; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by cutting it; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by tacking it¹; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by making the lengths²; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by marking with a piece of cloth³; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by strengthening the work⁴; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by making a braiding⁵; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by making a binding⁶; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by patching⁷; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by dyeing the garment⁸; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by insinuation¹; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by roundabout talking²; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by its being temporary³; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by postponement⁴; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it has to be abandoned⁵; ¹ nimittakatena. Pali-English Dictionary gives for nimittam karoti, “to pick out the aim, to mark out”, and Childers “to drop a hint”. There is nothing in the Commentary to support the rendering given at Vinaya Texts ii.154, and the alternative suggestion put forward, Vinaya Texts ii.154, n. 5 is more pertinent: “Or perhaps according to some commentators, when it has been decided to accept the gift as a kaṭhina, that is, when it has been decided that the cloth is of a suitable kind to make robes out of.” For Vin-a 1111, defining nimittakatena, says “I will make a kaṭhina (-robe) with this cloth (dussena)”, this is called nimittakatena. For it is called just this in the Parivāra” (see Vin 5.172 which defines nimittakamma as nimittam karoti iminā dussena kaṭhinam attharissāmī ti). “But” Vin-a 1111 continues, “in some commentaries it is said that he (i.e. the monk) says, “this cloth (or cloak, sāṭaka) is excellent, it is possible to make a kaṭhina (-robe) with this”; this means: having thus insinuated (dropped a hint, or made a sign, nimittakammaṃ katvā) as to getting it.” Critical Pali Dictionary gives for a-nimittakata, “of which no decision has been made”.

¹ nesaṃ bhavissati. Vin-a 1107 says that this may be the robe of a dead monk, or a gift to the Order, or a robe that accrues to the Order in any way. ² kaṭhinadussa. ³ Vin-a 1109 says that neither a saṅgha, Order, nor a gaṇa, group, makes the kaṭhina cloth, but an individual. ⁴ ullikhitamattena, according to Vin-a 1110 for the purpose of measurement lengthwise and across. The monk marks it, ullikhati, with his nails, showing the measurement of each strip, padesa, so that he can recognise it. ⁵ cīvaravicāraṇamattena, Vin-a 1110 saying, “let it be for five or seven nine or eleven”.

BD 4.3

¹ bandhanamattenā ti moghasuttakāropanamattena, so Vin-a 1110, i.e. by putting false threads in (the material). Vinaya Texts ii.153 reading “when it has only been pieced together”, takes it that the false threads are “put in the cloth to show where it is to be cut or sewn”. But in the series of actions necessary for completing the making of kaṭhina-cloth “cutting”, or cutting out, has been done already. Moghasuttaka, allowed at Vin 2.116, is defined by Buddhaghosa in an exegesis on Kd 15.11.3, see Vin-a 1206. Cf. bandhanamatta above, BD 4.260, n. 2; and also at Vin 2.135 although here it seems to have a different meaning. ² ovaṭṭikakaraṇamattenā ti moghasuttakānusārena dīghasibbitamattena, so Vin-a 1110, i.e. only by sewing a long (strip) by following the “false threads”. Ovaṭṭika allowed at Vin 1.290. ³ kaṇḍūsakaraṇamattenā ti mud-dhiyapaṭabandhanamattena, so Vin-a 1110, i.e. only by putting on a piece of cloth as a sign. Kaṇḍūsaka allowed at Vin 1.290, on which Vin-a 1128 says kaṇḍūsakaṃ vuccati muddikā, a mark (or sign) (the disfigurement) is called kaṇḍūsaka. ⁴ dalḥikam-makaraṇamattena. This is apparently done by sewing the cloths, cimilikā, together, Vin-a 1110; Vinaya Texts ii.153 reading “when it has only been made strong (in the seams)”. Dalḥikamma allowed at Vin 1.290. ⁵ anuvātakaraṇamattena. It appears from Vin-a 1110 that the anuvāta was put along the back (of the cloth). See Vin 4.121 (= BD 2.409 q.v. n. 7.) where the Commentary, on the rule for disfiguring a new robe says there is no offence if it is on a braiding, anuvāta. Anuvāta allowed at Vin 2.116. ⁶ paribhaṇḍakaraṇamattena. The paribhaṇḍa appears to have been put inside the cloth. Again see Vin 4.121, and BD 2.409, n. 8. Allowed at Vin 2.116. ⁷ ovaddheyyakaraṇamattena. Vin-a 1111 says, “only by putting it on the in-coming cloth. Or taking cloth from a kaṭhina-robe, only by putting the cloth on another kaṭhina-robe”. The variant reading for this last is akaṭhinacivara, what is not kaṭhina-cloth. The whole meaning is obscure. It perhaps refers to the saṅghātī, the outer cloak, which had to be made of double cloth. On the other hand ovaddheyya may mean “patching”. ⁸ kambalamaddanamattena. Kambala, usually a garment or blanket made of wool, is allowed at Vin 1.281. But the kaṭhina material was of cotton cloth. Maddana too usually means crushing or kneading. But Vin-a 1111 says “throwing it once into the dye, rajana, for the colour of ivory, for the colour of withered leaves”. Monks’ robes are of the colour of old ivory, and russets, yellows, browns and reds.

4.356

Vism 23=Vb 352 asks, “What here is nemittakata?” i.e. insinuation. The answer is (following translation at Path of Purity, i.27) “What to others is a sign, nimitta, making a sign, nimittakamma, a hint, obhāsa, giving a hint, roundabout talk, winding speech, parikathā (see next term in Vinaya text and next note) on the part of one of evil desires”, etc. Vism 28 explains nimitta and nimittakamma so as to leave no doubt that by them “hinting” or “insinuating” is meant. Cf. also Vb-a 483.

² parikathākatena. Vin-a 1111 says “he ought to give kaṭhina cloth, the benefactor giving kaṭhina-cloth produces much merit”, thus is meant “by making parikathā”, roundabout talk. At Vism 23=Vb 353 parikathā is included in definition of nemittakata, see previous note. It is defined at Vism 29=Vb-a 484 as “speaking round and round until one gets what is wanted”. Vin 5.172 says “parikathā means that he makes roundabout talk, saying, ‘I will bring forth kaṭhina-cloth by this roundabout talk’”.

Critical Pali Dictionary gives for a-parikathākata, not “obtained by speaking of its worth”. ³ kukkukatenā ti tāvakālikena, Vin-a 1111. Vin 5.172 says that it is called a gift that is not appropriated.

⁴ sannidhikatena, so Vinaya Texts ii.154 and Pali-English Dictionary Vin 5.172=Vin-a 1111 says that there are two “postponements” or “storings up”, sannidhi, that of karaṇa, doing or making, and that of nicaya, possessions. Vin-a 1111 further explains, “postponement of doing (or making) is not doing (or making) it today) putting the doing (or making) to one side; postponement of possessions means that the Order, receiving kaṭhina-cloth today, gives it (to the monks) the next day”. Sannidhikata occurs at Vin 2.270 in reference to food.

⁵ nissaggiyena. Vin 5.172=Vin-a 1111 saying “while it is being made the dawn breaks”. All the various processes in the making of the kaṭhina robes had to be carried out on one and the same day.

kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is not made allowable¹; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is (made) except for the outer cloak²; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is (made) except for the upper robe; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is (made) except for the inner robe; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made unless five parts³ or more than five parts⁴ (of kaṭhina-cloth) are cut out, are hemmed together⁵ on that same day; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made unless the making is by an individual.⁶ And even if kaṭhina-cloth comes to be quite properly made, but if no one gives thanks for it standing outside the boundary,⁷ thus also kaṭhina-cloth comes to be not made. And thus, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth come to be not made.

Vin 1.29

Kd 7.1.6

“And how, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth come to be made? Kaṭhina

¹ akappakatenā. Cf. Bu-Pc 58, where a new robe has to be disfigured so that the owner can identify it. The three modes of disfigurement consisted in applying some kind of smudge (bindu) to the robe. Cf. BD 2.409, n. 5, and Vin-a 1111 anādinna-kappabindunā, by not giving the smudge (that makes the robe) allowable. ² aññātra saṅghāṭṭiya, if the outer cloak is lacking, not finished. ³ Cf. Vin 1.287 where each of the three robes of a monk was allowed to be worn chinnaka, cut up into pieces to resemble the divisions of a paddy field; and Vin 1.297 where it is said that one of the three robes might be worn acchinnaka, not cut up. Vin-a 1111 says that five or more parts are to be made by taking pieces, showing mahāmaṇḍala-a ḍḍhamaṇḍala, i.e. either circular or semi-circular seams (see Critical Pali Dictionary under aḍḍhamaṇḍala) or “the greater circles and the lesser circles” (see Vinaya Texts ii.209 and Vin-a 1127), or “the seams and the short seams” (cf. Vin 1.287). Vin-a 1111 continues, “thus it (the robe) comes to be made with seams (or circles); setting that to one side there ought not to be another that is not cut up or that is in (only) two, three or four pieces”. ⁴ atirekapañcaka, Critical Pali Dictionary gives “more than one of the five parts”. ⁵ samaṇḍalīkatena, see last note but one. ⁶ aññātra puggalassa atthārā. Vin-a 1111 says “setting to one side the making by an individual, it does not become made because of another making by either an Order or a group”. It seems that each monk must make up the kaṭhina cloth distributed to him by the Order, and not rely upon the Order or a group to do so for him; see above Kd 7.1.4 and cf. Vin-a 1109. ⁷ nissīmaṭṭho anumodati. Vin-a 1111 merely says, “if he (or, one) gives thanks standing, ṭhito, outside, bahu, the boundary of the precincts” (i.e. of the residence where the work is being done). Anumodati more likely refers to a monk thanking the Order than to an Order thanking the donors of the kaṭhina-cloth, for see Kd 7.1.4 where the Order gives the monks the material for making into kaṭhina-cloth.

cloth comes to be made when it is unsoiled¹; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when what is allowable is unsoiled²; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when it is (made) out of pieces of cloth³; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when it is (made) out of rag-robles⁴; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when it is (made) out of (bits picked up near) a shop⁵; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is no insinuation; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is no roundabout talking; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if it is not temporary; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is no postponement; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if it has not to be abandoned; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if it is made allowable; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is the outer cloak; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is the upper robe; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is the inner robe; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if five parts or more than five parts are cut out, are hemmed together on that same day; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if the making is by an individual. And if kaṭhina-cloth comes to be quite properly made, and if one gives thanks for it standing on the boundary, kaṭhina-cloth thus also comes to be made. And thus, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth come to be made.

d7.17

“And how, monks, do the kaṭhina (privileges) become removed⁶?”

¹ ahatena, which Vin-a 1111 explains by aparibhuttana, not used. ² ahatakappena. Vin-a 1111 says “by washing it once or twice (so as to make it) as though unsoiled”.

³ pilotikāya, which Vin-a 1111 explains by hatavatthakasāṭakena, out of a cloak or garment which are soiled; variant reading gatavatthukasāṭakena. ⁴ Vin-a 1112 says “when rag-robles have accrued in twenty-three fields”; the idea being that a monk must wander about in order to acquire his rags. Vin-a , quoting another commentary, says that the meaning there is that when a monk who is a rag-robe wearer is touring for alms and rags, colaka, then (kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made) when the robe is made up from the rags received. ⁵ pāpaṇikena. Vin-a 1112 saying

“if taking pieces of cloth, pilotika, dropped at the door of a shop, he gives them for kaṭhina-cloth, the meaning is because of this”. Cf. Vin-a 1128, pāpaṇike ti antarāpaṇato patitapilotikacīvare, robes of piles of cloth taken amidst a shop. At Vism 62, pāpaṇika, “shop-rag” is included under paṃsukūla, rag-robles. ⁶ ubbhataṃ kaṭhinaṃ. See Bu-NP 1, Bu-NP 2, Bu-NP 3, and BD 2.5, n. 3; BD 2.6, n. 5; BD 2.13, n. 2.

Monks, there are these eight grounds¹ for the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges): that depending on (a monk) going away; that depending on (his robe) being settled²; that depending on his resolves³ (not to have it made up and not to come back); that depending on (the robe) being lost; that depending on his hearing (of the general removal of the privileges in the residence to which he has gone); (that depending on) the disappointment of his expectation⁴ (that a special gift of a robe would be made to him); that depending on his having crossed the boundary⁵; (that depending on) the removal (of the kaṭhina privileges) together with (those of the other monks)".⁶

SEVEN ON BRINGING

"A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking a robe that is made up,⁷ goes away, thinking: "I will not come back". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his going away.⁸ A monk,

Kd 7.2.

¹ mātikā, channels, headings. See Vinaya Texts ii.157 for these eight grounds for the removal of the five kaṭhina privileges being "closely connected" with the description in Kd 7.13 of the two so-called palibodhas. "Palibodha seems to mean the continued existence of a claim on the bhikkhu's side to a share in the distribution of the kaṭhina". There are in this connection two palibodhas, that concerned with the monk's residence, āvāsa, and that concerned with his robes, cīvara. The mātikā are exemplified in the following stories. See also Vin 5.177 and BD 2.5, n. 3; BD 2.6, n. 5. ² niṭṭhāna. Cf. niṭṭhita, "settled", BD 2.6. ³ sanniṭṭhāna. Word occurs at Ja 1187, Ja iv.167+ katvā. ⁴ āsāvacchedikā. Cf. BD 2.6, n. 4. ⁵ I.e. of the residence to which kaṭhina-cloth had been given, and where he should have made up his portion. ⁶ Editors of Vinaya Texts ii.156, n. 4 thinks that this section should have begun "the new chapter". I hold it to be correct as it is, for with it cease the words ascribed to Gotama. The stories that follow, Kd 7.2–Kd 7.12 inclusive, are not supposed to have been told by him, but are exemplifications of the grounds for removing the kaṭhina privileges, and which some later person or persons apparently thought wise to incorporate in the "text". ⁷ katacīvara, a robe that is finished, ready to wear. Cf. BD 2.6, n. 2. ⁸ Vin-a 1112 says that in this removal of the kaṭhina privileges on the ground of his going away, first the robes-impediment, cīvarapalibodha, is cut off, afterwards the residence-impediment, āvāsapalibodha. For by going thus, the robes-impediment is cut off inside the boundary, the residence-impediment when he has crossed the boundary. See also Vin 5.177.

after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material¹ goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary,² it occurs to him,³ “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

4.359 A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will not get this robe-material made up nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.⁴

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe-material) being lost.⁵

17.2.2 A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up; when that robe has been made up,⁶ he hears: “The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed in this residence.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his hearing (this news).⁷

1.256 A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe material,

¹ Vin-a 1112 calls this akatacīvara, a robe, or robe-material, that is not made up, not ready to wear. ² Vin-a 1112, “when he has gone to another neighbouring residence”. ³ Ibid., “it occurs to him seeing comfortable lodgings or the happiness of friends. In this removal of the kaṭhina privileges on the ground of (the robes) being settled, first the residence-impediment is cut off, for he thinks, ‘I will not come back’; when no more than the thought has arisen, it is cut off”. Cf. Vin 5.178 cīvare niṭṭhite cīvara-palibodho chijjati, when the robes are settled the impediment to robes is cut off. ⁴ Vin-a 1113 says “because of the resolves, sanniṭṭhānantike, “I will not have this robe-material made up” and “I will not come back”, the two impediments are both cut off when no more than these thoughts have arisen”. Vin 5.178 says that they are cut off simultaneously. ⁵ Vin-a 1113 says of this that first the residence-impediment is cut off; the robes-impediment is cut off when the robe is lost. Cf. Vin 5.178. ⁶ katacīvara. ⁷ Vin-a 1113 says that first the robes-impediment is cut off; the residence-impediment is cut off with his hearing (the news). Cf. Vin 5.178.

goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up; when that robe has been made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back”, spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back”, (his return) coincides with¹ the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.²

*Told are the seven cases on Taking.*³

SEVEN ON TAKING

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking with him⁴ a robe that is made up, goes away, thinking, “I will not come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his going away ...⁵

Told are the seven cases on Taking with him.

SIX ON BRINGING

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking a robe that is imperfectly executed,⁶ goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina, (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled ... (=Kd 7.2; read taking a robe that is imperfectly executed instead of taking a robe) ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

¹ sambhuṇāti. ² This must mean a general removal for all monks resident within one sīma, boundary. ³ ādāyasattakam niṭṭhitam. ⁴ samādāya. ⁵ Vinaya Texts ii.160, n. 1 says, “This chapter is word for word identical with Chapter 2: only instead of ‘takes’ (ādāya) read ‘takes with him’ (samādāya). We cannot say what different meanings these two words are intended to convey”. ⁶ vippakatacīvara. Cf. vippakata at Vin 3.155, Vin 3.225, Vin 3.227, Vin 3.229.

*Told are the six cases on Taking*¹

SIX ON TAKING

^{d7.5.1} A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled ... (=Kd 7.3; read taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed instead of taking with him a robe) ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.²

The six cases on Taking with him

FIFTY ON BRINGING

^{d7.6.1} A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and

¹ “Six of the seven cases specified in Kd 7.2 (with the exception of the first of the seven) ... The first case is necessarily omitted, because it is essential to that case, that the bhikkhu going away takes with him a robe ready for wear”, so Vinaya Texts, ii.160, n. 3. ² Again the first case is omitted. If there is, on the monk’s part, no going away with a robe ready to wear, there is no ground for removing the kaṭhina privileges depending on “going away”. These can only be removed if the monk has gone away taking, or taking with him, a robe that is (already) made up, ready to wear.

he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled ...¹

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: "I will get this robe-material made up here", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs, to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.²

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away without having determined,³ for it neither occurs to him that "I will come back" nor does it occur to him that "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away without having determined, for it neither occurs to him that "I will come back", nor does it occur to him that "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him: "I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

¹ "This case is word for word identical with the second case in Kd 7.2.1. After it follow the third and fourth case of Kd 7.2.1, which it is unnecessary to print here again in full extent. The triad of these cases is repeated here in order to serve as a basis for the variations which are to follow in Kd 7.2, Kd 7.3," so Vinaya Texts ii.161, n. 1. ² In these clauses, the monk, before he has got to the boundary and not after, as in Kd 7.6.1 thinks that he will not return. ³ anadhīṭṭhitena.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away without having determined, for it neither occurs to him that “I will come back”, nor does it occur to him that “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up; but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.¹

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back.” When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up. When that robe is made up he hears, “The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed in this residence.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his hearing this news).¹

¹ The same as Kd 7.6.1 except for the words added in each case in Kd 7.6.3, “without having determined ... ‘I will not come back’.”

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up. When that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back,” spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.²

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up. When that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back,” (his return) coincides with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

Vin 1.29

FIFTY ON TAKING, ETC.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking with him robe-material, goes away ... it should be given in full thus, like the portion on “going away, taking” ... A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth is made, taking a robe that is imperfectly executed, goes away ... it should be given in full thus, like the portion on “going away, taking with him” ... A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth is made, taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed, goes away ...

Kd 7.7.1

FIFTY ON TAKING WHAT IS IMPERFECTLY EXECUTED

(=Kd 7.6; read taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed instead of taking robe-material) ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.¹

BD 4.3

¹ =Kd 7.2.2. ² =Kd 7.2.2.

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Taking

TWELVE CASES CONTRARY TO EXPECTATION

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe.² When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to³ that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe ... It occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him.⁴ That monk’s

¹ “The whole Chapter 6 is repeated here three times, the first time replacing the words ‘takes a robe’ by ‘takes a robe with him’ (cf. Chapter 3); the second time replacing ‘takes a robe’ by ‘takes a robe not ready’ (imperfectly executed) (cf. Chapter 4); and the third time with these two modifications combined (cf. Chapter 5)” — so Vinaya Texts, ii.162, n. 2. ² see Bu-NP 3, BD 2.26, and Bu-NP 3, BD 2.27, definition of “expectation”. ³ payirupāsati. ⁴ tassa sā cīvarāsā upacchijati.

kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.¹

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, “I will come back”, nor does it occur to him, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

¹ āsāvachhedikā. Vin-a 1113 says that first the residence-impediment is cut off; the robes-impediment is cut off when the expectation of a robe is disappointed. Cf. above, BD 4.358, n. 3.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, “I will come back”, nor does it occur to him, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

*Told are the twelve cases on Contrary to Expectation.*¹

TWELVE CASES IN ACCORDANCE WITH EXPECTATION

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will not have this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

¹ anasādoḷāsakaṃ niṭṭhitaṃ.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he hears that “In this residence the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed”. It occurs to him, “Inasmuch as in this residence the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed, I will attend to this expectation of a robe here”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back” ... It occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

1793

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will come back". When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. He gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he hears, "The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed in this residence". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his hearing (this news).

4,368

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will come back". When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe, I will not come back", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will come back". When he has gone outside the boundary, he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. He gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, "I will come back", spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will come back". When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. He gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, "I will come back", (his return) coincides with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

*Told are the six cases on Taking*¹

TWELVE ON BUSINESS

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business. When he has gone outside the boundary there arises² the expectation of a robe. He attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business. When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. It occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. He attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

¹ "Six of the seven cases specified in Kd 7.2 (with the exception of the first of the seven) ... The first case is necessarily omitted, because it is essential to that case, that the bhikkhu going away takes with him a robe ready for wear", so Vinaya Texts, ii.160, n. 3. ² uppajjati.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolve.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

4:370 A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. It occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

7:10:3 A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, "I will come back", nor does it occur to him, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. He attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

1:263 A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, “I will come back”, nor does it occur to him, “I will not come back”. When he has gone back outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. It occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

Told are the twelve cases on Business

NINE CASES ON WITHOUT COLLECTING

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away, travelling to distant parts,¹ without collecting² his share of the robe-material. While he is thus travelling to distant parts, monks ask him, “Where have you, your reverence, spent the rains, and where is your share of the robe-material?”

He speaks thus, “I spent the rains in such and such a residence, and my share of the robe-material is there.”

These speak thus, “Go, your reverence, fetch that robe-material. We will make up that robe-material for you here.”

He, going to that residence, asks the monks: “Where, your reverences,³ is my-share of the robe-material?”

¹ disaṅgamika. Cf. Vin 1.119. ² apacinayamāno. Pali-English Dictionary, Critical Pali Dictionary, Vinaya Texts ii.166 all suggest “guarding his claim”, as from apacināti. It would seem however to be the negative of pacinati, “to take up, to collect”. The monk, according to the context, leaves his robe-material behind, he then goes away without gathering it up and taking it with him. It is true however that in going away he does not renounce his claim to his share of the robe-material. ³ This seems the only time that this monk uses a form of address, āvuso, in speaking to other monks.

These speak thus: “This, your reverence, is your share of the robe-material. Where are you going?”

He speaks thus: “I am going to such and such a residence. The monks will make up the robe-material for me there.”

These speak thus: “No, your reverence, do not go; we will make up the robe-material for you here.”

It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away, travelling to distant parts without collecting his share of the robe-material ...

“This, your reverence, is your share of the robe-material.”

He, taking that robe-material, goes to that residence. On the way (some) monks ask him: “Your reverence, where are you going?”

He speaks thus: “I am going to such and such a residence. The monks will make up the robe-material for me there.”

These speak thus: “No, your reverence, do not go; we will make up the robe-material for you here.”

It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away, travelling to distant parts without collecting his share of the robe-material ...

“This, your reverence, is your share of the robe-material.”

He, taking the robe-material, goes to that residence; while he is going to that residence, it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

Told are the nine cases on Without collecting

FIVE ON LIVING IN COMFORT

A monk, one who lives in comfort,¹ after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will go to such and such a residence; if there comes to be comfort for me there, I will stay, but if there does not come to be comfort for me, I will go to such and such a residence; if there comes to be comfort for me there, I will stay, but if there does not come to be comfort for me, I will go to such and such a residence; if there comes to be comfort for me there, I will stay, but if there does not come to be comfort for me, I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

¹ phāsuvihārika. “Intent on finding a comfortable place (to live in)” of Vinaya Texts ii.168, although justified by the context, ascribes both more and less to the compound, phāsuvihārika, than it actually contains. Cf. the jungle-dweller who, if he was thinking about phāsuvihāra, might live independently of guidance, at Kd 1.73.4 (above BD 4.118).

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him: "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back," and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, he has that robe-material made up; when that robe-material is made up, he, thinking again and again, "I will come back", spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, he has that robe-material made up; when that robe-material is made up, he, thinking again and again, "I will come back (his return) coincides with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

ON OBSTACLES AND NOT-OBSTACLES

7.13.1 “Monks, there are these two impediments,¹ these two non-impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges). And what, monks, are the two impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges)? The residence-impediment and the robes-impediment. And how, monks, does the residence-impediment come to be? Monks, in this case a monk who is either staying in or who is longing for that residence, goes away, thinking, ‘I will come back’.² Thus, monks, does the residence-impediment come to be. And how, monks, does the robes-impediment come to be? Monks, in this case, a monk’s robe-material comes to be not made up or it is imperfectly executed or the expectation of a robe is not fulfilled. Thus, monks, does the robes-impediment come to be. Monks, these are the two impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges).

Kd 7.13

“And what, monks, are the two non-impediments to (the removal

¹ palibodha, obstruction, hindrance, obstacle, impediment, drawback. Ten palibodhas are enumerated at Kh-a 39, and explained in detail at Vism 90ff. But in its explanation of āvāsapalibodha, the first on the list, the Visuddhimagga makes no reference to kaṭhina; cīvarapalibodha does not occur here or in Kh-a.

The idea of the palibodhas and apalibodhas is somewhat difficult to follow. After kaṭhina-cloth is made, five privileges are allowable to monks (Kd 7.1.3), and there are eight grounds for the removal of these privileges (Kd 7.1.7). But then, it seems, these eight grounds are in turn subject to the two impediments and the two non-impediments. That is to say, the kaṭhina privileges cannot be removed if there is present an impediment to the grounds for removing them, but only if there is no impediment to these grounds. Vin-a 1114 says, “Having shown the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges), now whatever are impediments are said to be cut off in regard to these kaṭhina (privileges).” See Vinaya Texts ii.149, n. and Vinaya Texts ii.157, n. 2.

² The first of the grounds for removing the kaṭhina privileges is that depending on a monk having gone away. But here, although he goes away, he intends to come back. Thus the ground for removing the privilege meets with an obstruction.

Text here reads, idha bhikkhave bhikkhu vassati vātasmim āvāse sāpekkho vā pakkamati (with variant reading vesati) which has led translator at Vinaya Texts ii.169 to render, “A bhikkhu, O bhikkhus, goes away (for a time), when it is raining or storming, with the intention of returning to that residence.” But Sinhalese edition 1933, ii.322 and Siamese edition both read, idha bhikkhave bhikkhu vassāti vā tasmim āvāse sapekho vā pakkamati, which I follow as making more sense.

of) the kaṭhina (privileges)? The residence-non-impediment and the robes-non-impediment. And how, monks, does the residence-non-impediment come to be? In this case, monks, a monk goes away from that residence because of giving up, because of renunciation, because of sacrifice, because of indifference, thinking, ‘I will not come back’.¹ Thus, monks, does the residence-non-impediment come to be. And how, monks, does the robes-non-impediment come to be? In this case, monks, a monk’s robe-material comes to be made up or it is lost or destroyed or burnt or the expectation of a robe is disappointed.² Thus, monks, does the robes-non-impediment come to be. These, monks, are the two non-impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges).”

The Section on kaṭhina³: the Seventh

IN THIS SECTION ARE TWELVE ITEMS, THE WORDS OF ABRIDGEMENT ARE ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEEN. THIS IS ITS KEY

Thirty monks of Pāvā stayed longing in Sāketa, at the end of the rains they went with drenched (robes) to see the Conqueror. /

This item of kaṭhina-cloth, and the five things called allowable.⁴

Without asking permission, nor taking three robes, a joint-meal likewise, /

As much as is required, and one that accrues will be for the makers.

The motion, and just what is made and just what is not made. /

Marking, washing, and calculating, and cutting, tacking, making lengths, using a piece of cloth, and strengthening, braiding, /

Binding, patching, dyeing, talk with hints,⁵ temporary, postponement, abandonment, not (made) if it is not allowable, but for these three, /

¹ As he does not intend to return there is no reason why his kaṭhina privileges should not be removed. His intention provides the non-impediment. ² These are no impediments to the grounds for removing the kaṭhina privileges. They may be removed, as we have seen, because a monk’s robe is made up, because he resolves not to have it made up, because it is lost, or because his expectation of a robe is disappointed. Cf. Bu-NP 1, definition of “when the robes are settled”, and see BD 2.6, BD 2.15. ³ Kaṭhinakkhandhaka. Cf. Kaṭhinavagga, Vin 3.195-223. ⁴ kappiyan ti;

Sinhalese edition kappissantī, will be allowable. ⁵ nimitta-kathā here. It may be a composite word for nimittakata and parikathākata; otherwise the latter is not included in this part of the “key”, although it is mentioned lower down.

Unless five parts or more when they are cut out are hemmed together, not (made) unless by an individual, if properly (made) he gives thanks standing outside the boundary: / kaṭhina-cloth comes to be not made, thus it is taught by the awakened one.

Unsoiled, when what is allowable (is unsoiled), pieces of cloth, rags, and bits near a shop, /

Not insinuation, nor roundabout talking, not temporary and no postponement, not abandoned, made allowable, and inasmuch as it is for (a set of) three robes, /

If five parts or more are cut out and hemmed together, if the making is by an individual,

if properly (made) he gives thanks standing on the boundary: /

Thus the making of kaṭhina-cloth.

Eight grounds for removal:

that depending on going away,

on being settled, on resolve and on loss, /

On hearing, on disappointment of an expectation, over the boundary,

and the eighth is with the removal (of other monks').

Taking a robe that is made up, he goes away, thinking,

“I will not come back”, /

His kaṭhina (privileges) become removed because of his going away.

Taking robe-material he goes away,¹ when he is outside the boundary, he thinks, /

“I will have it made up here,

I will not come back”;

his kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

Taking it, when he is outside the boundary, he intends, thinking, “Neither that nor will I come back”, /

His kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that² of resolve.

Taking robe-material he goes away, when he is outside the boundary, he thinks, /

“I will have it made up here, I will not come back,”

but while it is being made up, it is lost;

his kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that of loss. /

Taking it, he goes away, thinking, “I will come back”, and has the robe-material made up outside,

when the robe has been made up,

he hears that the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed there; /

¹ yāti. ² taṃ, doubtless “ground” is to be understood.

His kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that of hearing.

Taking it, he goes away, thinking, “I will come back”, and has the robe-material made up outside, / When the robe has been made up, (staying) outside he does not go back¹ until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges);

his kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that of having crossed the boundary. / Taking it, he goes away, thinking, “I will come back”, and has the robe-material made up outside, when the robe has been made up, thinking, “I will come back”,

(his return) coincides² with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges); /

The removal of his kaṭhina (privileges) is because it occurs³ with (that of) the other monks.

Taking and taking with him, the going away⁴ is seven times sevenfold. /

There is no sixfold⁵ going away,

(the robes) imperfectly executed depending on “going away”.

Taking it, this arises, “I will have it made up when I am outside the boundary”; /

Settled and resolves and loss, these three.

Taking it, thinking, “I will not come back”,

“I am making it up outside the boundary”; /

Settled, then resolves, then loss, this is three (fold).

Without having determined, for it does not (occur) to him, the threefold meaning below.⁶ /

1.267
4:378

Taking it, he goes away, thinking, “I will come back”,

“I am making it up outside the boundary”, thinking, “I will not come back”, he gets it made up; his kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled. /

Resolves and loss, hearing, having crossed the boundary, it may arise with (those of the other) monks;

thus there is going away fifteen times. /

Taking with him, imperfectly executed, taking it with him likewise again,

these are four turns⁷ where all is fifteen-fold. /

And contrary to expectation, in accordance with expectation,

¹ nāmeti, cf. Snp 1143, nāpentī with variant reading nāmenti. ² sambhoti. ³ jāyati.

⁴ gati. ⁵ chaccā. Sinhalese edition chaṭṭhe. ⁶ Pali has “below”, referring to the leaves of the palm-leaf manuscripts, where we say “above”. ⁷ vārā, i.e. for recitation.

and business, these three.

One should understand this from what has been said:¹

there are three that are each twelve (-fold). /

Here are nine on “without collecting”, there is a set of five on comfort;

impediments, non-impediments;

the key is made from what has been said.

Vin 1.2

¹ Nayato, perhaps “from the method”.

8. ROBES (CĪVARA)

THE STORY OF JĪVAKA

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeling-place. Now at that time Vesālī was prosperous and flourishing, full of folk, thronged with people,¹ and it was well off for food; and there were seven thousand seven hundred and seven long houses,² and seven thousand seven hundred and seven gabled buildings, and seven thousand seven hundred and seven parks,³ and seven thousand seven hundred and seven lotus-tanks. There was the courtesan Ambapālī,⁴ beautiful, good to look upon, charming, she was possessed of the utmost beauty of complexion, was clever at dancing and singing and lute-playing, much visited by desirous people and she went for a night for fifty,⁵ and through her Vesālī shone forth all the more.

Then the urban council⁶ of Rājagaha went to Vesālī on some business. The urban council of Rājagaha saw that Vesālī was prosperous and flourishing, full of folk, thronged with people, and well off for food; and (they saw) the seven thousand seven hundred and seven long houses ... seven thousand seven hundred and seven lotus-tanks, and Ambapālī, the courtesan, beautiful, good to look upon, charming ... and (they saw) that through her Vesālī shone forth all the more. Then the urban council of Rājagaha, having transacted that business in Vesālī, came back again to Rājagaha; they approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached they spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

¹ Cf. DN i.211, DN ii.146, MN i.377, AN iii.215. ² pāsāda, cf. BD 2.16, n. 5. ³ ārāma, not "monasteries" here. See BD 2.2, n. 2. ⁴ Here called Ambapālikā. Mentioned above, BD 4.315. ⁵ Vin-a 1114 says, "taking fifty kaḥāpaṇas she goes night by night."

⁶ negama. Vin-a 1114 calls this a kuṭumbikagaṇa, a group of leading men. Cf. negama at Vin 3.220.

“Sire, Vesālī is prosperous and flourishing ... and through her Vesālī shines forth all the more. It were good, sire, if we too might establish a courtesan.” “Well now, good sirs,¹ do find such a girl as you might establish as a courtesan.”

Now at that time there was in Rājagaha a girl called Sālavatī, who was beautiful, good to look upon, charming, she was possessed of the utmost beauty of complexion. Then the urban council of Rājagaha established the girl, Sālavatī,² as courtesan. And the courtesan Sālavatī soon came to be clever at dancing and singing and lute-playing; she was much visited by desirous people, and she went for a night for the fee of a hundred.³ Then the courtesan Sālavatī soon became pregnant. Then it occurred to the courtesan Sālavatī: “Men do not like a pregnant woman. If anyone should find out concerning me that ‘The courtesan Sālavatī is pregnant’, all respect for me would dwindle. What now if I should make it known that I am ill?”

Then the courtesan Sālavatī enjoined the door-keeper, saying: “Good door-keeper, do not let any man come in, and if anyone asks for me, make it known that I am ill.”

“Very well, lady,” that door-keeper answered the courtesan Sālavatī in assent.

Then the courtesan Sālavatī when (the child of) her womb was mature, gave birth to a son. Then the courtesan Sālavatī enjoined a slave-woman, saying: “Now then, come along, having put this boy into a winnowing-basket,¹ having taken him out, throw him away on a rubbish-heap.”²

¹ bhaṇe, a form of address sometimes used by kings to their subjects. ² Cf. Sn-p-a i.244. ³ paṭisatena. Vinaya Texts ii.172 takes this to mean that she asked for a hundred kahāpaṇas a night which undoubtedly balances Ambapālī’s price of fifty kahāpaṇas, see Vin-a 1114. The Commentary in its exegesis of paṭisatena does not mention coinage or currency. Paṭisatena however probably means “for a hundred in return”, “against a hundred”.

“Very well, lady,” and that slave-woman having answered the courtesan Sālavatī in assent, having put that boy into a winnowing-basket, having taken him out, threw him away on a rubbish-heap.

Now at that time the king’s son, Abhaya³ by name, going in the morning to the royal audience, saw that boy surrounded by crows; seeing this, he asked the people: “Good sirs, what is this that is surrounded by crows?”

“It is a boy, sire.”

“Is he alive, good sirs?”

“He is alive, sire.”

“Well now, good sirs, having brought that boy to our women’s quarters, give him to foster-mothers to care for.”

“Very well, sire,” and these people having answered Abhaya, the king’s son, in assent, having brought that boy to the women’s quarters of Abhaya, the king’s son, gave him to foster-mothers saying, “Care for him”.

Because it was said of him, “He is alive”,⁴ they gave him the name of Jīvaka; because the prince⁵ caused him to be cared for, they gave him the name of Komārabhacca.⁶

And before long Jīvaka Komārabhacca attained to years of discretion. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached Abhaya, the king’s son, and having approached he spoke thus to Abhaya, the king’s son:

“Who, sire, is my mother? Who my father?”

¹ Vin-a 1114 calls this jiṅṅasuppa an old winnowing-basket. ² Cf. Dh-p-a i.174.

³ See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁴ jīvati. ⁵ kumāra. ⁶ Meaning perhaps “the Prince-fed” (so GS i.24). See note at Vinaya Texts ii.174, at end of which it is said, “We believe therefore, that this surname Komārabhacca really means ‘master of the kaumārabhṛīya science’”, i.e. a part of the medical science which comprises the treatment of infants. Short account of his history given at AN-a i.398f. At DN-a 133, where brief synopsis of his story also appears, he is called Komārabhaṇḍa, and at Divyāvadāna 506ff. Kumārabhūta. At AN i.26 he is called chief of lay followers who are liked by people. MN v. is addressed to him.

“Not even I, good Jīvaka, know your mother, but I am your father, for I had you cared for.”

Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“Without a craft, it is not easy to depend upon these royal families. Suppose I were to learn a craft?¹” Now at that time there lived a world-famed² doctor at Taxilā.

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, without having asked (permission) of Abhaya, the king’s son, set out for Taxilā; in course of time he arrived at Taxilā and that doctor; having approached, he spoke thus to that doctor:

“I want, teacher,³ to train in the craft.”

“Well then, good Jīvaka, train in it.”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca learnt much and learnt it quickly, and he reflected upon it well, and he did not forget what he had learnt. Then at the end of seven years, it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “I am learning much and learning it quickly, and I am reflecting upon it well, and I do not forget what I have learnt, but after studying for seven years the end of this craft is not visible to me. When will the end of this craft be visible?”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached that doctor; having approached he spoke thus to that doctor:

“I, teacher, am learning much and learning it quickly, and I am reflecting upon it well, and I do not forget what I have learnt, but after studying for seven years the end of this craft is not visible to me. When will the end of this craft be visible?”

“Well now, good Jīvaka, taking a spade, touring a yojana all round Taxilā, bring whatever you should see that is not medicinal.”

“Very well, teacher,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered that doctor in assent, taking a spade, touring a yojana all round Taxilā, did not see anything that was not medicinal. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached that doctor; having approached he spoke thus to that doctor:

¹ Vin-a 1114 says that he thought of the doctor’s craft for this is on the side of amity towards men and their welfare, whereas elephant-lore and horsemanship are connected with the injury of others. ² disāpāmokkha. Word occurs at Ja i.166.

³ ācariya.

“Teacher, while I was touring for a yojana all round Taxilā, I did not see any thing that was not medicinal.”

“You are trained, good Jīvaka, this much is enough for a livelihood for you,” and he gave him trifling provisions for the journey.

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking those trifling provisions for the journey, set out for Rājagaha. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca’s trifling provisions for the journey became used up on the way, at Sāketa. Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“These wilderness roads have little water, little food; it is not easy to go along them without provisions for the journey.¹ Suppose I were to look about for provisions for the journey?”

THE STORY OF THE MERCHANT’S WIFE

Now at that time in Sāketa a merchant’s wife had had a disease of the head for seven years. Many very great, world-famed doctors who had come had not been able to cure her; taking much gold,² they went away. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, entering Sāketa, asked the people: “Who, good sirs, is ill? Whom shall I attend?”³

“Teacher, this merchant’s wife has had a disease of the head for seven years; go, teacher, attend this merchant’s wife.”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca went up to the dwelling of that householder, the merchant, and having gone up, he enjoined the door-keeper, saying: “Go, good door-keeper, say to the merchant’s wife, ‘Lady, a doctor is come who wants to see you’”.

“Very well, teacher,” and that door-keeper having answered Jīvaka Komārabhacca in assent, approached that merchant’s wife; having approached, he spoke thus to that merchant’s wife: “Lady, a doctor is come who wants to see you.”

“What sort of a doctor is he, good door-keeper?”

“He is young, lady.”

¹ Cf. Vin 1.244, above, BD 4.335–BD.4.336. ² hirañña. ³ tikicchati, to treat medically, to cure.

“That’s enough, good door-keeper. What could a young doctor do for me? Many very great, world-famed doctors who have come have not been able to cure me; they have gone away taking much gold.”

Then that door-keeper went up to Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having gone up, he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “Teacher, the merchant’s wife speaks thus: ‘That’s enough, good door-keeper ... taking much gold’.”

“Go, good door-keeper, say to the merchant’s wife: ‘Lady, the doctor speaks thus: Do not, lady, give anything beforehand; when you become well, then you may give what you like’.”

“Very well, teacher,” and that door-keeper having answered Jīvaka Komārabhacca in assent, went up to that merchant’s wife; having gone up, he spoke thus to that merchant’s wife: “Lady, the doctor speaks thus ... ‘... then you may give what you like’.”

“Well then, good door-keeper, let the doctor come.”

“Very well, lady,” and that door-keeper having answered the merchant’s wife in assent, went up to Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having gone up, he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“The merchant’s wife, teacher, summons you.”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca went up to that merchant’s wife; having gone up, having observed her uneasiness,¹ he spoke thus to the merchant’s wife:

“Lady, a handful² of ghee is wanted.”

Then that merchant’s wife had a handful of ghee given to Jīvaka Komārabhacca. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, cooking up that handful of ghee with various medicines, made that merchant’s wife lie down on her back on a couch and gave it (to her) through the nose. Then that ghee, given through the nose, came out through the mouth. Then that merchant’s wife, spitting it into a receptacle, enjoined a slave-woman, saying:

“Come, now, take up this ghee with cotton.”³

¹ vikāra. ² pasata, a small measure of capacity; explained at Vin-a 1116 as ekahatthapūṭa, what is contained in one hand. See Vinaya Texts ii.178, n.. ³ picu, which Vin-a 1116 explains by kappāsapaṭala, a cotton covering.

1.272 Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “It is astonishing how stingy this housewife¹ is, in that she has this ghee, which ought to be thrown away, taken up with cotton; many of my very precious medicines went into it, and what kind of a fee² will she give me?”

Then that merchant’s wife, having observed Jīvaka Komārabhacca’s uneasiness, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “Teacher, why are you perturbed?”

“It occurred to me in this case: it is astonishing ... will she give me?”

8.1.13 4.385 “But, teacher, we householders know about this economy³; this ghee is excellent for the servants or workmen for rubbing their feet, or poured out into a lamp. Do not you, teacher, be perturbed, your fee will not be lacking.”⁴

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca removed the merchant’s wife’s seven year old disease of the head by just the one treatment through the nose.⁵ Then that merchant’s wife, being well, gave four thousand⁶ to Jīvaka Komārabhacca; her son, thinking, “My mother is well”, gave four thousand; her daughter-in-law, thinking, “My mother-in-law is well”, gave four thousand; the householder, the merchant, thinking, “My wife is well”, gave four thousand and a slave and a slave-woman and a horse-chariot. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking these sixteen thousand and the slave and the slave-woman and the horse-chariot, set out for Rājagaha; in due course he approached Abhaya, the king’s son, at Rājagaha; having approached he spoke thus to Abhaya, the king’s son:

“Sire, this is for my first work: sixteen thousand and a slave and a slave-woman and a horse-chariot. May your highness⁷ accept it as a tribute for having had me cared for.”⁸

“No, good Jīvaka, let it be for you yourself; but do build a dwelling

¹ gharaṇī, see BD 2.203, n. 1. ² deyyadhamma. ³ saṇḍhama. ⁴ hāyati, to waste away, to disappear, diminish, dwindle. ⁵ natthukamma. Allowed to monks at Vin 1.204. Cf. Vin 3.83 and BD 1.143, n. 2. At DN i.12 called by some recluses and brahmins a low or worldly lore from which Gotama abstains. ⁶ probably kahāpaṇas. ⁷ deva, masculine singular here. ⁸ posāvanika.

in our palace¹.”

“Very well, sire,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered Abhaya, the king’s son, in assent, built a dwelling in the palace of Abhaya, the king’s son.

THE STORY OF KING BIMBISĀRA

Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha came to suffer from a fistula; his outer garments were stained with blood. The queens, seeing this, made fun of him, saying: “Now the king is in his courses, the king is having a period, soon the king will give birth.” On account of this the king became ashamed. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to Abhaya, the king’s son:

“Good Abhaya, I have such a disease that my outer garments are stained with blood. The queens, seeing this, make fun of me, saying, ‘... the king will give birth’. Please, good Abhaya, do find a doctor such as could attend me.”

“Sire, there is this Jīvaka of ours, a young doctor of high repute, he will attend your majesty.”

“Very well, good Abhaya, command the doctor, Jīvaka, so that he shall attend me.”

Then Abhaya, the king’s son, commanded Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Go, good Jīvaka, attend the king.”

“Very well, sire,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered Abhaya, the king’s son, in assent, taking medicine under his nail, approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, he spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

“Sire, let me see the disease.”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca removed King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha’s fistula with just the one ointment. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, being well, having had five hundred women adorned with all kinds of ornaments, having made them take (these) off, having had them made into a pile, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komāra-bhacca: “Let all these ornaments of the five hundred women be yours, good Jīvaka.”

¹ antepura, not women’s quarters here.

“No, sire, may your majesty remember my office.”

“Well then, good Jīvaka, may you tend me and the women¹ and the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head.”

“Very well, sire,” Jīvaka Komārabhacca answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent.

THE STORY OF THE MERCHANT OF RĀJAGAHA

8.1.16 Now at that time a merchant of Rājagaha had had a disease of the head for seven years. Many very great, world-famed doctors who had come had not been able to cure him. Taking much gold, they went away. Moreover he came to be given up by the doctors. Some doctors spoke thus: “The householder, the merchant will pass away² on the fifth day.” Some doctors spoke thus: “The householder, the merchant will pass away on the seventh day.” Then it occurred to the urban council of Rājagaha: “This householder, the merchant is very useful to the king as well as to the urban council, but yet he has been given up by the doctors. Some doctors speak thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the fifth day.’ Some doctors speak thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the seventh day.’ Now, this Jīvaka, the king’s doctor, is young and of good repute. Suppose we should ask Jīvaka, the king’s doctor, to attend the householder, the merchant?”

8.1.17
4.387 Then the urban council of Rājagaha approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached they spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

“Sire, this householder, the merchant is very useful to your majesty as well as to the citizens; but then he is given up by the doctors ... ‘... will die on the seventh day’. It were good if your majesty were to command Jīvaka, the doctor, to attend the householder, the merchant.”

1.274
¹ itthāgāra. ² kālam karissati, will complete his time (here, in this birth), will die.

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Go, good Jivaka, attend the householder, the merchant.”

“Very well, sire,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, approached that householder, the merchant; having approached, having observed the uneasiness of the householder, the merchant, he spoke thus to the householder, the merchant:

“If I, householder, should make you well, what would be my fee?”

“All my property shall become yours, teacher, and I will be your slave.”

“Now, householder, are you able to lie down on one side for seven months?”

“I am able, teacher, to lie down on one side for seven months.”

“Now, householder, are you able to lie down on the other side for seven months?”

“I am able, teacher, to lie down on the other side for seven months.”

“Now, householder, are you able to lie down on your back for seven months?”

“I am able, teacher, to lie down on my back for seven months.”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, having made the householder, the merchant lie down on a couch, having strapped him to the couch, having cut open the skin of his head, having opened¹ a suture in the skull,² having drawn out two living creatures,³ showed them to the people, saying:

“Do you see, masters, these two living creatures, the one small, the other large? This large living creature was seen by those teachers who spoke thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the fifth day’; on the fifth day it would have destroyed the brain of the householder, the merchant, and when the brain had been destroyed the householder, the merchant would have passed away. It was rightly seen by those teachers. This small living creature was seen by those teachers who spoke thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the seventh day'; on the seventh day it would have destroyed the brain of the householder, the merchant, and when the brain had been destroyed the householder, the merchant would have passed away. It was rightly seen by those teachers." And having closed the suture of the skull, having sewn up the skin of the head, he applied an ointment.

¹ vināmetvā, Vin-a 1117 explains by vivaritvā. ² sibbinī, cf. Ja vi.339, sibbāni (plural).

³ pāṇaka.

Then the householder, the merchant, when seven days had passed, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

"I am not able, teacher, to lie down on one side for seven months."

"But did you not, householder, answer me in assent, saying: 'I am able, teacher, to lie down on one side for seven months'?"

"It is true, teacher, that I answered thus, but I will die, I am not able to lie down on one side for seven months."

"Well then, householder, you lie down on the other side for seven months."

Then the householder, the merchant, when seven days had passed, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

"I am not able, teacher, to lie down on the other side for seven months."

"But did you not, householder, answer me in assent, saying: 'I am able, teacher, to lie down on the other side for seven months'?"

"It is true, teacher, that I answered thus, but I will die, I am not able to lie down on the other side for seven months."

"Well then, householder, you lie down on your back for seven months."

Then the householder, the merchant, when seven days had passed, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

"I am not able, teacher, to lie down on my back for seven months."

"But did you not, householder, answer me in assent, saying: 'I am able, teacher, to lie down on my back for seven months'?"

"It is true, teacher, that I answered thus, but I will die I am not able to lie down on my back for seven months."

"If I, householder, had not spoken to you thus, you would not have lain down so long (as this); but I knew beforehand that the householder, the merchant would become well in three times seven days. Rise up, householder, you are well; find what is my fee.”

“All my property shall become yours, teacher, and I will be your slave.”

“No, householder, do not give me all your property and do not be my slave; give a hundred thousand to the king and a hundred thousand to me.”

Then the householder, the merchant, being well, gave a hundred thousand to the king and a hundred thousand to Jīvaka Komārabhacca.

THE STORY OF THE MERCHANT’S SON

Now at that time the son of a merchant of Benares,¹ while playing at turning somersaults,² came to suffer from a twist in the bowels, so that he did not properly digest the conje³ that he drank nor did he properly digest the food that he ate or relieve himself regularly. Because of this he became thin, wretched, his colour bad, yellowish, the veins showing all over his body.³ Then it occurred to the merchant of Benares:

“Now what kind of affliction has my son? He does not properly digest the conje that he drinks and he does not properly digest the food that he eats and he does not relieve himself regularly. Because of this he is thin, wretched, of a bad colour, yellowish, the veins showing all over his body. What now if I, having gone to Rājagaha, should ask the king for Jīvaka, the doctor, to attend my son?”

Then the merchant of Benares, having gone to Rājagaha, approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, he spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

“Sire, my son has this kind of affliction: he does not properly digest ... the veins showing all over his body. It were good if your majesty were to command Jīvaka, the doctor, to attend my son.”

¹ Bārāṇaseyyaka, an inhabitant of Benares, Bārāṇasī; on the analogy of Pāveyyaka, an inhabitant of Pāvā, see above, BD 4.31, n. 2. ² mokkha^cicāya kiḷantassa. Cf. BD 1.316, n. 1, n.12. ³ stock-phrase.

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Go, good Jīvaka, having gone to Benares, attend the son of the merchant of Benares.”

“Very well, sire,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, having gone to Benares, approached the son of the merchant of Benares; having approached, having observed the uneasiness of the son of the merchant of Benares, having caused the people to be turned away, having surrounded him with a curtain,¹ having tied him to a post, having placed his wife in front (of him), having cut open the skin of his stomach, having drawn out the twisted bowel, showed it to his wife, saying: “See, this was your husband’s affliction; because of this he did not properly digest the conje^y that he drank and did not properly digest the food that he ate and did not relieve himself regularly; because of this he is thin, wretched, his colour bad, yellowish, the veins showing all over his body.” Having straightened out the twisted bowel, having put back the bowel again, having sewn up the skin of the stomach, he applied an ointment. Then the son of the merchant of Benares soon became well. Then the merchant of Benares, saying: “My son is well,” gave sixteen thousand to Jīvaka Komārabhacca. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking those sixteen thousand, went back again to Rājagaha.

THE STORY OF KING PAJJOTA

Now at that time King Pajjota² came to be suffering from jaundice.³ Many very great, world-famed doctors, who had come had not been able to cure him; taking much gold, they went away. Then King Pajjota sent a messenger to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, saying: “I have this kind of disease; it would be good if your majesty were to ¹ tirokaraṇī, as at Vin 2.152. ² King of Avantī, capital Ujjenī; cf. Dh-p-a i.192.

³ paṇḍurogābādha. Cf. Vin 1.206 where a monk had this disease. The cure “allowed” him was different from the one administered to Pajjota.

command Jīvaka, the doctor, so that he should attend me.” Then King Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Go, good Jīvaka, having gone to Ujjenī, attend King Pajjota.”

“Very well, sire,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, having gone to Ujjenī, approached King Pajjota, and having approached, having observed his uneasiness, he spoke thus to King Pajjota:

“Sire, I will cook up some ghee, and your majesty will drink it.”

“No, good Jīvaka, do what you can to make (me) well without ghee; ghee is abhorrent to me, loathsome.” Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “The king’s disease is of such a kind that it is not possible to make him well without ghee. Suppose I should cook up the ghee (so that it has) the colour of an astringent decoction, the smell of an astringent decoction, the taste of an astringent decoction¹?”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca cooked up the ghee with various medicines (so that it had) the colour of an astringent decoction, the smell of an astringent decoction, the taste of an astringent decoction. Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “When the king has drunk and digested the ghee, it will make him sick. This king is violent,² he might have me killed. Suppose I should ask (for permission to go away) beforehand?” Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached King Pajjota; having approached he spoke thus to King Pajjota:

“Sire, we doctors at such a moment³ as this are pulling up roots, gathering medicines. It were good if your majesty were to command at the stables⁴ and at the gateways, saying: ‘Let Jīvaka go out by means of whatever conveyance¹ he desires, let him go out by whatever gateway he desires, let him go out at whatever time he desires, let him come in at whatever time he desires’.” Then King Pajjota commanded at the stables and at the gateways, saying: “Let Jīvaka go out by means of whatever conveyance he desires, let him go out by whatever gateway he desires, let him go out at whatever time he desires, let him come in at whatever time he desires.”

¹ kasāvavaṇṇaṃ kasāvagandhaṃ kasāvarasaṃ. Vinaya Texts ii.187 reads “so that it takes the colour, lie smell and the taste of an astringent decoction”. Pali-English Dictionary suggests “of reddish-yellow colour, having a pungent smell, having an astringent taste.” Four kinds of kasāva, astringent decoctions, to be used as medicine in flavouring food, are allowed at Vin 1.201, and kasāvodaka, a watery astringent decoction, at Vin 1.205. At Vin 2.151 the kasāva allowed was an astringent liquid to be applied to the colouring matter given to walls so as to make the colouring stick on. ² caṇḍa. Pajjota’s full name was Caṇḍapajjota. ³ muhutta is a short period of time, its use here presumably implying that it was urgent for him to get away on his business. ⁴ vāhanāgāra, the room for the conveyances, mounts, vehicles or beasts of burden, so stables, coach house.

Now at that time King Pajjota had a she-elephant, called Bhaddavatikā, who could do fifty yojanas.² Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca offered the ghee to King Pajjota, saying: “Let your majesty drink an astringent decoction.” Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca having made King Pajjota drink the ghee, having gone to the elephant stable, hastened out of the city on the she-elephant, Bhaddavatikā.

Then King Pajjota, when he had drunk and digested the ghee, was sick. Then King Pajjota spoke thus to the people: “Good sirs, the wicked Jīvaka has made me drink ghee. Well now, good sirs, look for the doctor, Jīvaka.”

“Sire, he has hastened out of the city on the she-elephant, Bhaddavatikā.”

Now at that time King Pajjota came to have a slave called Kāka,³ who could do sixty yojanas and who was born of a non-human being. Then King Pajjota commanded the slave, Kāka, saying: “Go, good Kāka, make Jīvaka, the doctor, return, saying, ‘The king, teacher, orders you to come back’.”⁴ Now, good Kāka, these doctors are full of cunning, so do not accept anything from him.”

And the slave, Kāka, caught up Jīvaka Komārabhacca on the road to Kosambī as he was having breakfast. Then Kāka, the slave, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “The king, teacher, orders you to come back.”

¹ vāhana, mount. ² Vinaya Texts ii.188 adds “(in one day)”; this information is given at Dh-p-a i.196: ekadivasam paññasa yojanāni gacchati. Above she is described as paññāsayojanikā. ³ Mentioned at Dh-p-a i.196. ⁴ nivattāpeti, “is having you sent back”.

“Wait, good Kāka, until we have eaten; come, good Kāka, you eat.”

“No, teacher, I am commanded by the king, saying: ‘Now good Kāka, these doctors are full of cunning, so do not accept anything from him’.”

Now at that time Jīvaka Komārabhacca, having stripped off¹ the medicinal (part) with his nail, was eating an emblic myrobalan² and drinking water. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to Kāka, the slave: “Here, good Kāka, eat the emblic myrobalan and drink the water.”

Then Kāka, the slave, thinking: “This doctor is eating the emblic myrobalan and drinking the water, there should not be anything harmful,”³ ate half the emblic myrobalan and drank the water. But he ejected that half emblic myrobalan that he was eating, on the spot. Then Kāka, the slave, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“Is there life for me, teacher?”

“Do not be afraid, good Kāka, for you will get well; but the king is violent, that king might have me killed, so I am not coming back,” and giving the she-elephant, Bhaddavatikā, into Kāka’s charge, he set out for Rājagaha; in due course he approached Rājagaha, and King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached he told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.

“You did well, good Jīvaka, in not going back, that king is violent, he might have you killed.”

Then King Pajjota, being well, sent a messenger to Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Let Jīvaka come, I will grant him a boon.”

“No, master, let his majesty remember my office.”

¹ olumpetvā, with variant reading (see Vin 1.390) ulumpetvā, odametvā, oḷumpetvā. Vin-a 1117 explains by odahitvā pakkhipitvā, having put in, having inserted.

² āmalaka, phyllanthus emblica. The fruit allowed as a medicine at Vin 1.201. ³ na arahati kiñci pāpakam hotum.

ON A PAIR OF SIVEYYAKA CLOTHS

Now at that time there accrued to King Pajjota a pair of Siveyyaka cloths¹ which were the chief and best and foremost and most excellent and loveliest of many cloths, of many pairs of cloths, of many hundred pairs of cloths, of many thousand pairs of cloths, of many hundred thousand pairs of cloths. Then King Pajjota sent this pair of Siveyyaka cloths to Jīvaka Komārabhacca. Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“This pair of Siveyyaka cloths, sent me by King Pajjota, is the most excellent and loveliest of many cloths ...; no one else is worthy of it but the Lord, the perfected one, the wholly awakened one, or King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.”

ON EXACTLY THIRTY PURGES

Now at that time the Lord came to have a disturbance of the humours of his body.² Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Ānanda, the Truth-finder has a disturbance of the humours of his

¹ Siveyyaka dussayuga. Vin-a 1117 gives two explanations of Siveyyaka: either it means the cloths used in the Uttarakuru country for covering the dead bodies brought to the cemeteries, sivatthika, in which case a certain kind of bird taking a piece of flesh to the Himalayas, eats it and throws aside the cloth; then a forest-wanderer seeing the cloth brings it to the king; this cloth was obtained by Pajjota in this way. Or, Siveyyaka means that the good women of the Sivi kingdom think, ‘thread is spun from these filicules’ and they speak of a cloth woven of this thread by this name. “Because of this siveyyaka means cemetery-cloth in the Uttarakuru country, and cloth produced in the Sivi kingdom”. Vinaya Texts ii.190 says “No doubt the latter explication is the right one”. Cf. Pāvā, Pāveyyaka, above, BD 4.31, n. 2 and Bārāṇasī, Bārāṇaseyyaka, above, BD 4.389, n. 1.

Dussayuga means the two cloths, the loin-cloth or dhoti, and the upper cloth, which are usually worn by laymen. ² kāyo dosābhisanno. Cf. Vin 1.206 where a certain monk was abhisannaskāya, “had a superfluity of humours in his body”; various purgative, were allowed. At Vin 2.119 some monks also became abhisannakāya. Vinaya Texts ii.60, n. 6 says that dosa “is a disturbance of the so-called humours in the body.” Dosa is used in sense of some kind of sickness at Mil 43. At Mil 172 we get tikicchako abhisanne kāye kupite dose sinehaniyāni bhesajjāni deti, “does a physician give softening medicines when the body is full of humours and afflicted by them?”

body; the Truth-finder desires to take¹ a purgative.”² Then the venerable Ānanda approached Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having approached he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“Jīvaka, sir, the Truth-finder has a disturbance of the humours of his body; the Truth-finder desires to take a purgative.”

“Well now, revered Ānanda, lubricate³ the Truth-finder’s body for a few days.” Then the venerable Ānanda, having lubricated the Truth-finder’s body for a few days, approached Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having approached he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“Jīvaka, sir, the Truth-finder’s body has been lubricated; what do you think is right for him now?”

Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “It is not suitable that I should give a strong purgative to the Lord,” and having had three handfuls of lotuses⁴ mixed⁵ with various medicines, he approached the Lord; having approached he offered the Lord one handful of lotuses, saying: “Lord, may the Lord sniff up⁶ (the scent of) this first handful of lotuses; this will purge the Lord ten times.” Then he offered the Lord the second handful of lotuses, saying: “Lord, may the Lord sniff up (the scent of) this second handful of lotuses; this will purge the Lord ten times.” Then he offered the Lord the third handful of lotuses, saying: “Lord, may the Lord sniff up (the scent of) this third handful of lotuses; this will purge the Lord ten times”; thus, he thought that the Lord would be purged all together thirty times.⁷ Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, having given the Lord a purgative for thirty times all together, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca when he had gone outside the porch: “A purgative has been given by me to the Lord for all together thirty times. The Lord has a disturbance of the humours of his body; it will not purge the Lord all together thirty times, it will purge the Lord twenty-nine times, but then the Lord, being purged, will bathe; when he has bathed, the Lord will purge once, thus the Lord will be purged all together thirty times.” Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind¹ of Jīvaka Komārabhacca, addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

¹ pātuṃ, literally to drink; cf. same phrase at Vin 1.206, where purging drinks are allowed. ² virecana. This and three other kinds are held (at DN i.12) by some recluses and Brahmins to be worldly lore—abstained from by Gotama. ³ sinehetha. Cf. sinehaniyāni bhesajjāni at Mil 172. ⁴ uppalahatthāni. ⁵ paribhāvetvā, or supplied with, treated with. ⁶ upasiṅghatu, cf. SN i.204. ⁷ Passive construction. Literally: thus will there be for the Lord a purge thirty times.

“Now, Ānanda, it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca when he had gone outside the porch: ‘A purgative has been given by me to the Lord ... thus the Lord will be purged all together thirty times.’ Well now, Ānanda, prepare (some) hot water.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda having answered the Lord in assent, prepared (some) hot water.

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, is the Lord purged?”

“I am purged, Jīvaka.”

“Now, Lord, it occurred to me after I had gone outside the porch: ‘A purgative has been given by me to the Lord ... thus the Lord will be purged all together thirty times.’ Lord, let the Lord bathe, let the well-farer bathe.” Then the Lord bathed in the hot water; when he had bathed the Lord purged once; thus the Lord purged all together thirty times. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, until the Lord’s body comes to be normal, almsfood of juices will be enough.”²

ON ASKING FOR A BOON

And the Lord’s body soon became normal.

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking that pair of Siveyyaka cloths, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, ¹ cetasā cetoparivitakkam aññāya, stock; cf. SN i.103, SN i.178. ² alam yūsapīṇḍapātena. Vinaya Texts ii.193 translates “you had better abstain from liquid food”. Natural juices, akaṭṭayūsa, are allowed at Vin 1.206 as a purgative.

he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, I ask one boon of the Lord.”

“Jīvaka, Truth-finders are beyond (granting) boons.”¹

“Lord, it is what is allowable and what is blameless.”

“Speak on, Jīvaka.”

“Lord, the Lord and the Order of monks are wearers of rag-robcs.² Lord, this pair of Siveyyaka cloths was sent me by King Pajjota; of many cloths, of many pairs of cloths, of many hundred pairs of cloths, of many thousand pairs of cloths, of many hundred thousand pairs of cloths, it is the chief and best and foremost and most excellent and loveliest. Lord, may the Lord accept my pair of Siveyyaka cloths, and may he allow householders’ robes³ to the Order of monks.” The Lord accepted the pair of Siveyyaka cloths. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with dhamma-talk.⁴ And when Jīvaka Komārabhacca had been gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with dhamma-talk, rising from his seat, greeting the Lord, he departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given dhamma-talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, householders’ robes. Whoever wishes may be a rag-robe wearer; whoever wishes may consent to (accept) householders’ robes.⁵ And I, monks, commend satisfaction with the one or the other.”⁶

People in Rājagaha heard: “Householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord,” and these people became joyful, elated, thinking:

¹ atikhantavarā. Cf. Vin 1.82, Vin 1.292. See above, BD 4.104. ² Vin-a 1119 says that neither the Lord during the twenty years since his attainment of enlightenment until this event happened, nor any monk, had accepted householders’ robes; all were rag-robe wearers. ³ Vin-a 1119 makes the point that these were robes (or robe-material) given by householders. ⁴ Vin-a 1119 says “with talk connected with the advantage of giving clothes”. ⁵ Cf. Vin 3.172 (BD 1.298). ⁶ itaritarena. Cf. Kd 8.3.2. Vin-a 1119 says “with one of little value, with one of great value, with whatever it is”. Thus CHILDERS is, I think, right in understanding the phrase as “whether the robes are good or bad”, see Vinaya Texts ii.194, n. 2.

“Now we will give gifts, we will work merit,¹ inasmuch as householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord.” And in just one day many thousand robes were produced in Rājagaha.

Countrysidepeople heard: “Householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord,” and these people became joyful and elated, thinking: ‘Now we will give gifts, we will work merit, inasmuch as householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord.’ And in just one day many thousand robes were produced in the country.

Now at that time a mantle² accrued to the Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a mantle.” A silk mantle accrued. “I allow you, monks, a silk mantle,” he said. A fleecy coverlet accrued.³ “I allow you, monks, a fleecy coverlet,” he said.

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

ON PERMISSION FOR WOOLLEN GARMENTS, ETC.

Now at that time the king of Kāsi⁴ sent woollen stuff⁵ that was worth

¹ puññam karissāma. This literal translation best preserves the Indian notion of karma, kamma, deeds, actions, or working whose result is held to be either good or bad, meritorious or lacking in merit. ² pāvāra, or cloak. Word occurs at Ja v.409. Vin-a 1119 says salomako kappāsikapāvāro, a cotton pāvāra with something woolly—loma being the wool or hair of an animal. ³ kojava. Pali-English Dictionary gives a “rug or cover with long hair, a fleecy counterpane”, and CHILDERS “a goat’s hair coverlet of fine workmanship,” (cf. Abhidhānappadīpa 312). Vin-a 1119 distinguishes between the ordinary kojava, meant here, and kojava which is mahāpiṭṭhiya, large at the back (?), and says that like a pāvāra it is made of wool. Word occurs again at Dh-p-a i.177, translated BURLINGAME, Buddhist Legends, i.259, “coverlet of goat’s hair”; and at Dh-p-a iii.297, as pāvāra-kojava, translated Buddhist Legends iii.96, “cloak and goats’ hair coverlet”. Kojava occurs in definition of goṇaka, a woollen cover with long fleece, at Vin-a 1086, DN-a 86, Thig-a 253, SN-a ii.325. ⁴ Kāsi was a mahājanapada, whose capital was Benares. Vin-a 1119 says that the king was brother to Pasenadi by the same father. ⁵ kambala, or a woollen blanket or garment.

half a kāsi, being valued at half a kāsi,¹ to Jīvaka Komārabhacca. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking that woollen stuff that was worth half a kāsi, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this woollen stuff that is worth half a kāsi, being valued at half a kāsi, was sent to me by the king of Kāsi. Lord, may the Lord accept the woollen stuff from me that it may be for me a blessing and a happiness for a long time.” The Lord accepted the woollen stuff. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with dhamma-talk. Jīvaka Komārabhacca, gladdened ... with dhamma-talk, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, woollen stuff.”

At that time various kinds² of robe-material accrued to the Order. Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, what (kind of) robe-materials are allowed by the Lord, what are not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow six (kinds of) robe-materials³:

¹ aḍḍhakāsikaṃ kambalaṃ pahesi upaḍḍhakāsinaṃ khamamānaṃ. Vinaya Texts ii.195 has “a woollen garment made half of Benares cloth ...” with note that “our translation of aḍḍhakāsikaṃ kambalaṃ is merely conjectural.” Vin-a 1119 says “here kāsi means a thousand, a thing worth that is kāsiya, but this is worth five hundred, therefore it is called half-kāsi; for this same reason it is said upaḍḍhakāsinaṃ khamamānaṃ”. The whole passage is obscure. Benares was famous for its silks and muslins, but the stuff sent by the king was of wool. I am therefore following the Commentary’s lead in taking kāsi, kāsika and kāsinaṃ as representing worth, cost or value in the above passage. Critical Pali Dictionary under aḍḍhakāsika says that it “seems originally to mean a sort of ‘half-muslin’ (cf. kāsika), but here taken in the sense of a piece of stuff sufficient for half the people of Kāsi”. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names under Aḍḍhākāsī, the courtesan, for suggestions that she derived her name from the fact that she charged her patrons “five hundred” (i.e. probably kahāpaṇas). Pp-a 315 gives the value of brand new, neither new nor old, and worn Kāsi cloths. Ja vi.151, Ja vi.450 says that a garment of Kāsi cloth is worth a hundred thousand. ² uccāvacaṇi. Vin-a 1119 says “nice and nasty.” ³ At Vin 1.58, Vin 1.96 these six are called benefits extra to rag-robes. At AN iv.394 the first four are mentioned as forming part of a rich gift. See BD 2.143 for notes. They are, naturally, identical with the six kinds of thread or yarn, Vin 3.256.

linen, cotton, silk, wool, coarse hempen cloth, canvas.”

Now at that time these monks consented to householders’ robes; (but) being scrupulous, they did not consent to rag-robes, thinking: “Only one (kind of) robe is allowed by the Lord, not two (kinds).” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow him who consents to householders’ robes to consent also to rag-robes. And I, monks, commend satisfaction with both.”¹

ON SEARCHING FOR RAG-ROBES

Now at that time several² monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. Some monks went into a cemetery for rag-robes,³ other monks did not wait. Those monks who went into the cemetery for rag-robes obtained rag-robes; those monks who did not wait spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you not wait?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, you, monks, not to give a portion, if you are not willing, to those who do not wait.”

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. Some monks went into a cemetery for rag-robes, other monks waited. Those monks who went into the cemetery for rag-robes obtained rag-robes; those monks who waited spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you not go in?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give a portion, (even) if you are not willing, to those who wait.”

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. Some monks went into a cemetery for ¹ Cf. Kd 8.1.35. ² sambahulā. ³ At Vism 62 cemetery-rags, śosānika, head the list of rags from which rag-robes can be made.

rag-robes first, other monks went in afterwards. Those monks who went into the cemetery for rag-robes first, obtained rag-robes. Those monks who went in afterwards did not obtain them; these spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you go in afterwards?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, not to give a portion, if you are not willing, to those who go in afterwards.”

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. These went into a cemetery together¹ for rag-robes; some monks obtained rag-robes, other monks did not obtain them. Those monks who did not obtain them spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did not you obtain (any)?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give a portion, (even) if you are not willing, to those who go in together with (you).”

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. These, having made an agreement,² went into a cemetery for rag-robes; some monks obtained rag-robes, other monks did not obtain them. Those monks who did not obtain them, spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you not obtain (any)?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having made an agreement, to give a portion, (even) if you are not willing, to those who go in.”

¹ Sadisā okkamimsu, Vin-a 1120 gives two explanations: either they all, sabbe, went in, or, they went in at one part (or quarter), ekadisāya. ² Vin-a 1120 says that “the rag-robes obtained having been distributed to all, they say, ‘We will take them’”.

ON AN AGREEMENT FOR THE RECEIVER OF CLOTH

18.5.1 Now at that time people, taking robe-material, came to a monastery; these, not finding an acceptor,¹ conveyed it back; little robe-material accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

4.401 “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as acceptor of robe-material²: one who would not follow a wrong course through partiality, one who would not follow a wrong course through hatred, one who would not follow a wrong course through stupidity, one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is taken and what is not taken.³

18.5.2 “And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon. First, a monk is to be requested. Having requested (him), the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon the monk so and so as acceptor of robe-material. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the monk so and so as acceptor of robe-material. If the agreement upon the monk so and so as acceptor of robe-material is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk so and so is agreed upon by the Order as acceptor of robe-material. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

18.6.1 Now at that time the monks who were acceptors of robe-material, having accepted robe-material, leaving it just there, went away; the robe-material was lost. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I
1.284 allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five quali-

¹ paṭiggāhaka, or distributor. ² At Vin 2.176 it is said that at that time there was no acceptor of robe-material, cīvaraṭṭiggāhaka. One is to be agreed upon by the monks in precisely the same way as above, which was indeed the regular manner for appointing all the functionaries of the Order. Vin-a 1120 says that the cīvaraṭṭiggāhaka takes the robe-material which is being given to the Order by the householders. Cf. AN iii.274. ³ For gahitāgahita. cf. Vin 2.167, Vin 2.176, Vin 3.246.

ties as keeper of robe-material¹: one who would not follow a wrong course through partiality ... one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is laid by and what is not laid by.²

“And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ...” (as in Kd 8.5.2 reading keeper of robe-material instead of accepter of robe-material.)

ON AN AGREEMENT FOR A STOREROOM, ETC.

Now at that time the monks who were keepers of robe-material kept the robe-material in a shed³ and at the root of a tree and in the hollow of a nimb-tree⁴; it was eaten by rats and white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a store-room that the Order desires: a dwelling-place or a curved house⁵ or a long house⁶ or a mansion⁷ or a cave.⁸

“And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon such and such a dwelling-place as a store-room. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon such and such a dwelling-place as a store-room. If the agreement upon such and such a dwelling-place as a store-room is pleasing to the venerable ones let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such a dwelling-place is agreed upon by the Order as a store-room. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Now at that time an Order’s robe-material came to be unguarded⁹ in the store-room. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ cīvaranidāhaka, the one who lays aside or puts away the robe-material, until it is wanted. ² nihitānihita. ³ maṇḍapa. ⁴ nimbakosa. Cf. Vin 1.152. ⁵ aḍḍhayoga. See above, BD 4.75, n. 4. ⁶ pāsāda, see BD 2.16, n. 5. ⁷ hammiya, see BD 2.16, n. 6. ⁸ guha. On these five, see above, BD 4.75. ⁹ Vin-a 1121 says from rain, mice, white ants, crumbling walls.

4.403
1.285
“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as guardian of the store-room¹: one who would not follow a wrong course through partiality ... one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is guarded and what is not guarded.² And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ... ‘... The monk so and so is agreed upon by the Order as guardian of the store-room. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

8.8.2
At that time the group of six monks turned away³ the guardian of a store-room. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a guardian of a store-room is not to be turned away.⁴ Whoever should turn him away, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

8.9.1
Now at that time robe-material came to be heaped up in an Order’s store-room. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to distribute it by means of the Order that is present.”⁵ Then the whole Order, distributing the robe-material, made a tumult.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five

¹ bhaṇḍāgārika. Cf. AN iii.274. At Vin 2.176 it is said that there was no bhaṇḍāgārika at that time. The Lord allowed one to be appointed, as above. ² According to Vin-a 1122 he should guard against the pests (note before the last above), should close the doors and window-holes in the cold weather and open them in the hot weather to let the wind come in. The accepter of robe-material—whether accepted at the right time or the wrong time, whether given for urgent reasons, whether robes for the rains, rugs, sheets or towels—should give these things to the keeper of robe-material, who should give them to the guardian of the storeroom. Thus, put by in the storeroom, when the time comes, they can be given to a monk as a set of three robes, or as two robes or as one. ³ vuṭṭhāpentī, made get up, removed; cf. Vin 4.42.

⁴ Vin-a 1122 says that there are four kinds of persons not to be turned away: an older monk (older than the one who would turn him out), a guardian of a storeroom, an ill monk, one who has received lodgings from the Order. ⁵ sammukhībhūta. Vin-a 1123 says “being within the precincts and boundary.” ⁶ Vin-a 1123 says that they made a great noise, saying, ‘Give for our teacher, give for our preceptor.’

qualities as distributor of robe-material¹: one who would not follow a wrong course through partiality ... one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is distributed and what is not distributed. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ... ‘... The monk so and so is agreed upon by the Order as distributor of robe-material. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Then it occurred to the monks who were the distributors of robe-material: “Now, how should we distribute the robe-material?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having first examined² it, having estimated³ it, having equalised⁴ it, having counted the monks, having formed them into sections,⁵ to arrange⁶ a share of the robe-material (for each section).”

Then it occurred to the monks who were the distributors of robe-material: “Now, how should a share of the robe-material be given to novices?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give half a share to novices.”

Now at that time a certain monk became desirous of crossing

¹ cīvarabhājaka. Cf. Vin 2.176 where it is said that at that time there was no distributor of robe-material; one was allowed to be appointed, as above. ² uccinitvā, Vin-a 1123 saying: examining the clothes thus, saying, “This is thick, this is fine, this is massive, this is small, this is used, this is not used, this is so much in length, this is so much across”. ³ tulayitvā, weighed or measured; estimated or assessed. Vin-a 1123 says, “thinking, ‘this is worth so much, this so much’, thus determining by value”. ⁴ vaṇṇāvaṇṇaṃ katvā, having made it fair. Vin-a 1123 says, “if each (monk) obtains one (robe or piece of material) worth ten (kaḥāpaṇas?), that is right; but if he does not obtain it, then taking what is worth nine or eight together with another (piece) worth one or two, thus the meaning is: in this way arranging (or establishing) equal shares”. ⁵ vaggam bandhītvā. Vin-a 1123 says that in case the robe-material cannot be given to each one on one day, then counting the monks by tens, the portions of robe-material by tens, having formed a section one by one, having made one collection (or heap of the material), he says, “I allow you to arrange one portion of robe-material”. When the portion of robe-material is arranged thus, lots should be cast, and when this is done the portion should be distributed among those monks who win the casting of the lots. ⁶ ṭhapetuṃ, or to set aside.

over¹ with his own portion. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give his own portion to one who is crossing over.” Now at that time a certain monk became desirous of crossing over with more than one portion. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monk, to give more than one portion if he gives a compensation.”²

Then it occurred to the monks who were the distributors of robe-material: “Now, how should a share of the robe-material be given: in the order in which they came in,³ or according to seniority?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having made good anything lacking,⁴ to cast lots with kusa-grass.”⁵

ON DYING ROBES

Now at that time monks dyed robe-material with dung⁶ and with yellow clay⁷; the robe-material came to be a bad colour. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, six (kinds of) dyes: dye from roots, dye from stems,⁸ dye from bark, dye from leaves, dye from flowers, dye from fruits.”

¹ uttaritukāma. Vin-a 1124 says a river or the wilds. ² anukkhepa. Word apparently only occurs here. Vin-a 1125 says it means, “whatever goods are allowable may be delivered in return, may be handed over”, i.e. by the monk receiving more than one portion. It seems like a system of barter. ³ āgatapaṭipāṭiya. ⁴ vikalake tosetvā. Vin-a 1125 mentions two kinds of deficiencies, that of robes and that of individuals. Deficiency of robes is met by cutting up the robes that are left over into strips, so that the insufficiency is remedied. Deficiency of individuals is when monks have been counted ten by ten into sections, vagga, and one vagga is not complete, consisting of only eight or nine monks. Kusa lots should then be cast. ⁵ kusapātam kātuṃ. If the deficiency of robes cannot be satisfied, lots may be cast for another requisite, Vin-a 1125. This would hardly get over the difficulty of inadequate clothing. ⁶ chakanenā ti gomayena, Vin-a 1126. Chakana allowed at Vin 1.202 to monks who are not ill for use on the body. ⁷ paṇḍumattikā. Vin-a 1126 explains by tambamattikā, copper-coloured clay. ⁸ mūla and khandha with bīja at Vin 4.34f.

Now at that time monks dyed robe-material with cold water;¹ the robe-material came to smell nasty. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, a little dye-pot in which to boil the dye."² The dye was spilt.³ They told this matter to the Lord.⁴ He said: "I allow, you, monks, to arrange a basin (to prevent the dye from) spilling."⁵ Now at that time the monks did not know whether the dye had boiled or had not (fully) boiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to put a drop⁶ into water or on to the back of your nail."

BD 4.4

Now at that time monks, pouring out the dye, upset the pot; the pot was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, a ladle for the dye, a scoop with a handle." Now at that time the monks did not have a dye-vessel.⁷ They told this matter to the Lord. He said "I allow you, monks, a pitcher for the dye,⁸ a bowl for the dye."⁹ Now at that time monks steeped robe-material in a dish¹⁰ and also in a bowl, the robe-material was split. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, a trough for the dye."¹¹

Kd 8.10

Now at that time monks spread out robe-material on the ground; the robe-material became dusty. They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd 8.11

¹ sītunnakāya, see Vinaya Texts ii.390 for variant readings also Sinhalese edition ii.343, situndikāya. Vin-a 1126 says situdakā ti apakkarajanam vuccati, cold water means that it is called unboiled dye. ² rajanam pacitum cullarajanahumbhinti. ³ uttariyati. Uttarati is to flow over (of water), to boil over. ⁴ Omitted in text, inserted in Sinhalese edition ⁵ uttarāḷumpam bandhitum, variant readings uttarāḷumpakam, uttarāḷavam uttarāḷuvam. Passage is somewhat obscure. Vinaya Texts ii.205 has "I prescribe that you put basins (under the dye-pots) to catch the spilt (dye)". Vin-a 1126 reads uttarāḷuvan ti vaṭṭādhāraḷakam rajanakumbhīyā majjhe ṭhapetvā tam ādhāraḷakam parikkhipitvā rajanam pakkhipitum anujānāmi ti attho. evam hi kate rajanam na uttarati, i.e. "uttarāḷuva means a round basin. The meaning is, 'I allow you to put in the dye, having placed it middle of the dye-pot, having enclosed that basin; having done this, dye does not spill'." ⁶ thevakam dātum. ⁷ rajanabhājana. ⁸ rajanakolamba. ⁹ rajanaghaṭa. ¹⁰ pāti. ¹¹ rajanadoṇikā. At Vin 2.120 matikādoṇikā are allowed; cf. udakadoṇikā at Vin 2.220.

He said: “I allow you, monks, a grass matting.”¹ The grass matting was eaten by white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bamboo (for hanging up) robe-material, a cord for (hanging up) robe-material.” They hung it up² by the middle; the dye dripped down³ on both sides. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to fasten it at a corner.”⁴ The corner wore out. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a corner- thread.”⁵ The dye dripped down on one side. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks to dye it, turning it and turning it, and not to go away if the drips have not ceased.”⁶

Now at that time robe-material became stiff.⁷ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to put it into water.” Now at that time robe-material became harsh. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to beat it with the hands.”

Now at that time monks wore yellow robes, (the colour) of ivory,⁸

¹ *tiṇa-santhāra*ka; also allowed at Vin 2.113 to protect bowls set down on the ground.

² laggenti, cf. BD 2.130, n. 5. ³ galati; cf. BD 2.130, n. 6. ⁴ kaṇṇa. See Vin 1.51, where the way in which one who shares a cell is to hang up his preceptor's robe is briefly described. ⁵ kaṇṇasuttaka, a thread or line, “a string from corner to corner, a clothes line”, so Pali-English Dictionary. This must differ therefore from rajju, “a rope”, above, so that possibly rajju there is in sense of “wicker”, thus in substance not differing greatly from vaṃsa, bamboo. But more likely kaṇṇasuttaka means a thread put in at the corner of the robe to prevent the corner from wearing out; previously the monks had hung up the robe-material at the middle, i.e. they had hung it over the rajju and vaṃsa, so that the dye dripped down at both sides of these. If kaṇṇasuttaka were really a “clothes line,” surely the dye would still run down at both sides; but hanging something up by its corner would cause dye to run down at one side only. These allowances seem to be framed so as to prevent drops and splashes of dye spoiling the appearance of the place. ⁶ na ca acchinne theve pakhamituri. Vin-a 1126 says that he is not to go elsewhere until the dripping drops of dye have been cut off (ceased). Cf. the same expression at Vin 1.50, Vin 1.53, Vin 2.227, Vin 2.230. ⁷ patthinna, Vin-a 1126 says that it was hard from too much dye, too full (of dye). ⁸ dantakāsāvāni. Vin-a 1127 says “dyeing them once or twice, they wore them the colour of ivory (dantavaṇṇāni).”

not cut up.¹ People looked down, criticised, spread-it about, saying: “Like the householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, robes that are not cut up are not to be worn. Whoever should wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ALLOWANCE FOR CUT-UP CLOTH

Then the Lord, having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri.² The Lord saw the field of Magadha,³ laid out in strips,⁴ laid out in lines,⁵ laid out in embankments,⁶ laid out in squares,⁷ and seeing this, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

“Now, do you Ānanda, see the field of Magadha laid out in strips ... laid out in squares?”

“Yes, Lord.”

¹ acchinnakāni, or untorn. See above, BD 4.356, n. 4, and next paragraph below.

² Dictionary of Pali Proper Names says “a janapada (district) in India, the capital of which was Ujjeni ... Dakkhiṇāgiri lay to the south of Rājagaha, beyond the hills that surrounded the city—hence its name”. See MN-a iii.429, Snp-a 1.136, SN-a i.242, SN-a ii.176. ³ Magadhakhetta. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names for suggestion that this was “probably an extensive rice-field which at once caught the eye on account of its terraces,” and size, one might add; see Ja iii.293. ⁴ accibandha, as Siamese edition. Sinhalese edition reads accibaddha, Vin-a 1127 acchibaddha. Acci is usually a “ray”, but does not mean that here, see Vinaya Texts ii.207, n. 3. Pali-English Dictionary says “we should prefer the conjecture acchibaddha, ‘in the shape of cubes or dice’, i.e. with square fields”. Vin-a 1127 says acchibaddhan ti caturassakedārabaddham, which means “divided (or set out) in square-shaped irrigated fields”. Bandha is much more “set out, placed, formed, arranged, united or put together” than the “divided” of Vinaya Texts ii.207. The analogy is that the pieces of a monk’s robe are to be arranged or put together (not “divided”) like the parts of the field.

⁵ pāḷibandha. Vin-a 1127 says “arranged (or linked, baddha) by boundaries that are long in length and breadth”. ⁶ mariyābandha; perhaps terraces. The knowledge of terraced irrigation is very old. Vinaya Texts ii.208 gives (divided) “by outside boundaries (or ridges)”. Vin-a 1127 says mariyābandha is so called because of a short mariyāda at intervals. ⁷ siṅgātakabandha. Vin-a 1127 says that this is having pierced an embankment, mariyāda, with an embankment at the place where they meet, gataṭṭhānena; the meaning is, the form of a square, catukkasatṭhāna.

“Are you able, Ānanda, to provide¹ robes like this for the monks?”

“I am able, Lord.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Dakkhiṇāgiri for as long as he found suitable, went back again to Rājagaha. Then the venerable Ānanda, having provided robes for several monks, approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, let the Lord see the robes provided by me.”

Then the Lord, on that occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, clever is Ānanda; monks, of great intelligence is Ānanda, inasmuch as he can understand in detail the meaning of that which was spoken of by me in brief, and can make a cross-seam² and can make a short cross-seam³ and can make a circular seam⁴ and can make a short circular seam⁵ and can make a central piece⁶ and can make side pieces⁷ and can make a neck-piece⁸ and can make a knee-piece⁹ and can make an elbow-piece;¹⁰ and what is cut up must be

¹ saṃvidahituṃ. Vin-a 1127 gives dātuṃ; Vinaya Texts ii.208, n. 4, quoting Buddhaghosa, reads kātuṃ. ² kusi. This and the following words recur at Kd 16.21.3.

³ aḍḍhakusi. Critical Pali Dictionary gives “an intermediate cross-seam” following Vinaya Texts ii.209. ⁴ maṇḍala. Vin-a 1127 says maṇḍalan ti pañcakhaṇḍikacīvarassa ekekasmīṃ khaṇḍe mahāmaṇḍalaṃ, a maṇḍala means there is a large maṇḍala (seam) to each piece of a robe of five pieces. Cf. above, BD 4.356, n. 4.

⁵ aḍḍhamaṇḍalan ti khuddakamaṇḍalaṃ, Vin-a 1127. ⁶ vivaṭṭan ti maṇḍalaṃ ca aḍḍhamaṇḍalaṃ ca ekato katvā sibbitaṃ majjhima-khaṇḍaṃ, the middle piece is sewn putting together the circular seam and the short circular seam, Vin-a 1127. ⁷ (This footnote proved troublesome to typeset due to its length, so it has been moved to an appendix with other long notes on page 2984.)

⁸ gīveyyakan ti gīvaveṭhanaṭṭhāne daḷhikaraṇatthaṃ aññaṃ suttasaṃsibbitaṃ āgantukapaṭaṃ, a gīveyyaka means an added (piece of) cloth sewn together with another thread for the sake of strengthening in the place going round the neck, Vin-a 1127. ⁹ jaṅgheyyakan ti jaṅghapāpuṇaṭṭhāne tath’eva saṃsibbitaṃ paṭaṃ, it means a piece of cloth sewn together just in the place to which the knee reaches, Vin-a 1127. ¹⁰ bāhantan ti anuvivaṭṭānaṃ bahi ekekaṃ khaṇḍaṃ.

iti pañcakhaṇḍikacīvaren’ etaṃ vicāritan ti, “a bāhanta means a piece outside each of the sidepieces. It is thought of thus in regard to the robe of five pieces”, so Vin-a 1127, to which it adds, bāhantan ti suppaṃāṇacīvaraṃ pārupantena saṃharitvā bāhāya upari ṭhapitā ubho antā bahimukhā tiṭṭhanti tesam tesam nāmaṃ, a bāhanta means, if one puts on a robe of good measure, folding it together and holding up the arms, both ends stand outside the face; it is the name of these (ends).

¹⁰ bāhantan ti anuvivaṭṭānaṃ bahi ekekaṃ khaṇḍaṃ. iti pañcakhaṇḍikacīvaren’ etaṃ vicāritan ti, “a bāhanta means a piece outside each of the sidepieces. It is thought of thus in regard to the robe of five pieces”, so Vin-a 1127, to which it adds, bāhantan ti suppaṃāṇacīvaraṃ pārupantena saṃharitvā bāhāya upari ṭhapitā ubho antā bahimukhā tiṭṭhanti tesam tesam nāmaṃ, a bāhanta means, if one puts on a robe of good measure, folding it together and holding up the arms, both ends stand outside the face; it is the name of these (ends).

¹⁰ bāhantan ti anuvivaṭṭānaṃ bahi ekekaṃ khaṇḍaṃ. iti pañcakhaṇḍikacīvaren’ etaṃ vicāritan ti, “a bāhanta means a piece outside each of the sidepieces. It is thought of thus in regard to the robe of five pieces”, so Vin-a 1127, to which it adds, bāhantan ti suppaṃāṇacīvaraṃ pārupantena saṃharitvā bāhāya upari ṭhapitā ubho antā bahimukhā tiṭṭhanti tesam tesam nāmaṃ, a bāhanta means, if one puts on a robe of good measure, folding it together and holding up the arms, both ends stand outside the face; it is the name of these (ends).

¹⁰ bāhantan ti anuvivaṭṭānaṃ bahi ekekaṃ khaṇḍaṃ. iti pañcakhaṇḍikacīvaren’ etaṃ vicāritan ti, “a bāhanta means a piece outside each of the sidepieces. It is thought of thus in regard to the robe of five pieces”, so Vin-a 1127, to which it adds, bāhantan ti suppaṃāṇacīvaraṃ pārupantena saṃharitvā bāhāya upari ṭhapitā ubho antā bahimukhā tiṭṭhanti tesam tesam nāmaṃ, a bāhanta means, if one puts on a robe of good measure, folding it together and holding up the arms, both ends stand outside the face; it is the name of these (ends).

roughly darned together,¹ suitable for recluses and not coveted by opponents. I allow you, monks, an outer cloak that is cut up, an upper robe that is cut up, an inner robe that is cut up.”

ALLOWANCE FOR THREE ROBES

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Vesālī. As the Lord was going along the high-road between Rājagaha and Vesālī he saw several monks coming along smothered up in robes, having put a mattress of robes² on their heads and a mattress of robes on their backs and a mattress of robes on their hips, and seeing (them) it occurred to the Lord: “These foolish men are turned too quickly to abundance of robes;³ suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds⁴ as to robes for the monks?”

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Vesālī. The Lord stayed there in Vesālī in the Gotamaka shrine.⁵ Now at that time on the cold winter nights between the “eights”,⁶ in a time of snowfall, the Lord sat down in the open air at night with (only) one robe; the Lord was not cold. As the first watch of the night was ending the Lord became cold. The Lord put on a second robe; the Lord was not cold. As the middle watch of the night was ending the Lord became cold. The Lord put on a third robe; the Lord was not cold. As the last watch of the night was ending, as the sun was rising, in the flush of dawn,¹ the Lord became cold. The Lord put on a fourth robe; the Lord was not cold.

¹ Text reads sattalūkha; Sinhalese and Siamese editions satthalūkha, rough knife, possibly referring to it as the instrument with which monks cut up the robes; while Vinaya Texts ii.209, on analogy of suttalūkha in Kd 8.21.1 below, adopts “that reading here” (see Vinaya Texts ii.209, n.10), and translates “roughly sewn together”.

² cīvarabhisi. For bhisi see BD 2.47, n. 1. Mattresses made of five kinds of material are mentioned in Bu-Pc 14. Bhisi is neither roll, bolster nor mat, see Vinaya Texts ii.210, n. 2. ³ Cf. Vin 1.59 (above, BD 4.77). ⁴ sīmaṃ bhandeyyaṃ mariyādaṃ ṭhapeyyaṃ.

⁵ Cf. BD 2.1, n. 1. ⁶ antarattḥakāsu. Cf. Vin 1.31, and see above, BD 4.41, n. 3.

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Even those who in this dhamma and discipline² are sons of respectable families,³ susceptible to cold, afraid of cold, even these are able to keep themselves going with three robes. Suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds as to robes for monks—were to allow three robes?” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Now as I, monks, was going along the high-road between Rājagaha and Vesālī, I saw several monks coming along smothered up in robes, having put a mattress of robes on their heads and a mattress of robes on their backs and a mattress of robes on their hips; seeing them, it occurred to me: ‘These foolish men have turned too quickly to abundance of robes; suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds as to robes for monks?’

“Then I, monks, on the cold winter nights between the ‘eights’, in a time of snowfall, sat down in the open air at night with (only) one robe; I was not cold. As the first watch of the night was ending I became cold. I put on a second robe; I was not cold. As the middle watch of the night was ending I became cold. I put on a third robe; I was not cold. As the last watch of the night was ending, as the sun was rising, in the flush of dawn, I became cold. I put on a fourth robe; I was not cold. Then, monks, it occurred to me: ‘Even those who in this dhamma and discipline are sons of respectable families, susceptible to cold, afraid of cold, even these are able to keep themselves going with three robes. Suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds as to robes for monks and were to allow three robes? ' I allow you, monks, three robes: a double outer cloak, a single upper robe, a single inner robe.'¹

¹ nandimukhiyā rattiya. Nandimukhī is literally “joy-faced”; cf. Homer’s “rosy-fingered dawn”. Same expression occurs at Vin 2.236. Vinaya Texts iii.299, n. 1 quotes Buddhaghosa as saying nandimukhiyā rattiya ti aruṇadhatakāle pītimukhā viya ratti khāyāti ten’ āha nandimukhiyā ti, “when the night is joy-faced means, at the time of sunrise the night appears like a face of delight, because of this it is called: when the night is joy-faced”. See also Vinaya Texts ii.211, n. 2. ² Vin.1.391 says that “after dhammavinaye B inserts pabbajitā”, gone forth, as does the Sinhalese edition (B is of course a manuscript.) ³ ye pi kho te kulaputtā. Vinaya Texts ii.211, n. 3 says “in the text read ye pi kho kulaputtā”, but this is not borne out by either the Sinhalese or the Siamese editions.

Vin 1.28

ON EXTRA ROBES

Now at that time² the group of six monks, saying: "Three robes are allowed by the Lord," entered a village in one set of three robes, remained in the monastery in another set of three robes, went down to bathe in another set of three robes. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can the group of six monks wear an extra robe?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

Kd 8.13

"Monks, an extra robe should not be worn; whoever should wear (one) should be dealt with according to the rule."³

Now at that time⁴ an extra robe accrued to the venerable Ānanda; and the venerable Ānanda wanted to give this robe to the venerable Sāriputta, but the venerable Sāriputta was staying at Sāketa. Then it occurred to the venerable Ānanda: "It is laid down⁵ by the Lord that an extra robe should not be worn. And this extra robe has accrued to me, and I want to give this robe to the venerable Sāriputta, but the venerable Sāriputta is staying at Sāketa. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd 8.13

BD 4.4

¹ See BD 2.iX, n. 2. Vin-a 1128 says that as the Lord kept himself going with four robes, he allowed the outer cloth to be double, the others single; thus there come to be four robes. ² = Bu-NP 1, where also the rule against wearing an extra robe and the penalty for doing so are laid down. ³ i.e. Bu-NP 1, suggesting that this, or at least the first draft of the rule, had been formulated by the time that this portion of the Vinaya was compiled. ⁴ This paragraph = a portion of Bu-NP 1 (Vin 3.195). ⁵ Vin 3.195 inserts sikkhāpadaṃ (a rule for training) before paññattam (laid down).

“But how long, Ānanda, before Sāriputta will come (here)?”

“Lord, on the ninth or tenth day,” he said.

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to wear an extra robe for at most ten days.”¹

8.13.8 Now at that time an extra robe accrued to monks. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now what line of conduct should be followed in regard to an extra robe?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to assign an extra robe.”²

8.14.1 Then the Lord, having stayed at Vesālī for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Benares. Walking on tour, in due course he arrived at Benares. The Lord stayed there near Benares in the deer-park at Isipatana. Now at that time a certain monk’s inner robe came to be torn. Then it occurred to that monk: “Three robes are allowed by the Lord: the double outer cloak, the single upper robe, the single inner robe. But my inner robe is torn. Suppose I were to insert a patch,³ so that it⁴ will be double cloth all round, single in the middle?”

8.14.2 Then that monk inserted a patch. As the Lord was touring the lodgings he saw that monk inserting the patch; seeing (him) he approached that monk, having approached, he spoke thus to that monk:

“What are you doing, monk?”

“I am inserting a patch, Lord.”

4.413 “It is very good, monk, it is good that you, monk, insert a patch.”

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ Cf. second draft of rule in Bu-NP 1, Vin 3.196. ² At Vin 3.196 an extra robe is defined as “one that is not allotted, not assigned”. Presumably if it is either allotted, or assigned, it ceases to be an extra robe. At Vin 1.297 the three robes (excluding any extra one) are allowed to be allotted but not assigned. ³ aggalaṃ acchupeyyaṃ. On aggala see BD 2.409, n. 6. ⁴ i.e. the robe.

“I allow you, monks, when clothes¹ are unsoiled,² when what is allowable is unsoiled,³ a double outer cloak, a single upper robe, a single inner robe; when garments are thin from use⁴ a fourfold outer cloak, a double upper robe, a double inner robe. As far as possible an effort⁵ is to be made (to get patches) from a rag-robe, from (bits picked up near) a shop.⁶ I allow, monks, a patch, a means of fastening,⁷ a length,⁸ a marking (with a piece of cloth),⁹ a strengthening.”¹⁰

THE STORY OF VISĀKHĀ

Then the Lord, having stayed at Benares for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Sāvattihī. Walking on tour, in due course he arrived at Sāvattihī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattihī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord gladdened ... delighted Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with dhamma-talk. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, when she had been gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with dhamma-talk, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, may the Lord consent (to accept) from me a meal on the morrow together with the Order of monks.”

The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from her seat, greeting the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him.

¹ dussānam. DN-a ii.403, citing this passage, reads vatthānaṃ (garments). ² ahata and ahatakappa, see above, BD 4.356, n. 9, BD 4.357, n. 1. ³ ahata and ahatakappa, see above, BD 4.356, n. 9, BD 4.357, n. 1. ⁴ utuddhaṭṭa, literally drawn out by the seasons. ⁵ ussāha, explained at Vin-a 1128 by pariyesanā, search. ⁶ pāpaṇika; see above, BD 4.357, n. 4. ⁷ tunna. Vin-a 1128 says suttakena saṃsibbanam tunnam, “sewing together with threads is tunna”; it is a means of fastening, hence perhaps a needle, although suci is the more usual word. Cf. however tunnavāya “needle-weaver”, tailor, at Vin 2.159. ⁸ For these expressions cf. above BD 4.354, and notes. ⁹ For these expressions cf. above BD 4.354, and notes. ¹⁰ For these expressions cf. above BD 4.354, and notes.

Then towards the end of that night a great cloud rained down in the four continents.¹ Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, even as it is raining in the Jeta Grove, so it is raining in the four continents. Let your bodies get wet with the rain,² monks, this is the last great cloud over the four continents.”

“Very well, Lord,” and these monks having answered the Lord in assent, with their robes laid aside let their bodies get wet with the rain.

Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, commanded a woman-slave, saying:

“Go now,³ having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying, ‘Lord,⁴ it is time, the meal is ready’.”

“Very well, lady,” and this slave-woman, having answered Visākhā, Migāra’s mother in assent, having gone to the monastery, saw the monks, their robes laid aside, letting their bodies get wet with the rain. Seeing them, she thought: “There are no monks in the monastery, naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain.” She approached Visākhā, Migāra’s mother; having approached, she spoke thus to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother:

“Lady, there are no monks in the monastery, naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain.” Then it occurred to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother—she being clever, experienced, wise: “But undoubtedly it is the masters, their robes laid aside, who are letting their bodies get wet with the rain; this foolish woman thinks that there are no monks in the monastery, (but) that naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain.” She commanded the woman-slave, saying: “Go now, having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying, ‘Lord, it is time, the meal is ready’.”

Then these monks, having cooled their limbs, being refreshed in body, having taken up their robes, entered (each) his own dwelling-place.¹ Then that woman-slave, having gone to the monastery, not seeing the monks, thinking: “There are no monks in the monastery, the monastery is empty,” approached Visākhā, Migāra’s mother; having approached, she spoke thus to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother:

¹ cātuddīpiko. ² As at this time cloths for the rains had not been “allowed” monks could not incur the offence of wrong-doing mentioned at Vin 3.253, for letting their naked bodies get wet with the rain although they had cloths for the rains. ³ je, often used in speaking to female slaves. ⁴ bhante, or perhaps here “honoured sir”.

“Lady, there are no monks in the monastery, the monastery is empty.” Then it occurred to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother—she being clever, experienced, wise: “But undoubtedly the masters, having cooled their limbs, being refreshed in body, having taken up their robes, have (each) entered his own dwelling-place; this foolish woman thinks that there are no monks in the monastery, that the monastery is empty.” She commanded the woman-slave, saying: “Go now, having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying, ‘Lord, it is time, the meal is ready’.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, arrange your bowls and robes, it is time for the meal.”

“Very well, Lord,” these monks answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord, dressing in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, having vanished from the Jeta Grove, just as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, or might bend back his outstretched arm, became visible in the porch belonging to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother. Then the Lord sat down on an appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, saying: “Wonderful, good sirs, marvellous, good sirs, is the great psychic power, the great majesty of the Truth-finder, in that although the floods are rolling on knee-deep, and although the floods are rolling on waist-deep, yet neither the feet nor the robes of a single monk have become wet,” and joyful, exultant, having with her own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at their head with sumptuous solid and soft food, she sat down at a respectful distance after the Lord had eaten and had removed his hand from the bowl. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ yathāvihāra, as at Vin 4.15.

“Lord, I ask eight boons of the Lord.”

“Visākhā, Truth-finders are beyond (granting) boons.”¹

“Lord, they are those which are allowable and those which are blameless.”

“Speak on, Visākhā.”

“I, Lord, want to give for life to the Order cloths for the rains,² to give food for those coming in,³ to give food for those going out, to give food for the sick,⁴ to give food for those who tend the sick,⁵ to give medicine for the sick, to give a constant supply of conje, to give bathing-cloths for the Order of nuns.”⁶

“But having what special reason in mind,⁷ do you, Visākhā, ask the Truth-finder for eight boons?”

“Now I, Lord, commanded a slave-woman, saying, ‘Go now, having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying: Lord, it is time, the meal is ready’; but then, Lord, that slave-woman, having gone to the monastery, saw the monks, their robes laid aside, letting their bodies get wet with the rain; seeing them, she thought, ‘There are no monks in the monastery, naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain’. She approached me, having approached, she spoke thus to me, ‘Lady, there are no monks in the monastery, naked

¹ Cf. above, BD 4.104, BD 4.396. ² Bu-NP 24 and Bu-Pc 91 are both based on the assumption that an “allowance” to use cloths for the rains had already been given. The rule in Bu-NP 24 is against putting on cloths for the rains during all but the last part of the hot weather, for these cloths had become worn out and monks had gone naked during the rains. See BD 2.134, n. 1. Bu-Pc 91 is concerned with the right measurements for the rain-cloths. ³ Cf. Vin 2.16 where the householder Citta invited in-coming monks who were elders to accept a meal with him. At Vin 2.209ff. certain regulations are laid down for the behaviour to be observed by and towards in-coming monks. ⁴ At Vin 1.142 monks were allowed in the rains, as long as the business took no more than seven days, to visit ill monks; and they might look about for food for the sick, for food for those tending the sick, and for medicine for the sick. ⁵ At Vin 1.303ff. qualities necessary in those who tend the sick are enumerated. Moreover they are “allowed” to receive the bowl and robes of ill monks who have died. ⁶ In the instructions given at Vin 2.272 for teaching women who wish to receive the upasampadā, it is said that the bathing-cloth, together with the bowl, three robes and vest, should be pointed out to them. At Vin 4.279 the right measurements for nuns’ bathing-cloths are prescribed. ⁷ atthavasāṃ sampassamānā.

ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain'. Impure, Lord, is nakedness,¹ it is objectionable' I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order cloths for the rains.

"And again, Lord, an in-coming monk, not accustomed to² the roads, not accustomed to the resorts for alms³ is (still) walking for alms (when he is) tired. But having eaten my food for those coming in, (then when) he is accustomed to the roads, accustomed to the resorts for alms, he will walk for alms without getting tired. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for those coming in.

"And again, Lord, an out-going monk, while looking about for food for himself, may be left behind by the caravan, or if he set out tired on a journey he may arrive at the wrong time⁴ at the habitation to which he wishes to go. But having eaten my food for those going out, he will not be left behind by the caravan, nor will he set out tired on a journey (and so) he will arrive at the right time at the habitation to which he wishes to go. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for those going out.

"And again, Lord, if a monk who is ill does not obtain suitable meals, either his disease will grow very much worse, or he will pass away.⁵ When he has eaten my food for the sick, the disease will not grow very much worse, he will not pass away. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for the sick.

"And again, Lord, a monk who tends the sick, looking about for food for himself, will bring back⁶ food for the sick after the sun is

¹ Nakedness was disparaged; see below, BD 4.418, and Vin 3.212, Vin 3.252f., Vin 4.278. ² na kusala, not expert in, clever, skilled. ³ gocara, literally a cow's grazing, a pasturage, thus a place where a monk can obtain food, the houses at which food is put into his bowl. ⁴ Cf. Bu-Pc 85 where monks are forbidden to enter a village at the wrong time. ⁵ As above, Vin 1.120. ⁶ i.e. to the monastery.

4.418 right up¹ (and) he will miss his meal.² But having eaten my food for those who tend the sick, he will bring back food for the sick during the right time (and) he will not miss his meal. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for those who tend the sick.

15,10 “And again, Lord, if a monk who is ill does not obtain suitable medicines, either his disease will grow very much worse or he will pass away. When he has made use of my medicines for the sick, the disease will not grow very much worse, he will not pass away. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order medicines for the sick.

15,11 “And again, Lord, conje was allowed by the Lord at Andhakavinda when he had its ten advantages in mind.³ I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order a constant supply of conje.

15,11 “There was a case⁴ (where nuns bathed) naked together with prostitutes at the same ford of the river Aciravatī.⁵ Lord, these prostitutes made fun of the nuns, saying: ‘Why in the world, ladies, is the Brahma-faring led by you while you are young? Surely the pleasures of the senses should be enjoyed? When you become old, then you can fare the Brahma-faring; thus will both extremes be experienced by you.’⁶ Lord, these nuns, being made fun of by these prostitutes, became ashamed. Impure, Lord, is nakedness for women, it is abhorrent, it is objectionable. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life bathing-cloths for the Order of nuns.”

15,12 “But having what advantage in mind do you, Visākḥā, ask the Truth-finder for eight boons?”

¹ ussūre, after sun-turn, mid-day. In Bu-Pc 37 eating at the “wrong time”, i.e. “after noon has passed until sunrise” (Vin 4.86 = Vin 4.166) is an offence. Cf. at AN iii.260 the five disadvantages to a family ussūrabhatte, who eat when the sun is right up.

² bhattachedaṃ karissati, literally he will make a ‘cut’ in his food. For, since eating at the wrong time was an offence, a monk who could not take his meal during the right time, would have to miss it altogether. Cf. Ja i.156, bhattachedaṃ katvā.

³ Enumerated at Vin 1.221; conje allowed at Vin 1.222. ⁴ idha. ⁵ As in Bi-Pc 21. ⁶ This passage occurs again in Nuns’ Bi-Pc 21, where it is made an offence of expiation for nuns to bathe naked.

“Now, Lord, monks who have passed the rains in (various) places¹ will come to Sāvattthī so as to see the Lord; having approached the Lord, they will ask: ‘Lord, such and such a monk has passed away; what is his bourn, what his future state?’² The Lord will explain this saying: ‘It is in the fruit of stream-attaining or it is in the fruit of once-returning or it is in the fruit of not-returning or it is in the fruit of perfection.’ I, having approached these, will ask: ‘Honoured sirs, was Sāvattthī previously visited³ by this master?’

“If they say to me: ‘Sāvattthī was previously visited by this monk,’ I shall come to the conclusion that undoubtedly cloths for the rains or food for those coming in or food for those going out or food for the sick or food for those who tend the sick or medicines for the sick or a constant supply of conje was enjoyed by this master. On my calling that to mind, delight will be born; from delight, joy will be born; because my mind is joyful my body will be calm; with the body calm I will experience ease; because I am at ease my mind will be contemplative; this will be for me growth as to the sense-organs, growth as to the powers, growth as to the factors of enlightenment. I, Lord, having this advantage in mind, am asking the Truth-finder for the eight boons.”

“It is very good, Visākhā, it is good that you, Visākhā, having this advantage in mind, are asking the Truth-finder for the eight boons. I allow you, Visākhā, the eight boons.” Then the Lord blessed Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with these verses:

“Whatever (woman), much delighted, endowed with virtue, a disciple of the well-farer,

“Gives food and drink—having overcome avarice—the gift is heavenly,⁴ dispelling sorrow, bringing happiness;

“She gains a deva-like span⁵

¹ disāsu. ² A conversation on these lines is recorded at DN ii.91ff. to have taken place at Nādika. ³ āgatapubbā. ⁴ sovaggiham. Vin-a 1128 says “made for the sake of heaven”. ⁵ dibba āyu.

owing to the spotless, stainless way,

“She, desiring merit, at ease, healthy, delights long in a heavenly company.”¹

Then the Lord, having blessed Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with these verses, rising from his seat, departed.

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, cloths for the rains, food for those coming in, food for those going out, food for the sick, food for those who tend the sick, medicines for the sick, a constant supply of conje, bathing-cloths for the Order of nuns.”

The Portion for Repeating on Visākhā

ALLOWANCE FOR A SITTING-CLOTH, ETC.

Now at that time² monks, having eaten abundant food, fell asleep, thoughtless, careless. While they were sleeping, thoughtless, careless, impurity was emitted as the result of a dream; the lodging was stained by the impurity. Then the Lord, as he was touring the lodgings with the venerable Ānanda as his attendant,³ saw the lodging stained by impurity; seeing it, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying “Why, Ānanda, is this lodging stained by impurity?”

“Now, Lord, monks having eaten abundant food fell asleep, thoughtless, careless ... as the result of a dream; that is why, Lord, the lodging is stained by impurity.”

“Thus it is, Ānanda, thus it is, Ānanda, that when they fell asleep, thoughtless, careless, impurity was emitted as the result of a dream. Ānanda, those monks who fall asleep calling up mindfulness, careful, by these impurity is not emitted; and, Ānanda, those who are ordinary people, passionless in regard to pleasures of the senses, by these impurity is not emitted. It is impossible, it cannot come to pass, Ānanda, that impurity should be emitted by one perfected.” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ saggamhi kāyamhi. ² This introductory sentence = Vin 3.112. ³ pacchāsamaṇa; this was Ānanda also at Vin 3.10, Vin 4.78, and below, BD 4.431.

“Now as I, monks, was touring the lodgings with Ānanda as my attendant, I saw a lodging stained by impurity, and seeing this I addressed Ānanda, saying: ‘Why, Ānanda, ... (= Kd 8.16.1, Kd 8.16.2) ... by one perfected.’

“Monks,¹ there are these five disadvantages to one who falls asleep, thoughtless, careless: badly he sleeps, badly he wakes, he sees an evil dream, devatās guard him not, impurity is emitted. Monks, these are the five disadvantages to one who falls asleep, thoughtless, careless. And, monks, there are these five advantages to one who falls asleep calling up mindfulness, careful: well he sleeps,² well he wakes, he does not see an evil dream, devatās guard him, impurity is not emitted. Monks, these are the five advantages to one who falls asleep, calling up mindfulness, careful. I allow you, monks, a (piece of cloth) to sit upon³ for protecting the body, for protecting the robes, for protecting the lodgings.”

Now at that time a (piece of cloth) to sit upon was too small,⁴ it did not protect the whole lodging. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a sheet⁵ is large as one desires.”

Now at that time⁶ the venerable Belaṭṭhasīsa, the venerable Ānanda’s preceptor, came to have a disease of thick scabs. Because of its discharge his robes stuck to his body; monks laying moistened these again and again with water, loosened them. The Lord, as he was touring the lodgings, saw these monks loosening these robes, having moistened them again and again with water; seeing them, he approached these monks; having approached, he spoke thus to these monks:

¹ = AN iii.251. ² Cf. AN iv.150; AN v.342; Ja ii.61. ³ nisīdana. Defined at Vin 3.232. Vin 4.123. See BD 2.87, n. 2. ⁴ Bu-Pc 89 lays down a prescribed size. ⁵ pac-cattharaṇa. See BD 2.34, n. 1. ⁶ = Vin 1.202, where chunam was allowed as a medicine.

“Monks, what disease has this monk?”

“Lord, this venerable one has a disease of thick scabs; because of its discharge his robes stick to his body, and we, having moistened these again and again with water, loosened them.” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, an itch-cloth¹ to one who has an itch or a small boil or a running sore or a thick scab disease.”²

Now at that time Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, taking a cloth for wiping the face, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, may the Lord accept from me a cloth for wiping the face, that it may be for a blessing, a happiness for a long time.”

The Lord accepted the cloth for wiping the face. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with dhamma-talk. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, having been gladdened ... delighted with dhamma-talk by the Lord, rising up from her seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, a cloth for wiping the face.”

Now at that time Roja, the Mallan, was a friend of the venerable Ānanda.³ A linen cloth belonging to Roja, the Mallan, was placed in the venerable Ānanda’s hand, and the venerable Ānanda had need of a linen cloth. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Right measure prescribed in Bu-Pc 90. ² Buddhaghosa’s explanations of these words (Vin-a 884) are given at BD 3,98, notes. ³ Mentioned as a friend of Ānanda’s also at Vin 1.247.

“I allow you, monks, to take something on trust when it belongs to one endowed with five qualities: if he is an acquaintance and if he is a companion and if he has spoken about¹ it and if he is alive and if he knows, ‘When it is taken he will be pleased with me’. I allow you, monks, to take something on trust when it belongs to one endowed with these five qualities.”

Now at that time monks had complete sets of the three robes but they had need both of water-strainers² and bags. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a cloth for the requisites.”³

ON THE LEAST ROBE TO BE ASSIGNED, ETC.

Then it occurred to the monks: “Those things that are allowed by the Lord—the three robes or the cloths for the rains or the piece of cloth to sit upon or the sheet or the itch-cloth or the cloth for wiping the face or the cloth for the requisites (of water-strainers and bags)—are all these things to be allotted⁴ or are they to be assigned?”⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to allot the three robes, not to assign them;⁶ to allot the cloths for the rains during the four months of the rains, after that (time) to assign them; to allot a piece of cloth to sit upon, not to assign it; to allot a sheet, not to assign it; to allot an itch-cloth while the disease lasts, after that (time) to assign it; to allot a cloth for wiping the face, not to assign it; to allot a cloth for the requisites (of water-strainers and bowls), not to assign it.”

Then it occurred to the monks: “Now what is the least robe to be assigned?”⁷ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to assign as the least robe one that is eight

¹ ālapita. Vin-a 1129 says, “If he has said this, ‘whatever property of mine you may wish for, that you may take’”. ² parissāvana. Allowed at Vin 2.118. ³ parikkhāra-colaka. Cf. Vin 2.118, where the colaka did not suffice. ⁴ adhiṭṭhātabbāni. See notes on an-adhiṭṭhita at BD 2.7, BD 2.121. ⁵ vikappetabbāni. See note on a-vikappita at BD 2.7. Vikappana, assignment, is defined at Vin 4.122. ⁶ Cf. Vin 3.196 where an extra robe is defined as one that is “not allotted, not assigned”. ⁷ See definition of robe (-material) at Vin 3.196 = BD 2.7.

finger-breadths in length and four finger-breadths wide according to the accepted finger-breadth.” Now at that time the made-up rag-4.424 robes of the venerable Kassapa the Great became heavy.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a rough darn.”² It became misshapen at the corner.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to pull off the misshapen corner.”⁴ The threads were frayed out.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to insert a braiding,⁶ a binding.¹ Now at that time the cotton cloth of the outer cloaks gave way.⁷ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a net-work.”⁸

8.21.2
Now at that time when a set of three robes was being made by a certain monk, there was not enough for all (three) to be cut up (into pieces).

“I allow you, monks, two (robes that are) cut up, one that is not cut up.” There was not enough for two to be cut up and one not cut up.

“I allow you, monks, two (robes that are) not cut up, one that is

¹ According to Vin-a 1129 because of the patches sewn on to the worn places. Kassapa the Great always wore rag-robes. ² suttalūkhaṃ kātum. Vin-a 1129 sutten’ eva aggaḷaṃ kātun ti attho, “to make a patch only of thread”, so perhaps suttalūkha is a rough darn; cf. Kd 8.12.2. ³ vikaṇṇa. Vin-a 1129 says that when they had cut off the thread as they were sewing, one corner of the outer cloak became long. At Vin 2.116 cīvaraṃ vikaṇṇaṃ hoti, the robe-material became misshapen. See Vinaya Texts iii.92, n.7. ⁴ vikaṇṇam uddharitum. Vin-a 1129 says that this means to cut off the long corner. ⁵ okiriyanti. Vin-a 1129 mentions that the robe fell down, or hung down, at the cut corner. ⁶ See BD 2.409, n.7, n.8; and above, BD 4.354. ⁷ As at Kd 15.28.2. The word translated as “cotton cloth” is pattā. Vinaya Texts ii.231, n.3 says “we probably ought to read paṭṭā, not pattā,” and cf. Vinaya Texts iii.141, n.6. Paṭṭā are perhaps strips of cloth used as braidings and bindings. Vin-a 1129 says pattā lujjanti means that the threads put in front of the large pattā fall out, and thus the pattā give way. ⁸ aṭṭhapadaka, perhaps a “patch”, Pali-English Dictionary “Net-work” tentatively suggested in Critical Pali Dictionary Commentary simply says that aṭṭhapadakaṃ kātum means to sew the front of a piece of cloth with an aṭṭhapadaka-covering (aṭṭhapadacchannena). The word occurs at Vin 2.150 with vetum, and is translated at Vinaya Texts iii.167 as “to weave the string across and across”; see Vinaya Texts iii.167, n.1 cut up.” There was not enough for two to be not cut up and one cut up.

“I allow you, monks, to insert an extra supply.¹ But, monks, the whole (set of three robes) should not be worn not cut up. Whoever should so wear it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”²

Now at that time much robe-material accrued to a certain monk, and he was desirous of giving that robe-material to his parents. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Because he is himself giving to his parents, monks, what can we say? I allow you, monks, to give to parents.³ But, monks, a gift of faith should not be brought to ruin.⁴ Whoever should bring (one) to ruin, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk, laying aside a robe⁵ in the Blind Men’s Grove,⁶ entered a village for almsfood with (only) his upper and inner robes.⁷ Thieves carried off that robe. That monk became badly dressed, wearing shabby robes. Monks spoke thus:

“Why are you, your reverence, badly dressed, wearing shabby robes?”

“Now I, your reverences, laying aside a robe in the Blind Men’s Grove, entered a village for almsfood with (only) the upper and inner robes. Thieves carried off that robe; that is why I am badly dressed, wearing shabby robes.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a village should not be entered by (a monk wearing only) the upper and inner robes; whoever should so enter (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”¹

¹ anvādhikam pi āropetum. Vin-a 1129 says “to give an added (or extra, āgantuka) piece of cloth. This may be put in if there is not enough; if there is enough there must not be an added piece of cloth, (for then, what there is) should be cut up”.

² See above, Kd 8.11. ³ Vinipātetabbarū. Vin-a 1129, “if the parents stand begging in the dust it should be given”. The point is that the robe-material had been given to the monk, and should therefore, unless there is strong reason to the contrary, be retained by him. At all events it was not to be wasted. ⁴ Cf. Vin 4.286, where it is “no offence” for a nun to give recluses’ robe-material to her parents. ⁵ “cīvara (robe) must here be used for saṅghāṭi. See ... section 2, below, where saṅghāṭi occurs”, Vinaya Texts ii.232, n.3. See Bu-NP 29 on the laying aside of robes. ⁶ Cf. BD 2.36, n.3. ⁷ santaruttara. See BD 2.12, n.1. At Bu-NP 2 it is an offence for a monk to be away from his three robes, even for one night, unless there is the agreement of the monks.

Now at that time the venerable Ānanda, through unmindfulness, entered a village for almsfood with (only) his upper and inner robes. Monks spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

“Reverend Ānanda, has it not been laid down by the Lord that a village should not be entered (by a monk wearing only) the upper and inner robes? Why do you, your reverence, enter a village with (only) your upper and inner robes?”

“It is true, your reverences, that it was laid down by the Lord that a village should not be entered (by a monk wearing only) the upper and inner robes, but I entered through unmindfulness.”

They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “Monks, there are five reasons for laying aside the outer cloak: if one becomes ill,² or if he comes to be spending the rains,³ or if he comes to go to the other side of a river, or if the dwelling-place comes to be secured with a bolt,⁴ or if the kaṭhina-cloth has been made.⁵ These, monks, are the five reasons for laying aside the outer cloak. And, monks, there are five reasons for laying aside the upper robe, the inner robe: if one becomes ill ... or if the kaṭhina-cloth has been made. These, monks, are the five reasons for laying aside the upper robe, the inner robe. And, monks, there are five reasons for laying aside a cloth for the rains: if one becomes ill, or if he comes to go outside the boundary,¹ or if he comes to go to the other side of a river, or if the dwelling-place comes to be secured with a bolt, or if a cloth for the rains comes to be not made or imperfectly executed.² These, monks, are the five reasons for laying aside a cloth for the rains.”

¹ Cf. Bu-Sk 1–Bu-Sk.4. At Kd 7.1.3, above, among the five kaṭhina privileges is included that of going for alms without wearing the three robes. ² Then, according to Bu-NP 2 he has to get the agreement of the monks to be regarded as not away, separated from his three robes, although he is in actual fact separated from them, since he does not feel well enough to go on a journey taking all of them with him. ³ vassikasamketa, at the rendezvous for the rains. During the rains monks are allowed to wear cloths for the rains instead of their usual three robes, in order to save these from the damp and wet. ⁴ aggalaḡutti. Aggaḡa here in sense of “bolt”, not “patch”. ⁵ See Bu-NP 2 and above, Kd 7.1.3.

ON WHEN A ROBE BECOMES THE SAṄGHA’S

Now at that time a certain monk spent the rains alone. People there, saying, “We are giving for an Order,” gave robes. Then it occurred to that monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that the least Order is fourfold,³ but I am solitary, and these people, saying, ‘We are giving for an Order’ gave robes. What now if I should convey these robes belonging to an Order to Sāvattthī?” Then that monk, taking those robes, having gone to Sāvattthī, told this matter to the Lord. He said: “These robes, monk, are for you yourself⁴ until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges).⁵

“This is a case, monks,⁶ where a monk is spending the rains alone. People there, saying, ‘We are giving for an Order’ give robes. I allow, monks, those robes (to be) for him himself until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges).”

¹ When, presumably he must put on his set of three robes. Travelling in the rains was allowed only if the business was urgent and if the monk was not absent from the rains-residence for more than seven days. See Kd 3 ² Cf. Vin 3.155, Vin 3.225, Vin 3.229, etc., for vippakata, imperfectly executed. Cloths for the rains allowed at Kd 8.15.15. ³ At Vin 1.319 five kinds of saṅghas, classified by the number of their members, are given together with the official acts that each might perform. ⁴ tuyh’eva, just for you. ⁵ See Bu-NP 1, Bu-NP 2, Bu-NP 3. ⁶ Although the preceding sentence ends with iti, it appears from the vocative bhikkhave, no less than from the anujānāmi, just below, that Gotama is regarded as still addressing the monks.

Now at that time a certain monk spent a favourable time of year¹ alone. People there, saying: “We are giving for an Order,” gave robes. Then it occurred to that monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that the least Order is fourfold, but I am solitary, and these people, saying, ‘We are giving for an Order’, gave robes. What now if I should convey these robes belonging to an Order to Sāvattthī?” Then that monk, taking those robes, having gone to Sāvattthī, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to distribute (these robes) to the Order that is present.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is spending a favourable time (of year) alone. People there, saying, ‘We are giving for an Order’, give robes. I allow, monks, that monk to allot² those robes, saying: ‘These robes are for me.’ If, monks, that monk does not allot that robe-material³ (and) another monk comes, an equal portion should be given (to him). If, monks, the kusa-lot was not cast while that robe-material was being distributed by those monks (and) another monk comes, an equal portion should be given (to him). If monks, the kusa-lot was cast while that robe-material was being distributed by those monks (and) another monk comes, a portion need not be given (to him) if they are not willing.”⁴

Now at that time two brothers who were elders, the venerable Isidāsa⁵ and the venerable Isibhatta,⁶ having spent the rains at Sāvattthī, went to a certain village-residence. People, saying: “It is long since the elders came (here),” gave food with robes. The resident monks asked the elders:

“Honoured sirs, thanks to the elders, these robes belonging to the ¹ utukāla. Vin-a 1130 says “another time than the rains”. At Vin 2.167 utukāla stands in opposition to “the three months of the rains”. AN iv.138 discriminates between three seasons: gimha, the hot weather, vassa, the rains, and hemanta, the cold weather. Utukāla above doubtless means a time of year that was not the rains, thus balancing the preceding paragraphs. ² See above, Kd 8.20.2. ³ Singular here; plural above. ⁴ Cf. Kd 16.11.3. ⁵ Mentioned apparently nowhere but here, see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁶ Mentioned apparently nowhere but here, see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names.

Order, have accrued. Let the elders consent (to accept) a portion.”
The elders spoke thus:

“In so far as we, your reverences, understand dhamma as taught by the Lord, these robes are for you yourselves until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges).”

Now at that time three monks were spending the rains in Rājagaha. People there, saying: “We are giving for an Order,” gave robes. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that the least Order is fourfold, but we are three persons, and these people, saying, ‘We are giving for an Order’, gave robes. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” Now at that time several elders, the venerable Nilavāsin¹ and the venerable Sāṇavāsin² and the venerable Gopaka and the venerable Bhagu³ and the venerable Phalikasandāna, were staying at Pāṭaliputta⁴ in the Cock’s monastery.⁵ Then these monks, having gone to Pāṭaliputta, asked the elders. The elders spoke thus: “In so far as we understand dhamma as taught by the Lord, it is that these robes are for you yourselves until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges).”

THE STORY OF UPANANDA THE SAKYAN

Now at that time the venerable Upananda,⁶ the son of the Sakyans, having spent the rains at Sāvattthī, went to a certain village-residence. And there the monks assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material.

¹ Mentioned apparently nowhere but here, see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names.

² Dictionary of Pali Proper Names says “an epithet of Sambhūta thera”. Vinaya Texts ii.238, n. 1 thinks he is probably the same as the Sāṇavāsī who took part in the Council of Vesālī. ³ Dictionary of Pali Proper Names in its account of a Bhagu thera thinks that this one “is probably a different person” from the Bhagu of Vin 1.350, etc.

⁴ Or Patna, the capital of Magadha before Asoka’s time. See above, BD 4.312; DN ii.87; Buddhist India, p. 262; B.C. LAW, Geography of Early Buddhism, p. 10, p. 11; C.H.I.i.189. ⁵ (This footnote proved troublesome to typeset due to its length, so it has been moved to an appendix with other long notes on page 2985.) ⁶ See BD 2.42, n. 1.

These spoke thus: “These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?”

“Yes, your reverences, I will consent,” and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there, he went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus: “These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?”

“Yes, your reverences, I will consent,” and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there too, he went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus: “These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?”

“Yes, your reverences, I will consent,” and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there too, taking a great bundle of robe-material, he came back again to Sāvattḥī.

8.25.2 Monks spoke thus: “You, reverend Upananda, are of great merit;¹ much robe-material has accrued to you.”

“Whence, your reverences, is there merit for me? Now I, your reverences, having spent the rains at Sāvattḥī, went to a certain village-residence. The monks were there assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. They spoke thus to me: ‘These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?’ ‘Yes, your reverences, I will consent,’ and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there, I went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus to me: ‘These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?’ ‘Yes, your reverences, I will consent,’ and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there too, I went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus to me: ‘These robes ... a portion?’ ‘Yes, your reverences, I will consent,’ and I took up a portion of robe-material from there too. Thus much robe-material accrued to me.”

¹ Same thing said to him at Vin 3.215.

“But is it that you, reverend Upananda, having spent the rains somewhere else, will consent (to accept) a portion of robe-material elsewhere?”¹

“Yes, your reverences,” he said. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having spent the rains somewhere else, consent (to accept) robe-material elsewhere?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Upananda, having spent the rains somewhere else, consented (to accept) a portion of robe-material elsewhere?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him saying:

“How can you, foolish man, having spent the rains somewhere else, consent (to accept) a portion of robe-material elsewhere? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased.”

Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a portion of robe-material is not to be consented to elsewhere by one who has spent the rains somewhere else. Whoever should consent (to accept), there is an offence of wrong doing.”

Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, spent the rains alone in two residences, thinking: “Thus will much robe-material accrue to me.” Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, how should a share of robe-material be given to the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, give one share² to the foolish man. For this is a case, monks, where a monk is spending the rains alone in two residences, thinking, ‘Thus will much robe-material accrue me’. If he stays half ¹ Cf. Vin 3.66, Vin 4.76f., Vin 4.81f. ² ekādhippāya, of which Vin-a 1132 says ekapuggalapaṭivim̐sa, one man’s share.

4.431 (the time) at one, half (the time) at the other, half a share of robe-material should be given (to him) at the one, half at the other; or where he spends the more (time), from there is the share of the robe-material to be given (to him).”

ON THE STORY OF ONE ILL

3.26.1 Now at that time a certain monk was suffering from dysentery; he lay fallen in his own excrements. Then the Lord, as he was touring the lodgings with the venerable Ānanda as his attendant,¹ approached that monk’s dwelling-place. The Lord saw that monk lying fallen in his own excrements; seeing him he approached that monk, and having approached he spoke thus to that monk:

“What is your disease, monk?”

“Lord, I have dysentery.”

“But, monk, have you anyone who tends you?”

“I have not, Lord,” he said.

1.302 “Why do not the monks tend you?”

3.26.2 “I, Lord, am of no use to the monks, therefore the monks do not tend me.”

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Go, Ānanda, bring water, we will bathe this monk.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered the Lord in assent, when he had brought the water, the Lord sprinkled on the water, the venerable Ānanda washed him over; the Lord took him by the head, the venerable Ānanda by the feet, and having raised him up, they laid him down on a couch.

3.26.3 Then the Lord, on that occasion, in that connection, having had the Order of monks convened, asked the monks:

“Is there, monks, in such and such a dwelling-place a monk who is ill?”

“There is, Lord.”

“What, monks, is that monk’s disease?”

¹ Cf. above, BD 4.420.

“Lord, the venerable one has dysentery.”

“But, monks, is there anyone who is tending that monk?”

“There is not, Lord.”

“Why do not the monks tend him?”

“Lord, this monk is of no use to the monks, therefore the monks do not tend that monk.”

“Monks, you have not a mother, you have not a father who might tend you. If you, monks, do not tend one another, then who is there who will tend you? Whoever, monks, would tend me, he should tend the sick.

“If he has a preceptor he should be tended for life by the preceptor, who should wait for his recovery.¹ If he has a teacher he should be tended for life by the teacher, who should wait for his recovery. If he has one who shares a dwelling-place ... If he has a pupil ... If he has a fellow-preceptor ... If he has a fellow-teacher he should be tended for life by the fellow-teacher, who should wait for his recovery. If he has neither a preceptor nor a teacher nor one who shares a dwelling-place nor a pupil nor a fellow-preceptor nor a fellow-teacher, he should be tended by the Order. If it should not tend him, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“Endowed with five qualities,² monks, does one who is ill become difficult to tend: he becomes one who does not do what is beneficial;³ he does not know moderation in what is beneficial; he becomes one who does not take medicine;⁴ he becomes one who does not make clear the disease just as it comes to be to one who tends the sick and

¹ At Vin 1.50 it is said that a preceptor should be tended by the one who shares his cell; one who shares the cell by his preceptor (Vin 1.53); a teacher by his pupil and a pupil by his teacher (Vin 1.61). ² From here to end of Kd 8.26 = AN iii.143. The five qualities, aṅgā here, are called dhammā there. ³ asappāyakārin, a doer of what is not beneficial. Pali-English Dictionary gives for Mil 215, sappāyakiriyā, “giving a drug”. GS iii.110 translates “he treats not himself with physic”, and doubtless that which is beneficial has come to have the sense of medicine, drug. But at Vin 1.292 sappāyāni bhojanāni must mean suitable or beneficial meals, and not meals that are medicines, for it comes under Visākhā’s boon called “food for the sick”. There is also sappāyāni bhesajjāni, suitable, beneficial medicines, when she is asking to give medicines for the sick. ⁴ bhesajjāṃ na paṭisevitā hoti.

4.433
1.303
3.26.6
who wishes him well, saying as it is getting worse, 'it is getting worse', or as it is getting better, 'It is getting better', or as it is stationary, 'It is stationary'; he becomes not the kind (of man) who endures bodily feelings which, arising, are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly.¹ Endowed with these five qualities, monks, does one who is ill become difficult to tend.

8.26.7
"Endowed with five qualities, monks, does one who is ill become easy to tend: he becomes one who does what is beneficial; he knows moderation in what is beneficial; he becomes one who takes medicine; he makes clear the disease just as it comes to be to one who tends the sick and who wishes him well, saying as it is getting worse, 'It is getting worse', or as it is getting better, 'It is getting better' or as it is stationary, 'It is stationary'; he becomes the kind (of man) who endures bodily feelings which, arising, are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly. Endowed with these five qualities, monks, does one who is ill become easy to tend.

3.26.8
"Endowed with five qualities, monks, is one who tends the sick not fit to tend the sick: he comes to be not competent to provide the medicine; he does not know what is beneficial and what is not beneficial; he brings forward what is not beneficial, he takes away what is beneficial; he tends the sick in the hope of gain,² not (from) amity of mind;³ he becomes one who loathes to remove excrement or urine or sweat or vomit; he does not come to be competent to gladden, rejoice, rouse, delight the sick from time to time with dhamma-talk. Endowed with these five qualities, monks, one who tends the sick is not fit to tend the sick.

"Endowed with five qualities, monks, is one who tends the sick fit to tend the sick: he comes to be competent to provide the medicine; he knows what is beneficial and what is not beneficial; he takes away what is not beneficial, he brings forward what is beneficial; he tends the sick (from) amity of mind, not in the hope of gain; he does not become one who loathes to remove excrement or urine or sweat or vomit; he comes to be competent to gladden ... delight the sick from time to time with dhamma-talk. Endowed with these five qualities, monks, is one who tends the sick fit to tend the sick.”

¹ Stock. For references see BD 3.12, n. 2. ² āmisantaro. Commentary on AN iii.144 says "expecting (gifts of) robes, etc." Vin-a 1133 mentions that antara means kāraṇa, and that āmisantara means āmisarṇassa antaram, gain is his motive. ³ no mettacitto, the mind, or heart, not in amity. Mettā at some time came to be one of the four brahmāvihāras, Brahma-abidings; See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.216ff.

BD 4.4

ON INHERITANCE

Now at that time two monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. They arrived at a certain residence where a certain monk was ill. Then it occurred to these monks: “Your reverences, tending the sick is praised by the Lord. Come, let us tend this monk,” and they tended him. While he was being tended by them he passed away. Then these monks, taking that monk’s bowl and robes, having gone to Sāvattthī, told this matter to the Lord.

Kd 8.27

He said: “Monks, the Order is the owner of the bowl and robes of a monk who has passed away. But truly those who tend the sick are of great service. I allow you, monks, to give through the Order the three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick. And thus, monks, should they be given: that monk who tended the sick, having approached the Order, should say to it: ‘Honoured sirs, the monk so and so has passed away; these three robes and the bowl were his.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The monk so and so has passed away; these three robes and the bowl were his. If it seems right to the Order let the Order give these three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The monk so and so has passed away; these three robes and the bowl were his. The Order is giving these three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick. If the giving of these three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. These three robes and the bowl are given through the Order to those who tended the sick. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this'.”

Kd 8.27

Vin 1.30

8.27.3

4.435

Now at that time a certain novice came to pass away. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the Order is the owner of the bowl and robes of a novice who has passed away. But truly those who tend the sick are of great service. I allow you, monks, to give through the Order the robe and the bowl to those who tended the sick. And thus, monks, should they be given: That monk who tended the sick, having approached the Order, should say to it: ‘Honoured sirs, the novice so and so has passed away; this robe and the bowl were his.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The novice so and so has passed away; this robe and bowl were his. If it seems right to the Order let the Order give this robe and bowl to those who tended the sick. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The novice so and so has passed away; this robe and bowl were his. The Order is giving this robe and bowl to those who tended the sick. If the giving of this robe and bowl to those who tended the sick is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. This robe and bowl are given through the Order to those who tended the sick. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

3.27.4

1.305

Now at that time a certain monk and a novice tended one who was ill. While he was being tended by these he passed away. Then it occurred to that monk who had tended the one who was ill: “Now what share of the robes is to be given to the novice who tended the one who was ill?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give an equal share to a novice who tended the sick.”

8.27.5

Now at that time a certain monk who had many goods, many requisites, came to pass away. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the Order is the owner of the bowl and robes of a monk who has passed away. But truly those who tend the sick are of great service. I allow you, monks, to give through the Order the three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick; to distribute through the Order that is present whatever few goods, few requisites are there; but whatever many goods, many requisites are there, these are for the Order of the four quarters¹—those who have come in, those who have not come in—they are not to be disposed of,² not to be divided up.”³

BD 4.4

ON REJECTION OF NAKEDNESS

Now at that time a certain monk, having become naked, approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in many a figure is the Lord a speaker in praise of desiring little, of contentment, of expunging (evil), of punctiliousness, of graciousness, of decreasing (the obstructions), of putting forth energy.⁴ Lord, this nakedness is, in many a figure, useful for desiring little, for contentment, for expunging (evil), for punctiliousness, for graciousness, for decreasing (the obstructions), for putting forth energy. It were good, Lord, if the Lord were to allow nakedness for monks.”

Kd 8.28

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, observe nakedness, an observance of members of other sects?¹ It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...”

¹ cātuddisa saṅgha. For discussion on this see S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, 1924, p. 83ff. Cf. same expression at Vin 2.147. ² avissajjika. Five classes of things that are avissajjiyāni, untransferable, not to be disposed of, are given at Vin 2.170.

³ avebhaṅgika. The same five classes of things that are avebhaṅgiyāni, inalienable, are given at Vin 2.171. If a monk disposes of or divides up any of these things he incurs a thullaccaya offence, and the disposal or division is reckoned to be null and void. ⁴ Stock in Vinaya. See BD 1.37 for notes and references.

Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks saying: “Monks, nakedness, an observance of members of other sects, is not to be observed.² Whoever should observe it, there is a grave offence.”

ON REJECTION OF GARMENTS OF GRASS, ETC.

Now at that time a certain monk, having put on a kusa-grass garment ... a bark garment ... a garment of wood-shavings³ ... a hair-blanket ... a horsehair blanket ... (a dress of) owls' wings ... (a cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide,⁴ approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in many a figure is the Lord a speaker in praise of desiring little ... of putting forth energy. Lord, this (cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide is, in many a figure, useful for desiring little ... for putting forth energy. It were good, Lord, if the Lord were to allow (cloaks made of strips of) black antelope hide for the monks.”

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not becoming ... it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, wear (a cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide, an emblem of members of other sects?⁵ Foolish man, it is not for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...”

¹ titthiyāsamādāna. Word-play probably intended here; for samādāna means both going for alms without taking the three robes with one (cf. asamādānacāra at Vin 1.254), and also adopting, undertaking, taking upon oneself. Here the latter must be meant, for cf. Vin 1.159, where the same phrase is used with regard to the titthiyās ‘vow of silence’ mūgabbata. ² Cf. Kd 8.15.7, Kd 8.15.11. ³ Phalaka is usually a panel, board or plank. Vinaya Texts ii.246 and A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol.48, no.3, p. 268 (referring to this passage) take it as a kind of cloth. ⁴ See BD 1.52f. for notes and references. The story at Vin 3.34 (= BD 1.52) preceding those of monks dressed in these kinds of garments, is about a naked monk; this itself is preceded by a story of a monk clothed in a layman’s dress. ⁵ (This footnote proved troublesome to typeset due to its length, so it has been moved to an appendix with other long notes on page 2985.)

Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, (a cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide, an emblem of members of other sects, is not to be wom. Whoever should wear (one), there is a grave offence.”

Now at that time a certain monk, having put on (a garment made of) stalks of swallow-wort¹ ... having put on (a cloth of) fibre,² approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in many a figure is the Lord a speaker in praise of desiring little ... of putting forth energy. Lord, this (cloth of) fibre is, in many a figure, useful for desiring little ... for putting forth of energy. It were good, Lord, if the Lord were to allow (a cloth or) fibre for the monks.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not becoming ... it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, put on (a cloth of) fibre? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, (a cloth of) fibre is not to be put on. Whoever should put (one) on, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ON REJECTION OF ALL DARK GREEN

Now at that time the group of six monks wore robes that were all dark green,³ they wore robes that were all yellow, they wore robes that were all red, they wore robes that were all crimson, they wore robes that were all black, they wore robes that were all dyed brownishyellow,¹ they wore robes that were all dyed reddish-yellow,² they wore robes with borders that were not cut up, they wore robes with long borders, they wore robes with borders of flowers, they wore robes with borders of snakes' hoods, they wore jackets,³ they wore (garments of) the Tirīṭa tree,⁴ they wore turbans. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ akkanāla. Akka is the plant Calotropis gigantea. Word occurs at MN i.429. ² (This footnote proved troublesome to typeset due to its length, so it has been moved to an appendix with other long notes on page 1859.) ³ nīlaka, or blue; see BD 2.408, n. 1, BD 2.408, n. 2. For this sequence of colours cf. Vin 1.185=Vin 2.267, and see Buddhaghosa's explanations at Vin-a 1083. This passage, with the omission of the last item, recurs at Vin 2.267 for the group of six nuns.

"Monks, robes that are all dark green are not to be worn, robes that are all yellow are not to be worn ... a jacket is not to be worn, (a garment made from) the Tirīṭa tree is not to be worn, a turban is not to be worn. Whoever should wear (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

ON WHEN THERE IS NO ROBE AFTER THE RAINS

Now at that time monks, having spent the rains, and no robe-material having accrued, went away and left the Order⁵ and passed away; and they pretended to be novices and they pretended to be disavowers of the training and they pretended to be committers of an extreme offence and they pretended to be mad and they pretended to be un-hinged and they pretended to have bodily pains and they pretended to be suspended for not seeing an offence and they pretended to be suspended for not making amends for an offence and they pretended to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view and they pretended to be eunuchs and they pretended that they were living in communion, though it was by theft,¹ and they pretended that they had gone over to other sects² and they pretended to be animals³ and they pretended to be matricides⁴ and they pretended to be parricides⁵ and they pretended to be slayers of men perfected⁶ and they pretended to be seducers of nuns and they pretended to be schismatics⁷ and they pretended to be shedders of (a Truthfinder's) blood⁸ and they pretended to be hermaphrodites.⁹ They told this matter to the Lord.

¹ mahāraṅgaratta, Vin-a 1083 saying that it is the colour of a centipede's back.

² mahānāmaratta, Vin-a 1083 saying that it is the colour of withered leaves, a mixed colour. ³ kañcuka, cf. AN i.145. ⁴ tirīṭaka. Symplocos racemosa. Vin-a 1135 explains by rukkhaḥallimayaṃ taṃ pādapuñchanāṃ kātuṃ vaṭṭati, made of the bark of a tree, one can make a foot-towel of it. Cf. AN i.295 where the wearing of this comes among the practices of the "self-tormentors", or wasters-away. ⁵ This sequence = Vin 1.121 = Vin 2.173. Cf. also Vin 1.135, Vin 1.167, Vin 1.320.

He said: "This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, goes away. If there is a suitable receiver,¹⁰ (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, leaves the Order, passes away, pretends to be a novice, pretends to be a disavower of the training, pretends to be a committer of an extreme offence. The Order is the owner. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, pretends to be mad ... pretends to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view. If there is a suitable receiver, (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, ¹ theyyasaṁvāsaka. At Vin 1.86 it is said that if such a one has not been ordained, he should not be ordained; if he has been ordained he should be expelled. This passage makes it clear that a monk, called a theyyasaṁvāsaka in the rule, took on himself the attributes of a monk without undergoing the training, and tried to become a saṁvāsaka, one in communion (see definition of saṁvāsa in the Pārājikas) by theft, theyya, of a monk's attributes. Explained at Vin-a 1016ff. ² tittihiyapakkantaka. At Vin 1.86 same is said of this as of theyyasaṁvāsaka. Explanation given at Vin-a 1021.

³ Same is said as of the two previous terms, Vin 1.88. Explained at Vin-a 1022f.

⁴ Same is said as of the two previous terms, Vin 1.88. Explained at Vin-a 1022f.

⁵ Same is said as of the two previous terms, Vin 1.88. Explained at Vin-a 1022f.

⁶ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin 1.89. Explained at Vin-a 1022. ⁷ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin 1.89. Explained at Vin-a 1022f. ⁸ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin 1.89. Explained at Vin-a 1022f. ⁹ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin 1.89. Explained at Vin-a 1022f.

¹⁰ paṭirūpe gāhake. Vin-a 1135 says "if there is some monk who takes (robe-material), thinking, 'I am taking as for that monk', the meaning is that it should be given to him". Vin-a 1135 also points out that among these twenty-three types of men, sixteen do not receive the material and seven do.

pretends to be a eunuch ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite. The Order is the owner.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, goes away. If there is a suitable receiver, (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, leaves the Order ... pretends to be a committer of an extreme offence. The Order is the owner. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, pretends to be mad ... pretends to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view. If there is a suitable receiver, (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, pretends to be a eunuch ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite. The Order is the owner.

ON A ROBE FOR A DIVIDED SAṄGHA

“This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided.¹ People there saying: ‘We are giving for an Order,’ give water² to one part,³ they give robe-material to the other part. This is for the Order.⁴ This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided. People there saying: ‘We are giving for an Order,’ giving water to one part, they give robe-material to the same part. This is for the Order.

¹ bhijjati. Vin-a 1135 says that being divided, like the (quarrelsome) monks of Kosambī, there come to be two parts (or divisions). ² udaka. Vin-a 1135 saying that they give dakkhiṇodakañ ca gandhādīni ca, water that is dakkhiṇa (i.e. either ceremonial, or to wash in) and perfumes and so on. ³ pakkha, side, party, faction. Cf. pakkha at Vin 3.173 in definition of “should go forward with a schism”; and at Vin 3.175 in definition of “take his part”. See also BD 3.190, n. 3. ⁴ Vin-a 1135 says that “this, etaṃ, is for the two divisions of the whole Order. It should be distributed among the two sides after a gong has been beaten”. By “whole Order” Buddhaghosa means that part of it which spent the rains together in the same residence.

“This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided. People there saying: ‘We are giving for a part,’ give water to one part, they give robe-material to the other part. This is for a part. This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided. People there saying: ‘We are giving for a part,’ give water to one part, they give robe-material to the same part. This is for the part.

“This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued (but) not being distributed, the Order is divided. It should be equally distributed among all.”

ON RIGHTLY AND WRONGLY ALLOTTED

Now at that time the venerable Revata sent robe-material for the venerable Sāriputta by the hand of a certain monk, saying: “Give this robe-material to the elder.” Then on the way that monk took that robe-material on trust¹ for the venerable Revata. Then the venerable Revata, having met the venerable Sāriputta, asked:

“I, honoured sir, sent robe-material for the elder. Has that robe-material arrived?” “I have not seen that robe-material, your reverence.” Then the venerable Revata spoke thus to that monk: “I, your reverence, sent robe-material by the venerable one’s hand for the elder. Where is that robe-material?”

“I, honoured sir, took that robe-material on trust for the venerable one.” They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk is sending robe-material by a monk’s hand, saying: ‘Give this robe-material to so and so.’ If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him who sends it, it is rightly taken. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk is sending robe-material by a monk’s hand, saying, ‘Give this robe-material to so and so'. If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is wrongly taken. If he takes it on trust for him who sent it, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... '... to so and so'. While he is on the way he hears that he who sent it has passed away. If he allots to him¹ the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is rightly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... '... to so and so'. While he is on the way he hears that he to whom it was being sent has passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is wrongly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him who sent it, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... '... to so and so'. While he is on the way he hears that both have passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him who sent it—it is rightly allotted. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him to whom it was being sent—it is wrongly allotted.

¹ I.e. he used it himself. On vissāsaṃ gaṇhāti, see Kd 8.19.1 and BD 2.10, n. 5.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk sends robe-material by the hand of a monk, saying, ‘I am giving this robe-material to so and so’. If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him who sends it, it is wrongly taken. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it is being sent, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is rightly taken. If he takes it on trust for him who sends it, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. While he is on the way, he hears that he who sent it has passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is wrongly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. While he is on the way, he hears that he to whom it was being sent has passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is rightly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him who sent it, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. While he is on the way, he hears that both have passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him who sent it—it is wrongly allotted. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him to whom it was being sent—it is rightly allotted.”¹

¹ tassa.

BD 4.4

EIGHT CHANNELS FOR THE ACCRUING OF ROBES

“There are, monks, these eight channels² for the accruing of robe-material:³ if he gives on a boundary,⁴ if he gives on agreement, if he gives with an announcement of almsfood, if he gives for an Order, if he gives for both Orders, if he gives for an Order which has spent the rains, if he gives having offered,⁵ if he gives to an individual.

Kd 8.32

“He gives on a boundary: it should be distributed to as many monks as are within the boundary.

“He gives on agreement: several residences come to be equal receivers; what is given in each residence is given for all.

“He gives with an announcement of almsfood: they say, ‘We give it there where the Order’s constant services are done’.

“He gives for an Order: it should be distributed among the Order that is present.

“He gives for both Orders: even if there are many monks (but only one nun, a half should be given; even if there are many nuns (but only) one monk, a half should be given.

“He gives for an Order which has spent the rains: it should be distributed to as many monks as have spent the rains in that residence.

Vin 1.31

“He gives, having offered: conjeys or rice or solid foods or robes or lodgings or medicines.

¹ Vinaya Texts ii.253, n. 1 says “The reason of all this is, that if the sender (A) says to the messenger (B), ‘Give this robe to the sendee (C)’, the property in the robe does not pass; if A says to B, ‘I give this robe to C’, it does pass.” ² mātikā, as in Kd 7.1.7.

³ civarassa uppādāyā. ⁴ simāya. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1136 enumerates fifteen kinds of boundaries. ⁵ ādissa. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a 1144 explains as ādisitvā paricchinditvā, having dedicated, having decided.

“He gives to an individual: he says, ‘I am giving this robe-material to so and so’.”¹

The Section on Robe-material: The Eighth

THIS IS ITS KEY

Urban council of Rājagaha, having seen the courtesan at Vesālī, having gone back to Rājagaha made this known to the king. / Indeed Sālavatīka’s child was Abhaya’s son,² known as Jīvaka because the prince asked, “Is he alive?” /
Then he, having gone to Taxila, having studied, very famous,³ dispelled a seven year old disease by treatment through the nose, /
He removed the king’s fistula with an ointment (the king saying), “Tend me and the women and the awakened one’s Order”.⁴ /
And the merchant of Rājagaha, the tending on the twist in the bowels.
He dispelled Pajjota’s great disease by a drink of clarified butter. /
And office, Siveyya (ka cloths), he lubricated the humours, the purging thirty times all together with three handfuls of lotuses. /
He asked for the boon of good behaviour,⁵ and he accepted Siveyya (ka cloths), and the Truth-finder allowed the gift of householders’ robes. /
Many robes accrued in Rājagaha (and) in the country.
A mantle, and likewise a silken one,⁶ a fleecy coverlet, worth half a kāsi, /
And various kinds, satisfaction, they did not wait and they waited, first, afterwards, together, and an agreement, they conveyed it back, / Store-room, and unguarded, and likewise they turned away, heaped up, and a tumult. How is it to be divided? How is it to be given? /
About his own and more than one portion. How is a share to be given?
With dung and with cold water, to overflow, they did not know, / Pouring out, and a vessel, and in a dish, and on the ground, white ants, in the middle, they wore out, on one side, and about being stiff, Harsh, not cut up, laid out in strips, he saw the bundles, having thought it over the Sakyan sage allowed three robes. / About another that is extra, it accrued, and then it was torn, the four quarters, she asked for the boon to give cloths for the rains, / (Food for) the incoming, the outgoing, the sick, those who tend the sick and medicine, constant supply,

¹ Vin-a 1145, “he may say, ‘I am giving this to you, honoured sir’, or ‘I am giving this to you and to your pupils’”. ² atraja, usually meaning “own son”. ³ mahābhisa, variant reading mahābhañña. ⁴ buddhasaṅgha, in place of text’s (Kd 8.1.15) buddhapamukha bhikkhusaṅgha. It is not clear to me whether the king was enjoining Jīvaka to tend the Buddha himself or only the Order. ⁵ pakatatta vara. ⁶ kosika, replacing koseyyapāvāra of Kd 8.1.36.

and bathing cloths, abundant, too small, / Thick scabs, for the face, linen, complete, what is allotted, the least, it was made heavy, the comer, the thread frayed out, /
They gave way, and they were not enough, extra supply, and many,
in the Blind Men's Grove, through thoughtlessness, the rains alone, and during a favourable time, /
Two brothers, in Rājagaha, Upananda, again in two, dysentery, the ill one and the two, on what belongs to the sick,¹ / Naked one, kusa-grass, bark garment, wood shavings, hair blanket, horse-hair, and owls' wings, black antelope, and stalks of swallow-wort, / Fibre, green and yellow, red, and about crimson, black, brownish-reddish-yellow, then borders not cut up, / Long, flowers, snakes' hoods, jackets, Tirīṭa-tree, turbans, not having accrued, he went away,² the Order is divided at all the times, /
They give to a part, for the Order, the venerable Revata sent, he takes on trust, if he allots, eight channels for robe-material.

Vin 1.31

Vin 1.31

¹ Text and Siamese edition read gilāyanā. Sinhalese edition reads gilānakā, which I follow. ² pakkamati; text, Vin 1.307, pakkamanti.

9. THE MONKS FROM CAMPĀ (CAMPEYYA)

THE STORY OF THE MONK KASSAPAGOTTA

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Campā¹ on the bank of the Gaggarā lotus-pool.² Now at that time in the Kāsi country there was a village named Vāsabha;³ a monk called Kassapagotta⁴ was a resident there, he was attached to the tradition,⁵ he had made an effort⁶ so that well behaved monks who had not come should come, and so that well behaved monks who had come should live in comfort,⁷ and so that that residence should attain growth, expansion, maturity. Now at that time several monks walking on tour among the Kāsi people arrived at the village of Vāsabha. The monk Kassapagotta saw these monks coming in the distance; seeing them he made ready a seat,⁸ he put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand, having gone out to meet them he received their bowls and robes, he offered them drinking water, he made an effort in the matter of bathing (for them), he also made an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice. Then it occurred to these incoming monks: “Good indeed is this resident monk, your reverences, he makes an effort in the matter of bathing (for us), he also makes an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us). Come now, let us, your reverences, settle down just here at Vāsabha village.” Then these incoming monks settled down just there at Vāsabha village.

¹ Capital of Aṅga. Called Campā according to MN-a iii.1 because of its number of campaka (white jasmine) trees. ² MN-a iii.1 = DN-a i.279 say that it was excavated by a chief consort (Vin-a 1145 by a woman) called Gaggarā. ³ Mentioned also at Pv iii.1.2. ⁴ This as the name of a monk occurs at AN i.236 and SN i.198. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names suggests that the Saṃyutta one is to be identified with either the Vinaya or the Aṅguttara Kassapagotta. N.B. that here and at AN i.236 he is called “a (the) monk called Kassapagotta”, while at SN i.198 he is called “the venerable Kassapagotta”. The name may be a clan name or a personal one. ⁵ tantibaddha, Vin-a 1145 saying “he was fettered by the tanti (tradition, sacred text, thread, string) of things to be done (duties, obligations) in that residence”. Cf. tantimagga at Vin 1.156 (see above, BD 4.206). ⁶ ussukkaṃ āpanno, cf. ussukkaṃ akāsi below and ussukkaṃ karoti at Vin 4.280, Vin 4.301. ⁷ phāsu vihareyyuṃ. Phāsuvihāra is perhaps a technical expression, see Vin 1.92 (above BD 4.118, n. 2). ⁸ As at Vin 4.231, Vin 4.310.

Then it occurred to the monk Kassapagotta: “What was travel-weariness in these incoming monks has abated; further they, who did not know which alms-resorts¹ were appointed,² now know these alms-resorts which were appointed. It is indeed arduous to make an effort all one’s life among strangers,³ and hinting is not liked by the people.⁴ Suppose I were to make no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice?” He made no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice. Then it occurred to those incoming monks:

“Formerly, your reverences, this resident monk made an effort in the matter of bathing (for us), he also made an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us), but now he makes no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us). This resident monk, your reverences, is now corrupt. Come now, your reverences, let us suspend⁵ the resident monk.”

Then these incoming monks, having assembled together, spoke thus to the monk Kassapagotta: “Now, formerly you, your reverence, used to make an effort in the matter of bathing (for us), you also used to make an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us), but now you make no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us). You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence; do you see this offence?”

“There is no offence of mine, your reverences, that I can see.”

¹ gocara, cf. Vin 1.292 (above, BD 4.417). ² appakataññu, cf. BD 2.390, n. 3.
³ parakulesu. Probably “strangers” because they were not the families who supported Kassapagotta himself, but he went to them for alms for the “incoming monks”. ⁴ Cf. Vin 3.144 (BD 1.246), Vin 3.227 (BD 2.79). ⁵ ukkipāma. Ukkhipati is not to “pronounce expulsion” as translated at Vinaya Texts ii.257. See BD 3.28, n. 4.

Then these incoming monks suspended the monk Kassapagotta for not seeing the offence.¹ Then it occurred to the monk Kassapagotta: “Indeed I do not know this: whether this is an offence or is no offence, and whether I have fallen or have not fallen, and whether I am suspended or am not suspended, or whether it is by (an act) that is legitimate² or that is not legitimate, or by (one) that is reversible³ or that is irreversible, or by (one) that is fit to stand⁴ or that is not fit to stand. Suppose that I, having gone to Campā, were to ask the Lord about this matter?”

Then the monk Kassapagotta, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Campā; in due course he approached Campā and the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for lords to exchange friendly greetings with incoming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to the monk Kassapagotta: “I hope, monk, that things went well with you, I hope you had enough to support life, I hope you have come on the journey with but little fatigue. But where, monk, have you come from?”

“Things did go well with me, Lord, I had enough to support life, Lord, and I, Lord, came on the journey with but little fatigue.

“There is, Lord, in the Kāsi country a village called Vāsabha. I, Lord, a resident there, attached to the tradition, had made an effort so that well behaved monks who had not come should come, and so that well behaved monks who had come should live in comfort, and so that that residence should attain growth, expansion, maturity. Then, Lord, several monks walking on tour among the people of Kāsi arrived at the village of Vāsabha. I, Lord, saw those monks coming in the distance; seeing them I made ready a seat ... Then, Lord, it occurred to these incoming monks: ‘Good indeed is this resident monk ...’ ... Then, Lord, these incoming monks settled down, just there in Vāsabha village. Then, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘... Suppose I were to make no effort in ... the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for them)?’ So then I made no effort ... Then, Lord, these incoming monks, having assembled together, spoke thus to me: ‘Now, formerly, your reverence ... Do you see this offence?’ Then, Lord, these incoming monks suspended me for not seeing the offence. Then, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘Indeed I do not know ... Suppose that I, having gone to Campā, were to ask the Lord about this matter?’ That is why, Lord, I have come.”

¹ Cf. Kd 11.25-30. ² dhammika; cf. Vin 4.284-Vin.4.285; cf. “definition” of dhammikakamma at Vin 4.152; and see below, BD 4.453 (adhammikakamma). Possibly kamma is omitted above unintentionally. ³ Kuppa; cf. Vin 4.153. ⁴ ṭhānāraha. These three expressions, and their opposites occur at Vin 1.111 (above, BD 4.146).

“This is no offence, monk, this is not an offence; you are unfallen, you have not fallen; you are unsuspending, you were not suspended; you were suspended by a (formal) act that was not legitimate, that was reversible, that was not fit to stand. Go you, monk, settle down there at Vāsabha village.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the monk Kassapagotta having answered the Lord in assent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, keeping his right side towards him, set out for Vāsabha village.

Then these incoming monks became doubtful, they became remorseful. They thought: “Indeed it was unprofitable for us, indeed it was not profitable for us, indeed it was ill-gotten by us, indeed it was not well-gotten by us, that we suspended a pure¹ monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason. Come now, your reverences, having gone to Campā, let us confess the transgression as a transgression to the Lord.” Then these incoming monks, having packed away their lodgings, taking their bowls and robes, set out for Campā; in due course they approached Campā and the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for lords to exchange friendly greetings with incoming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to those monks: “I hope, monks, that things went well with you, I hope you had enough to support life, I hope you have come on the journey with but little fatigue. But where, monks, have you come from?”

¹ suddha in such a connection means that a monk has committed no offences, or that if he has he has confessed them, and so is “pure” to take his place at the Pātimokkha recitation; Cf. Vin 1.114 (above, BD 4.151), and epilogue to each class of rules in the Vibhaṅgas.

“Things have gone well with us, Lord, we had enough to support life, Lord, and we came on the journey. Lord, with but little fatigue. There is, Lord, in the Kāsi country a village called Vāsabha. We come from there, Lord.”

“Did you, monks, suspend a resident monk?”

“Yes, Lord.”

“For what cause, monks, for what reason?”

“There was no cause, Lord, no reason.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“It is not fitting, monks, it is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish men, suspend a pure monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason? It is not, foolish men, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a pure monk, not an offender, is not to be suspended without cause, without reason. Whoever should suspend one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Then these monks, rising from their seats, having arranged their upper robes over one shoulder, having inclined their heads towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, a transgression has overcome us,¹ in that we, foolish, misguided, wrong that we were, suspended a pure monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason. Lord, let the Lord acknowledge our transgression as a transgression for the sake of restraint in the future.”

“Truly, monks, a transgression has overcome you, in that you, foolish, misguided, wrong that you were, suspended a pure monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason. But if you, monks, having seen the transgression as a transgression, confess according to the rule, we acknowledge it for you; for, monks, in the discipline for an ariyan this is growth: whoever having seen a transgression as a transgression confesses it according to the rule, he attains restraint in the future.”

¹ Cf. Vin 4.18-Vin.4.19, and see BD 2.200, notes.

ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE IN AN INCOMPLETE ASSEMBLY, ETC.

Now at that time at Campā monks carried out (formal) acts like these: they carried out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act not by rule, in a complete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act by a rule, in an incomplete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act, by what had the appearance of a rule, in an incomplete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act by what had the appearance of a rule, in a complete assembly; and one¹ suspended one and one suspended two and one suspended several and one suspended an Order, and two suspended one and two suspended two and two suspended several and two suspended an Order, and several suspended one and several suspended two and several suspended several and several suspended an Order, and an Order suspended an Order.²

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks at Campā carry out (formal) acts like these? How can they carry out a (formal) act by rule, in an incomplete assembly? ... How can they carry out a (formal) act by what has the appearance of a rule, in a complete assembly? And how can one suspend one ... and how can an Order suspend an Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks at Campā carry out (formal) acts like these? Do they carry out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... and does an Order suspend an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“Monks, it is not fitting in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is unworthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men carry out (formal) acts like these? How can they carry out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly? ... and how can an Order suspend an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ I.e. an individual monk. ² See Vinaya Texts ii.262, n.

“If, monks, a (formal) act is carried out not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. A (formal) act carried out not by rule, in a complete assembly, is not a formal act and ought not to be carried out ... A (formal) act carried out by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out; and if one suspends one it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out ... and if an Order suspends an Order it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

“Monks, there are these four (formal) acts: a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule in a complete assembly; a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because it lacks reference to rule,¹ because of the incompleteness² (of the assembly), is reversible, is not fit to stand. Monks, a (formal) act like this should not be carried out, and a (formal) act like this is not allowed by me. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in a complete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because it lacks reference to rule, is reversible, is not fit to stand ... and a (formal) act like this is not allowed by me. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in an incomplete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because of the incompleteness (of the assembly), is reversible ... is not allowed by me. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in a complete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because it has reference to rule, because of the completeness (of the assembly), is irreversible, it is fit to stand. Monks, a (formal) act like this may be carried out and a (formal) act like this is allowed by me. Therefore, monks, thinking: ‘We will carry out a (formal) act like this, that is to say by rule, in a complete assembly’—it is thus that you must train yourselves.”

¹ adhammattā, not “wickedness” as Critical Pali Dictionary gives. ² vaggattā.

ON AN ACT WITHOUT A MOTION, ETC.

Now at that time the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts like these: they carried out a (formal) act not by rule in an incomplete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act not by rule in a complete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act by rule in an incomplete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act by what had the appearance of a rule in an incomplete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act by what had the appearance of a rule in a complete assembly; they also carried out a (formal) act for which a motion had not been furnished¹ although a proclamation had been furnished;² they also carried out a (formal) act for which a proclamation had not been furnished although a motion had been furnished; they also carried out a (formal) act for which a motion had not been furnished and for which a proclamation had not been furnished; they also carried out a (formal) act that was against the rule; they also carried out a (formal) act that was against discipline;³ they also carried out a (formal) act that was against the Teacher’s instruction;⁴ they also carried out a (formal) act that had been protested against,⁵ that was not legitimate, reversible, not fit to stand. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

¹ ñattivipanna. ² anussāvanasampanna, i.e. a proclamation of a kammavācā, the resolution. See S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p. 150. ³ Vin-a 1146 says that discipline here means “reproving, making (someone) remember”, i.e. giving the person against whom one is about to carry out a formal act a chance to confess his offence.

⁴ Vin-a 1146 says that this provides for a motion and a proclamation.

⁵ paṭikuṭṭhakata. Vin-a 1146 says that it was protested against (paṭikuṭṭha) but was also carried out (kata)—it was carried out in spite of the protests of others. See paṭikkosati at beginning of Bu-Pc 79, where the monks protest when a formal act is being carried out.

“How can this group of six monks carry out (formal) acts like these? How can they carry out a (formal) act not by rule in an incomplete assembly? ... How can they carry out a (formal) act that has been protested against, that is not legitimate,¹ reversible, not fit to stand?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts like these; that they carried out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... a (formal) act that has been protested against, that is not legitimate, reversible, not fit to stand?”

“It is true, Lord.” ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out ... A (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of a rule in a complete assembly is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act for which a motion is not furnished, although a proclamation is furnished, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act for which a proclamation is furnished, although a motion is not furnished, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act for which a motion is not furnished and for which a proclamation is not furnished, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act carried out against the rule ... against the discipline ... against the Teacher’s instruction is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act that has been protested against, that is not legitimate, reversible, not fit to stand, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

“Monks, there are these six (formal) acts: a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule in an incomplete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly.

¹ Omitted in Oldenberg’s text, but contained in the Sinhalese edition.

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule? If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution,¹ one carries out the (formal) act by means of the one motion but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, one carries out the (formal) act by means of two motions but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, one carries out the (formal) act by means of the one resolution but does not propose the motion, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, one carries out the (formal) act by means of two resolutions but does not propose the motion, it is a (formal) act carried out not by rule.

“If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times,² one carries out the (formal) act by means of one motion but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times, one carries out the (formal) act by means of two motions ... three motions ... four motions but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times, one carries out the (formal) act by means of one proclamation ... two proclamations ... three proclamations ... four proclamations, but does not propose the motion, then it is a (formal) act carried out not by rule. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule.

¹ ñattidutiya. This is a formal act in two parts, the motion, ñatti, being the first; the second part, dutiya, which consists of one proclamation, has to be made before the decision of an Order can be arrived at. ² ñatticatuttha, a formal act in four parts: the motion, and then the resolution, but this has to be proclaimed not once, but three times, have no neat expressions for such procedure.

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act¹ are not come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave of absence is not sent, if those who are present protest, it is a (formal) act in an incomplete assembly. If, monks, ... as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act are come, if the leave for absence ... is not sent, if those who are present protest, it is a (formal) act in an incomplete assembly. If, monks, ... as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act are come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave for absence is sent, if those who are present protest, it is a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution put three times ... (the same three cases as above are repeated here) ... it is a (formal) act in an incomplete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly.

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and as many monks as are (entitled to take part in the formal) act are come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave for absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, it is a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times ... (the same three cases as above are repeated here) ... it is a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly.

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in a formal) act have not come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave for absence is not sent, if those who are present protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

¹ kammappatta.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence ... is not sent, if those who are present protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave for absence of those (fit to declare) leave for absence is sent , if those who are present protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times ... (the same three cases as above are repeated here) ... This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence of those fit (to declare their) leave of absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times ... (the same as above is repeated here) ... it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of the rule in a complete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly.

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion

Vin 1,31

Kd 9,3-

BD 4,4

Kd 9,3-

and a resolution, and if one first proposes the motion and after one resolution carries out the (formal) act, if as many monks are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence of those fit (to declare their) leave of absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times, and if one first proposes the motion and after (having put) the resolution three times, carries out the (formal) act, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence of those who are fit (to declare their) leave of absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in a complete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in a complete assembly.¹

CARRYING OUT BY A FOURFOLD ORDER, ETC.

^{19.4.1} “Five (kinds of) Orders: a fourfold Order of monks, a fivefold Order of monks, a tenfold Order of monks, a twentyfold Order of monks, an Order of monks that is more than twenty-fold. In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being fourfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete, excepting three (formal) acts: ordination,² invitation,³ rehabilitation.⁴ In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being fivefold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete, excepting two (formal) acts: ordination in the middle districts,⁵ rehabilitation. In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being tenfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete, excepting one (formal) act: rehabilitation. In the case, monks of an Order of monks being twentyfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete. In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being more than twentyfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete.

¹ Oldenberg’s edition omits this last sentence. It is contained, rightly, in the Sinhalese edition. ² See Vin 1.58. At Vin 4.130 if a monk wants to ordain an individual and looks about for a group, he incurs an offence of wrong-doing. ³ See Kd 4.5.2 where monks, if they number only four, are allowed to invite one another, but where they are five (Kd 4.5.1) they should invite in an Order. ⁴ See BD 3.28, n. 4, and also BD 1.328. ⁵ In bordering districts a “group” (i.e. here four monks) may ordain with an expert on Vinaya as the fifth officiating monk, Vin 1.197.

Vin 1.32

CARRYING OUT BY A FOURFOLD (ORDER)

“If, monks, a fourfold Order, carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the fourth (member), then it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. If, monks, a fourfold Order, carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a probationer as the fourth (member) ... with a novice ... with a woman novice ... with a disavower of the training¹ ... with one who has committed an extreme offence ... with one who is suspended for not seeing an offence ... with one who is suspended for not making amends for an offence ... with one who is suspended for not giving up a wrong view ... with a eunuch ... with one living in communion as it were by theft² ... with one who has gone over to a sect³ ... with an animal ... with a matricide ... with a parricide ... with a slayer of ones perfected ... with a seducer of a nun ... with a schismatic ... with a shedder of (a tathāgata’s) blood ... with a hermaphrodite ... with one belonging to a different communion ... with one staying in a different boundary ... with one standing above the ground⁴ by psychic potency ... with one against whom an Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the fourth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

Kd 9.4.

BD 4.4

CARRYING OUT BY A FIVEFOLD (ORDER)

“If, monks, a fivefold (Order), carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the fifth (member) ... with one against whom the Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the fifth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

Kd 9.4.

CARRYING OUT BY A TENFOLD (ORDER)

^{9.4.4} “If, monks, a tenfold (Order), carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the tenth (member) ... with one against whom the Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the tenth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

CARRYING OUT BY A TWENTYFOLD (ORDER)

^{9.4.5} “If, monks, a twentyfold Order, carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the twentieth (member) ... with one against whom the Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the twentieth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

ON ONE ON PROBATION, ETC.

^{9.4.6} “If, monks, one on probation as the fourth (member) should grant probation,¹ should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

“If, monks, one deserving to be sent back to the beginning as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) and ought not to be carried out.

¹ For the following sequence of terms, down to hermaphrodite, cf. Vin 1.121. Vin 1.135, Vin 1.167, and above, BD 4.160. ² At Vin 1.86 not to be ordained. ³ At Vin 1.86 not to be ordained. ⁴ On vehāsa, as “above the ground”, see BD 1.79, n. 5. ¹ All these constitute part of the penalty for committing a Sānghadisesa offence. Those undergoing the penalty cannot inflict it on others, nor can they rehabilitate them when the penalty is duly over. Cf. Kd 12.1.4.

“If, monks, one deserving mānatta as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member) should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. “If, monks, one undergoing mānatta as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

“If, monks, one deserving rehabilitation as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

“Monks, the protest of some (people) in the midst of an Order is valid, of others is not valid. And, monks, of whom is a protest in the midst of an Order not valid? Monks, the protest of a nun in the midst of an Order is not valid ... of a probationer ... of a novice ... of a woman novice ... of a disavower of the training ... of one who has committed an extreme offence ... of one who is mad ... of one who is unhinged ... of one who is in pain ... of one who is suspended for not seeing an offence¹ ... of one against whom an Order is carrying out a (formal) act. Monks, a protest of these in the midst of an Order is not valid.

“And, monks, of whom is a protest in the midst of an Order valid? Monks, a protest of a regular² monk in the midst of an Order is valid if he belongs to the same communion, if he is staying within the same boundary, even if he only informs the monk next (to him).³ Monks, his protest in the midst of an Order is valid.

¹ Same list as that at Kd 9.4.2. ² pakatatta. Vin-a 1147 says he is one who has not fallen from moral habit and has not committed a pārajika offence. Cf. Vin 2.6, Vin 2.32f. ³ ānantarikassāpi bhikkhuno viññāpentassa. Vin-a 1147 says, “if he immediately sits down himself” (in the assembly). Cf. the anantarikā nun at Vin 4.234, i.e. the next nun in an almsfood procession.

ON TWO SENT AWAY, ETC.

9.4.9 “There are, monks, these two (kinds of) being sent away.¹ There is, monks, the individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away,² but if an Order sends him away he may be rightly sent away, or he may be wrongly sent away. And which, monks, is an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, but who, if an Order sends him away, is wrongly sent away? Now this is a case, monks, where there is a pure monk, not an offender; if the Order sends him away, he is wrongly sent away. This, monks, is called an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, and who, if the Order sends him away, is wrongly sent away. And which, monks, is an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, but who, if an Order sends him away, is rightly sent away? Now this is a case, monks, where there is an ignorant, inexperienced monk, full of offences, not rid of them,³ one who lives in company with householders in inappropriate association with householders; if an Order sends him away, he is rightly sent away. This, monks, is called an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, but who, if the Order sends him away, is rightly sent away.

1.322 9.4.10 “There are, monks, these two (kinds of) restoration.⁴ There is, monks, the individual who has not arrived at the point of restoration, but if an Order restores him, he may be rightly restored, or he may be wrongly restored. And which, monks, is the individual who has not arrived at the point of restoration, but who, if an Order restores him, is wrongly restored? A eunuch,⁵ monks, does not arrive⁶ at the point of restoration; if the Order restores him, he is wrongly restored.

¹ nissāraṇā. Cf. Nuns' Saṅghādisesas, and see BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxvi. Vin-a 1147 explains that the Order sends away, nissāreti, by an act of banishment, censure and so on. ² appatto nissāraṇam; he is not guilty enough to be sent away. ³ anapadāna. Vin-a 1148 explains apadāna by pariccheda, and says that the meaning of anapadāna is “without the pariccheda of offences”. Cf. below Kd 9.7.6. ⁴ osāraṇā, see BD 3.28, n. 4. ⁵ Same list recurs above, Kd 9.4.2. ⁶ Again, appatta; but none of these may be ordained, or, if ordained, they should be expelled, nāseti. They therefore cannot be restored, not being in a position to obtain restoration.

Monks, one living in communion, as it were by theft, ... one gone over to a sect ... an animal ... a matricide ... a parricide ... a slayer of one perfected ... a seducer of a nun ... a schismatic ... a shedder of (a Truthfinder's) blood ... a hermaphrodite does not arrive at the point of restoration; if an Order restores him, he is wrongly restored. These, monks, are called individuals who do not arrive at the point of restoration, and who, if the Order restores them, are wrongly restored.

“And which, monks, is an individual who has not arrived at the point of restoration, and who if an Order restores him, is rightly restored? One with his hands cut off,¹ monks, who has not arrived at the point of restoration, if an Order restores him, is rightly restored. Monks, one with his feet cut off ... one with his hands and feet cut off ... his ears cut off ... his nose cut off ... his ears and nose cut off ... his fingers cut off ... his nails cut off ... one with his tendons cut ... one who has webbed hands ... a hunchback ... a dwarf ... one who had goitre ... one who has been branded ... one who has been scourged ... one who has been written about ... one who has elephantiasis ... one who is badly ill ... one who has disgraced an assembly (by some deformity) ... one who is blind ... one with a crooked limb ... one who is lame ... one paralysed down one side ... a cripple ... one weak through old age ... one who is blind from birth ... one who is dumb ... one who is deaf ... one who is blind and dumb ... one who is blind and deaf ... one who is deaf and dumb ... one who is blind and deaf and dumb who has not arrived at the point of restoration, if an Order restores him, is rightly restored. These, monks, are called individuals who have not arrived at the point of restoration, and who, if an Order restores them, are rightly restored.

Kd 9.4.

BD 4.4

ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE, ETC.

“This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk’s that should be seen.¹ If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing the offence,² it is not a legally valid (formal) act. This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Make amends for this offence,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverences, an offence of mine for which I should make amends,’ and if the Order suspends him for not making amends for the offence,³ it is not a legally valid (formal) act. This is a case, monks, where there is not a wrong view of a monk’s that should be given up.⁴ If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘This is a wrong view of yours, your reverence. Give up this wrong view,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence, a wrong view of mine that I should give up,’ and if the Order suspends him for not giving up the wrong view,⁵ it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk’s that should be seen, not an offence for which amends should be made. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see; there is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk’s

¹ Same list at Vin 1.91, where such people may not “go forth”. See above, BD 4.116 for notes. ¹ I.e. by him. ² Cf. Kd 11.25–Kd.11.30. ³ Cf. Kd 11.31. ⁴ paṭhissaj-jetā = paṭhissajjitabbā, Vin-a 1147. ⁵ Cf. Kd.11.32–Kd.11.35.

that should be seen, not a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view'; and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see; there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

"This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk's for which amends should be made, there is not a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence; make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours, give up this wrong view,' and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s) an offence of mine for which I should make amends; there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,' and if the Order suspends him for not making amends or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

"This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk's that should be seen, there is not an offence for which amends should be made, there is not a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view,' and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see; there is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends; there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

"This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk's that should be seen. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?' and if he speaks thus: 'Yes, your

Kd 9.5.

BD 4.4

Kd 9.5.

Vin 1.32

Kd 9.5.

reverence(s), I see it,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing the offence, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Make amends for this offence,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverence(s), I will make amends,’ and if the Order suspends him for not making amends for the offence, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

4.4.65
19.5.7
“This is a case, monks, where there is a wrong view of a monk’s that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘This, your reverence, is a wrong view of yours. Give up this wrong view,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverence(s), I will give it up,’ and if the Order suspends him for not giving up the wrong view, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made ... where there is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence of a monk’s which should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverence(s), I see, yes, I will make amends, yes, I will give it up,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

9.5.8
“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing, it is a legally valid (formal) act.

Vin 1.32

“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made ... If he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends,’ and if the Order suspends him for not making amends, it is a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is a wrong view of a monk’s that should be given up ... If he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), a wrong view of mine, that should be given up,’ and if the Order suspends him for not giving up the wrong view, it is a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made ... where there is an offence that should be seen, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence that should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine which I should see, there is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends, there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends or for not giving up, it is a legally valid (formal) act.”

Kd 9.5.

BD 4.4

ON THE QUESTIONS OF UPĀLI

Kd 9.6.

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Does an Order, Lord, that is complete carry out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of¹ (an accused monk) if he is absent? Lord, is that a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”²

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

“Does an Order, Lord, that is complete carry out a (formal) act that should be carried out by the interrogation³ (of an accused monk) if there is no interrogation? Does it carry out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the acknowledgement⁴ (of an accused monk) if there is no acknowledgement? Does it give a verdict of past insanity⁵ to one who merits a verdict of innocence?⁶ Does it carry out a (formal) act for specific depravity⁷ against one who merits a verdict of past insanity? Does it carry out a (formal) act of censure⁸ against one who merits a (formal) act for specific depravity? Does it carry out a (formal) act of placing under guidance for one who merits a (formal) act of censure? Does it carry out a (formal) act of banishment against one who merits a (formal) act of placing under guidance? Does it carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for one who merits a (formal) act of banishment? Does it carry out a (formal) act of suspension against one who merits a (formal) act of reconciliation? Does it grant probation¹ to one who merits a (formal) act of suspension? Does it send back to the beginning one who merits probation? Does it inflict mānatta on one who merits being sent back to the beginning? Does it rehabilitate one who merits mānatta? Does it ordain one who merits rehabilitation? Is this a legally valid (formal) act, Lord, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

¹ sammukhākaraṇīyaṃ. Cf. Vin 2.93. ² dhammakamma vinayakamma and their opposites (adhamma-, avinaya-) occur at AN i.74, AN i.75. AN-a ii.149 explains adhamma- and avinaya- as uddhamma and ubbinaya, where ud- means “off” and therefore “wrong” as in ummagga. ³ paṭipucchākaraṇīyaṃ. ⁴ paṭiññāya. Cf. BD 3.153, n. 5; AN i.99; MN ii.248. ⁵ amūḷhavinaya. See BD 3.153, n. 5; AN i.99; MN ii.248. ⁶ sativinayārahassa. On sativinaya see BD 3.153, n. 3.; MN ii.247. Word occurs at AN i.99; GS i.85 translates “proceedings about mindfulness”. ⁷ tassapāpiyyasikā. Cf. BD 3.154, n. 1; AN i.99; MN ii.249, Vin 1.85f. ⁸ For this and the four following formal acts, cf. Vin 1.49 (above, BD 4.66) and AN i.99.

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of (an accused monk) if he is absent—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far.² Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act which should be carried out on the interrogation (of an accused monk) if there is no interrogation ... carries out a (formed) act which should be carried out with the acknowledgement (of an accused monk) if there is no acknowledgement ... ordains one meriting rehabilitation—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act”, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of (an accused monk) when he is present, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the interrogation (of an accused monk) when there is interrogation, if it carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the acknowledgement of (an accused monk) when there is his acknowledgement, if it gives a verdict of innocence to one who merits a verdict of innocence ... if it rehabilitates one who merits rehabilitation, if it ordains one who merits ordination, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

¹ This and the next three (not ordination) occur at AN 1.99. They are each part of the penalty incurred for a Saṅghādisesa offence. ² sātisāra, as at Vin 1.55 (above, BD 4.71).

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of (an accused monk) when he is present—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the interrogation (of an accused monk) when there is interrogation ... ordains one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of innocence, gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of past insanity, if it gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity; if it carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity, if it carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a (formal) act of censure; if it carries out a (formal) act of placing under guidance against one meriting a (formal) act of censure, if it carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a (formal) act of placing under guidance; if it carries out a (formal) act of banishment against one meriting a (formal) act of placing under guidance, if it carries out a (formal) act of placing under guidance against one meriting a (formal) act of banishment; if it carries out a (formal) act of reconciliation against one meriting a (formal) act of banishment, if it carries out a (formal) act of banishment against one meriting a (formal) act of reconciliation; if it carries out a (formal) act of suspension against one meriting a (formal) act of reconciliation, if it carries out a (formal) act of reconciliation against one meriting a (formal) act of suspension; if it grants probation to one meriting a (formal) act of suspension, if it carries out a (formal) act of suspension against one meriting probation; if it sends back to the beginning one meriting probation, if it grants probation to one meriting being sent back to the beginning; if it inflicts mānatta on one meriting being sent back to the beginning, if it sends back to the beginning one meriting mānatta; if it rehabilitates one meriting mānatta, if it inflicts mānatta on one meriting rehabilitation; if it ordains one meriting rehabilitation, if it rehabilitates one meriting ordination, is that, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of innocence, gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of past insanity—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of past insanity ... that rehabilitates one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of innocence, if it gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act;”

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, if it carries out a (formal)

Kd 9.6.

BD 4.4

Kd 9.6.

act for specific depravity against one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity ... if it rehabilitates one meriting rehabilitation, if it ordains one meriting ordination—is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of innocence, gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, ... ordains one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Whatever Order, monks, that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of innocence—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, monks, that is complete, carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of innocence, carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a verdict of innocence¹ ... ordains one meriting a verdict of innocence—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, monks, that is complete carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of past insanity ... carries out a (formal) act of censure ... ordains one meriting a verdict of past insanity, gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of past insanity—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, monks, that is complete, carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity ... rehabilitates one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far.”

¹ As explained at Vinaya Texts ii.279, n. 2, in this paragraph all possible combinations of two different formal acts are arranged in this way: first, verdict of innocence is combined with verdict of past insanity and all the rest, down to ordination; then verdict of past insanity with all terms from specific depravity down to innocence, and so on; the whole series ends thus with the combination of meriting ordination with all terms from verdict of innocence down to rehabilitation.

The Second Portion for Repeating: that on Upāli’s Questions

ON AN ACT OF CENSURE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife, a maker of dispute, a maker of contention, a maker of brawls, a maker of legal questions in an Order.¹ It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in the Order. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him not by rule, in a complete assembly. He then goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, not by rule, in a complete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out

¹ As at Vin 4.45, Vin 4.230. See BD 3.191, n. 3 for further references.

Kd 9.7:

BD 4.4

Vin 1.3:

against this monk, by rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him'; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: 'A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him'; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly.

19.7.2 "This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in an Order. It then occurs to monks: 'This monk, your reverences, is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in the Order. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him'; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: 'A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, not by rule, in a complete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him'; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by ride, in an incomplete assembly. He then goes from that residence ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly. He then goes from that residence ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of a rule, in a complete assembly. He then goes from that residence ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly.

19.7.3 "This is a case, monks, ... (as above) ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly ... not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly.

19.7.4 "This is a case, monks, ... (as above) ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly, by rule, in an incomplete assembly.

“This is a case, monks, ... (as above) ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of a rule, in an incomplete assembly.

ON AN ACT OF GUIDANCE

“This is a case, monks, where an ignorant, inexperienced monk,¹ full of offences, not rid of them, lives in company with householders in inappropriate association with householders. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, ignorant, inexperienced, ... in inappropriate association with householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him’; and these carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence ... (as above in Kd 9.7.1) ... not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out as it is below.²

ON AN ACT OF BANISHMENT

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is one who brings families into disrepute and is of depraved conduct.³ It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, ... is of depraved conduct. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him'; and they carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... (as in Kd 9.7.6) ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

¹ Cf. above, Kd 9.4.9. ² I.e. in Kd 9.7.1- Kd.9.7.5. The “wheel”, cakka, series, cycle, is the “arrangement of five categories on which this exposition is based ...” (as said in note at Vinaya Texts ii.281). “Below” stands for our “above”, from the fact that the palm-leaf manuscripts are arranged with the first leaf at the bottom of the pile of leaves of which any work or “book” is made up. ³ As in Bu-Ss 13, and see below, Kd 9.7.18.

ON AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION

9.7.8

“This is a case, monks, where a monk reviles, abuses¹ householders. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, reviles, abuses householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... (as in Kd 9.7.6) ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

ON AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

9.7.9

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence.² It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not seeing the offence’; and they carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not seeing the offence, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

ON AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS

9.7.10 “This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into an offence, does not want to make amends for the offence.¹ It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, having fallen into an offence, does not want to make amends for the offence. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not making amends for the offence’; and they carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not making amends for the offence, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

Vin 1.33

ON AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING

“This is a case, monks, where a monk does not want to give up a wrong view. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, does not want to give up a wrong view. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not giving up a wrong view’; and they carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not giving up a wrong view, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

Kd 9.7.1

BD 4.4

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF CENSURE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by the Order, conducts himself properly,² is subdued, mends his ways,³ and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order is conducting himself properly, is subdued, is mending his ways. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure¹ against him'; and they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: 'A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, against this monk was revoked by an Order, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure against him'; and they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly.

Kd 9.7.1

¹ Cf. Vin 3.184; Vin 4.309; BD 3.344. ² Cf. Kd 11.25–Kd 11.30. ¹ Cf. Kd 11.31.

² “Proper conduct” given at Kd 11.5.1. ³ Cf. Vin 1.49 (above, BD 4.66).

9.7.13 "This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by an Order conducts himself properly, is subdued, mends his ways, and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. It then occurs to monks: 'This monk, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by the Order, conducts himself properly ... asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure against him and they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly ... (as in Kd 9.7.2–Kd 9.7.5) ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF GUIDANCE

9.7.14
4.476 "This is a case, monks, where a monk for whom a (formal) act of guidance² has been carried out by an Order, conducts himself properly, is subdued, mends his ways, and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance ... (as in Kd 9.7.12, Kd 9.7.13)

¹ Cf. Kd 11.6.2–Kd 11.8.2. ² See Kd 11.9.1–Kd 12.2.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF BANISHMENT

“This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of banishment ...¹

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION

... a (formal) act of reconciliation ...²

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

... a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence ...³

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS

...a (formal) act of suspension for not making amends for an offence ...⁴

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING

... a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view ...⁵ has been carried out by an Order.

The cycle should be worked out.

ON DISPUTING AN ACT OF CENSURE

Kd 9.7.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife, a maker of disputes a maker of contention, a maker of brawls, a maker of legal questions in the Order. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, is a maker of ... legal questions in the Order. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. In this case the Order disputes saying: ‘A (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act not by rule, in a complete assembly; a (formal) act by rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly; the (formal) act is not carried out, the (formal) act is badly carried out, the (formal) act should be carried out again’¹ Herein, monks, those monks who speak thus: ‘A (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly’, and those monks who speak thus: ‘The (formal) act is not carried out, the (formal) act is badly carried out, the (formal) act should be carried out again’, these monks are here speakers of what is right.²

9.7.16

4.477

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife ... and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly. In this case the Order disputes saying: ... Herein, monks, those monks who speak thus: ‘A (formal) act not by rule, in a complete assembly’ and those monks who speak thus: ‘The (formal) act is not carried out, the (formal) act is badly carried out, the (formal) act should be carried out again these monks are here speakers of what is right. This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife ... and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... these monks are here speakers of what is right.

¹ See Kd 11.13.1–Kd 11.17.2. ² See Kd 11.18.5–Kd 11.24.1. ³ See Kd 11.25.1–Kd 11.30.

⁴ See Kd 11.31. ⁵ See Kd 11.32–Kd 11.35. ¹ As at Vin 4.126 (BD 3.5).

² dhammavādino.

ON DISPUTING AN ACT OF GUIDANCE

“This is a case, monks, where an ignorant, inexperienced monk, full of offences, not rid of them, lives in company with householders in inappropriate association with householders. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, ignorant, inexperienced, lives ... with householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. In this case the Order disputes ... these monks are here speakers of what is right. These five occasions in brief.

Kd 9.7.1

ON DISPUTING AN ACT OF BANISHMENT

“This is a case, monks, where a monk brings families into disrepute and is of depraved conduct.¹ It then occurs to monks: ‘... let us carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him ... These five, occasions in brief.

Kd 9.7.1

ON DISPUTING AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION

“This is a case, monks, where a monk reviles, abuses householders. It then occurs to monks: ‘... let us carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him’ ... These five occasions in brief.

Vin 1.33

¹ Cf. Bu-Ss 13, and above Kd 9.7.7.

ON DISPUTING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk having fallen into an offence does not want to see the offence ...

ON DISPUTING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS FOR AN OFFENCE

... having fallen into an offence does not want to make amends for the offence ...

ON DISPUTING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING

... does not want to give up a wrong view. It then occurs to monks: ‘... let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not giving up the wrong view’ ... These five occasions in brief.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF CENSURE

^{9.7.19}
^{4.478} “This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by an Order conducts himself properly, is subdued, mends his ways, and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by the Order, conducts himself properly ... and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure against him’, and these revoke the (formal) act of censure against him not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. In this case the Order disputes ... these monks here are speakers of what is right. This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by an Order, conducts himself properly

... they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... these monks are here speakers of what is right.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF GUIDANCE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk for whom a (formal) act of guidance has been carried out by an Order ...

Kd 9.7.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF BANISHMENT

... of banishment ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION

... of reconciliation ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

... of suspension for not seeing an offence ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS

... of suspension for not making amends for an offence ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING

... of suspension for not giving up a wrong view, has been carried out by an Order, conducts himself properly ... these monks are here speakers of what is right.”

The Ninth Section: that on (the monks) at Campā

IN THIS SECTION THERE ARE THIRTY-SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

The Lord was at Campā, case at Vāsabha village, he made an effort for in-coming monks in regard to what they wanted,¹ /
Having known “They are appointed” henceforth he made no effort, Thinking “Suspended, one does not carry out”, he went to the Victor, /
A (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly,
by rule in a complete assembly,
and a (formal) act by rule in an incomplete assembly, by what has the appearance of rule in an incomplete assembly, /
By what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly, one suspends one,
and one two, several, one suspends an Order, /
Then two, then several, and an Order suspends an Order, the distinguished, omniscient one, having heard, objects, saying, “It is not the rule”, /
Whatever (formal) act for which the motion is not furnished
(although) a proclamation is furnished
And that for which the proclamation is not furnished although it is furnished with a motion, /
If neither is furnished and it is also not by rule, against the teacher’s (instruction), protested against, reversible, not fit to stand, /
Not by rule, in an incomplete assembly—these two, but just this: by rule, in a complete assembly is allowed by the Truthfinder. / Fourfold, fivefold, tenfold and twenty and more than twentyfold—an Order is thus of five kinds. /
Having excluded ordination and whatever (formal) act for Invitation (there is)

¹ Oldenberg’s text icchitabbake; Sinhalese edition -ko.

together with the (formal) act of rehabilitation—
 the carrying out is by means of a fourfold Order, / Excluding two (formal) acts:
 ordination in the middle districts
 (and) rehabilitation—the carrying out is by means of a fivefold Order. / Excluding rehabilitation alone—these monks are tenfold, an Order of twenty carries out all (formal) acts, it is the carrier out of everything. /
 Nun, probationer and novice, woman novice, disavower, (one who has committed) an extreme offence, one suspended for not seeing an offence, /
 For not making amends for,
 (for not giving up) a wrong view, eunuch, one living in communion as it were by theft,
 (one gone over to) a sect, an animal, slayer of mother, of father, /
 Of one perfected, seducer of a nun, schismatic, shedder of (a Truthfinder's) blood,
 hermaphrodite, one belonging to a different communion, staying within a different boundary,
 (standing above the ground) by psychic power, /
 One against whom an Order is carrying out a (formal) act—these come to be twenty-four
 (and) they are objected to by the Awakened One for they are not completers of a group./
 If one undergoing probation should as the fourth member grant probation or should rehabilitate one (sent back to) the beginning or (undergoing) mānatta it is not a (formal) act and should not be carried out. /
 So too, if one deserving the beginning or mānatta (should rehabilitate) one deserving rehabilitation—this is not in accordance with a (formal) act—the five are explained by the All-awakened One. / Nun, probationer, novice, woman novice, disavower, (one who has committed) an extreme (offence), who is mad, unhinged, in pain, (suspended) for not seeing, /
 For not making amends for, for (not giving up) a wrong view, and a eunuch and a hermaphrodite, one belonging to a different communion (or) boundary

(or standing) above the ground (by psychic power) and one against whom a (formal) act is being carried out, /

Of these eighteen the protest is not valid, the protest is valid of a regular monk. /

A pure one may be wrongly sent away, and an ignorant one rightly sent away, eunuch, one living in communion as it were by theft, going over (to a sect), an animal, / (Slayer) of mother, of father, of one perfected, seducer (of a nun), schismatic of the Order,
shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood and also a hermaphrodite and whichever /

Of these eleven is not meant for restoration.

Hands, feet, both these, ears, nose, both these, / Fingers, nails, tendons, one who has webbed hands, hunchback, and dwarf,
one who has goitre, who has been branded, scourged, and who has been written about and one who has elephantiasis, /

One who is badly ill, who has disgraced an assembly, who is blind, and one with a crooked limb, lame, and also one who is paralysed, a cripple, one weak through age, blind from birth, dumb, and deaf, / Blind and dumb, (blind and) deaf, and dumb and deaf likewise, and blind-deaf-dumb: all these thirty-two—/

Their restoration was explained by the all enlightened one.

(An offence) that should be seen, for which amends should be made,
(a wrong view) to be given up does not exist, /

There are seven (formal) acts suspending him which are not legally valid,
And these seven that are not legally valid for one complying with his falling, Among (formal) acts there are seven that are legally valid for one not complying with his falling, in the presence of, interrogation, and according as it is and on the acknowledgement,

Innocence, past insanity, depravity,¹ and on account of censure, banishment, reconciliation, and suspension, probation, /

The beginning, mānatta, rehabilitation, and thus ordination:

These sixteen² are not legally valid if it should carry out one for another,³ /
These sixteen are quite legally valid

¹ Here pāpikā for tassapāpiyyasika. ² Only fifteen listed above: nissaya (placing under) guidance, is omitted. ³ "It" is an Order, see Kd 9.6.2, but if it carries out a formal act that is not appropriate and does not fit the case, that formal act is not legally valid.

if it should carry out the appropriate one for that one,¹ reciprocally they should explain how these sixteen are not legally valid, /
 When conditioned for it paired²:
 these sixteen are also legally valid,
 when conditioned (for it) singly:
 the conqueror said the cycle³ is not legal. /
 One who makes strife⁴:
 the Order carries out a (formal) act of banishment not by rule, in an incomplete assembly;
 he goes to another residence, /
 There they carried out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule,⁵ in a complete assembly, elsewhere they carried out a (formal) act of banishment against him by rule, in an incomplete assembly, /
 And they likewise carried out one which in both cases had the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly, in a complete assembly, and not by rule in a complete assembly, also by rule in an incomplete assembly, /
 And by what had the appearance of rule in an incomplete assembly, and in a complete assembly:
 these cases, having done what is conditioned singly, put the cycle together. /
 Guidance for one who is ignorant, inexperienced, banishment for one who brings a family into disrepute,
 And they carried out a (formal) act of reconciliation for a reviler, /
 And for whoever does not see, does not make amends for (an offence), does not give up a (wrong) view:
 for these a (formal) act of suspension was decreed by the leader of the caravan. /
 The wisdom of these (formal) acts of suspension should be applied to censure, and if, being subdued, conducting himself properly, he has asked, /
 The revocation of these or those (formal) acts is according to the (formal) acts below.⁶
 And if in this or that case he disputes some (formal) act /
 And says, “It was not carried out, it was badly carried out,

¹ taṃ taṃ kareyya taṃ tassa soḷas’ete sudhammikā. ² dvedvetamūlakarī. ³ cakka wheel, cycle series. ⁴ OLDENBERG, at Vin 1.394, notes that “all three manuscripts read bhaṇḍanakāra”, where the accusative would have been expected. ⁵ OLD-ENBERG’s text reads dhammena; Sinhalese edition tatthādhhammena and see Kd 9.7.1.
⁶ heṭṭhā, “below” is equivalent to our “above”.

it should be carried out again”, further, concerning the revocation of the (formal) act:
these monks are speakers of what is right. /
The Great Sage, having seen falling away from shakiness¹ in one entitled (to take part in a formal) act prescribed revocation, as a surgeon medicine.

1.337

¹ vipattivādhite. Sinhalese edition -dhitā.

10. THE MONKS FROM KOSAMBĪ (KOSAMBAKA)

ON THE DISPUTE AMONG THE MONKS FROM KOSAMBĪ

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Kosambī in Ghosita's monastery. Now at that time a certain monk had fallen into an offence; he saw that offence as an offence but other monks saw that offence as no offence. After a time he saw that offence as no offence, while the other monks saw that offence as an offence. Then these monks spoke thus to that monk: "You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?"

"There is not an offence of mine, your reverences, that I can see." Then these monks, having obtained unanimity, suspended that monk for not seeing the offence.

But that monk had heard much,¹ he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down; he was an expert on dhamma, an expert on discipline, an expert on the summaries; he was wise, experienced, clever; he was conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. Then that monk, having approached monks who were his comrades and intimates, spoke thus: "This is no offence,² your reverences, this is not an offence; I am unfallen, I have not fallen; I am unsuspended, I am not suspended; I was suspended by a (formal) act that was not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. Let the venerable ones be my partisans on account of the rule, on account of discipline." And that monk gained as partisans the monks who were his comrades and intimates. And he sent a messenger to monks in the country who were his comrades and intimates, saying: “This is no offence, your reverences ... not fit to stand. Let the venerable ones be my partisans on account of the rule, on account of discipline.” And that monk gained as partisans those monks in the country who were his comrades and intimates.

¹ Cf. Vin 1.119 (above, BD 4.157). ² As above, BD 4.449.

Then these monks who took the part of the suspended one approached those monks who had suspended him; having approached, they spoke thus to the monks who had suspended him: “This is no offence, your reverences, this is not an offence; this monk is unfallen, this monk has not fallen; this monk is unsuspended, this monk is not suspended; he was suspended by a (formal) act that was not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand.” When they had spoken thus, the monks who had suspended him spoke thus to the monks who took the part of the suspended one:

“This is an offence, your reverences, this is not no offence; this monk has fallen, this monk is not unfallen; this monk is suspended, this monk is not unsuspended; he was suspended by a (formal) act that was legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. Do not you, your reverences, take the part of this suspended monk, do not side with him.” But those monks who took the part of the suspended (monk), although being spoken to thus by the ones who had suspended him, still took the part of that suspended monk and sided with him.

Then a certain monk approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that monk spoke thus to the Lord: “This is a case, Lord, where a certain monk has fallen into an offence. He saw that offence as an offence but other monks saw that offence as no offence. After a time he saw that offence as no offence, while the other monks saw that offence as an offence. Then, Lord, those monks spoke thus to that monk: ... (as in Kd 10.1.1) ... ‘... Do you see this offence?’ He said: ‘There is not an offence of mine, your reverences, that I can see Then, Lord, these monks, having obtained unanimity, suspended that monk for not seeing the offence. But, Lord, that monk had heard much, he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down ... desirous of training. Then, Lord, that monk, having approached monks who were his comrades and intimates ... (as in Kd 10.1.2) ... And, Lord, that monk gained as partisans the monks who were his comrades and intimates ... And, Lord, that monk gained as partisans those monks in the country who were his comrades and intimates. Then, Lord, those monks who took the part of the suspended one ... (as in Kd 10.1.3) ... When they had spoken thus, Lord, the monks who had suspended him spoke thus: ... But those monks, Lord, who took the part of the suspended (monk) although being spoken to thus by the ones who had suspended him, still took the part of that suspended monk and sided with him.”

Then the Lord, thinking: “The Order of monks is divided, the Order of monks is divided”, rising from his seat approached the monks who had suspended (that monk); having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. As he was sitting down, the Lord spoke thus to the monks who had suspended (that monk): “Do not you, monks, thinking: ‘It appears so to us, it appears so to us deem that a monk should be suspended on every occasion.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence. He sees that offence as no offence; other monks see that offence as an offence. If, monks, those monks know concerning that monk: ‘This venerable one has heard much, he is one to whom the tradition has been handed down ... desirous of training. If we suspend this monk for not seeing the offence we cannot carry out the Observance together with this monk, we will carry out the Observance without this monk—from this source there will be strife, dispute, contention, brawls, for the Order, there will be schism in the Order, dissension in the Order,¹ altercation in the Order, differences in the Order.’ Monks, that monk should not be suspended for not seeing an offence by monks bent on a schism.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence.

¹ For further references to saṅghabheda saṅgharāji see BD 2.233, n. 3.

He sees that offence ... (as in Kd 10.1.6) ... ‘... if we suspend this monk for not seeing the offence we cannot invite together with this monk, we will invite without this monk; we cannot carry out a (formal) act of the Order together with this monk, we will carry out a (formal) act of the Order without this monk; we cannot sit down on a seat together with this monk, we will sit down on a seat without this monk; we cannot sit down to drink conjei together with this monk, we will sit down to drink conjei without this monk; we cannot sit down in a refectory together with this monk, we will sit down in a refectory without this monk; we cannot stay under one roof together with this monk, we will stay under one roof without this monk;¹ we cannot, according to seniority, carry out greeting together with this monk, rising up before (one another), saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties, but we will, according to seniority, carry out greetings ... doing the proper duties without this monk—from this source there will be strife ... differences in the Order.’ Monks, that monk should not be suspended for not seeing an offence by monks bent on a schism.”

Then the Lord, having spoken on this matter with the monks who had suspended that monk, rising from his seat, approached those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (monk); having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. As he was sitting down, the Lord spoke thus to the monks who were taking the part of the suspended (monk): “Do not you, monks, having fallen into an offence, deem that amends should not be made for the offence, thinking: ‘We have not fallen’. This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence; he sees that offence as no offence; other monks see that offence as an offence. If, monks, that monk knows concerning those monks: ‘These venerable ones have heard much ... (as in Kd 10.1.2) ... desirous of training. It is impossible for them, because of me or because of anyone else, to follow a wrong course through desire, through hatred, through stupidity, through fear. If these monks suspend me for not seeing the offence, if they do not carry out the Observance together with me, if they carry out the Observance without me ... if they do not invite together with me, if they invite without me ... if they, according to seniority, carry out greetings without me, rising up before (one another), saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties—from this source there will be for the Order strife ... differences in the Order'. Monks, the offence should be confessed even out of faith¹ in others by a monk who is bent on a schism." Then the Lord, having spoken on this matter with the monks who took the part of the suspended (monk), rising from his seat, departed.

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc 69.

Now at that time monks taking the part of a suspended (monk) carried out the Observance just there within the boundary, and carried out a (formal) act of the Order; but the monks who had suspended (him), having gone outside the boundary, carried out the Observance and carried out a (formal) act of the Order (there). Then ascertain monk who had suspended him, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that monk spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, these monks who are taking the part of a suspended (monk) are carrying out the Observance just there within the boundary, they are carrying out a (formal) act of the Order; but we, the monks who have suspended him, having gone outside the boundary, are carrying out the Observance, we are carrying out a (formal) act of the Order (there)."

"Monk, if these monks who are taking the part of the suspended (monk) are carrying out the Observance just there within the boundary and are carrying out a (formal) act of the Order, these (formal) acts of theirs will be legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand because a motion and a proclamation have been laid down by me. If, monk, you monks who suspended him, carry out the Observance just there within the boundary, if you carry out a (formal) act of the Order, these (formal) acts of yours are also legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, because a motion and a proclamation have been laid down by me.

¹ Correct sandhāya of text to saddhāya, and cf. Vin 2.289 api cāyasmantānaṃ saddhāya desemi.

“What is the reason for this? These monks belong to a different communion from yours and you belong to a different communion from theirs. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to a different communion: either, of oneself one makes oneself belong to a different communion,¹ or a complete Order suspends one for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to a different communion. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to the same communion: either, of oneself one makes oneself belong to the same communion, or a complete Order restores one who was suspended for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to the same communion.”²

Now at that time monks, causing quarrels, causing strife, falling into disputes in a refectory amidst the houses, behaved unsuitably towards one another in gesture, in speech; they came to blows.³ People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, causing quarrels ... come to blows?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks ... come to blows?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks ... came to blows?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, if an Order is divided, if it is behaving not according to the rule, if there is unfriendliness, you should sit down on a seat thinking: ‘At least we will not behave unsuitably to one another in gesture, in speech; we will not come to blows.’ Monks, if an Order is divided but if it is behaving according to the rule, if there is friendliness, you may sit down on a seat next (to one another).”

¹ According to Vin-a 1149 he chooses to sit among those who speak dhamma and rather than among those who do not. ² End of this story given at Kd 10.5.11ff.

³ Cf. Bu-Pc 64, Bu-Pc 65.

Now at that time¹ monks, making quarrels, making strife, falling into disputes in the midst of an Order, wounded one another with the weapons of the tongue;² they were not able to settle that legal question. Then a certain monk approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, that monk spoke thus to the Lord: “This is a case, Lord, where monks, making quarrels ... are not able to settle that legal question. It would be good, Lord, if the Lord out of compassion were to approach those monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. The Lord approached those monks; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat. As he was sitting down, the Lord spoke thus to those monks:

“Enough, monks; no strife, no quarrels, no contention, no disputing.” When he had spoken thus, a certain monk who spoke what was not-*dhamma*³ spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord let the Lord, the dhamma-master⁴ wait; Lord, let the Lord, unconcerned,⁵ live intent on abiding in ease here and now;⁶ we will be (held) accountable for this strife, quarrel, contention, disputing.” And a second time the Lord spoke thus to these monks:⁷ “Enough, monks; no strife ... no disputing.” And a second time the monks who spoke what was not-dhamma spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord, the dhamma-master wait; ... we will be (held) accountable for this ... disputing.”

¹ Kd 10.2.2 = MN iii.152f., with slight differences. ² mukhasattihi as at Ud 67, AN i.70, Ja i.341. ³ adhammavādin, or, one adhering to or professing what was not-dhamma. Vin-a 1150 says: one of those taking the part of the suspended (monk). Word also occurs at MN i.287 = MN iii.48 = AN ii.22 = AN v.265 = AN v.283, always in a formula with which cf. AN i.202, DN i.4. Cf. also the two assemblies, the dhamma- and the adhamma-vādinī at AN i.75. ⁴ dhammassāmī, as at SN iv.94. ⁵ appossukka, as at MN i.331, MN i.459, Vin 2.188 in a similar sentence. Cf. appossukatā above, Vin 1.5. ⁶ diṭṭhadhammasukhavihāra, as at AN ii.23, MN i.40, MN i.331, MN i.459, Vin 2.188, SN ii.239. ⁷ He spoke the “third time” in Kd 10.2.20, below.

THE STORY OF DĪGHĀVU

10.2.3

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Once upon a time,¹ monks, at Benares Brahmādatta was king of Kāsi; he was rich, wealthy, opulent, of great strength, with many vehicles; he had large territories, full storehouses and granaries. Dīghīti was the name of the king of Kosala. He was poor, of little wealth, of few means, of little strength, with few vehicles, he had (only) small territories, storehouses and granaries that were not full. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having arrayed a fourfold army,² marched against Dīghīti, the King of Kosala. Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, heard: ‘They say that Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having arrayed a fourfold army, is marching against me.’ Then, monks, it occurred to Dīghīti, the King of Kosala: ‘Now Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi, is rich, wealthy, opulent ... full storehouses and granaries. I am not competent to stand against even one attack of Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi. Suppose I were to flee from the town beforehand?’ Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, taking his chief consort, fled from the town beforehand. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, conquering the troops³ and vehicles and territory and storehouses and granaries of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, lived as the master. Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, set out for Benares with his wife. In due course he arrived at Benares. Monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, dwelt there with his wife in a certain place adjoining Benares in a potter’s house, in disguise, clothed⁴ as a wanderer.

4.490

10.2.4

“Then soon, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, became pregnant. She had a fancy of this kind: she wanted, at sunrise, to see a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground⁵ and to drink at the washing of the swords.¹ Then, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, spoke thus to Dīghīti, the King of Kosala: ‘Sire, I am pregnant; a fancy of this kind has risen in me: I want, at sunrise, to see a fourfold army ... and to drink at the washing of the swords.’ He said: ‘Lady, whence is there for us who are in distress a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground and a washing of the swords?’ She said: ‘If I, sire, do not get a chance (to have my wish) I shall die.’

¹ Cf. Ja iii.211, Ja iii.487ff. ² See Vin 4.105 (BD 2.375 and notes). ³ bala, as above where rendered “strength”. ⁴ channa can also mean concealed. ⁵ subhummiyaṃ ṭhitaṃ. Cf. MN-a ii.97 subhūmiyaṃ ti samabhūmiyaṃ.

“Now at that time, monks, the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, was a friend of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala. Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, approached the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi; having approached, he spoke thus to the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘A lady friend of yours, old dear,² is pregnant; a fancy of this kind has risen in her: she wants, at sunrise to see a fourfold army ... and to drink at the washing of the swords.’ He said: ‘Well then, sire, let us see the queen too.’ Then, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, approached the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi. Then, monks, that Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, saw the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, coming in the distance, and seeing her, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having with joined palms saluted the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, he three times uttered this utterance: ‘Indeed, a king of Kosala is in your womb, indeed, a king of Kosala is in your womb.’ And he said: ‘Do not be distressed, queen, you will get the chance at the time of sunrise to see a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground and to drink at the washing of the swords.’

¹ khaggānaṃ dhovanaṃ pātuṃ, to drink the water with which swords were washed. Cf. Mahāvamsa xxii.42–Mahāvamsa xxii.45 where another pregnant queen “longed to drink (the water) that had served to cleanse the sword with which the head of the first warrior among king Eḷāra’s warriors had been cut off”. (Geiger’s translation). F.L. Woodward refers me to J. ABBOTT, Keys of Power, O.U.P., p.168, “The sword of the Marātha Sivaji, preserved at Satāra, has power, and water in which it has been washed is a cure for obstructed delivery”. See also T.R. GLOVER, Springs of Hellas, C.U.P., 1945, p. 7, quoting SENECA, Naturales quaestiones iii.2, “‘There are waters wholesome, useful, and waters deadly and putrid ... some remove barrenness’—a belief found in other authors (ATHENAEUS, p.41f., quotes THEOPHRASTUS, History of Plants, to this effect).” ² samma.

“Then, monks, the brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, approached Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi; having approached, he spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘Sire, the signs that are visible are such that tomorrow at the time of sunrise a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, must stand on level ground and the swords must be washed.’ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, enjoined people, saying: ‘Good sirs, do as the Brahmin priest says.’ So, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, got the chance at the time of sunrise of seeing a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground, and of drinking at the washing of the swords. Then, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, when the child in her womb had reached maturity, gave birth to a son. They gave him the name of Dīghāvu.¹ Then, monks, soon afterwards Prince Dīghāvu attained years of discretion.²

“Then, monks, it occurred to Dīghīti, the King of Kosala: ‘This Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi, has done us much mischief; our troops and vehicles and territories and storehouses and granaries have been stolen by him. If he knew about us he would have all three of us put to death. Suppose I should make Prince Dīghāvu live outside the town?’ Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, made Prince Dīghāvu live outside the town. Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, while living outside the town, soon learnt every craft.

“Now at that time, monks, the barber of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, dwelt at (the court of) Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi. The barber of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, saw Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, with his wife in a certain place adjoining Benares, dwelling in a potter's house, in disguise, clothed as a wanderer; seeing him, he approached Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi; having approached, he spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: 'Sire, Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, is dwelling with his wife ... clothed as a wanderer'.

¹ Some manuscripts spell Dīghāyu. The meaning, in both spellings, is longevity, “Longeval” (Vinaya Texts ii.297). Dīghāvu’s story is given at Ja iii.211f., Ja iii.487ff.; at Ja iii.490 he is identified with the Bodhisatta. Dhp 109 is said to have been spoken on his account, Dhp-a ii.235. ² As at Vin 1.269. In the Jātaka this age is usually reckoned to be about sixteen.

"Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, enjoined the people, saying: 'Well then, good sirs, bring along Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, with his wife.' And, monks, these people having answered, 'Yes, sire', in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, brought along Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, with his wife. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, enjoined the people, saying: "Well now, good sirs, having bound Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, and his wife with stout cord, their arms pinioned tightly behind their backs,¹ having shaved them bald,² having paraded them to a harsh-sounding kettle-drum from street to street, from cross-road to cross-road, having ejected them by the southern gate of the town, having at the south of the town³ chopped them into four pieces, discard the pieces to the four quarters." And these people, monks, having answered, 'Yes, sire', in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having bound Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, and his wife with stout cord, their arms pinioned tightly behind their backs, having shaved them bald, paraded them with a harsh-sounding kettle-drum from street to street and from cross-road to cross-road.

"Then, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: 'It is a long time since I have seen my parents. Suppose now I should see my parents?' Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having entered Benares, saw his parents bound with stout cord their arms pinioned tightly behind their backs, shaved bald, parading to a harsh-sounding kettle-drum from street to street, from cross-road to cross-road; and seeing them he approached his parents. Then, monks, Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, saw Prince Dīghāvu coming from afar, and seeing him he spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: 'Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath.’¹

¹ Cf. DN i.245. ² Cf. DN i.98. ³ This whole passage is stock; cf. AN ii.241, SN ii.128, SN iv.344.

“When he had spoken thus, monks, these people spoke thus to Dīghāti, the King of Kosala: ‘This Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, is mad, he is talking gibberish. Who is Dīghāvu to him that he should speak thus: “Do not you ... by non-wrath”?’ He said: ‘I am not mad, good sirs, I am not talking gibberish; what is more, whoever is learned will understand.’ And a second time, monks, ... And a third time, monks, did Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, speak thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close ... by non-wrath.’ And a third time, monks, did these people speak thus to Dīghāti, the King of Kosala: ‘This Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, is mad ...’ And a third time, monks, did Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, speak thus to these people: ‘I am not mad ... whoever is learned will understand.’ Then, monks, these people having paraded Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, and his wife from street to street, from cross-road to cross-road, having ejected them by the southern gate, having chopped them into four pieces at the south of the town, having discarded the pieces to the four quarters, and having stationed troops² (there), departed.

“Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having entered Benares, having brought back strong drink, made the troops³ drink it. When these had fallen down, intoxicated, then (Dīghāvu) having collected sticks, having made a funeral pyre, having put his parents’ bodies on to the funeral pyre, having lit it, three times circumambulated the funeral pyre, his palms joined. Now at that time Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, was on an upper terrace of his palace. He saw Prince Dīghāvu, monks, three times circumambulating the funeral pyre, his palms joined, and seeing him it occurred to him: ‘Undoubtedly this man is a relation or a kinsman of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala. Alas, this spells misfortune for me, for no one will tell me what it means.’

“Then, monks. Prince Dīghāvu, having gone to a jungle, having cried and wept, having dried his tears, having entered Benares, having gone to an elephant stable near the king’s palace, spoke thus to the elephant trainer: ‘I want to learn the craft, teacher.’⁴ He said: ‘Well then, my good youngster,¹ learn it.’ Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, rising in the night towards dawn, sang in a sweet voice in the elephant stable and played the lute.² And monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, rising in the night towards dawn heard the singing in the sweet voice and the lute-playing in the elephant stable; having heard, he asked the people: ‘Who, good sirs, rising in the night towards dawn, was singing in a sweet voice and playing a lute in the elephant stable?’

¹ Cf. Dh 5. The meaning is explained at Kd 10.2.19. ² gumba. ³ gumbiye.

⁴ ācariya, teacher or trainer.

“Sire, a youngster, a pupil of such and such an elephant trainer, rising in the night towards dawn, was singing in a sweet voice and playing a lute in the elephant stable.’ He said: ‘Well then, good sirs, bring that youngster along.’ And, monks, these people, having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, brought along Prince Dīghāvu. (The king said:) “Did you, my good youngster, rising ... sing in a sweet voice and play a lute in the elephant stable?’ ‘Yes, sire,’ he said. ‘Well, then, do you, my good youngster, sing and play the lute (before me).’ And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, longing for success, sang in a sweet voice and played the lute. Then, monks, Brahmādatta the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Do you, my good youngster, attend on me.’ Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu answered ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi. Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu became an earlier riser than Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, he lay down later, he was a willing servant, eager to please, speaking affectionately.³ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, soon established Prince Dīghāvu in a confidential position of trust.

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Well now, good youngster, harness a chariot, I will go out hunting.’ And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having harnessed a chariot, spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: 'A chariot is harnessed for you, sire; for this you may think it is now the right time.' Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, mounted the chariot, Prince Dīghāvu drove the chariot, and he drove the chariot in such a manner that the army went by one way and the chariot by another. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having gone far, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: 'Well now, good youngster, unharness the chariot; as I am tired I will lie down.' And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu having answered 'Yes, sire', in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having unharnessed the chariot, sat down cross-legged on the ground. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, lay down having laid his head on Prince Dīghāvu's lap, and because he was tired he fell asleep at once.

¹ bhaṇe māṇavaka. ² He may have learnt to sing and play when he learnt “every craft” (end of Kd 10.2.7), or he may have learnt these accomplishments as part of the elephant craft, elephants being notoriously fond of music. ³ As at SN iii.113.

0.2.16
1.347
4.496
"Then, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: 'This Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi, has done us much mischief, he has stolen our troops and vehicles and territory and store-houses, and granaries, and he has killed my parents. This could be a time when I could show my wrath,' and he drew his sword from its sheath. Then, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: 'My father spoke to me thus at the time of his dying: 'Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close, for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath.'" It would not be suitable for me to transgress my father's words,' and he replaced his sword in its sheath. And a second time, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: 'This Brahmādatta ... when I could show my wrath,' and he drew his sword from its sheath. And a second time, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: 'My father spoke to me thus ... It would not be suitable for me to transgress my father's words,' and again he replaced his sword in its sheath. And a third time ... and again he replaced his sword in its sheath. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, frightened, agitated, fearful, alarmed, suddenly got up. Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: 'Why do you, sire, frightened ... suddenly get up?' He said: 'As I was dreaming here, my good youngster, the son of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, attacked me with a sword. That is why I, frightened ... suddenly got up.'

"Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having stroked the head of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, with his left hand, having drawn his sword with his right hand, spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: 'I, sire, am Prince Dīghāvu, that son of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala. You have done us much mischief, our troops, vehicles, territory, store-houses and granaries were stolen by you, and my parents were killed by you. This could be a time when I could show my wrath.' Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, inclining his head towards Prince Dīghāvu's feet, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: 'Grant me my life, dear Dīghāvu, grant me my life, dear Dīghāvu.'

"How am I able to grant life to a king? It is a king who should grant me life.'

"Well then, dear Dīghāvu, you grant me life and I will grant you life.' Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, and Prince Dīghāvu granted life to one another and they took hold of (one another's) hands and they made an oath to do (one another) no harm. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: 'Well then, dear Dīghāvu, harness the chariot; we will go away.' And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having answered, 'Yes, sire', in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having harnessed the chariot, spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: 'The chariot is harnessed for you, sire; for this you may think it is now the right time.' Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, mounted the chariot. Prince Dīghāvu drove the chariot, and he drove the chariot in such a manner that soon it met the army.

"Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having entered Benares, having had the ministers and councillors convened, spoke thus: 'If, good sirs, you should see Prince Dīghāvu, the son of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, what would you do to him?' Some spoke thus: 'We, sire, would cut off his hands; we, sire, would cut off his feet; we, sire, would cut off his hands and feet; ... his ears, ... his nose, ... his ears and nose, ... we, sire, would cut off his head.' He said: 'This, good sirs,

Kd 10.2

Vin 1.34

BD 4.4

Kd 10.2

is Prince Dīghāvu, the son of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala; there is no occasion to do anything (against him); life was granted by him to me and life was granted by me to him.’

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Concerning that, dear Dīghāvu, which your father said to you at the time of dying: “Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close, for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath”—what did your father mean?’ He said: ‘Concerning that, sire, which my father said to me at the time of dying—“not far” means: do not bear wrath long. This is what my father said to me, sire, at the time of dying when he said “not far”. Concerning that, sire, which my father said to me at the time of dying—“not close” means: do not hastily break with a friend. This is what my father said to me, sire, at the time of dying when he said “not close”. Concerning that, sire, which my father said to me at the time of dying—“for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath” means: my parents were killed by a king, but if I were to deprive the king of life those who desired the king’s welfare would deprive me of life and those who desired my welfare would deprive these of life; thus that wrath would not be settled by wrath.¹ But now that life is granted me by a king and life is granted a king by me, thus is wrath settled by non-wrath. This is what my father said to me, sire, at the time of dying when he said: ‘for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath; wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath’.

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, thinking: ‘Indeed, it is marvellous, indeed, it is wonderful that this Prince Dīghāvu is so clever that he understands in full the matter which was spoken by his father in brief’, gave back his father’s troops and vehicles and territory and storehouses and granaries, and he gave him his daughter.

¹ Cf. similar sentiments at SN i.85, DhP 256–Dhp 257.

“Now, monks, if such is the forbearance and gentleness of kings who wield the sceptre,¹ who wield the sword, herein, monks, let your light shine forth so that you who have gone forth in this dhamma and discipline which are thus well taught² may be equally forbearing and gentle.” And a third time³ the Lord spoke thus to these monks: “Enough, monks; no strife, no quarrels, no contention, no disputing.” And a third time that monk who spoke what was not dhamma spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord, the dhamma-master, wait; Lord, let the Lord, unconcerned, live intent on abiding in ease here and now; we will be (held) accountable for this strife, quarrel, contention, disputing.” Then the Lord, thinking: “These foolish men are as though infatuate; it is not easy to persuade them,” rising up from his seat, departed.

The First Portion for Repeating: that on Dīghāvu

Then the Lord,⁴ having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Kosambī for almsfood; having walked for almsfood in Kosambī, bringing back his almsbowl after his meal, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe and standing in the midst of the Order,⁵ he spoke these verses:

“When all⁶ in chorus bawl, none feels a fool,
nor though the Order is divided,
thinks otherwise.

“With⁷ wandering wits
the wiseacres range all the held of talk;
with mouths agape to full extent, what leads them on they know not.

¹ ādinna-daṇḍa, take up a stick. Daṇḍa also means punishment. So the phrase may mean, instead of “scepter”, “who use violence” or “who mete out punishment”.

² Cf. Kd 5.4.3. ³ First and second times occur at Kd 10.2.2. ⁴ Cf. MN iii.153.

⁵ Omitted at MN iii.153. ⁶ All these lines occur at MN iii.154, Ja iii.488. ⁷ This couplet also at Ud v.9. I borrow Woodward’s translation of it.

“They who¹ (in thought) belabour this:
That man has me abused, has hurt,
has worsted me, has me despoiled:
in these wrath’s not allayed.

“They who do not belabour this:
That man has me abused, has hurt,
has worsted me, has me despoiled:
in them wrath is allayed.

“Nay, not by wrath are wrathful moods allayed here (and) at any time, but by not-wrath are they allayed:
this is an (ageless) endless rule.

“People do not discern that here we straitened are (in life, in time),² but they who herein do discern, thereby their quarrels are allayed.

“Ruffians who maim and kill, steal cattle, steeds and wealth, who plunder realms—for these is concord.
Why should there not be for you?

“If one find³ friend with whom to fare rapt in the well-abiding, apt, surmounting dangers one and all,
with joy fare with him mindfully.

“Finding none apt⁴ with whom to fare,
None in the well-abiding rapt,
As rājā quits the conquered realm, fare lonely as bull-elephant in elephant jungle.

¹ This verse and the next three also occur at Dhp 3–Dhp 6=Ja iii.212. ² This line is also at Thag 275. ³ This verse is also at Dhp 328=Snp 45. I borrow E.M. HARE’S translation. ⁴ This verse=Dhp 329=Snp 46 (except for Sutta Nipāta last line).

“Better¹ the faring of one alone, there is no companionship with the foolish, fare lonely, unconcerned, working no evil, as bull-elephant in elephant-jungle.”

ON GOING TO BĀLAKALOṆAKA

Then the Lord,² having spoken these verses as he was standing in the midst of the Order, approached Bālakaloṇakāra village.³ Now at that time the venerable Bhagu was staying in Bālakaloṇakāra village. Then the venerable Bhagu⁴ saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him, he made ready a seat, set out water for the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, and having gone to meet him, he received his bowl and robe. Then the Lord sat down on the seat made ready; as he was sitting down he had his feet bathed. And the venerable Bhagu, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. As the venerable Bhagu was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him: “I hope, monk, things are going well, I hope you are keeping going, I hope you are not short of almsfood.”

“Things are going well, Lord, I am keeping going, Lord, and, Lord, I am not short of almsfood.” Then the Lord, having delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened the venerable Bhagu with talk on dhamma,⁵ rising from his seat, departed for the Eastern Bamboo Grove.⁶

¹ This verse = Dhp 330. ² MN iii.154 continues in accordance with above, and cf. Ja iii.489. ³ See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names for uncertainty of the reading (MN iii.154, Ja iii.489, MN-a iii.55, MN-a iv.206 read -gāma; Dhp-a i.56, SN-a ii.304, Thag-a i.380 (Siamese edition) read -ārāma), and for the Majjhima Commentary’s (MN-a iii.55) two interpretations of the meaning of the name. ⁴ His verses are at Thag 271–Thag 274. Mentioned at Vin 2.182, Ja i.140, Ja iii.489, Mil 107, Dhp-a i.56, Dhp-a i.133. According to Dictionary of Pali Proper Names he is probably not the same as the Bhagu mentioned at Vin 1.300. ⁵ According to MN-a iv.206 this was on the advantages of solitariness. ⁶ Pācīnavamsa (miga) dāya. See AN-a iv.117 for interpretation of the name. Mentioned at (besides MN iii.155) Thag 155, AN iv.228, Dhp-a i.56, Thag-a 86.

ON GOING TO PĀCĪNAVAṂSADĀYA

10.4.2
4.501 Now at that time the venerable Anuruddha¹ and the venerable Nandiya² and the venerable Kimbila³ were staying in the Eastern Bamboo Grove.⁴ The keeper of the Grove saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: “Do not, recluse, enter this Grove; there are three young men of respectable families staying here desiring self⁵; do not cause them discomfort.” The venerable Anuruddha heard the keeper of the Grove conferring with the Lord; having heard, he spoke thus to the keeper of the Grove: “Do not, good grove-keeper, impede the Lord. It is our teacher, the Lord, who is arriving.” Then the venerable Anuruddha approached the venerable Nandiya and the venerable Kimbila; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Nandiya and to the venerable Kimbila:” Go forward, venerable ones, go forward, venerable ones; our teacher, the Lord is arriving.”

1.351
10.4.3 Then the venerable Anuruddha and the venerable Nandiya and the venerable Kimbila, having gone out to meet the Lord, one received his bowl and robe, one made ready a seat, one set out water for the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand. Then the Lord sat down on the seat made ready; as he was sitting down he had his feet bathed. Then these venerable ones, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. As the venerable Anuruddha was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus: “I hope that things are going well with you, Anuruddhas,⁶ I hope you are keeping going, I hope you are not short of almsfood.”

¹ Verses at Thag 892–Thag 919. He and his friends, Nandiya and Kimbila, are often mentioned together, as at MN i.205, which although set in the Gosinga Wood, is similar to the above Vinaya passage. See also the six friends (not including Nandiya) who, with Upāli, the barber, are mentioned at Vin 2.182. ² Verses at Thag 25. Thag-a 86 says that while Nandiya was in the Eastern Bamboo Grove, Māra appeared before him in a terrible form. ³ Verses at Thag 118, Thag 155. ⁴ For the following cf. MN i.205ff. (where the scene is laid in the Gosinga Sāl-Woodland Grove). ⁵ On attakāmarūpa see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Buddhism (Home University Library) 2nd edition, p. 81. ⁶ The plural, Anuruddhā, is used instead of the names of the three separate monks.

“Things are going well, Lord, we are keeping going, Lord, and, Lord, we are not short of almsfood.”

“I hope that you, Anuruddhas, are living all together on friendly terms and harmonious, as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection?”¹

“Yes, certainly, Lord, we are living all together on friendly terms and harmonious, as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection.”

“And how is it that you, Anuruddhas, are living ... of affection?”

“As to this, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘Indeed it is a gain for me, indeed it is well gotten by me, that I am living with such Brahmaraters.’ On account of this, Lord, for these venerable ones amity² as to bodily conduct, whether openly or in private, has risen up in me, amity as to speech, amity as to thought, whether openly or in private, has risen up.³ Because of this, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘What now, if I, having surrendered my own mind, should live only according to the mind of these venerable ones?’ So I, Lord, having surrendered my own mind, am living only according to the mind of these venerable ones. Lord, we have divers bodies,⁴ but assuredly only one mind.”

And the venerable Nandiya too, and also the venerable Kimbila spoke thus to the Lord: “And it occurred to me too, Lord: ‘Indeed it is a gain for me ... only one mind’. It is thus, Lord, that we are living all together on friendly terms and harmonious, as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection.”

“And I hope that you, Anuruddhas, are living zealous, ardent, self-resolute?”

“Yes, certainly, Lord, we are living ... self-resolute.”

“And how is it that you, Anuruddhas, are living ... self-resolute?”

“As to this, Lord, whichever⁵ of us returns first from the village for almsfood, he makes ready a seat, puts out water for washing the

¹ Stock, as at MN i.206, MN i.398, MN iii.156, AN i.70, AN iii.67, AN iii.104, SN iv.225.

² On amity, mettā, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Outlines of Buddhism, p. 30ff. ³ Cf.

MN i.321, which after “amity as to speech” fills in “whether openly or in private has risen up”, as does MN i.206. ⁴ We are many (or several) men, persons, kāyā. ⁵ Cf.

Kd 4.1.

feet, a footstool, a foot-stand; having washed a refuse-bowl he sets it out, he sets out water for drinking and water for washing. Whoever returns last from the village for almsfood, if there are the remains of a meal and if he so desires, he eats them; if he does not desire to do so he throws them out where there are no crops or drops them into water where there are no living creatures; he puts up the seat, he puts away the water for the feet, the footstool, the foot-stand, having washed the refuse-bowl, he puts it away, he puts away the water for drinking and the water for washing, he sweeps the refectory. Whoever sees a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after an evacuation, void and empty, he sets out (water). If it is impossible for him (to do this) by a movement of his hand, having invited a companion to help us by signalling (to him) with the hand, we set out (water); but we do not, Lord, for such a reason break into speech. And then we, Lord, once in every five nights sit down together for talk on dhamma. It is thus, Lord, that we are living, zealous, ardent, self-resolute.”¹

ON GOING TO PĀRILEYYAKA

Then the Lord, having delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened the venerable Anuruddha and the venerable Nandiya and the venerable Kimbila with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, set out on tour for Pārileyya.² Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Pārileyya. The Lord stayed there at Pārileyya in the Guarded Woodland Thicket³ at the root of the lovely sāl-tree.¹ Then as the Lord was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Formerly, beset by those monks of Kosambī, makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of brawls, makers of legal questions in the Order, I did not live in comfort; but now that I am alone with no other, I am living in comfort removed from those monks, makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order.”

¹ The versions at MN i.207, MN iii.154, break off here, and both go on from here in different ways. ² Spelt Pārileyya; a village, although SN-a ii.304 speaks of it as a nagara, town. Dhp-a i.51-63 takes Pārileyya to be the and describes in vivid detail the ways in which he waited upon the Lord. This elephant is identified with that in the Bhisī Jātaka (Ja iv.314). Pārileyya(ka) mentioned at SN iii.95, Ud iv.5, Ja iii.489.

³ rakkhitavanasaṇḍa. Mentioned at Ud iv.5, but not at SN iii.95. Dhp-a i.59 says that the thicket was so called because the elephant with a stick in his trunk, guarded the Lord from danger during the nights.

Now a certain large bull-elephant² was beset by elephants and cow-elephants, by elephant calves and sucklings; he ate grass already cropped by them, and they ate bundles of branches as he broke them off; and he drank muddied water and when he crossed over at a ford the cow-elephants went pushing against his body. Then it occurred to that large bull-elephant: “Now I am living beset by elephants and cow-elephants ... I eat grass already cropped by them and they eat bundles of branches as I break them off; and I drink muddied water and when I cross over at a ford the cow-elephants go pushing against my body. Suppose I were to live alone secluded from the crowd?”

Then that large bull-elephant, leaving the herd, approached Pāri-leyya, the Guarded Woodland Thicket, the lovely sāl-tree and the Lord; having approached, he set out by means of his trunk drinking water for the Lord and water for washing, and he kept the grass down.³ Then it occurred to that large bull-elephant: “Now formerly, beset by elephants and cow-elephants, by elephant calves and sucklings, I did not live in comfort; I ate grass already cropped by them and they ate bundles of branches as I broke them off; I drank muddied water and when I crossed over at a ford the cow-elephants went pushing against me; but now that I am alone with no other I am living in comfort removed from the elephants, the cow-elephants, the elephant calves and sucklings.”

Then the Lord, having understood his own seclusion and knowing ¹ bhaddasāla. It was one tree, manāpa laṭṭhaka, according to Ud-a 250 and SN-a ii.305, which say that the Lord stayed depending on that village (Pārileyya) in a leaf-room in the jungle thicket at the root of that tree. ² hatthināga. Vin-a 1152 says mahāhatthi, a great elephant. Ud-a 250 adds that he was the leader of a herd. This passage recurs at Ud iv.5. Cf. AN iv.435. ³ appaharitañ ca karoti.

by mind that bull-elephant's reasoning of mind, at that time uttered this utterance:

“Herein agreeth mind with mind, of sage¹ and bull-elephant of plough-pole tusks,² since each delights in forest (solitude).”³

10.5.1
4.505
Then the Lord, having stayed at Pārileyya as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then the lay-followers of Kosambī thought: “These masters the monks of Kosambī, have done us much mischief; the Lord is departing, harassed by these; come, we should neither greet the masters, the monks of Kosambī, nor should we stand up before them, nor should we salute them with joined palms or perform the proper duties; we should not revere, respect, esteem or honour them, and neither should we give them almsfood when they come (to us); thus they, when they are neither revered, respected, esteemed nor honoured by us, will depart unrevered, or they will leave the Order, or they will reconcile themselves to the Lord’.

10.5.2
1.354
Then the lay-followers of Kosambī neither greeted the monks of Kosambī, nor stood up before them, they did not salute them with joined palms or perform the proper duties, they did not revere, respect, esteem or honour them and they did not give them almsfood when they came (to them). Then the monks of Kosambī, as they were not being revered, respected, esteemed or honoured by the lay-followers of Kosambī, spoke thus: “Come now, your reverences, let us, having gone to Sāvattthī, settle this legal question in the Lord's presence.”

¹ nāga. Vin-a 1152, Ud-a 251 explain by buddhanāga. ² Cf. nāga isādanta at MN i.414, Vv 20.9, Vv 43.9. ³ Version at Ud iv.5 also ends here.

ON EIGHTEEN CASES

Then the monks of Kosambī, having packed away their lodgings, taking their bowls and robes, approached Sāvattihī.

Then the venerable Sāriputta heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī, makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of brawls, makers of legal questions in the Order, are coming to Sāvattihī.” Then the venerable Sāriputta approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī, makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, are coming to Sāvattihī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?”

“Well now, Sāriputta, as dhamma is so must you stand.”¹

“How am I, Lord, to find out what is dhamma and what is non-dhamma?”

“Now, Sāriputta, a speaker of non-dhamma is to be known by eighteen points: In such a case, Sāriputta, a monk explains² non-dhamma as dhamma, he explains dhamma as non-dhamma; he explains non-discipline as discipline, he explains discipline as non-discipline; he explains what was not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata as spoken, uttered by the tathāgata, explains what was spoken, uttered by the tathāgata as not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata; he explains what was not practised by the tathāgata as practised by the tathāgata, he explains what was practised by the tathāgata as not practised by the tathāgata; he explains what was not laid down by the tathāgata as laid down by the tathāgata, he explains what was laid down by the tathāgata as not laid down by the tathāgata, he explains what is no offence as an offence, he explains an offence as no offence; he explains a slight offence as a serious offence, he explains a serious offence as a slight offence; he explains an offence which can be done away with¹ as an offence which cannot be done away with, he explains an offence which cannot be done away with as an offence which can be done away with; he declares a very bad offence² as not a very bad offence, he explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. Sāriputta, a speaker of non-dhamma is to be known by these eighteen points.

¹ yathādhammo tathā tiṭṭhāhi. ² Cf. this passage with Vin 2.88, Vin 2.204. The first five pairs also occur at AN v.77 as reasons why when there is strife, quarrelling, contention, dispute in an Order the monks do not live in comfort. These same five pairs are again given (AN v.78) as ten roots of disputing. They are followed by another ten roots of disputing, namely the next four pairs as given above in the Vinaya with one added pair.

And, Sāriputta, a speaker of dhamma is to be known by eighteen points. In such a case, Sāriputta, a monk explains non-dhamma as non-dhamma, he explains dhamma as dhamma; he explains non-discipline as non-discipline, he explains discipline as discipline; he explains what was not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata as not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata ... not practised ... practised ... not laid down ... laid down ... he explains an offence as an offence ... no offence as no offence ... a slight offence as a slight offence ... a serious offence as a serious offence an offence which can be done away with as an offence which can be done away with ... an offence which cannot be done away with as an offence which cannot be done away with ... a very bad offence as a very bad offence, he explains not a very bad offence as not a very bad offence. Sāriputta, a speaker of dhamma is to be known by these eighteen points.”

The venerable Moggallāna the Great³ heard ... the venerable Kassapa the Great⁴ heard ... the venerable Kaccāna the Great heard ... the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great heard ... the venerable Kappina the Great heard ... the venerable Cunda the Great heard ... the venerable Anuruddha heard ... the venerable Revata heard ... the venerable Upāli heard ... the venerable Ānanda heard ... the venerable Rāhula heard: “They say that the monks of Kosambī ... (= Kd 10.5.3–Kd.10.5.5. Read Rāhula instead of Sāriputta.) “... Rāhula, a speaker of dhamma is to be known by these eighteen points.”

¹ sāvasesā āpatti, anavasesā āpatti. See Vinaya Texts iii.35, n. 2, which explains that one which cannot be done away with is practically equivalent to a Pārājika. A Saṅghādisesa can be done away with by the penalties inflicted by the Order, most of the others by confession. ² duṭṭhullā āpatti. See BD 2.219, n. 2. ³ These elders, including Sāriputta but not including Kassapa, are also mentioned at Vin 2.15–Vin.2.16, Vin 4.66. For notes see BD 2.295. Cf. a list of ten at AN iii.299. ⁴ Verses at Thag 1051. At AN i.23 called chief of those who uphold the ascetic practices.

Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī ... (as in Kd 10.5.3) ... are coming to Sāvattthī.” Then Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance.¹ As she was standing at a respectful distance Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid spoke thus to the Lord: “It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattthī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?”

“Well then, do you, Gotami, hear dhamma on both sides; having heard dhamma on both sides, choose the views and the approval and the persuasion and the creed² of those monks who are there speakers of dhamma, and whatever is to be desired by the Order of nuns from the Order of monks,³ all that should be desired only from one who speaks dhamma.”

Anāthapiṇḍika the householder heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattthī.” Then Anāthapiṇḍika the householder approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Anāthapiṇḍika the householder spoke thus to the Lord: “It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattthī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?”

“Well then, do you, householder, give gifts to both sides; having given gifts to both sides, hear dhamma on both sides; having heard dhamma on both sides, choose the views and the approval and the persuasion and the creed of those monks who are there speakers of dhamma.”

Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattthī.” Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, ¹ Nuns must stand in the presence of monks; see Vin 4.52. ² Cf. Kd 1.38.7. ³ See e.g. Nuns Bi-Pc 59.

she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance Visākhā, Migāra's mother, spoke thus to the Lord: "It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattthī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?"

"Well then, do you, Visākhā, give gifts to both sides ... (as in Kd 10.5.8) ... choose the views ... of those monks who are there speakers of dhamma."

Then in due course the monks of Kosambī arrived at Sāvattthī. Then the venerable Sāriputta approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: "They say, Lord, that these monks of Kosambī, makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, have arrived at Sāvattthī. Now what line of conduct, Lord, should be followed in regard to lodgings for these monks?"

"Well now, Sāriputta, separate lodgings should be given (to them)."

"But if, Lord, there are no separate lodgings what line of conduct should be followed?"

"Well then, Sāriputta, having made (some) separate they should be given. But I in no way say this, Sāriputta, that a senior monk's lodging should be withheld (from him). Whoever should withhold it, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

"But what line of conduct, Lord, is to be followed in regard to material gains?"¹

"Material gains, Sāriputta, should be distributed equally amongst all."

ALLOWANCE TO RESTORE

Then while that monk who had been suspended was reflecting on dhamma and discipline, it occurred to him: "This is an offence, this is not no offence, I have fallen, I am not unfallen, I am suspended, I am not unsuspending, I am suspended by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand.” Then the suspended monk approached those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one); having approached, he spoke thus to those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one): “This is an offence, your reverences, it is not no offence ... fit to stand. Come, venerable ones, restore me.”

¹ āmisa, probably meaning here food and clothing.

Then those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one), taking that suspended monk (with them) approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, those monks spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this suspended monk speaks thus: ‘This is an offence, your reverences ... Come, venerable ones, restore me’. What line of conduct, Lord, is to be followed in these circumstances?”¹

“This, monks, is an offence, this is not no offence, this monk has fallen, this monk is not unfallen, this monk is suspended, this monk is not unsuspended, he was suspended by a legally valid (formal) act, irreversible, fit to stand But since, monks, that monk who has fallen and was suspended sees (his offence)—well then, monks, restore that monk.”

ON HARMONY IN THE SAṄGHA

Then these monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one), having restored that suspended monk, approached the monks who had suspended (him), having approached, they spoke thus to the monks who had suspended (him): “Concerning that case, your reverences, about which there was for the Order strife, quarrels, contention, disputes schism in the Order, dissension in the Order, altercation in the Order, differences in the Order that monk has fallen and was suspended, but he sees and is restored. Now, your reverences, let us achieve unanimity in the Order for settling this case.” Then those monks who had suspended (him) approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, they spoke thus to the Lord: “These monks, Lord, who are taking the part of the suspended (monk) speak thus: ‘Concerning that case ... for settling this case.’ Now what line of conduct, Lord, is to be followed?”

¹ tehi.

“Since, monks, that monk has fallen and was suspended but sees and is restored—well then, monks, achieve unanimity in the Order for settling that case. And thus, monks, should it be achieved: One and all should gather together, both the ill and the well, leave of absence should not be declared on account of anyone. Having gathered together, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Concerning that case about which there was for the Order strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, schism in the Order ... differences in the Order—that monk has fallen and was suspended, but he sees and is restored. If it seems right to the Order the Order should achieve unanimity in the Order for settling this case. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Concerning that case ... and is restored. The Order is achieving unanimity in the Order for settling this case. If the achieving of unanimity in the Order for settling this case is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Unanimity in the Order for settling that case is achieved by the Order. Dissension in the Order is put down, schism in the Order is put down. It is pleasing to the venerable ones; therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this’. Observance may be carried out at once, the Pātimokkha recited.”

QUESTIONS OF UPĀLI ON HARMONY IN THE SAṄGHA

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences for an Order, if the Order not having investigated that case, not having got to the root of it,¹ achieves unanimity in the Order, is that unanimity in the Order legally valid, Lord?”

“Upāli, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... that unanimity is not legally valid, Upāli.”

“But, Lord, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences in an Order, if the Order having investigated that case, having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, is that unanimity in the Order legally valid, Lord?”

“Upāli, in regard to a matter where there is strife for an Order, quarrels, contention, dispute, schism in an Order, dissension in an Order, altercation in an Order, differences in an Order, if the Order, having investigated that case, having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, that unanimity in the Order is legally valid, Upāli.”

“How many (kinds of) unanimity in an Order are there, Lord?”

“There are these two (kinds of) unanimity in an Order, Upāli. There is, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has not arrived at the meaning but has arrived at the letter; there is, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has both arrived at the meaning and arrived, at the letter. And what, Upāli, is unanimity in an Order that has not arrived at the meaning but has arrived at the letter? Upāli, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences in an Order, if the Order, not having investigated that case, not having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, this is called, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has not arrived at the meaning but has arrived at the letter. And what, Upāli, is unanimity in an Order that has both arrived at the meaning and arrived at the letter? Upāli, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences in an Order, if the Order, having investigated that case, having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, this is called, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has both arrived at the meaning and arrived at the letter. These, Upāli, are the two (kinds of) unanimity in an Order.”

Then the venerable Upāli, rising from his seat, having arranged

¹ amulā mūlaṃ gantvā.

his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, addressed the Lord with verses:

“In the Order’s affairs and deliberations and in matters arising for investigation, what kind of man is here most needed?
How is a monk fit for leadership here?

“Above all, one blameless in moral habit, of careful conduct, his faculties well controlled, opponents do not censure him in respect of a rule, for there could be nothing to say against him.

“Such a one, firm in purity of moral habit, is confident, he speaks ably,¹ he is not afraid at an assembly, he does not tremble, he does not sacrifice the meaning² to irrelevant talk.

“When asked a question in an assembly, he neither hesitates nor is ashamed,
his timely sensible words,
fitting as explanation, delight the learned assembly.

“With esteem for senior monks and confident in his own teachers, able to weigh, familiar with what should be spoken,
and skilled in obstructing his opponents,

“Opponents come under his control, and the many-folk come under his tuition,
and he does not neglect his own creed,
(skilful) at question and answer, unhurting.

“Able in doing a messenger’s duty, and well-informed in what they tell him of the Order’s affairs,

¹ visayha. ² atthaṃ na hāpeti, or, does not neglect the goal; cf. Snp 37, Ja i.251.

sent by a group of monks he is obedient, but he does not therefore think, ‘I am doing this’.

“Into whatever matters one falls, whatever is an offence and how one removes it—both these analyses are well handed down to him.
He is skilled in the features of offences and removal, “Being sent away and good habits—he goes by these:

he is sent away and what are the grounds, restoration of a person who has completed this¹—he knows this too, skilled (as he is) in analysis.

“With esteem for senior monks, for newly ordained, for elders and for those of middle standing,
a helper of the multitude, clever herein, monk such as this is fit for leadership here.”

The Tenth Section: that on (the monks of) Kosambī

THIS IS ITS KEY

The splendid conqueror at Kosambī, dispute about seeing an offence, one may suspend for this or that, whatever is an offence of his it should be seen, / Within a boundary, just there, five, and only one, attainment, and Pārileyya, Sāvattī, and Sāriputta, Kolita, / Kassapa the Great, Kaccāna, Koṭṭhita, and about Kappina, and Cunda the Great, Anuruddha, Revata, Upāli,² /
Ānanda, and Rāhula too, Gotamī, Anāthapiṇḍika, and Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, and separate lodgings, and equal material gains also, / Leave for absence should not be granted to anyone, Upāli inquired, irreproachable as to moral habit, unanimity in the conqueror’s instruction.

Finished is the Great Division³

¹ taṃvūsita, i.e. one who has been sent away but is now fit for restoration. ² Up-ālivhaya (Oldenberg and Siamese edition). Sinhalese edition reads Upālicūbhaye.

³ OLDENBERG’S Vinaya Piṭakam, Vol. I, ends here.

TRANSLATOR'S INTRODUCTION

The Cullavagga, the Less or Lesser Division of the Vinaya, consists of twelve Sections. The first three of these have been translated by H. OLDENBERG and T.W. RHYS DAVIDS in Sacred Books of the East, Volume XVII, 1882, and the remaining nine in Sacred Books of the East, Volume XX, 1885. The Pali Vinaya on which their translation as well as mine is based is that edited by OLDENBERG in 1880 as Volume II of his Vinaya Piṭakam.

The wealth of detail increases rather than diminishes in this Lesser Division, and as an instrument for use by monks and nuns is astonishing in its variety and the minute precision it lavishes on greater and smaller points alike.

It was no doubt ever more and more necessary to put the proper ways of meeting disturbances in the Order on a firm basis. This certainly appears to be the purpose of Section I which deals in turn with seven formal acts: (1) censure for quarrels, disputes and contention which perhaps arose from an earnest endeavour to act in conformity with what had been bid down and then finding that there were other and different opinions; or which perhaps were wantonly made in the Order by monks who, unable to master the higher practices, found time hang heavy; (2) guidance for a monk who had persisted in frequenting the laity and to guide him to consort instead with kalyāṇamittā and so become learned and expert in the dhamma and discipline; (3) banishment for a monk who had indulged in the numerous "bad habits" specified here and there in the Pali canon in a stereotyped passage; (4) reconciliation for a monk who had been rude to a householder, and who, when he went to ask for his forgiveness, was allowed to take a companion with him to act as messenger and spokesman in case the monk himself was overcome with shame and embarrassment—an allowance which in Kd 22 Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, asked to be extended to him when he was accused (wrongly) by the Vajjis of Vesālī of reviling and abusing lay-followers; (5, 6, 7) three acts of suspension for not seeing an offence, for not making amends for one, for not giving up a wrong view, respectively.

All these formal acts have been mentioned already in the Mahāvagga (BD.4). But only an indication is given there of the occasions for carrying them out (as summarised above). These, while tallying with the occasions given in the Cullavagga, specify neither the method to be followed in carrying out each one, nor any of the grounds held to be sufficient for its revocation. All this is however dealt with by the Cullavagga.

Some of the stories chosen to illustrate behaviour which calls for one of these formal acts to correct it appear also in other parts of the Vinaya. For example, the episode of the monk Ariṭṭha occurs both in Bu-Pc 68 and in Kd 11.32. The former gives the holder of wrong views a chance to renounce them while he is being admonished up to the third time. It is only, after this, if he persists in clinging to his views that he incurs an offence of expiation. But in the Cullavagga Ariṭṭha is given no final chance to clear himself. Once it is found that he holds to his views, the Order is told that it can carry out a formal act of suspension against him. He thereupon left the Order. As the text stands, Gotama is shown as saying that the formal act of suspension may be revoked. This would not only be an uncharacteristic weakness, but it does not fit the context. In fact, as Oldenberg remarks, we should have expected a negative here, and hence just the opposite: Let the Order not revoke the formal act of suspension for not giving up the wrong view (Kd 11.34.1). This would moreover have been in line with the injunction not to revoke the act of banishment when those against whom it had been carried out went away and left the Order (Kd 1.16.1).

At Vin-a 874 Ariṭṭha is called an enemy of the Buddha's dispensation, and although as a rule monks were not lightly let go of to return to the “world”, his was a stubborn case where his absence might well have been preferred to his presence. The Order was by now well established both in the popular esteem and as an institution running efficiently by its own internal and developed organisation, and if a monk left it, this would be attributed to his own incompetence rather than to any deficiency in the teaching and training.

Apart from expulsion from the Order for having committed one of the four Pārājika offences, and apart from being expelled for any one of the reasons given at Kd 1.61–Kd.1.68, a monk left of his own choice. The formal act of banishment is not banishment from the Order, but from a particular place where a monk had, for example, either indulged in “bad habits”, been frivolous or harmful in body or speech, caused strife and contention, or spoken dispraise of the Awakened One, dhamma or the Order. If he conducted himself properly while the act of banishment against him was in force, he could be rehabilitated, a privilege impossible to extend to one who had been expelled.

Sections Kd 12 and Kd 13 of the Cullavagga deal in great detail with Probation. This is not probation preliminary to entering the Order; but probation imposed on one who is already a member of it, and consisting of “going back to the beginning” of his training and being subjected to mānatta discipline. Such probation falls under the four headings mentioned at Vin-a 1159: that for offences which have been concealed, that for unconcealed offences, the concurrent probation and the purifying probation. This last could be imposed on monks who did not know whether they had worked through this disciplinary period of probation or not. In view of the many references to “ignorant inexperienced monks”, such haziness in regard to the right day for the termination of a probationary period is no more surprising than is the ignorance monks manifested about the stars and the quarters (Kd 8.6.1) and which proved physically harmful to them.

Kd 14 is devoted to the different ways of settling legal questions.

These legal questions have already been mentioned in the Suttavi-bhaṅga. In the first place, the case must be settled in the presence of the accused monk. But this verdict “in the presence of” is necessary to all legal settlements. Secondly there is the verdict of innocence given in favour of a monk who was wrongfully accused of an offence. Dabba the Mallian is taken as the example, and his story is told in the same words as in Bu-Ss 8. But in the Formal Meeting the interest, at the end, is shifted to the monks who accused him and who incur an offence for doing so; while in the Cullavagga the interest is centred on Dabba who is to have a verdict of innocence accorded him. We must therefore understand that this is a case where two separate actions of the Order were called for: one dealing with the monks who brought the false accusation against Dabba, and one for acquitting him.

Then comes the “verdict of past insanity”, to be given for monks who were mad when they committed an offence. As is usual, the properties that render the act legally valid or not are enumerated. Then follows the settlement of disputes or contention by the “decision of the majority” when a reliable monk is to be agreed upon as distributor of voting-tickets, an important post (Kd 14.14.26) and one which Devadatta arrogated to himself and abused in his attempts to split the Order (Kd 18.4.1). Next, there is the “decision for specific depravity” when a monk, on being examined for an offence, prevaricates and lies. Finally there was the settlement by the “covering up as with grass”, enacted when things had been done or said in the heat of a quarrel and which, if made into a legal question, would only lead to further trouble and perhaps schism. Legal questions such as this could be covered up by each contending side confessing through a competent monk whatever were the offences that had been committed, unless they were serious offences (involving Defeat or a Formal Meeting of the Order, according to Vin-a 1194), or ones that affected the laity (Kd 14.13.2, Kd 14.13.3). And moreover, such offences could not be settled in this way for anyone who objected or who was not present. Otherwise, a legal question arising from disputes could be settled by a committee or referendum (Kd 14.14.19) or, failing this, by the decision of the majority (Kd 14.14.24). The Venerable Revata called for a referendum of eight monks to settle the “ten points” promulgated by the Vajjis of Vesālī, and which formed the business before the Council of Vesālī (see Kd 22).

The whole subject of the legal questions and their settlement, although complicated, must be studied by anyone who wishes to grasp an important branch of the disciplinary proceedings of the Order together with the very exact machinery laid down for carrying them out. A certain pattern will be found to emerge. For the “Internal Polity of a Buddhist Saṅgha”, Chapter 6 of S. DUTT’s Early Buddhist Monachism may be profitably consulted.

With Sections Kd 15, Kd 16, Kd 18 and Kd 19 we remain in the heart of the monastic life as it was to be lived normally. But with Section Kd 17, on Schisms, we arrive more definitely than in the Mahāvagga at that real and increasingly present danger of dissentient voices rising to a chorus in schismatic factions. Each Section, besides its scrupulous attention to every point that arises, also contains a certain amount of narrative material.

Section Kd 15 is so loaded with detail as to make it almost impossible to pick out salient points. But mention must be made of the “group of six monks”, which really means a number of monks under three pairs of leaders. For they are constantly referred to as the malefactors from whose conduct, often unsuitable because it resembled that of householders, springs the opportunity to regularise behaviour on all pertinent points. This is, in addition, a Section well worth studying for the light it throws on contemporary manners and the things in common usage. It is a Section where the laity are made important a wonder of psychic power is not to be displayed in front of them (Kd 15.8); their “bowls could be turned upside down”, a symbolic expression meaning that if they offered food to the monks, these could, after agreeing to a motion put before the Order, turn their bowls upside down to show that they held a layman in such disgrace they would accept no food from him (Kd 15.20), thereby depriving him of merit. There is also the allowance that monks may tread on cloths when being asked to do so by householders “for good luck’s sake” (Kd 15.21). Then there is the episode when people bring scents and garlands to a monastery. The monks are allowed to accept the scents on condition that they place the “five-finger mark” on a door. This has the appearance of a protective measure; and we know from the Buddhist charms or spells, parittā, one of which is to be found in this Section (Kd 15.6), that such runes or chants for self-guarding played a not negligible part in Early Buddhist life.

Section Kd 16 is a compendium of what is allowable or not in regard to dwelling-places. For narrative material, it contains the story of how Anāthapiṇḍika heard the words “Awakened One”, buddha, for the first time and determined to see the Lord, who addressed him by the name of Sudatta, unknown outside his family, and spoke to him on dhamma. The vision of dhamma thereupon arose in Anāthapiṇḍika, he became a lay-follower, and acquired Prince Jeta’s Grove as a gift to the Order. The story of his first meeting with the Buddha is also told, but more briefly, in the Saṃyutta. In this Section is also to be found the Tittira-jātaka which came to be known as the Partridge Brahma-faring (Kd 16.6.3), told here to encourage monks to be courteous and polite to one another. Harmony in the Order was constantly being sought, as a number of episodes and allusions in the Vinaya indicate. It is by no means only in Section Kd 16 that passages occur that have parallels in other parts of the Pali canon or the Jātaka. Throughout the Vinaya this is the case, and probably a concordance of Vinaya stories would show only few to be peculiar to it.

Section Kd 17 begins with the story of Anuruddha’s going forth from home together with Bhaddiya, a Sakyan chieftain who, within a year, realised the threefold knowledge and acclaimed his happiness. Monks, hearing him, grew suspicious that he was remembering the former joys of rulership. But Bhaddiya was able to convince Gotama, in words reminiscent of SN i.72–SN i.73, that previously, although he had had a fully appointed guard, he had been nervous and frightened all the same; but, now, alone in a forest he is unconcerned and unruffled. An explanation of why this story is placed at the beginning of the Section on Schisms seems called for. I can only suggest that if the monks who alleged that Bhaddiya was dissatisfied with the Brahmarfaring had turned out to be right, it is not unreasonable to suppose they would next have regarded him as a potential schismatic.

This was the role for which, however, Devadatta was cast, and for far more: he was also a potential murderer, prepared to go to great lengths to get rid of the Buddha. In his overweening ambition, Devadatta thought he should no longer be the leader and coveted this position for himself. Now, although those who have progressed some distance on the Way may feel themselves safe and immune to attacks (see Bhaddiya's story and also the Bhayabherava Sutta of the Majjhima), the tradition nevertheless recognises slayers of arahants (see e.g. BD 4.113, etc.), while various Commentaries hold that Moggallāna, an arahant of long standing, was actually murdered (Ja v.125; Dh-p-a iii.65). At Kv 313, however, the untimely death of an arahant is a controverted point. Tathāgatas, Truth-finders, must be different, for although they may be hurt and their blood shed (BD 4.113, etc., and Kd 17.3.9), according to our Section Kd 17 they need no protection and cannot be deprived of life by aggression (Kd 17.3.10). Their attainment of nibbāna (with no residue remaining) is in fact a matter precisely of their own volition, as is also apparent from the episode (referred to in Kd 21.1.10) where Ānanda fails to ask the Buddha to prolong his life to the full. He died when he was in the eighties. The assumption is probably that he might have lived to be a hundred or so as the Pali canon states that people sometimes attain this age, while Sabbakāmin was so old at the time of the Council of Vesālī that it was 120 years since his ordination (Kd 22.2.4). He must probably have been at least 140 years of age then, for in Bu-Pc 65 it is said that ordination must not be conferred on any male less than twenty years old.

In Section Kd 17 we hear of another formal act, one that is extra to the seven dealt with in Kd 1. This is the formal act of Information, pakāsaniyakamma, which allowed it to be proclaimed that someone's nature or character had altered—for the worse (Kd 17.3.2). The causative form, pakāseti, “to give information” of the verb pakāsati (of which pakāsaniya is the gerundive), is used with at least a semi-technical sense by the Vajjis of Vesālī when speaking of Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, and who had been able to change the lay-followers' opinion as to who the true recluses really were (Kd 22.1.7).

Much of Section Kd 18 consists of passages of some considerable length, most of which have already occurred in the Mahāvagga, use also being made of Sekhiya material. But the contexts are different. For example, Kd 1.25 lays down the proper conduct for those who share cells towards their preceptors, while in Kd 18.1.2–Kd.18.1.5 this same conduct, laid down in almost identical words except for a few additions or omissions, is to be observed by a monk arriving at a monastery, and again in Kd 18.7.2–Kd.18.7.4 by monks in respect of their lodgings. These are three occasions where conduct is, rather naturally, to be the same, for all three concern monks actually in a monastery, even if only just arrived. Yet the instructions specifically for resident monks (Kd 18.2.2–Kd 18.2.3) are connected more with their behaviour to incoming monks than with any thing else. We have seen that the same story, for example that of Dabba and that of Ariṭṭha, may be told so as to introduce varying effects. So here, the same behaviour may be followed in varying circumstances. A great process of stabilisation was at work. As the mass of allowances and offences—in the Cuḷavagga mostly those of wrong-doing—pile up and increase, so the allusions become all the clearer. Thus, by the time we get to Kd 18.3.2 the nature of the clay goods and the wooden goods that have to be packed away by a monk who is leaving a residence, can be understood by referring to Kd 15.37. For it is here that Gotama “allows”, as recorded, all clay goods and all wooden ones with certain specified exceptions.

The ninth Section, concerned mainly with the legally valid and the legally invalid suspensions of the Pātimokkha, is introduced by the eight beautiful similitudes of the great ocean, a passage found also in the Aṅguttara and the Udāna. The third of these similes showing what, ideally, the monks ought to be, is particularly to the point: the Order does not live in communion with an impure monk, but, having assembled quickly, suspends him, with the result that he is far from the Order and the Order is far from him (Kd 19.1.4). Therefore, also to the point, is the story that precedes the similes of the sea. It is a story of how the Buddha refused, in spite of a plea made three times by Ānanda, to recite the Pātimokkha to the monks. For, “the assembly is not entirely pure, Ānanda”, having in it one individual of a depravity so grave that he is described in strongly derogatory, if stereotyped, terms. The Truth-finder cannot recite the Pātimokkha to an assembly containing a monk like this (Kd 19.1.2). Instead, he delegates his powers, now as it seems out of disappointment and disgust, whereas formerly he had delegated other powers in the full tide of success (Kd 1.12.1). In both cases it is reasonable to suppose that he did so because the Order was growing beyond the capacity of one man to handle; and because he had therefore increasingly to look to the monks themselves to maintain the Order on the lines laid down by him, both while he was alive and after he was with them no longer.

At the end of Section Kd 19 we are at the end of the discipline for monks. Many and exceedingly various are the points that have been raised, and a ruling given on each. The whole method of conducting Buddhist monasticism for those who follow the Pali Vinaya is contained in this and amounts to a very complete system. All doubts as to what is allowable and what is not, or all doubts as to how to act either in conclave or as an individual may be resolved by referring to the discipline that has been laid down. All misdoings, whether serious or nor, have their appropriate penalty attached to them. Behaviour is right if it promotes one's own progress along the Way or that of others. As such it is skillful, kusala.

As the Bhikkhunī-Pātimokkha or Vibhaṅga follows the Bhikkhu- (called the Great, mahā-) Vibhaṅga, so in the Cullavagga, at the close of the legalised rules and proceedings governing the life of monks, there follows a Section devoted to the Order of nuns. It begins with an account of the formation of this Order, and contains the important statement, attributed to Gotama, that women are capable of attaining arahantship. The eight important rules (found also in Monks' Bu-Pc 21) are then laid down, their adoption by Mahāpajāpatī, the instigator of the Order of nuns, constituting her ordination. The remainder of this Section is taken up with regularising for nuns the recital of the Pātimokkha, the confession of offences, the settlement of legal questions, and their exhortation, and so forth. Then come incidents told so as to establish various offences of wrong-doing and various "allowances". There follows on this the method to be followed for the second ordination of nuns, that by monks, after they have been ordained by nuns as laid down in the Nuns' Pācittiyas. After more offences of wrong-doing, there is a reversion to ordaining, this time through a messenger, and finally more offences of wrong-doing and more "allowances".

In this Section there is included the prohibition of forest-dwelling for nuns (Kd 20.23), a prohibition not, I believe, precisely repeated elsewhere. This reduces the number of their "resources" to three, instead of four, as for monks. It is said that if a nun stays in a forest there is an offence of wrong-doing. But in Nuns' Formal Meeting 3 (Vin 4.230), it is said that a nun incurs a grave offence if, while she is in a forest, she goes out of sight or hearing of her companion nun, and an offence entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order once she has got outside. The whole of this amounts to saying that nuns may pass through a forest if they go two together, but that they must not stay in one either together or separately. This was for the sake of their security.

Another interesting point is that nuns, on returning to the Order after they had joined one of the other sects, should not be ordained again. This privilege could be extended to monks, provided that they first underwent a four months' probation (Kd 1.38.1). Life for nuns was probably harder than it was for monks. In spite of the sympathy and justice with which their troubles were met, they were to some extent discriminated against. I have referred to this on my Introduction at BD 3.xxxix; and in the notes to Volumes BD.4 and BD.6 have mentioned such discrepancies as occur between the penalties inflicted on monks and on nuns for similar behaviour. Possibly the only exception to the general trend of the heavier penalty being imposed on a nun is in the case of “giving a blow to a monk”. Here, if a nun does so, her offence is ranked as one of wrong-doing while, if a monk strikes another monk, his offence is one of expiation (see below, BD 5.371).

In the Monks’ Bu-Pd 1, because “women obtain things with difficulty” (BD 3.104) it was made an offence to be confessed if a monk accepted, with certain reservations, food from the hand of a nun who was not a relation. But in the Cullavagga a nun is to offer any food there is in her bowl to a monk (Kd 20.13.2). On the other hand, monks could offer nuns food that had been stored (Kd 20.15.1) if they had more than they wanted for themselves; and if nuns were short of lodgings the monks might give them some temporarily, again if they had more than they wanted (Kd 20.16.1).

A great number of women are traditionally held to have flocked to the Order of nuns. It is conceivable that they were generally regarded as of poorer quality than the monks, and that therefore there had to be a severer testing in order to weed out those who had entered without having a real vocation. It is significant that in the Etad Aggas of the Aṅguttara there are for monks forty-seven classes of attainments and forty-one monks said to be chief in them (for some are chief in more than one attainment), while for nuns there are only thirteen classes of attainments, as many nuns being chief in them. Among the former Nandaka is called the chief of monks who exhort nuns. I have referred to the vicissitudes attendant upon the legalisation of the exhortation for nuns at BD 3.xli, and can here only mention what looks like a general injunction for nuns to follow when monks fail them: pāsādikena sampādetu, struggle on, labour on in friendliness (see below, BD 5.366).

At the end of Section Kd 21, on the Council of Rājagaha, because exactly five hundred monks were there, it is said that this “chanting of the discipline” Vinayaśaṃgīti, is in consequence called that of the Five Hundred. To speak of a “chanting of discipline” is rather a curious and limited description.¹ For it is expressly said in Vin 5.118 that Ānanda undertook to answer questions on dhamma, and beginning with the Brahmajāla and the Sāmaññaphala Suttantas, did in fact answer corresponding questions about the five Nikāyas. This is no less a feat than that performed by Upāli, the great Vinaya expert, who, having answered questions about the four Pārājika offences, then went on to answer questions about the two disciplines, ubhatovīnaye, as told in Kd 21.1.7. All the questions on dhamma and discipline were put by the learned Kassapa the Great. It seems that this elder, reacting to Subhadda’s unsatisfactory attitude to Gotama’s death, with great prevision suggested to the other monks that dhamma and discipline should be chanted before not-dhamma and not-discipline should shine out and dhamma and discipline be withheld (Kd 21.1.1). The final name: “chanting of the discipline” seems therefore to sum up only half the proceedings dealt with at the first Council. This Council or Conference was held shortly, some Commentaries say three months, after Gotama had died. The record of this Council is of the utmost importance as the tradition—oral only, it is true—of a dhamma that was taught and a discipline that was laid down if not wholly by the Founder himself, at all events while he was still alive.

How far their recital was well based and well carried out was brought into a little doubt by the episode of the monk Purāṇa, the Old One, who told the elders he would remember dhamma and discipline just as he had heard and learnt them in the Lord’s presence. His words: “Well chanted by the elders”, are polite, but he was apparently not quite convinced.

According to Section Kd 21, discipline was recited before dhamma. The rather bald narrative gives no reason. The Commentaries however come forward with an explanation.² They say that Kassapa asked the monks whether dhamma or discipline should be chanted first, and the monks replied: “Discipline is called the āyu, the life or vitality, of the Buddha’s dispensation; while the discipline stands, the dispensation stands. Therefore let us chant discipline first.” The same sentiment is expressed in the verse inserted before the uddāna, the key, at the end of Section Kd 1 of the Mahāvagga. (BD 4.127). The underlying notion is that discipline is primarily concerned with sīla, or purification of the ways of acting in body and speech, and therefore with the first of the three categories into which the whole sāsana, dispensation or teaching, is graded.

¹ Noticed by OLDENBERG, Vinaya Piṭakam, vol. i, p. xxix, note. ² Vin-a i.13; DN-a i.11.

The remainder of Section Kd 21 is devoted to Ānanda. He is the central figure. Feeling that it was not suitable in him to go to the Council while he was still a sekha, a learner, he made an effort to realise arahantship and, at a moment when no part of him was touching the earth, his mind was freed from the cankers. As DN-a i.10 rightly points out, when it is said: “in this teaching when a monk attains arahantship neither lying nor sitting down, neither standing nor pacing up and down”, it is to be said of Ānanda. The DN-a goes on to say that Ānanda, now thinking he was fit to enter the assembly, delighted and rejoicing, went there shining like a full moon on a cloudless night, like a lotus blooming at the sun’s touch, his face pure and radiant as though he were announcing his attaining of arahantship. But the Commentary (Vin-a i.12-13) gives a different version, and one that at DN-a i.11 is ascribed to the Majjhima-bhāṇakas, or repeaters, of how he went to the Council. According to this: “Ānanda, not wishing to tell of his attainment of arahantship, did not go with the monks. They asked whom an empty seat was for, and hearing it was for Ānanda, asked where he had gone. At this moment he thought: ‘Now is the time for me to go,’ and displaying his psychic power, plunging into the earth, he showed himself as it were in his own seat. Some say he sat down after going through the air.”

His arahantship, however, did not appear to have commanded much respect. After the Council was over, he told the elders what the Lord had said at the time of his parinibbāna about abolishing the “lesser and minor rules of training”. This acted like a goad on the elders and they charged him with one offence of wrong-doing after another—all of which must have been committed before he attained arahantship, even the imputed offence of allowing women, to weep and lament beside Gotama's body. I know of no other occasion recorded in the Pali canon where an arahant is asked to confess offences said to have been committed by him before gaining liberation. This episode therefore not only puts the accusing elders in a very dubious light, it also indicates that offences of wrong-doing could be invented after Gotama's death. But as the offences with which Ānanda was charged were all concerned with the Founder himself, they are not likely to be repeated.

What must be regarded as a more dignified and correct attitude was taken, later, by Ānanda himself when he was sent to inflict the supreme or highest penalty, brahmadanda, on Channa (Kd 21.1.15). Channa was so much overcome by the thought of submitting to this penalty of ostracism that he took himself seriously in hand and won arahantship—the second monk recorded in this Section to do so. Ānanda then tells him that from the moment he won it the highest penalty became revoked—automatically—for him. This is the Channa who was Gotama's charioteer while he was still the Bodhisatta. It was because of his affection for Gotama, and then because of his pride in “our Buddha, our dhamma”, that he was unable to carry out the samañadhamma, the rule for recluses (Thag-a i.166), until he had received the emotional shock, samvega, of the imposition of the supreme penalty on him.

Oldenberg states (Vinaya Piṭakam i.xxvii) that the story of the First Council as it has come down to us in the Cullavagga, “is not history, but pure invention and, moreover, invention of no very ancient date”. He bases his argument on a comparison with the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta which, while it contains passages word for word the same as in the Cullavagga, yet makes no allusion either to Kassapa's proposal for holding a Council or to the Council itself. Oldenberg concludes that “the author” of the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta did not know anything of the First Council. Certainly his silence is otherwise hard to account for unless we allow that “he” (the author, who should rather be spoken of as the compiler or compilers) did not want to refer to it. We are accustomed in the Pali canon to finding the same stories running parallel up to a certain point and then turning off into different endings. It is possible that we have such a case here; and that the opening part of Kd 21 was told so as to lead up to the proposal to convene a Council, while the same story was told in the Dīgha (with the transposition of the Subhadda incident) so as to lead up to the account of the disposal of the relics. This affected the Buddha’s body, whereas the Council of Rājagaha was held in the attempt to get clear precisely what had been his dhamma and discipline. Recited by 500 elders, it could carry weight.

Nevertheless, the Pali recension of the Council may be neither wholly correct nor wholly complete. It is one of several versions stemming from different schools and whose canons may vary from sect to sect. The late Professor PRZYLUKI was of the opinion that, in respect of this Council, the Sūtras may contain older material than the Vinayas. He collected a number of versions of both and presented them, translated into French, in his valuable work: Le Concile de Rājagrha, Paris, 1926. The student is referred to this book; he will then be able to make any comparisons he wishes between the Pali Vinaya account and the others. For it is not a necessary function of this Sacred Books of the Buddhists Series to stray from the Pali texts themselves.

Section Kd 22, that on the Second Council, held at Vesālī a “century” after Gotama’s parinibbāna—a century being “no doubt a round number”¹—is more truly characterised at its end as “a chanting of discipline” than is Section Kd 21. For this chanting by the 700 monks is concerned with ten points of discipline only, and whether these could not be relaxed. The very fact that they were called in question shows that, in the years that had passed since Gotama’s death, a less austere attitude, a more demanding note had crept in. It was to determine which was to be followed—the less austere attitude or the more austere one—that this Council was held.

¹ Vinaya Texts i, Introduction, p. xxii.

It was ultimately the monk Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, who was responsible for the “chanting of discipline” which, limited to the ten points, was the subject before the Council of Vesālī. Various Commentaries recognise this (e.g. AN-a ii.10; MN-a iv.114) by referring to this chanting as Yasattherassa saṃgīti, the Recital of the Elder Yasa. He got the laypeople on his side by telling them three stories where Gotama had denounced the acceptance of gold and silver by monks—the tenth point, and possibly the most important; and that he aroused much interest among the monks is clear from the records. The endless disputations that arose, the speeches made whose meanings were not clear (Kd 22.2.7), impelled the elder Revata, whose opinion on the ten points in question coincided with Yasa’s, to select a referendum of eight monks to settle the points. Their decision still holds good today in Theravādin countries. In the traditional way of the democratic Order, all the monks present were asked to agree on the eight elders proposed by Revata. They further agreed on a ninth monk, Ajita, to appoint the seats for the elders who would be listening to the proceedings.

The exact place in Vesālī where the Council was held is doubtful. The Vinaya (Kd 22.2.7) says it took place in the Vālika monastery, as does the Mahāvamsa; but the Dīpavamsa lays the scene in the Hall of the Gabled House. It is perhaps of no great importance, except as adding to the confusion which surrounds the legends of the Councils. What the Vinaya record of the Council of Vesālī clearly indicates is that there was enough dissatisfaction among certain monks to bring about a schism, if not checked, with the attendant danger of dhamma turning into not-dhamma and discipline into not-discipline.

It may be asked why the Cullavagga is rounded off by the Sections dealing with the first two Councils, and which make the Cullavagga longer by two Sections than the Mahāvagga. Whether they were a later addition or not, I can only suggest that they are included, reasonably and suitably as it seems to me, at the end of the enormously long compendium of discipline for monks and nuns so as to give a culminating authority and sanction to this discipline, which at the time of the Council of Vesālī, had been tested for a “century”.

All the words spoken by the Buddha between his attainment of supreme self-awakening and his parinibbāna have but the one flavour, that of freedom (see Kd 9.1.4, etc., and Vin-a i.16, DN-a i.16). This is a characteristic of the Buddhavacana. Freedom is to be sought and realised by those who have entered on the Way. For their help and guidance there are two parts of the Buddhavacana, namely dhamma and discipline. It is no fault of the Pali canon if later generations have split the frequently occurring compound of dhammavinaya into its two component parts, and have treated each as if it functioned more or less in isolation from the other. Dhamma is rooted in discipline; and discipline is always bordering on dhamma, as sīla is on samādhi and both on paññā, intuitive wisdom, to give point and substance to all its rules, regulations, offences and allowances. All the time it is training disciples to attain sufficient habitual purity ultimately to enter into the goal of Wisdom, even of that “great wisdom” of which Sāriputta, “beloved” above all other disciples, was said to be the chief (AN i.23). The Discipline, rigid and strict, is preliminary to and usually necessary to the flowering of Wisdom. Without the control of body and speech (discipline, moral habit), without mind-control (concentration), the full expansion of wisdom may never come to be. Discipline therefore, at the beginning of the training, “is a teaching of commands, āṇādesanā, being taught by the Lord in respect of a multitude of commands for those meriting commands” (Vin-a i.21, DN-a i.19).

Practically every conceivable thing affecting monastic life for monks and nuns, practically every conceivable relation with other human beings, whether fellow monks or nuns or the laity, are brought under review and legislated for in minutest detail through the seven classes of offence, through the “allowances”, and through the most important and the regularly recurring events in a monk’s life: Ordination, Observance, Invitation, the rains-residence, the making up of new robe-material; through the seven official formal acts of the Order, beginning with that of censure, and through the suspension of the Pātimokkha. It is a very complete system, a very precise organisation marked throughout by the humaneness and reasonableness of Gotama, the codifier to whom with but few exceptions every ruling is ascribed.

I.B. HORNER

London, December 1951.

11. THE FOLLOWERS OF PAṆDUKA AND LOHITAKA

Praise to the Lord, the Perfected One, the Fully Self-Awakened One

ACT OF CENSURE

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvaththī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time monks who were followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka¹ and who were themselves makers of strife,² makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of contention,³ makers of legal questions in an Order,⁴ having approached other monks who were also makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, spoke thus (to them): "Do not you, venerable ones, let this one defeat⁵ you; argue loud and long, for you are wiser and more experienced and have heard more and are cleverer than he is, do not be afraid of him, and we will be on your side." Because of this, not only did strifes arise which had not arisen before, but also strifes which had arisen rolled on to increase and magnitude.

¹ These were two out of the group of six monks; cf. Vin 5.8ff. below. See BD 1.275, n. 3; BD 1.314, n. 2. Mentioned at Vin-a 614; MN-a iii.187 says that having taken their own company (of followers) they lived in Sāvaththī. The Satapatta Jātaka (Ja 279) was, so it is claimed, given in reference to these monks. ² Cf. Vin 4.45 and see BD 2.253, n. 1, for further references to these five terms. Since they all refer to disputes about legal questions, the references given at Vinaya Texts ii.329, n. 2, to various Pācittiyas hardly apply. See also BD 4.,224, BD 4.23Of., BD 4.488f., BD 4.51Of. ³ Cf. Vin 4.45 and see BD 2.253, n. 1, for further references to these five terms. Since they all refer to disputes about legal questions, the references given at Vinaya Texts ii.329, n. 2, to various Pācittiyas hardly apply. See also BD 4.224, BD 4.23Of., BD 4.488f., BD 4.51Of.

⁴ Cf. Bu-Ss 8, Bu-Ss 9, Bu-Ss 10, etc. ⁵ mā eso ajesi.

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticized, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of contention, makers of legal questions in an Order, having approached other monks who are also makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, speak thus to them: ‘Do not you ... and we will be on your side.’ Because of this ... also strifes which had arisen rolled on to increase and magnitude.” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka are themselves makers of strife ... having approached other monks who are also makers of strife ... speak thus to them: ‘Do not you ... and we will be on your side’? And that because of this ... strifes which have arisen roll on to increase and magnitude?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“It is not suitable, monks, it is not becoming in these foolish men, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men who are themselves makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, speak thus: ‘Do not you ... and we will be on your side’? And because of this ... strifes which have arisen roll on to increase and magnitude. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased nor for increasing the number of those who are pleased, but, monks, it is displeasing to those who are not pleased as well as to those who are pleased, and it causes wavering in some.”

Then the Lord, having rebuked these monks, having in many a figure spoken in dispraise of difficulty in supporting and maintaining oneself, of great desires, of lack of contentment, of clinging (to the obstructions), of indolence; having in many a figure spoken in praise of ease in supporting and maintaining oneself, of desiring little, of contentment, of expunging (evil), of punctiliousness, of graciousness, of decreasing (the obstructions), of putting forth energy,¹ having given reasoned talk on what is becoming, on what is fitting for them, addressed the monks, saying:

“Well now, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of censure² against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka.

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out; First, the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka should be reproved; having reproved them, they should be made to remember; having remembered, they should be accused of an offence; having accused them of an offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, having approached other monks who are also makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, spoke thus (to them): “Do not you ... and we will be on your side”. Because of this, not only did strifes arise which had not arisen before, but also strifes which had arisen rolled on to increase and magnitude. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife ... rolled on to increase and magnitude. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. If the carrying out of a (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. A (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka is being carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

¹ Cf. Vin 3.21 (BD 1.37), Vin 1.45, Vin 1.305 for this passage. ² tajjanīyakamma. Cf. Kd 1.25.22 and Kd 9.7.1–Kd 9.7.5.

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

“Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be not legally valid and not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out not in the presence of,¹ if it is carried out when there is no interrogation, if it is carried out without the acknowledgement.² Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be not legally valid, not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be one ... and one that is hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out when there is no offence, if it is carried out for an offence that does not lead on to confession,³ if it is carried out for an offence that has been confessed. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure ... one that is hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out without having reproved him, if it is carried out without having made him remember, if it is carried out without having accused him of an offence. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... one that is hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out not in the presence of, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... one that is hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out when there is no interrogation, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure ... hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out without the acknowledgement, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is no offence, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out for an offence that does not lead on to confession, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out for an offence that has been confessed, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out without having reproved him, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out without having made him remember, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out without having accused him of an offence, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly. If, monks, a (formal) act of censure is possessed of these three qualities it comes to be not legally valid and not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle.”

¹ See Kd 14.14.16ff., and Kd 9.6.1. Vin-a vi.1155 says it is not carried out in the presence of the Order, dhamma and discipline, the individual, and is carried out without having reproved him, without having asked him (to consent) and without his having acknowledged it. ² I.e. of the accused monk. ³ adesanāgāminiya, i.e. a Pārājika or Saṅghādisesa, whose penalties do not include censure or confession.

Told are the Twelve Cases of (Formal) Acts that are not legally valid

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

^{11:31} “Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be a (formal) act that is legally valid and a (formal) act that is disciplinarily valid and one that is easily settled: (that is to say) if it is carried out in the presence of, if it is carried out when there is interrogation, if it is carried out with the acknowledgement. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities ... easily settled. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities ... easily settled: (that is to say) if it is carried out when there is an offence, if it is carried out when there is an offence which leads on to confession, if it is carried out when an offence has not been confessed ... if it is carried out, having reproved him, if it is carried out, having made him remember, if it is carried out, having accused him of the offence ... if it is carried out in the presence of, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is interrogation, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out with the acknowledgement, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is an offence, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is an offence that leads on to confession, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when an offence has not been confessed, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out having reproved him, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out having made him remember, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out having accused him of an offence, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly. If, monks, a (formal) act of censure is possessed of these three qualities it comes to be a (formal) act that is legally valid and a (formal) act that is disciplinarily valid and one that is easily settled.

Told are the Twelve Cases of (Formal) Acts that are legally valid

SIX ON DESIRES

“Monks, if a monk is possessed-of three qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him: if he is a maker of strife, a maker of quarrels, a maker of disputes a maker of contention, a maker of legal questions in an Order; if he is ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them¹; if he lives in company with householders in inappropriate association with householders.² Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities an Order ... against him: if, in regard to moral habit, he comes to have fallen away from moral habit³; if, in regard to good habits, he comes to have fallen away from good habits; if, in regard to (right) views, he comes to have fallen away from (right) views. Monks, if a monk is possessed ... against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him: if he speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, if he speaks dispraise of dhamma, if he speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him.

Monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of censure against three (kinds of) monks: against the one who is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in the Order; against the one who is ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them; against the one who lives in company with householders in inappropriate association with householders. Monks, if the Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of censure against these three (kinds of) monks. And, monks, if the Order desires, it may carry out ... against three further (kinds of) monks: against the one who, in regard to moral habit, comes to have fallen away from moral habit, against the one who, in regard to good habits, comes to have fallen away from good habits, against the one who, in regard to (right) views, comes to have fallen away from (right) views. Monks, if an Order desires ... against these three (kinds of) monks. And, monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out ... against three further (kinds of) monks: against the one who speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, against the one who speaks dispraise of dhamma, against the one who speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of censure against these three (kinds of) monks.

¹ āpattibahulo anapadāno; cf. Vin 1.321 (BD 4.461, n. 1). ² Cf. Vin 4.321-322, and BD 3.207, n. 1. ³ Cf. Vin 1.63 (BD 4.82).

Told are the Six Cases on Being Desirous

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

“Monks, when a (formal) act of censure has been carried out against a monk, he should conduct himself properly. This is the proper conduct in this case¹: he should not ordain, he should not give guidance,² a novice should not attend him,³ the agreement for him to exhort nuns⁴ should not be consented to, and even if he is agreed upon nuns should not be exhorted (by him), he should not fall into that (same) offence for which a (formal) act of censure came to be carried out against him by an Order, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, he should not find fault with the (formal) act,⁵ he should not find fault with those who carry out the (formal) act, he should not suspend a regular monk’s Observance,⁶ he should not suspend his Invitation,⁷ he should not issue commands,⁸ he should not set up authority,⁹ he should not ask for leave,¹⁰ he should not reprove,¹¹ he should not make remember, he should not quarrel¹² with monks”.

¹ Cf. below, Kd 12.1.2; Kd 20.20. ² Cf. Kd 1.36.1. ³ See Kd 1.36, Kd 1.37 for this trio.

⁴ Cf. Monks’ Bu-Pc 21, and Kd 20.9.4. ⁵ I.e. the act of censure, Vin-a vi.1156.

⁶ From here to end of Kd 11.5 recurs at Kd 11.27.1 (end). Cf. also Kd 20.20. ⁷ Cf.

Kd 4.16.2. ⁸ na savacaniyam katabbam. Vin-a 1156 says: “I am doing the savacaniya of the venerable ones in this matter, do not go one footstep back from this residence while the legal question is not settled.” The word savacaniya occurs again at Kd 2.1.2.

See Vinaya Texts ii.338, n. 6; Vinaya Texts ii.386, n. 2. ⁹ anuvāda. Vin-a 1156 says “in a vihāra he should not take the chief place.”

¹⁰ I.e. to ask questions; see Kd 2.16.1, Kd 4.16.1, Kd 4.16.2. ¹¹ Cf. Kd 20.9.5. ¹² sampayojeti, also meaning to associate. Vin-a 1156 gives both meanings, saying: “having joined one another, a quarrel should not be made.”

The sense of “to quarrel” here would be of disputing about legal questions. The foregoing prohibitions indicate that a monk undergoing “censure” is not expected to have no dealings with his fellow monks.

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Censure

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE SETTLED

11.6.1 Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of censure against the monks who were followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. These, when the (formal) act of censure had been carried out against them by the Order, conducted themselves properly, were subdued, mended their ways, and having approached monks, they spoke thus: “We, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order, are conducting ourselves properly, we are subdued, we are mending our ways. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, monks, let the Order revoke the (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka.

11.6.2 “Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked: if he ordains, if he gives guidance, if a novice attends him, if he consents to the agreement for him to exhort nuns, if he exhorts nuns even although agreed upon. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked: if he falls into that (same) offence for which the (formal) act of censure was carried out against him by the Order, or into another that is similar, or into one that is worse, if he finds fault with the (formal) act, if he finds fault with those who carry out the (formal) act. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked.

11.6.3 “Monks, if a monk is possessed of eight qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked: if he suspends a regular monk’s Observance, if he suspends his Invitation, if he issues commands, if he sets up authority, if he asks for leave, if he reproves, if he makes remember, if he quarrels with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of censure should not be revoked.”

Told are the Eighteen Cases where (a Formal Act of Censure) should not be revoked

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities a (formal) act of censure may be revoked: if he does not ordain, if he does not give guidance, if a novice does not attend him, if he does not consent to the agreement for exhorting nuns, if, although agreed upon, he does not exhort nuns. Monks, if a monk is possessed ... may be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities a (formal) act of censure may be revoked: if he does not fall into that (same) offence for which the (formal) act of censure came to be carried out against him, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, if he does not find fault with the (formal) act, if he does not find fault with those who carry out the (formal) act. Monks, if a monk ... may be revoked.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of eight qualities a (formal) act of censure may be revoked: if he does not suspend a regular monk’s Observance, if he does not suspend his Invitation, if he does not issue commands, if he does not set up authority, if he does not ask for leave, if he does not reprove, if he does not make remember, if he does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of censure may be revoked.”

Told are the Eighteen Cases (where a Formal Act of Censure) may be revoked

“And thus, monks, should it be revoked: Those monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka, having approached the Order, having (each) arranged the upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on their haunches, having stretched forth their joined palms, should speak

Kd 11.7

Kd 11.8

BD 5.10

thus to it: 'A (formal) act of censure, honoured sirs, was carried out against us by the Order; but we are conducting ourselves properly, we are subdued, we are mending our ways; and we ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure'. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying:

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks, followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order, are conducting themselves properly, they are subdued, they are mending their ways, and they ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may revoke the (formal) act of censure for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks, followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order, are conducting themselves properly, they are subdued, they are mending their ways, and they ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. The Order is revoking the (formal) act of censure for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. If the revocation of the (formal) act of censure for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... should speak. The (formal) act of censure is revoked by the Order for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

Told is the First (Formal) Act: that of Censure

ACT OF GUIDANCE

Now at that time the venerable Seyyasaka¹ was ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them; he lived in company with householders, in inappropriate association with householders.¹ So much so that the monks were done up² with granting him probation, sending him back to the beginning, imposing mānatta, rehabilitating him.³ Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monk Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him?”

¹ At Vin 3.110ff. he is represented as committing the offence for which the first Saṅghādisesa was formulated.

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“It is not suitable, monks, it is not becoming in this foolish man, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. For how, monks, can this foolish man, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing the number of those who are pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of guidance⁴ for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: ‘You should live in dependence⁵’.

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Seyyasaka should be reprovved; having reprovved him, he should be made to remember; having made him remember, he should be accused of the offence; having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured

¹ Cf. above, Kd 11.4.1. ² pakata, done away with; so, exhausted, worn out, “fed up.”

³ As Vinaya Texts ii.343, n. 1 indicates, it is not clear why a Saṅghādisesa should be attributed to Seyyasaka, but it suggests that the answer may appear at Vinaya Texts ii.384, n. 1. The text may have in mind Vin 3.110 (see above, BD 5.10, n). Certainly there is a tradition connecting Seyyasaka with the Saṅghādisesa type of offence. There was for monks no recognised offence incurring a penalty if they lived in association with householders. ⁴ nissayakamma. Cf. Kd 1.25.22; Kd 9.7.6, Kd 9.7.14.

⁵ nissāya. Cf. BD 4.79, BD 4.100f.

sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: “You should live in dependence.” This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: “You should live in dependence”. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of guidance, saying: “You should live in dependence”, for the monk Seyyasaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. A (formal) act of guidance, saying: “You should live in dependence,” is being carried out by the Order for the monk Seyyasaka. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

^{11.10.1} “If a monk, monks, is possessed of three qualities ... (=Kd 11.2-Kd.11.5. Instead of (formal) act of censure, by carrying out a (formal) act of censure read (formal) act of guidance, by carrying out a (formal) act of guidance) ...

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

(Note by Sujato: This and following sections, which consist of variations on the preceding, were omitted in Horner’s translation.)

SIX ON DESIRING

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Guidance

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: “You should live in dependence.” After the (formal) act of guidance had been carried out by the Order, he, choosing, associating with, visiting friends who were lovely¹ (in deed), making them recite, interrogating them, came to be one who had heard much,² one to whom the tradition was handed down; an expert in dhamma, an expert in discipline, an expert in the headings; experienced, wise, modest, scrupulous, desirous of the training; he conducted himself properly, was subdued, and mended his ways; and, having approached monks, he spoke thus: “I, your reverences, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued and am mending my ways. What line of conduct should be followed by me? “They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order revoke the (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka.

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... (=Kd 11.6.2-Kd 11.7.1 Instead of (formal) act of censure read (formal) act of guidance) ... may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases (where a Formal Act of Guidance) may be revoked

¹ kalyāṇamitta; cf. Dh 375. Or the word may be in the technical sense of a spiritual adviser, as at SN v.3. ² As at Vin 1.119, Vin 1.337, Vin 4.158, etc.

1.12.2 “And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, the monk Seyyasaka, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways; I ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance’. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for.

5.14 “The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways; he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may revoke the (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways; he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance. If the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka is revoked by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

ACT OF BANISHMENT

11.13.1 Now at that time¹ unscrupulous, depraved monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasu were in residence at Kiṭṭāgiri. They indulged in the following kinds of bad habits: they planted and caused to be planted small flowering trees; they watered them and had them watered; they plucked them and had them plucked; they tied them up into (garlands) and had them tied up; they made garlands and had them made with a stalk on one side; they made garlands and had them made with a stalk on both sides; they made and had a branching flower-stalk made; they made a wreath and had one made; they made a garland worn round the forehead and had one made; they made and had an ear-ornament made; they made and had a breast-plate made. These (monks) took or sent garlands having a stalk on one side to wives of reputable families, to daughters of reputable families, to girls of reputable families, to daughters-in-law of reputable families, to female slaves of reputable families. They took or sent garlands having a stalk on both sides; they took or sent a branching flower-stalk; they took or sent a wreath ... a garland worn round the forehead ... an ear-ornament ... a breastplate. These ate from one dish together with wives of reputable families, with daughters of reputable families, with girls of reputable families, with daughters-in-law of reputable families, with women slaves of reputable families; and they drank from the same beaker; they sat down on the same seat; they shared one couch; they shared one mat; they shared one coverlet; they shared one mat and coverlet. And they ate at the wrong time; and they drank intoxicants; and they wore garlands and used perfumes and cosmetics; they danced and sang and played musical instruments, and they sported. They danced when she danced; they sang when she danced; they played musical instruments when she danced; they sported when she danced; they danced when she sang ... they danced when she played musical instruments ... they danced when she sported ... they sported when she sported.

¹ The whole of 13 occurs at Bu-Ss 13.1.1-Bu-Ss.13.1.7. See BD 1.314-322 where notes are given.

They played on a chequered board for gambling; they played on a draught-board: they played with imagining such boards in the air; they played a game of keeping stepping on to diagrams; they played with spillikans ... at dice ... tip-cat ... brush-hand ... with a ball ... at blowing through toy pipes made of leaves ... with a toy plough ... at turning somersaults ... with a toy windmill ... with a toy measure of leaves ... with a toy cart ... with a toy bow ... they played a game of guessing at letters ... a mind-reading game ... a game of mimicking deformities ... they trained themselves in elephant lore ... horse lore ... carriage lore ... archery ... swordsmanship ... then they ran in front of an elephant ... a horse ... a chariot; now they ran backwards, now they ran forwards; and they whistled and they snapped their fingers and they wrestled and they fought with fists; and, having spread out their upper robes as a stage, they said to a dancing-girl: "Dance here, sister", and they applauded, and they indulged in various bad habits.

1.13.3
Now at that time a certain monk, having spent the rains among the people of Kāsī, while going to Sāvattthī so as to see the Lord, arrived at Kiṭāgiri. Then this monk, dressing early and taking his bowl and robe entered Kiṭāgiri for almsfood. He was pleasing whether he was approaching or departing, whether he was looking forward or looking behind, whether he was drawing in or stretching out (his arm), his eyes were cast down, he was possessed of pleasant deportment. People, having seen this monk, spoke thus:

in 2.11
"Who can this be like an idiot of idiots, like a fool of fools, like a very supercilious person? Who will go up to him and give him alms? Our masters, the followers of Assaji and Punabbasu are polite, genial, pleasant of speech, beaming with smiles, saying: 'Come, you are welcome'. They are not supercilious, they are easily accessible, they are the first to speak. Therefore alms should be given to them."

0 5.16
A certain lay follower saw that monk walking for almsfood in Kiṭāgiri; seeing that monk, he went up to him, and having gone up to him and greeted him, he said: "Honoured sir, are alms obtainable?"

"No, sir, alms are not obtainable."

“Come, honoured sir, we will go to (my) house.”

Then that lay follower, having taken that monk to his house and made him eat, said:

“Where, honoured sir, will the master go?”

“I will go to Sāvattthī, sir, to see the Lord.”

“Then, honoured sir, in my name salute the Lord’s feet with your head and say: ‘Lord, the residence at Kiṭāgiri has been corrupted. At Kiṭāgiri are residing unscrupulous, depraved monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu. They indulge in the following bad habits ... they indulge in a variety of bad habits. Lord, those men who formerly had faith and were believing now have no faith and are not believing. Those who formerly were channels for gifts to the Order are now cut off; they neglect the well behaved monks, and the depraved monks stay on. It were good, Lord, if the Lord would send monks to Kiṭāgiri, so that this residence at Kiṭāgiri may be settled.’

“Very well, sir,” and that monk having answered the lay follower in assent, rising from his seat departed for Sāvattthī. Gradually he approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery and the Lord; having approached and greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for Awakened Ones, for Lords to exchange greetings with in-coming monks. So the Lord said to this monk:

“I hope, monk, that it is going well with you, I hope that you are keeping going, I hope you have accomplished your journey with little fatigue? And where do you come from, monk?”

“Things go well, Lord, I am keeping going, Lord, and I, Lord, accomplished my journey with little fatigue. Now, I, Lord, having spent the rains among the people of Kāsī, and while coming to Sāvattthī to see the Lord, arrived at Kiṭāgiri. Then I, Lord, dressing early, and taking my bowl and robe, entered Kiṭāgiri for almsfood. Then, Lord, a certain lay follower saw me as I was walking in Kiṭāgiri for almsfood, and seeing me, he approached, and having approached, he greeted me and said: ‘Honoured sir, are alms obtainable?’ ‘No, sir, alms are not obtainable I said. ‘Come, honoured sir, we will go to (my) house he said. Then, Lord, that lay follower, taking me to his house and feeding me, said: 'Where, honoured sir, will the master go?' I said: 'I will go to Sāvattthī, sir, to see the Lord.' Then he said: 'Then, honoured sir ... may be settled'. Therefore, Lord, do I come."

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, asked the monks, saying:

"Monks, is it true, as is said, that monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, residing in Kiṭṭāgiri, are unscrupulous and depraved and indulge in the following bad habits: they plant small flowering trees ... indulge in a variety of bad habits ... and those men ... and the depraved monks stay on?"

"It is true, Lord."

The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can these foolish men indulge in bad habits such as these? How can they plant and cause small flowering trees to be planted, and water them and have them watered, and pluck them and have them plucked, and how can they tie them up into (garlands) and have them tied up? How can they make and have garlands made ...? How can they take and send ...? How can they eat ... drink ... sit ... stand ... eat ... drink ... run ... dance and sing and play musical instruments and sport ... play ... train themselves ... run ... run round facing ...? How can they whistle and snap their fingers and wrestle and fight with fists, and having spread out their upper robes as a stage, say to a dancing-girl: 'Dance here, sister,' and applaud and indulge in a variety of bad habits? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...", and having rebuked them and given reasoned talk, he addressed Sāriputta and Moggallāna, saying:

"Do you go, Sāriputta and Moggallāna, and having gone to Kiṭṭāgiri, carry out a (formal) act of banishment¹ from Kiṭṭāgiri against those monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu; these are those who share your cells."

"How, Lord, do we carry out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭṭāgiri against those monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu? These monks are fierce and rough.”

¹ pabbājaniyakamma. Cf. Kd 1.25.22; Kd 9.7.7.

“Well then, Sāriputta and Moggallāna, go together with many monks.”

“Very well, Lord,” Sāriputta and Moggallāna answered the Lord in assent.

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out. First, the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu should be reprovved; having reprovved them, they should be made to remember; having made them remember, they should be accused of an offence; having accused them of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu are those who bring families into disrepute and are of evil conduct; their evil conduct is seen and also heard and respectable families corrupted by them are seen and also heard. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should carry out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu should not remain in Kiṭṭāgiri. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are ... seen and also heard. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu should not remain in Kiṭṭāgiri. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which they should not remain in Kiṭṭāgiri is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. The (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which they should not remain in Kiṭṭāgiri is carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

^{1.14.1}
^{5.19} “Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities a (formal) act of banishment comes to be not legally valid, not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle ...¹ ...”

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

FOURTEEN ON DESIRING

... against the one who speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against these three (kinds of) monks.

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him: if he is possessed of bodily frivolity,² if he is possessed of verbal frivolity, if he is possessed of bodily and verbal frivolity. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities ... against him: if he is possessed of bodily bad habits,³ if he is possessed of verbal bad habits, if he is possessed of bodily and verbal bad habits. Monks, if a monk ... a (formal) act of banishment against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities ... against him: if he is possessed of harming⁴ by means of body, if he is possessed of harming by means of speech, if he is possessed of harming by means of body and speech. Monks, if a monk ... against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him: if he is possessed of a wrong bodily mode of livelihood, if he is possessed of a wrong verbal mode of livelihood, if he is possessed of a wrong bodily and verbal mode of livelihood. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him.

¹ As in Kd 11.2-Kd.11.4, reading “act of banishment” for “act of censure”. Chapter 14 above does not occur in Bu-Ss 13 ² kāyikena davena; Vin-a 1157 says this means physical enjoyment. Perhaps he takes food for fun or amusement or in sport, cf. AN i.114, AN ii.40, AN ii.145, AN iv.167. ³ Vin-a 1157 says this means a transgression of the rules of training laid down concerning the doors of the body. ⁴ Vin-a 1157 says this is called injury through not being trained in the rules of training laid down concerning the doors of the body. It means expulsion, nāsana, and ruin, vināsana.

“Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against three (kinds of) monks: against the one who is a maker of strife ... (as in Kd 11.4.2) ... against the one who speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against these three (kinds of) monks. And, monks, if an Order so desires it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against three further (kinds of) monks: against the one who is possessed of bodily frivolity, against the one who is possessed of verbal frivolity, against the one who is possessed of bodily and verbal frivolity ... against the one who is possessed of wrong bodily and verbal mode of livelihood. Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against these three (kinds of) monks.

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

“Monks, a monk against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out should conduct himself properly. This is the proper conduct in this case ... (as in Kd 11.5) ... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Banishment

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna at the head of an Order of monks, having arrived at Kiṭṭāgiri,¹ carried out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭṭāgiri against the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, by which the monks who were followers of Assaji and ¹ From here to the words, “It is true, Lord” = Bu-Ss 13.1.8 (Vin 3.183-4, translated with notes at BD 1.322-BD.1.324).

Punabbasu should not stay in Kiṭāgiri. When the (formal) act of banishment had been carried out by the Order, these did not conduct themselves properly, they were not subdued, they did not mend their ways, they did not ask the monks for forgiveness, they abused them, they reviled them, they offended by following a wrong course through desire, by following a wrong course through hatred, by following a wrong course through stupidity, by following a wrong course through fear; and they went away and they left the Order. Those who were modest monks looked down on, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out by the Order, not conduct themselves properly, not be subdued, not mend their ways? Why do they not ask for forgiveness from the monks? Why do they abuse and revile them? Why do they, following a wrong course through desire ... hatred ... stupidity ... fear, go away and leave the Order? “Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out by the Order, do not conduct themselves properly, are not subdued, ... and leave the Order?”

“It is true, Lord.”

“How, monks, can these foolish men, against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out by the Order, not conduct themselves properly ... and leave the Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, do not let the Order revoke the (formal) act of banishment.

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities the (formal) act of banishment against him should not be revoked: if he ordains ... (as in Kd 11.6.2) ...

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

... if he does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of banishment may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases where a (Formal) Act of Banishment may be revoked

“And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, that monk against whom the (formal) act of banishment has been carried out, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘A (formal) act of banishment, honoured sirs, was carried out against me by the Order, but I am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways. I ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment’. And a second time it should be asked for, and a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying:

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so, against whom a (formal) act of banishment was carried out by an Order, is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways, and he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may revoke the (formal) act of banishment against the monk So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so ... and he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment. The Order is revoking the (formal) act of banishment for the monk So-and-so. If the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment for the monk So-and-so is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter.

It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

ACT OF RECONCILIATION

Now at that time the venerable Sudhamma¹ was a resident in the householder Citta’s² Macchikāsaṇḍa,³ an overseer of new buildings, a constant adviser.⁴ Whenever the householder Citta wished to invite an Order or a group or an individual⁵ he did not invite the Order or the group or the individual without having asked the venerable Sudhamma for permission. Now at that time several monks who were elders—the venerable Sāriputta and the venerable Moggallāna the Great and the venerable Kaccāna the Great and the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great and the venerable Kappina the Great and the venerable Cunda the Great, and the venerable Anuruddha and the venerable Revata and the venerable Upāli and the venerable Ānanda and the venerable Rāhula⁶—walking on tour in Kāsī arrived in Macchikāsaṇḍa. The householder Citta heard that these monks who were elders had reached Macchikāsaṇḍa. Then the householder Citta approached these monks who were elders; having approached, having greeted these monks who were elders, he sat down at a respectful distance. As the householder Citta was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Venerable Sāriputta delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened him with talk on dhamma. Then the householder Citta, delighted ... gladdened with the venerable Sāriputta’s talk on dhamma, spoke thus to the monks who were elders: “Honoured sirs, let the elders consent to come to a meal with me on the morrow.” The monks who were elders consented by becoming silent.

¹ Cf. Dh-p-a ii.74ff., AN-a i.386ff. Dh-p 73 is said to have been spoken on Sudhamma’s account. ² At AN i.26 called chief of lay followers who are speakers on dhamma. He is fully described in the Citta-saṃyutta, SN iv.281ff. At AN i.88 = SN ii.235 he is named as a standard by which to measure disciples who are lay followers. ³ A woodland grove, vanasaṇḍa, according to SN-a iii.91; a town according to Dh-p-a ii.74 and AN-a i.386, the latter adding “in the realm of Magadha”. ⁴ dhuvaḥhattika usually means a “regular or constant diner”. But bhattika is given this other meaning at Thig-a 267 (cf. Pali-English Dictionary), and seems justified above. ⁵ puggala, here meaning “monk”. ⁶ This same list of great theras also occurs at Vin 4.66. For notes and further references, see BD 2.295.

Then the householder Citta, having understood the consent of the monks who were elders, rising from his seat, having I greeted the monks who were elders, keeping his right side towards them, approached the venerable Sudhamma; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sudhamma, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, the householder Citta spoke thus to the venerable Sudhamma:

“Honoured sir, may master Sudhamma consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the elders.”

Then the venerable Sudhamma thought: “Formerly, when I the householder Citta wished to invite an Order or a group or an individual, he did not invite the Order or the group or the individual without having asked me for permission; but now he invites monks who are elders without having asked me for permission. This householder Citta is now corrupted, he is indifferent to me, detached from me”, and he spoke thus to the householder Citta: “No, householder, I do not consent.” And a second time ... And a third time did the householder Citta speak thus to the venerable Sudhamma: “Honoured sir, may master Sudhamma consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the elders.”

“No, householder, I do not consent.”

Then the householder Citta thinking: “What can master Sudhamma, either consenting or not consenting, do to me?” having greeted the venerable Sudhamma, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Then, towards the end of that night, the householder Citta had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared for the monks who were elders. Then the venerable Sudhamma, thinking: “Suppose I were to see what has been prepared on behalf of the householder Citta for the elders?” having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the householder Citta; having approached, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then the householder

Citta approached the venerable Sudhamma; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sudhamma, he sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Sudhamma spoke thus to the householder Citta as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

“Truly abundant, householder, is this solid and soft food prepared by you, but one thing is not here, that is to say sesamum cake.”

“Although, honoured sir, much treasure is to be found in the Awakened One’s words, just this is mentioned by master Sudhamma, that is to say sesamum cake. Formerly, honoured sir, some merchants of the Deccan¹ went to an eastern district² for trading and from there they brought back a hen. Then, honoured sir, that hen mated with a crow and produced a chick. And whenever, honoured sir, that chick wanted to utter the cry of a crow it uttered a “cockadoodle-doo” whenever it wanted to utter the cry of a cock it uttered a “caw”. In the same way, honoured sir, although much treasure is to be found in the Awakened One’s words, just this is mentioned by master Sudhamma, that is to say sesamum cake.”³

“You, householder, are reviling⁴ me, you, householder, are abusing me; this is your residence, householder, I will go away.”

“Honoured sir, I am not reviling and abusing master Sudhamma; honoured sir, let master Sudhamma remain in Macchikāsaṇḍa delightful is the Wild Mango Grove⁵; I will make an effort for master Sudhamma in respect of the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings and medicines for the sick.” And a second time ... And a third time did the venerable Sudhamma speak thus to the householder Citta: “You, householder, are reviling me ... I will go away.”

“Where, honoured sir, will master Sudhamma go?”

“I, householder, will go to Sāvattthī to see the Lord.”

“Well then, honoured sir, tell the Lord everything that was said

¹ Dakkhiṇāpathakā. On the Southern region, Dakkhiṇāpatha, see B.C. LAW, India as described in Early Texts of Buddhism and Jainism, p. 77ff. ² puratthima janapada.

³ Vin-a 1158 says he speaks neither as a monk nor as a householder. ⁴ akkosati and paribhāsati are defined at Vin 4.309 (BD 3.344). ⁵ Ambātakavana. Pali-English Dictionary gives “hog-plum, Spondias Mangifera (a kind of mango)” for ambāṭaka, Critical Pali Dictionary adding “wild mango.” Cf. SN iv.281ff.

by you and that was said by me. But this, honoured sir, will not be surprising: that master Sudhamma should come back again to Macchikāsaṇḍa.”

Then the venerable Sudhamma, having packed away his lodgings, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Sāvattḥī. In due course he approached Sāvattḥī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sudhamma told the Lord everything that had been said by himself and that had been said by the householder Citta. The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

“It is not suiting, foolish man, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, jeer at¹ the householder Citta, who has faith and is believing, who is a benefactor, a worker, a supporter of the Order, with a low thing, and scoff at him with a low thing? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation² for the monk Sudhamma, saying: ‘The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you.’”

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Sudhamma should be reprovved, having reprovved him, he should be made to remember, having made him remember, he should be accused of the offence, having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Sudhamma jeered at the householder Citta who has faith and is believing, a benefactor, a worker, a supporter of the Order, with a low thing, he scoffed at him with a low thing. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you”. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Sudhamma jeered at the householder Citta ... scoffed at him with a low thing. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you”. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you” is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... you should speak. A (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you” is carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

¹ khumseti, vambheti; occurring also at Vin 4.7 \(BD 2.178\). ² paṭisāraṇiyakamma. Cf. Kd 1.25.22, and Kd 9.7.8. At this latter passage the monk is said, not to jeer and scoff at the householder, but to revile and abuse him, while at Kd 11.18.5 above, it is the householder who is accused, by the monk, of reviling and abusing him.

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

^{11.19.1} “Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities, a (formal) act of reconciliation ... (=Kd 11.2, Kd 11.3) ...

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

... and is easily settled.

FOUR ON DESIRING

^{1.20.1} “Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities, the Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him¹: if he tries for non-receiving (of gains) by householders²; if he tries for non-profiting by householders; if he tries for non-residence for householders; if he reviles and abuses householders; if he causes householders to break with householder. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... act of reconciliation for him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, the Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him: if he speaks dispraise of the Awakened One to householders, if he speaks dispraise of dhamma to householders, if he speaks dispraise of the Order to householders, if he jeers at a householder with a low thing, if he scoffs at him with a low thing, if he does not fulfil, according to rule, his assent (given) to householders.¹ Monks, if a monk ... act of reconciliation for him. And, monks, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for five (kinds of) monks: for the one who tries for non-receiving (of gains) by householders; for the one who tries for non-profiting by householders; for the one who tries for non-residence for householders; for the one who re-viles and abuses householders; for the one who causes householder to break with householder. Monks, an Order ... for these five (kinds of) monks. And monks, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for five further (kinds of) monks: for the one who speaks dispraise of the Awakened One to householders ... of dhamma to householders ... of an Order to householders, for the one who jeers at a householder with a low thing, scoffs at him with a low thing, for the one who does not fulfil, according to rule, his assent (given) to householders. Monks, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for these five (kinds of) monks.

^{05.27}

¹ Cf. AN iv.345. ² Cf. Vin 1.84 (BD 4.106), BD 2.125 and AN iv.345: Chapters 87 (monks), 88, 89 (householders).

Told are the Four times Five Cases on Being Desirous

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

“Monks, a monk for whom a (formal) act of reconciliation has been carried out should conduct himself properly ... (= Kd 11.5, reading act of reconciliation for act of censure) ... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Kd 11.2

¹ On this last clause, see GS iv.228, n. 3. See especially Vin 1.153f., where the monk Upananda breaks his word and also tells a conscious lie to a householder. The particular type of offence incurred by this monk for breaking his word in regard to residence is formulated as one of wrong-doing. Vin-a vi.1158 instances having accepted a rains-residence, and then not going to it.

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Reconciliation

Then the Order earned out a (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you.” He, having gone to Macchikāsaṇḍa when the (formal) act of reconciliation had been carried out by the Order, becoming ashamed, was unable to ask the householder Citta to forgive him, and he went back again to Sāvattḥī. Monks spoke thus: “Did you ask the householder Citta to forgive you?”

“Now, I, your reverences, having gone to Macchikāsaṇḍa, becoming ashamed, was unable to ask the householder Citta to forgive (me).” They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “Well then, monks, let the Order give a companion messenger¹ to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him. And thus, monks should he be given: First, a monk should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the monk So-and-so as a companion messenger to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is giving the monk So-and-so as a companion messenger to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him. If the giving of the monk So-and-so as a companion messenger to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so is given by the Order to the monk Sudhamma as a companion messenger to ask the householder Citta to forgive him.

¹ anudūta, travelling companion, and one with a definite function to fulfil in case of need, as appears below. Cf. Vin 2.295 where a monk Yasa for whom an act of reconciliation had been carried out, refers to this ruling and asks for an anudūta bhikkhu.

It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

“Monks, when the monk Sudhamma, together with the companion messenger monk, has reached Macchikasanda, the householder Citta should be asked to forgive him (Sudhamma using the words), ‘Forgive me, householder, I am at peace towards you’. If, while he is being spoken to thus, he forgives him, that is good; if he does not forgive, he should be spoken to by the companion messenger monk, saying: ‘Forgive this monk, householder, he is at peace towards you.’ If, while he is being spoken to thus, he forgives him, that is good; if he does not forgive, he should be spoken to by the companion messenger monk, saying, ‘Forgive this monk, householder, for I am at peace towards you.’ If ... that is good; if he does not forgive, he should be spoken to by the companion messenger monk, saying: ‘Forgive this monk, householder, (I ask it) in the name of the Order’. If ... that is good; if he does not forgive, the companion messenger monk, not having caused the monk Sudhamma to be dismissed from reach of the sight¹ of the householder Citta, not having caused him to be dismissed from reach of the hearing, having made him arrange his upper robe over one shoulder, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms,² should cause that offence to be confessed.”

Then the monk Sudhamma, together with the companion messenger monk, having reached Macchikāsaṇḍa, asked the householder Citta to forgive him. He conducted himself properly, he was subdued, he mended his ways, and having approached monks, he spoke thus: “I, your reverences, for whom a (formal) act of reconciliation was carried out by an Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order revoke the (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma.

¹ Cf. BD 2.352, n. 3. ² Cf. Kd 4.5.6.

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

1.23.2

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities, the (formal) act of reconciliation should not be revoked ... (= Kd 11.6.2–Kd 11.7) ...

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

... does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of reconciliation may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases (where a Formal Act of Censure) may be revoked

1.24.1

5.30

n 2.21

And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, that monk Sudhamma, having approached the Order ... (see Kd 11.12) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Told is the Fourth (Formal) Act: that of Reconciliation

AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

1.25.1

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Kosambī in Ghosita’s monastery. Now at that time the venerable Channa,¹ having fallen into an offence, did not want to see the offence.² Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Channa, having fallen into an offence, not want to see the offence?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monk Channa ... did not want to see the offence?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

¹ For further references, see BD 1.266, n. 3. ² Cf. Kd 9.1.3, Kd 9.1.8.

“How, monks, can this foolish man, having fallen into an offence, not want to see the offence? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of suspension¹ against the monk Channa for not seeing his offence, (and there should be) no eating with an Order.²

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out. First, the monk Channa should be reprovved, having reprovved him, he should be made to remember, having made him remember, he should be accused of the offence; having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Channa, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act of suspension against the monk Channa for not seeing the offence (and there should be) no eating with an Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Channa, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of suspension against the monk Channa for not seeing the offence (and there should be) no eating with an Order. If the carrying out by the Order of a (formal) act of suspension against the monk Channa for not seeing his offence (and with) no eating with an Order, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, ... should speak. A (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence (and with) no eating with an Order, is carried out by the Order against the monk Channa. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent.

¹ ukkhepaniyakamma. Cf. Kd 1.25.22, and Kd 9.7.9. ² asambhogam saṅghena. Cf. Kd 1.79.2–Kd 1.79.4. At Vin 4.138 it is an offence of expiation to eat with a monk who is suspended. Two kinds of sambhoga, eating food and eating dhamma, are defined at Vin 4.137 (BD 3.29). The monk in the above Cullavagga passage is not deprived of “being in communion”, saṃvāsa, with the other monks for not seeing his offence. Cf. below, Kd 15.20.3.

Thus do I understand this.’ And, monks, proclaim in residence after residence: ‘A (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence (and with) no eating with an Order has been carried out against the monk Channa.’

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

^{1.26.1} “Monks, if a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence is possessed of three qualities it comes to be a (formal) act not by rule ... (see Kd 11.2–Kd.11.4) ...

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

SIX ON DESIRING

... Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence against these three (kinds of) monks.”

Told are the Six Cases on Being Desirous in connection with a (Formal) Act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence

FORTY THREE DUTIES

^{11.27.1} “Monks, a monk against whom a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence has been carried out should conduct himself properly. This is proper conduct in this case¹: he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him, the agreement to exhort nuns should not be consented to (by him), even if he is agreed upon nuns should not be exhorted by him, he should not fall into that same offence for which the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence was carried out against him by an Order, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, he should not find fault with the (formal) act, he should not find fault with those who are carrying out the (formal) act, he should not consent to a regular monk's greeting him, standing up before him, saluting him with joined palms, performing the proper duties, bringing forward a seat, bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, the receiving of bowl and robe, treating his back by massaging, he should not defame a regular monk with falling away from moral habit, he should not defame him with falling away from good habits, he should not defame him with falling away from (right) views, he should not defame him with falling away from a right mode of livelihood, he should not cause monk to break with monk, he should not wear a householder's emblem, he should not wear an emblem of members of other sects,¹ he should not follow members of other sects, he should follow monks, he should train in the training for monks, he should not stay² in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk, he should not stay in what is not a residence³ under one roofing (with him), he should not stay in a residence or in what is not a residence under one roofing (with him), having seen a regular monk he should get up from his seat, he should not upbraid a regular monk either inside or outside,⁴ he should not suspend a regular monk's Observance,⁵ he should not suspend his Invitation, he should not issue commands, he should not set up authority, he should not ask for leave, he should not reprove, he should not make remember, he should not quarrel with monks.

¹ This differs from the “proper conduct” of the other formal acts (Kd 11.5, Kd 11.10, Kd 11.15, Kd 11.21). Cf. Kd 22.1.2.

Told are the Forty-Three Observances connected with a (Formal) act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence against the monk Channa (and with) no eating with an Order. He, when the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence had been carried out against him by the Order, went from that residence to another residence; there the monks neither greeted him, nor stood up before him, nor saluted with joined palms, nor performed the proper duties, nor revered, respected, esteemed or honoured him.¹ He, not being revered, respected, esteemed or honoured by these monks, then went unrevered from that residence to another residence; there too the monks neither greeted him ... he then went from that residence to another residence; there too the monks neither greeted him ... he, unrevered, went back again to Kosambī. He conducted himself properly, he was subdued, he mended his ways; having approached monks, he spoke thus: "I, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence was carried out by an Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways. What line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Cf. Vin 1.306. ² Cf. below, Kd 12.1.4. ³ Cf. Vin 1.134, and BD 4.178, n. 3. ⁴ Inside and outside a dwelling-place, according to Vin-a 1159. ⁵ From here to the end of Kd 11.27.1 = Kd 11.5.1.

"Well then, monks let the Order revoke the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence against the monk Channa.

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

^{1.28.2} "If, monks, a monk is possessed of five qualities, a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence should not be revoked: if he ordains, if he gives guidance, if a novice attends him, if he consents to the agreement to exhort nuns, if, although agreed upon, he exhorts nuns. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... should not be revoked. And monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he falls into that same offence for which a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence was carried out against him by the Order, or into another that is similar, or into one that is worse, if he finds fault with a (formal) act, if he finds fault with those who carry out a (formal) act. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he consents to a regular monk's greeting him, standing up before him, saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties, bringing forward a seat. Monks, if a monk ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he consents to a regular monk's bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, to receiving his bowl and robe, to treating his back by massaging. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence should not be revoked.

¹ As at Kd 10,5.1.

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he defames a regular monk with falling away from moral habit, if he defames him with falling away from good habits, if he defames him with falling away from (right) views, if he defames him with falling away from a (right) way of living, if he causes monk to break with monk. Monks, if a monk ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he wears a householder's emblem, if he wears an emblem of other sects, if he follows members of other sects, if he does not follow monks, if he does not train in the training for monks. Monks, if a monk ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if, in a residence, he stays under one roofing with a regular monk, if in what is not a residence he stays under one roofing with him, if in either a residence or in what is not a residence he stays under one roofing with him, if, having seen a regular monk, he does not get up from his seat, if he upbraids a regular monk either inside or outside. Monks, if a monk ... should not be revoked. Monks, if a monk is possessed of eight qualities ... should not be revoked: if he suspends a regular monk's Observance, if he suspends his Invitation, if he issues commands, if he sets up authority, if he asks for leave, if he reproves, if he makes remember, if he quarrels with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence should not be revoked.

Told are the Forty-three Cases (where a Formal Act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence should not be revoked)

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

1.29.1
D 5.35 “Monks, it a monk is possessed of five qualities, a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence may be revoked: if he does not ordain ... (This Chapter is the exact opposite of Kd 11.28.2) ... if he does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence may be revoked.

Told are the Forty-three Cases (where a Formal Act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence may be revoked)

1.30.1 “And thus, monks, should it be revoked: That monk Channa, having approached the Order ... (see Kd 12. Instead of act of censure read act of suspension for not seeing his offence) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Told is the Fifth (Formal) Act: that of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence.

n 2.25

AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS

11.31.1 At that time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Kosambī in Ghosita’s monastery. Now at that time the venerable Channa, having fallen into an offence, did not want to make amends for the offence.¹ ... (= Kd 11.25–Kd 11.30. Instead of see read make amends for; instead of act of suspension for not seeing his offence read act of suspension for not making amends for his offence) ...

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

¹ Cf. Kd 9.5.1–Kd 9.5.9.

SIX ON DESIRING

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

FORTY-THREE DUTIES

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

(Not in Horner’s translation.)

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Told is the Sixth (Formal) Act: that of Suspension for Not making Amends for an Offence

AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING A WRONG VIEW

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time a wrong view had arisen to a monk named Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, like this¹:

“In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord, it is that in following those things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, there is no stumbling-block at all.”

Several monks heard: “A wrong view has arisen to the monk named Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, like this: ‘In so far as I understand ... there is no stumbling-block at all.’”

¹ Down to the phrase, “It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” (towards the end of Kd 11.32.3) = Bu-Pc 68.1 (Vin 4.133–Vin.4.135) which then formulates a “rule of training.” Translated at BD 3.21–BD.3.24, with notes.

Then these monks approached the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, and having approached, they spoke thus to the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

“Is it true, as is said, reverend Ariṭṭha, that a wrong view has arisen to you, like this: ‘In so far as I understand ... there is no stumbling-block at all?’”

“Undoubtedly, your reverences, as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord, it is that in following those things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, there is no stumbling-block at all.”

“Do not speak thus, reverend Ariṭṭha, do not misrepresent the Lord; misrepresentation of the Lord is not at all seemly, and the Lord certainly would not speak thus. Reverend Ariṭṭha, in many a figure are things that are stumbling-blocks called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, and in following these there is a veritable stumbling-block. Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be (things) affording little satisfaction, of much pain, of much tribulation, where in is more danger. Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be like a skeleton, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger. Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be like a lump of meat ... to be like a fire-brand of dry grass ... to be like a pit of glowing embers ... to be like a dream ... to be like something borrowed ... to be like the fruits of a tree ... to be like a slaughter-house ... to be like an impaling stake ... Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be like a snake’s head, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger.”

Yet the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, on being spoken to thus by these monks, expressed that wrong view as before, obstinately holding to it, adhering to it: “Undoubtedly, your reverences, as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord, it is that in following those things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, there is no stumbling-block at all.”

And since those monks were unable to dissuade the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer from that wrong view, then those monks approached the Lord; and having approached, they told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, that to you, Ariṭṭha, a wrong view like this arose: ‘In so far as I understand dhamma ... there is no stumbling-block at all?’”

“Undoubtedly, Lord, as I understand dhamma ... no stumbling-block at all.”

“To whom then do you, foolish man, understand that dhamma was taught thus by me? Are not, foolish man, things that are stumbling-blocks called in many a figure stumbling-blocks by me, and in following these is there not a veritable stumbling-block? Sense-pleasures are declared by me to be things affording little satisfaction, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger ... Sense-pleasures are declared by me to be like a snake’s head, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger. And yet you, foolish man, not only misrepresent me because of your own wrong grasp, but you also injure yourself, and give rise to much demerit which for a long time will be for you, foolish man, of woe and pain. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view¹ against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, (and with) no eating with an Order.

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Ariṭṭha should be reprovved, having reprovved him he should be made to remember, having made him remember he should be accused of the offence, having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. A wrong view has arisen to the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, like this: In so far as

¹ Cf. Kd 9,5.1–Kd 9,5.9.

I understand dhamma taught by the Lord ... there is no stumbling-block at all. He does not give up this view. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. A wrong view has arisen ... He does not give up this view. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this'. And, monks, proclaim in residence after residence: 'A (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view has been carried out against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order.'

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

^{133.1} “Monks, if a monk is possessed of three qualities ... (= Kd 11.2–Kd 11.5. Instead of did of censure read act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view) ...

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

(Not in Horner's translation.)

SIX ON DESIRING

(Not in Horner's translation.)

... if he does not quarrel with monks.”

Told are the Eighteen Observances (connected with) a (Formal) Act of Suspension for Not Giving Up a Wrong View

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up his wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, (and with) no eating with an Order. He, when the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up his wrong view had been carried out against him by the Order, left the Order. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this monk named Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer leave the Order when a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view is earned out against him by the Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer left the Order when a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view was carried out against him by the Order?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can this foolish man leave the Order when a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view was carried out against him by the Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order revoke¹ the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view.

Kd 11.3

BD 5.39

Vin 2.21

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... (= Kd 11.6.2-Kd 11.6.2)
...

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

... the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases where a (Formal) Act of Suspension for Not Giving Up a Wrong View may be Revoked

11.35.1 “And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, that monk against whom a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view has been carried out, having approached the Order ... (see Kd 11.12 Instead of act of censure read act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view. Instead of Seyyasaka read the monk So-and-so) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..’”

Told is the Seventh (Formal) Act: that of Suspension for Not Giving Up a Wrong View Told is the First Section: that on (Formal) Acts

IN THIS SECTION ARE SEVEN ITEMS: THIS IS ITS KEY

5.40 Monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka, themselves makers of strife, approached similar ones and incited them to strife, / And strifes not arisen were born and those arisen expanded. Modest, well behaved monks looked down upon. The expounder¹, / The Awakened One, standing on what is verily dhamma, self-developing, foremost of men, conqueror, enjoined a (formal) act of censure at Sāvattī. / And what is carried out not in the presence of, when there is no interrogation, no acknowledgement, ¹ As Oldenberg, Vin 2.310-Vin.2.311 remarks, “we should expect” mā (or na) paṭip-passambhetu, let not revoke; cf. Kd 11.16.1. ¹ padassaka (Sanskrit pradarśaka). Sinhalese edition reads parassato; Siamese edition parisato (variant readings padassako, padassato).

and what is carried out for no offence, for one not (leading on to) confession, for one confessed, /
 And what is carried out not having reproved, not having made to remember, not having accused, and too what is carried out not in the presence of,
 not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
 Again what is carried out when there is no interrogation,
 not by rule, by an incomplete assembly,
 and too what is carried out not on the acknowledgement,
 not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
 And too what is carried out when there is no offence,
 not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, and also for (an offence) which does not lead on to confession when it is not by rule and the assembly is incomplete, /
 And likewise for one that is confessed, if also not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, and likewise not having reproved him, if also not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
 And likewise not having made him remember,
 not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
 and likewise not having accused him,
 not by rule, by an incomplete assembly. /
 The bright occasions¹ should also be inferred exactly according to the dark occasions.
 And the Order, so desiring, may carry out censure against this one: /
 The quarrel (-maker), the ignorant, the liver in company with.
 The Order may carry out a (formal) act of censure in regard to moral habit, good habits, against one who has fallen away from right views,² /
 And against whoever speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, dhamma, the Order, and the Order may also carry out a (formal) act of censure against three (kinds of) monks: /
 The one who is a maker of strife, the ignorant one,
 the one intent on living in company;
 likewise in regard to moral habit, good habits, right views, /
 And against whoever speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, dhamma, the Order.
 The one against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out conducting himself properly, thus: / Ordination, guidance, attendance by a novice, the one against whom censure has been carried out should do

¹ sukkavāra ... kaṇhāvāra, figuratively pure and impure, right and wrong. ² adhisīlam ajjhācāre atiditṭhivipannassa.

nothing in regard to exhortation, even although agreed upon. /
 He should not fall into that same offence, into a similar one, or into one higher¹ than it,
 and such a one would neither find fault with a (formal) act, nor with those who carry it out, /
 He should not suspend a regular (monk's) Observance, Invitation, such a one should not have to do with commands, authority, /
 Leave, reproving, making remember and quarrels.
 Ordination, guidance, attendance by a novice, /
 Exhortation and even if agreed upon: the five qualities are not the end.²
 If he falls into that same offence and into a similar one and one that is higher than it, /
 And finding fault both with a (formal) act and with those who carry it out: this is not the end.
 Observance, Invitation, commands, authority, /
 Leave, reproving too, making remember, quarrelling, whoever is bound by these eight qualities, censure is not allayed for him.³ /
 The bright occasions should also be inferred exactly according to the dark occasions.
 And Seyyasaka too, ignorant, full of offences, living in company: /
 The Self-Awakened One, great sage, enjoined a (formal) act of guidance.
 (Followers of) the two monks, Assaji and Punabbasu, at Kiṭāgiri /
 Indulged in a variety of bad habits and were not talked round.
 The self-Awakened One, the Conqueror (enjoined) at Sāvattthī (formal) act of banishment. /
 Sudhamma was a resident in Citta's Macchasanda, Sudhamma jeered at the lay follower Citta with talk on birth. /
 The Truth-finder enjoined a (formal) act of reconciliation.
 At Kosambī when the monk Channa, not wanting to see an offence, /
 The incomparable Conqueror enjoined (the Order) to suspend him for not seeing.
 Channa did not want to make amends for that same offence. /
 The leader enjoined a (formal) act of suspension
 for not making amends for.
 The wrong view of Ariṭṭha was founded on ignorance. / Suspension for not giving up the wrong view was proclaimed by the Conqueror.

¹ Here tato param, higher, further, as against tato pāpiṭṭhatara of Kd1.5.1. ² na sammati, meaning does not cease, is not appeased, and signifying here that a formal act cannot be revoked because there are more than these five qualities to consider, and which may stand in the way of the revocation. Cf. sammanti at Dhp 5. ³ n' upasammati.

A (formal) act of guidance, banishment, likewise reconciliation, /

A (formal) act for not seeing, for not making amends for, and for not giving up a wrong view.

Frivolity, bad habits, harming, and also a wrong mode of livelihood: /

These are additional cases in the (formal) act of banishment.

Two fives (beginning): non-receiving, dispraise, are two pentads particularly named¹, /

These are additional cases in the (formal) act of reconciliation.

And two among the (formal) acts are similar: censure and guidance; /

And there are the remaining cases: banishment and reconciliation.

The three (formal) acts of suspension are alike in their division.

What remains in any (formal) act is to understood as in the case of censure.

/

BD 5.4

¹ atināmaka; ati-, meaning very much, specially.

12. PROBATION (PARIVĀSA)

DUTIES ON ONE ON PROBATION

At one time, the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time monks under probation¹ consented to regular monks greeting them, standing up before them, saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties, bringing forward a seat, bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, receiving the bowl and robe, treating their backs by massaging. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these monks who are under probation consent to regular monks greeting ... treating their backs by massaging?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are under probation consent to regular monks greeting ... treating their backs by massaging?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can these monks who are under probation consent to regular monks ... treating their backs by massaging? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ Cf. Vin 1.143, also Vin 1.136, Vin 4.335-Vin.4.336. Vin-a 1159 notices four kinds of probation, parivāsa, all mentioned below: the unconcealed (as of former members of other sects, arid see Kd 3.1.1), the concealed (see Kd 3.3.1), the purifying (Kd 13.26.1ff.), and the concurrent (Kd 13.14.1ff.).

“A monk who is under probation, monks, should not consent to regular monks greeting him ... treating his back by massaging. Whoever should consent to (any of these actions), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, the mutual¹ greeting, standing up before ... treating of backs by massaging between monks who are under probation according to their seniority. I allow, monks, five things for monks under probation according to their seniority: Observance, Invitation, cloths for the rains, gifts (to the Order²) rice.

“Well now, monks, I will lay down the conduct³ for monks under probation, so that monks under probation may conduct themselves⁴ according to it. A monk under probation, monks, should conduct himself properly.⁵ This is the proper conduct⁶ in this case⁷: he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him, he should not consent to an agreement to exhort nuns, even if agreed upon he should not exhort nuns, he should not fall into that same offence for which he was granted probation, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, he should not find fault with the (formal) act, he should not find fault with those who carry out the (formal) act, he should not suspend a regular monk’s Observance, he should not suspend his Invitation, he should not issue commands, should not set up authority, he should not ask for leave, he should not reprove, he should not make remember, he should not quarrel with monks. Nor, monks, should a monk under probation walk in front of a regular monk, nor sit down in front of him.⁸ Whatever is the Order’s last seat, last sleeping-place, last dwelling-place¹—that should be given to him and he should consent to it. Monks, a monk under probation should not approach the families of a regular monk² either as the novice who walks in front of him or as the novice who walks behind him. He should not undertake the forest-practice, he should not undertake the almsman’s practice,³ he should not have almsfood taken back⁴ for this reason:⁵ that he thinks, ‘Do not let them find out about me’.⁶ Monks, a monk under probation should announce it⁷ when he is in-coming, he should announce it to (another who is) in-coming, he should announce it at the Observance, he should announce it at the Invitation, if he is ill he should also announce it by means of a messenger.⁸

¹ mithu. ² oṇojana. Vin-a1161 explains by vissajjana, bestowing. Cf. oṇojesi at Vin 1.39 and oṇojetha at Vin 4.156, both meaning “to give, to dedicate.”

³ vatta, custom, service, something to be done. Cf. Kd 1.27.1. ⁴ vattitabbam.

⁵ sammāvattitabbam. ⁶ sammāvattanā. ⁷ Cf. Vin 5.15. ⁸ These two actions are part of “intentional causing of discomfort” at Vin 4.290.

“Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger.⁹ Monks, a monk under probation should not go from, a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger.

¹ pariyanta. “Last” is used in the same sense at Bu-NP 22 See BD 2.120, n. 5. In reference also to these three things “the last” would mean the last available as they were being assigned or distributed to members of the Order. But see āpattipariyanta, rattipariyanta, at Kd 13.26.1, and below, BD 5.76, n. 1. ² I.e. the families who support him and whom he visits for almsfood. ³ He should not stay alone in the forest and he should not go to a village for alms. These two aṅga or practices, part of the dhutaṅga, ascetic practices, are explained in detail at Vism 59ff. See Vin 1.253, and BD 4.351, n. 2. ⁴ nīharāpetabbo, i.e. from a village to a monastery. Cf. tato niharitvā at Vin 4.80 (BD 2.324). ⁵ tappaccayā. According to Vin-a 1165 monks returning to the monastery would see him sitting down are eating, and if he did not tell them he was under probation his period of probation might be curtailed. ⁶ I.e. that he is under probation. Vin-a 1165 says, “‘Do not let one monk find out about me’, and with this in mind he should not eat, having had it (i.e. the almsfood brought back) cooked in the dwelling-place by a novice. He must enter a village for almsfood.” ⁷ I.e. the fact that he is under probation. ⁸ Vin-a 1166 says that the messenger must not be anyone who is not ordained, he must be a monk. ⁹ Cf. Kd 2.35.

Monks, a monk under probation should not go from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks ... to what is not a residence where there are no monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence, or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks ... to what is not a residence where there are no monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger.

BD 5.4

“Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk under probation should not go from residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks ... should not go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger.

Vin 2.3

“Monks, a monk under probation may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’ Monks, a monk under probation may go from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks ... may go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’

Kd 12.1

“Monks, a monk under probation should not stay in a residence¹ under one roofing with a regular monk, he should not stay in what is not a residence¹ under one roofing (with him), he should not stay in a residence or in what is not a residence under one roofing (with him).² Having seen a regular monk, he should get up from his seat. He should offer his seat to the regular monk. A monk under probation should not sit down on the same seat with a regular monk, he should not sit down on a high seat if he³ is sitting down on a low seat,⁴ he should not sit down on a seat if he is sitting on the ground, he should not pace up and down in the same place for pacing up and down in,⁵ he should not pace up and down in a high place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down in a low place for pacing up and down in, he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.⁶

¹ Vin-a 1167 here defines “residence”, āvāsa, as “a lodging made for staying in”.

“Monks, a monk under probation should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a senior monk who is under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ... with a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation, he should not stay in what is not a residence under one roofing (with him) ... he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.

If, monks, one under probation as the fourth (member)⁷ should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta (discipline), if, as twentieth (member) he should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.”

Told are the Ninety-four Observances for one under Probation

¹ Vin-a 1167 here defines “not a residence” as a “shrine house (*cetiya*ghara), wisdom-house (*bodhi*ghara), a place (aṭṭaka) for sweepings, a place for wood, a building (*mā*ḷa, see BD 2.16, n. 4) for drinking-water, a privy, a granary.” ² Cf. Kd 1.27.1; Kd 1.28.2.

³ I.e. the regular monk. ⁴ Cf. Bu-Sk 69. ⁵ caṅkama, monks’ walk, cloister. At first, this seems not to have been prepared or leveled; then it was allowed to be made level or even, then to be roofed over. Cf. Kd 15.14.2, Kd 15.14.3. ⁶ Showing that “pacing up and down”, caṅkamanta, need not always have taken place in a caṅkama.

⁷ Cf. Kd 9.4.6. One under probation does not complete a group or an Order, gaṇa and saṅgha.

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, how many (kinds of) interruptions¹ are there for a monk under probation?”

“There are three (kinds of) interruptions, Upāli, for a monk under probation: dwelling with²; dwelling away, separated from³; not announcing.⁴ These, Upāli, are the three (kinds of) interruptions for a monk under probation.”

Vin 2.3
BD 5.4

Now at that time a large Order of monks had gathered together at Sāvattthī; monks under probation were not able to carry through⁵ their probation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to postpone⁶ probation. And thus, monks, should it be postponed: That monk who is under probation, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I am postponing probation’—probation comes to be postponed; ‘I am postponing the observance’,⁷—probation comes to be postponed.”⁸

Kd 12.3

Now at that time monks went away from Sāvattthī to this place

Kd 12.3

¹ ratticcheda, literally “breaking of nights”, time having been reckoned by nights instead of by days. ² sahavāsa, which Vin-a 1168–Vin-a 1169 explains to mean any of the things given in Kd 12.1.4. ³ vippavāsa, as in Kd 12.1.3. Cf. vippavāsa in e.g. Bu-NP 2 See BD 2.13, n. 1 and BD 2.14, n. 1 for further references, and also Bu-NP 29

⁴ anārocānā, as in the ways specified at end of Kd 12.1.2. ⁵ sodhetum, to purify, cleanse, clear, so: to clear oneself of, to finish, to carry through. It was perhaps impossible for a monk to announce that he was under probation if the Order was very large or if it was dispersed. ⁶ nikkhipitum, the Usual word for “to lay aside, to lay down, to deposit”, but here meaning to lay aside temporarily only, until a favourable time comes for undertaking the probationary period again. ⁷ vatta. See the 94 vattā to be observed by those under probation at Kd 12.1.2–Kd 12.1.4.

⁸ This and the corresponding phrase at end of Kd 12.3.2 below, although apparently meant to have been uttered by Gotama, do not end, as would be expected, with ti.

and that¹; monks under probation were not able to carry through their probation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to take up² probation. And thus, monks, should it be taken up: If that monk who is under probation, having approached one monk ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I am taking up probation’—probation comes to be taken up; ‘I am taking up the observance’—probation comes to be taken up.”

Told is the Observance for one under Probation

DUTIES OF ONE BEING SENT BACK TO THE BEGINNING

Now at that time monks who deserved to be sent back to the beginning³ consented to regular monks greeting them ... (= Kd 12.1.1, Kd 12.1.2. Instead of monks under probation read monks who deserve to be sent back to the beginning) ... ‘Do not let them find out about me’. Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’

Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk

¹ taham-taham, here and there. ² samāditum, to take up or undertake again the probation imposed on the offending monk. ³ Cf. Kd 3.6.7.

... (=Kd 12.1.4) ... he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.

Vin 2,3

Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk under probation ... with a senior monk¹ ... with a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation ... he should not pace up and down in a place to pace up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.

If, monks, one who deserves to be sent back to the beginning as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta (discipline), if, as the twentieth (member), he should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.²

DUTIES OF ONE DESERVING MĀNATTA

Now at that time monks deserving mānatta (discipline)³ consented to regular monks greeting them ... (=Kd 12.1.1, Kd 12.1.2) ... “... ‘Do not let them find out about me’ Monks, a monk deserving mānatta (discipline) should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger ... (=Kd 12.1.3, Kd 12.1.4) ... he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground. Monks, a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk who is under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ... with a senior monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation ... and ought not to be carried out.”

Kd 12,5
BD 5,5

¹ For following items, see Kd 12.1.4. ² Cf. Kd 9.4.6. ³ Cf. Kd 3.6.8.

DUTIES OF ONE UNDERGOING MĀNATTA

^{12.6.1} Now at that time monks undergoing mānatta (discipline) consented to regular monks greeting them ... (= Kd 12.1.1, Kd 12.1.2 Instead of under probation read undergoing mānatta (discipline)) "... 'Do not let them find out about me'. Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should announce it when he is incoming, he should announce it to (another who is) incoming, he should announce it at the Observance, he should announce it at the Invitation, he should announce it daily,¹ if he is ill he should announce it by means of a messenger.

Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks, except with an Order,² unless there is a danger ... should not go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with an Order, unless there is a danger ... should not go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with an Order, unless there is a danger ... should not go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with an Order, unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, 'I am able to arrive this very day.'

Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk ... (= Kd 12.1.4) ... he should not pace up and down in a place to pace up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground. Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ...with a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a senior monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation ... and ought not to be carried out.”

¹ This is an extra clause peculiar to the monk undergoing mānatta. ² Instead of "a regular monk", as in the other cases.

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, how many (kinds of) interruptions are there for a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline)?”

“There are four (kinds of) interruptions, Upāli, for a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline): dwelling with; dwelling away, separated from; not announcing; going about with less than a group.¹ These, Upāli, are the four (kinds of) interruptions for a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline).”

Now at that time a large Order of monks had gathered together at Sāvattthī; monks undergoing mānatta (discipline) were unable to carry through their mānatta (discipline) ... (see Kd 12.3.1, Kd 12.3.2) ... mānatta (discipline) comes to be taken up.”

DUTIES OF ONE DESERVING REHABILITATION

Now at that time monks who deserved rehabilitation consented to regular monks greeting them ... (= Kd 12.1.1, Kd 12.1.2) ... “... ‘Do not let him find out about me.’ Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... may go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks, if the monks there should belong to the same communion, and if he knows, 'I am able to arrive this very day.' Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk ... he should I not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground. Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ... with a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a senior monk who deserves rehabilitation ... and ought not to be carried out."

¹ ūne gaṇe caraṇaṃ, a gaṇa, group usually consisting of two, three or four monks. But Vin-a 1170 says: “here a gaṇa means four (monks) or more. Therefore, if he is staying with three monks, that itself is an interruption.”

Told is the Second Section: that on Being under Probation

IN THIS SECTION ARE FIVE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

Those under probation consent to a regular monk's greeting, standing up before, joined palms, proper duties,¹ seat, / Bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for the feet, a footstool, a footstand,
 the bowl, treating the back by massaging, and well-behaved ones looked down upon.² /
 If one consents there is wrong-doing,³ mutual, five things according to seniority⁴:
 Observance, Invitation, (cloths for) the rains, gifts, food.⁵ /
 And proper conduct, the carriage there, in regard to a regular monk,⁶

¹ Oldenberg's edition reads: añjali-sāmiyaṃ āsanam; Sinhalese edition reads: añjaliñ ca sāmīciyaṃ; Siamese edition reads: añjaliñ c'eva sāmīcim. Sinhalese and Siamese begin next line with āsanam. ² Oldenberg's edition has a line less than Sinhalese and Siamese editions, which I follow. ³ Both Sinhalese and Siamese read dukkaṭam, as against Oldenberg's dukkaṭa. ⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese read yathā vuḍḍham (as Kd 2.1.1); Oldenberg's edition has punāpare; cf. punāpare at Snp 100.4. ⁵ Oldenberg's and Sinhalese editions read vassik-oṇoja-bhojanam; Siamese edition vassikañcāvaṇojanam, and it begins the next line with bhattam (omitted by Oldenberg and Sinhalese), which is the word used at end of Kd 2.1.1, bhojana not occurring there at all. ⁶ pakatattassa gacchanam, Oldenberg; pakatattena gacchare, Sinhalese and Siamese editions. This refers to not walking or sitting down in front of a regular monk (Kd 2.1.2).

and whatever is the last, neither as the novice in front of nor behind,¹ / Forest, bringing back food, when coming in, at the Observance, and at the Invitation, and by a messenger,² and he may go to where there are monks. /
 Under one roofing and getting up and likewise in regard to offering,³ / on a seat, in a high place for pacing up and down in, on the ground and not in a place for pacing up and down in, /
 With a senior—not a (formal) act, interruptions⁴ and carryings through, postponing, taking up should be stated (by) one under probation.⁵ /
 To the beginning, those deserving mānatta, likewise those undergoing mānatta, and also he who deserves rehabilitation—again the composing by the method. /
 Three⁶ for those under probation, four⁷ for one undergoing mānatta.
 As with the three interruptions, so there is ‘daily’ for those undergoing mānatta.⁸
 Two (formal) acts are similar, the remaining three (formal) acts are exactly the same.

BD 5,55

¹ Sinhalese and Siamese editions: na pure pacchā samaṇena; Oldenberg: pure pacchā tath’eva ca. ² Sinhalese and Siamese editions: dūtena; Oldenberg: dūto. ³ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read: ekacchanne na (Sinhalese ca) vatthabbaṃ na chamāyaṃ nisajjite. ⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read: ratticchēdā; Oldenberg: ratticchedo. ⁵ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read: nikkhipanaṃ samādānaṃ nātappaṃ pārivāsikā; Oldenberg: nikkhipanaṃ samādānaṃ, ratti vā pārivāsike. ⁶ Referring to “interruptions”, as at Kd 12.2.1, Kd 12.7.1 ⁷ Referring to “interruptions”, as at Kd 12.2.1, Kd 12.7.1 ⁸ saman tiratticchedesu mānattesu ca devasi (Oldenberg and Sinhalese) meaning, I take it, that as there is an extra “interruption” for one undergoing mānatta, so he has to make an extra “announcement” (beginning of Kd 12.6.1). Siamese edition reads: na samenti ratticchedā mānattesu ca devāsikaṃ, “the interruptions do not agree (or, are not in accordance with) all fours) and there is ‘daily’ for those undergoing mānatta”.

13. ACCUMULATION (SAMUCCAYA)

EMISSION OF SEMEN

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the venerable Udāyin¹ came to have fallen into one offence: the intentional emission of semen,² not concealed. He announced to monks: "I, your reverences, have fallen into one offence ... not concealed. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

UNCONCEALED MĀNATTA

"Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights³ on the monk Udāyin for the one offence ... not concealed.

"And thus, monks, should it be inflicted: Monks, that monk Udāyin, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: 'Honoured sirs, I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed. I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... not concealed. And a second time I ask the Order ... not concealed. I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... not concealed. And a third time I ask the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed.’

¹ A sensual monk. See Index to Names in BD.1, BD.2, BD.3. (Note: Not included in SuttaCentral edition.) ² Bu-Ss 1 (Vin 3.112, BD 1.196). Cf. also Bu-Pc 9, Bu-Pc 64, and Vin 4.194f., N.B. at BD 2.219 (Bu-Pc 9) the sentence, "He, being under probation, sat down in the refectory at the end of a seat" (āsanapariyante) should be corrected to "sat down ... on the last seat", in accordance with Kd 2.1.2. ³ Vin-a 1170 mentions four kinds of mānatta: the unconcealed, the concealed, the fortnight's duration, the concurrent.

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin fell into one offence ... not concealed. He is asking the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence not concealed. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin fell into one offence ... not concealed. He is asking the Order for mānatta (discipline) ... not concealed. The Order is inflicting mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed. If the infliction of mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... should speak. Mānatta (discipline) is being inflicted by the Order for six nights on the monk Udāyin for the one offence: intentional emission of semen, not concealed. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

UNCONCEALED REHABILITATION

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed; so I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed; thus the Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me on account

Kd 13.1

BD 5.5

Vin 2.3

Kd 13.2

of the one offence ... not concealed. I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well, then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udāyin.

“And thus, monks, should he be rehabilitated: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... not concealed; so I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed; thus the Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me on account of the one offence ... not concealed. Now I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline), ask the Order for rehabilitation. I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... So I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline), ask the Order a second time also for rehabilitation. I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... So I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline), ask the Order a third time also for rehabilitation.’

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin, fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed; so he asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed. The Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed. He, having performed mānatta (discipline), is asking the Order for rehabilitation. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may rehabilitate the monk Udāyin. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin fell into one offence ... is asking the Order for rehabilitation. The Order is rehabilitating the monk Udāyin. If the rehabilitation of the monk Udāyin is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me ... should speak. The monk Udāyin is rehabilitated by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

PROBATION CONCEALED FOR ONE NIGHT

Now at that time the venerable Udāyin came to have fallen into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, concealed for one day. He announced to monks, saying: “I, your reverences, have fallen into one offence ... concealed for one day. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order impose probation for one day on the monk Udāyin on account of the offence ... concealed for one day.

“And thus, monks, should it be imposed: ... (The matter which here follows is precisely as in Kd 13.1.2, Kd 13.1.3, with the necessary changes in the wording of (a) the offence, (b) the penalty) ...

MĀNATTA CONCEALED FOR ONE NIGHT

He, having stayed under probation, announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for one day; so I asked the Order for probation for one day on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day; thus the Order imposed probation for one day on me on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day. I have now stayed under probation. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day.

(Here follows precisely the same material as in Kd 13.1.2, Kd 13.1.3, reading concealed for one day instead of not concealed)

REHABILITATION CONCEALED FOR ONE NIGHT

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to the monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... (=Kd 13.4.1) ... I, having stayed under probation, asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day. I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udāyin.

(Here follows precisely the same material as in Kd 13.2.2, Kd 13.2.3, reading concealed for one day instead of not concealed)”

PROBATION CONCEALED FOR FIVE DAYS

Now at that time the venerable Udāyin fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, concealed for two days ... three days ... four days ... five days. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for two ... five days ... (=Kd 13.3 Instead of concealed for one day, probation for one day, read concealed for two) ... five days, probation for two ... five days ... Thus do I understand this.’”

SENDING ONE ON PROBATION BACK TO THE BEGINNING

While he was under probation he fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days; so I asked the Order for probation for five days on account of this offence ... concealed for five days; thus the Order granted me probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days. Now while I was under probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation).

“And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. So I asked the Order for probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days; thus the Order granted me probation for five days ... concealed for five days. While I was doing probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I am asking the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of this offence ... not concealed.’ And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ...

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... asked the Order for probation for five days ... (cf. Kd 13.2.3) ... The Order granted probation for five days ... While he was under probation he fell into one offence ... not concealed. He is asking the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation). If it seems right to the Order, the Order may send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of ... not concealed, while (he was under probation). This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... is asking the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation). The Order is sending the monk Udāyin back to the beginning ... while (he was under probation). If the sending back to the beginning of the monk Udāyin ... is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is sent back to the beginning by the Order. The sending back to the beginning for the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Kd 13.7

Vin 2.4

Kd 13.7

BD 5.6

13.8.1 He, having stayed under probation, while he was deserving mānatta (discipline), fell into an offence ... not concealed. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days; so I asked the Order ... (= Kd 13.7.1). Now while I was under probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed. The Order sent me back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (I was under probation). Now I, having stayed under probation while I was deserving mānatta (discipline), fell into one offence ... not concealed. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well, then, monks, let the Order send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation).”

13.8.2 “And thus, monks, should he be sent back¹: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... Having stayed under probation, while I was deserving mānatta (discipline), I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, having stayed under probation and while I was deserving mānatta (discipline).’ And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ...

13.8.3 “The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... asks for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while he was deserving mānatta (discipline), having stayed under probation. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning ... having stayed under probation. This is the motion: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin asks ... The Order is sending the monk Udāyin back to the beginning ... If the sending back to the beginning for the monk Udāyin on account of ... is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is sent back to the beginning by the Order. The sending back to the beginning ... is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

¹ mūlāya, to the beginning, not in Oldenberg’s text here. Cf. Kd 13.7.2.

MĀNATTA FOR THREE OFFENCES

He, having stayed under probation, announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... (as in Kd 13.4.2) ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of these offences.

... (as in Kd 13.4.2, Kd 13.4.3) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

SENDING ONE UNDERGOING MĀNATTA BACK TO THE BEGINNING

While he was undergoing mānatta (discipline) he fell into one offence ... not concealed. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... (as in Kd 13.8.1) ...” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence while he was undergoing mānatta (discipline), not concealed, inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... And thus, monks, should mānatta (discipline) for six nights be inflicted ... Mānatta (discipline) for six nights is inflicted by the Order on the monk Udāyin for the one offence ... It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Kd 13.9

Kd 13.9

Kd 13.9

Vin 2.4

Kd 13.1

BD 5.6

SENDING ONE DESERVING REHABILITATION BACK TO THE BEGINNING

^{3.11.1} He, having performed mānatta (discipline) and while he deserved rehabilitation, fell into one offence ... not concealed. He announced to monks ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... when he had performed mānatta (discipline) and while he deserved rehabilitation, inflict mānatta (discipline) on him for six nights. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... And thus, monks, should (discipline) for six nights be inflicted ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

REHABILITATION FOR ONE WHO HAS BEEN SENT BACK TO THE BEGINNING

^{3.12.1} He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. ... (as in Kd 13.2.1). I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

^{3.12.2} “Well then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udāyin.

“And thus, monks, should he be rehabilitated: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. So I asked the Order for probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days. Therefore the Order granted me probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days. While I was doing probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... while I was doing probation, not concealed. The Order sent me back to the beginning ... But then I, having stayed under probation and while I deserved mānatta (discipline), fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning ... The Order sent me back to the beginning ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the three offences. Because of this, the Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me on account of the three offences. But while I was under-going mānatta (discipline) I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning ... Thus the Order sent me back to the beginning ... So I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... while I was undergoing mānatta (discipline), not concealed. The Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me. When I had performed mānatta (discipline) and while I deserved rehabilitation, I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... while I deserved rehabilitation, not concealed. Thus the Order sent me back to the beginning ... And I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... while I deserved rehabilitation, not concealed. Because of this, the Order inflicted mānatta, (discipline) for six nights on me ... So I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline) ask the Order for rehabilitation.’ And a second time should it be asked for ... And a third time should it be asked for ...

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, ... (as in Kd 13.12.2) ... He, having performed mānatta (discipline), asks the Order for rehabilitation. If it seems right to the Order, ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is rehabilitated by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order ... Thus do I understand this.’”

PROBATION FOR ONE WHO HAS CONCEALED FOR A FORTNIGHT

Now at that time the venerable Udāyin fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month ... (as in Kd 13.3 Instead of concealed for one day, probation for one day read concealed for half a month, probation for half a month) ... ‘...Thus do I understand this.’”

Kd 13.1

Vin 2.4

Kd 13.1

SENDING ONE ON PROBATION FOR A FORTNIGHT BACK TO THE BEGINNING

3:14.1
0:5.65 While he was under probation he fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. He announced to monks: "I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month. So I asked the Order for probation for half a month on account of the one offence ... concealed for half a month. Because of this the Order granted me probation for half a month. Then while I was under probation, I fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, grant him probation concurrent¹ with the former offence.

3:14.2 "And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning: ... (as in Kd 13.7.2, Kd 13.7.3. Read concealed for half a month, probation for half a month, and then concealed for five days instead of concealed for five days, probation for five days, and then not concealed) ... '... Thus do I understand this.'"

CONCURRENT PROBATION

3:14.3
12.49 "And thus, monks, should probation concurrent with the former offence be granted: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, asked the Order for sending back to the beginning ... (= Kd 13.14.2) ... Therefore the Order sent me back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... while

¹ samodhānaparivāsa. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.169, says, "When another offence is committed during the continuance of the Parivāsa period, a fresh period begins to run from the date of the commission of the second offence and it extends over as many days as were covered by the Parivāsa period prescribed for the first offence or the Parivāsa period prescribed for the second offence, whichever period may be longer." As Vinaya Texts ii.405, n. 1 points out, "the penalties for this new offence and for the old one were not accumulative but concurrent. The offender lost the advantage of the probation he had already undergone, he was thrown back to the commencement of his term of probation, and had to begin again." The mānatta to which he was liable for the first offence was not affected.

I was under probation for half a month, concealed for five days. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for concurrent probation with the former offence ... while I was under probation for half a month, concealed for five days'. And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed ... '... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Concurrent probation with the former offence is granted by the Order to the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... while he was under probation for half a month, concealed for five days. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.'”

BD 5,6

SENDING ONE DESERVING MĀNATTA BACK TO THE BEGINNING, ETC.

He, having stayed under probation, while deserving mānatta (discipline), fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd 13,1

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, grant him probation concurrent with the former offence. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... (as in Kd 13.14.2, Kd 13.14.3) ... And thus, monks, should probation concurrent with the former offence be granted ... '... Thus do I understand this.'”

MĀNATTA FOR THREE OFFENCES

He, having stayed under probation, announced to monks: ... (as in Kd 13.4.1 reading concealed for five days instead of concealed for one day) ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd 13,1

“Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the three offences. And thus, monks, should it be inflicted: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... '... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Mānatta (discipline) is inflicted by the Order for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the three offences. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

Vin 2,5

SENDING ONE UNDERGOING MĀNATTA BACK TO THE BEGINNING

^{3.17.1} While he was undergoing mānatta (discipline) he fell into one offence, concealed for five days. He announced to monks: I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month ...’ (and he told all that had happened from Kd 13.13 onwards) ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, having granted him probation concurrent with the former offence, inflict mānatta (discipline) on him for six nights. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... And thus, monks, should probation concurrent with the former offence be granted ... And thus, monks, should mānatta (discipline) for six nights be inflicted ... ‘Mānatta (discipline) for six nights is inflicted by the Order on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... while he was undergoing mānatta (discipline), concealed for five days. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

SENDING ONE DESERVING REHABILITATION BACK TO THE BEGINNING

^{3.18.1} He, having performed mānatta (discipline), while he deserved rehabilitation fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. He announced to monks: ‘I, your reverences, fell into one offence, concealed for half a month ... (he repeats all that has happened from Kd 13.13 onwards) ... When I had performed mānatta (discipline) and while I deserved rehabilitation, I fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, having granted him probation concurrent with the former offence, inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on him ... (as in Kd 13.17.) ... Thus do I understand this.”

REHABILITATION FOR ONE WHO CONCEALED FOR A FORTNIGHT

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month ... (as from Kd 13.13 onwards.) I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct is to be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udayin. And thus, monks, should he be rehabilitated: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order, ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence, ... concealed for half a month. So I ... But I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta discipline, ask the Order for rehabilitation ...’ And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed ... ‘... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is rehabilitated by the Order. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

Concluded (are the proceedings connected with) Intentional Emission

PROBATION

CONCURRENT PROBATION WITH DEPENDENT DURATION

Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: one offence was concealed for one day, one offence was concealed for two days ... three ... four ... five ... six ... seven ... eight ... nine days, one offence was concealed for ten days. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day ... one offence was concealed for ten days. What line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin 2.5

Kd 13.1

BD 5.6

Kd 13.2

“Well then, monks, let the Order grant this monk concurrent probation, its duration depending¹ on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days.

“And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, revered sirs, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; ‘... one offence was concealed for ten days. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days’. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one was concealed for ... ten days. He is asking the Order for concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should grant the monk So-and-so concurrent probation ... for ten days. This is the motion ... Concurrent probation is being granted by the Order to the monk So-and-so, its duration depending on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

ALL LENGTHS CONCEALED WITH DEPENDENT DURATION

Now at that time a certain monk had fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day, two offences were concealed for two days, three offences were concealed for three days, four ... for four days, five ... for five days ... six for six days ... seven for seven days, eight ... for eight days, nine ... for nine days, ten offences were concealed for ten days. He announced to monks, saying: "I, your reverences, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day ... ten offences were concealed for ten days. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ tassā agghena, literally according to the value or worth, i.e. of the probationary period necessitated by the number of days the offence was concealed. Here probation had to be undergone for ten days, since this was the greatest number of days for which one of the offences had been concealed. Vin-a 1182 says there are three kinds of concurrent probation: odhāna, aggha, and missaka, all of which it explains.

"Well then, monks, let the Order grant this monk concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever were the offences among these offences that were each concealed the longest.¹ And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day ... ten offences were concealed for ten days. Therefore I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever were the offences among these offences that were each concealed the longest.' And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: '... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Concurrent probation is granted by the Order to this monk, its duration depending on whichever were the offences among these offences that were each concealed the longest. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.'"

PROBATION FOR TWO MONTHS

Now at that time a certain monk fell into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; they were concealed for two months. It occurred to him: "I have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; they were concealed for two months. Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months?" He asked the Order for probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months. The Order granted him probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months. While he was under probation a feeling of shame overcame him, and he thought: "I fell into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; they were concealed for two months. It occurred to me: I have fallen into two offences ... Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months? I asked the Order ... The Order granted me probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months. While I was under probation a feeling of shame overcame me. Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months for that other offence concealed for two months?"

¹ sabbacirapaṭicchannāyo. This looks as if probation would have to last for ten times ten days.

3.22.2 He announced to monks: "I, your reverences, fell into two offences ... '... Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months for that other offence concealed for two months?' Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said.

3.22.3 "Well then, monks, let the Order grant this monk probation for two months on account also of that other offence concealed for two months. And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... (=Kd 13.22.2) ... Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months? So I, honoured sirs, am also asking the Order for probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months.' And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for.

3.22.4 "The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to him: ... He is also asking the Order for probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may also grant the monk So-and-so probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. Probation is also being granted the monk So-and-so by the Order for two months on account of this other offence concealed for two months. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.' Well then, monks, that monk should do probation for two months from that date.¹

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months ... (as above) ... The Order also granted him probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months. Well then, monks, that monk should do probation for two months from that date.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He knows that one is an offence, he does not know that the other is an offence. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence, concealed for two months, which he knows to be an offence. The Order grants him probation for two months on account of that offence concealed for two months. While he is under probation, he finds that the other is also an offence. It occurs to him: ‘I have fallen into two offences ... I knew that one was an offence, I did not know that the other was an offence. So I asked the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence which I knew to be an offence, concealed for two months. The Order granted me probation for two months on account of that offence, concealed for two months. But while I was under probation, I found that the other was also an offence. Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months on account of this other offence, concealed for two months?’ He asks the Order for probation ... The Order grants him probation for two months on account of this other offence also, concealed for two months. Well then, monks, this monk should do probation for two months from that date.

¹ tadupādāya.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He remembers one offence, he does not remember the other offence. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence, concealed for two months, which he remembers ... (= Kd 13.23.2. Read remembers, remembered instead of finds, found) ... for two months from this date.

3.23.4 “This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He is in no doubt that one is an offence, he is doubtful whether the other is an offence. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence about which he is in no doubt ... (= Kd 13.23.2. Read is doubtful for does not know) ... for two months from this date.

3.23.5 “This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One offence is knowingly concealed, the other offence is unknowingly concealed. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of those offences concealed for two months. The Order grants him probation for two months on account of those offences concealed for two months. While he is under probation, a certain monk arrives—one who has heard much, to whom the tradition had been handed down, expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the summaries, clever, experienced, wise, conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. He speaks thus: ‘What, your reverences, has this monk fallen into? Why is this monk doing probation?’ They speak thus: ‘This monk, your reverence, has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One offence was knowingly concealed, the other offence was unknowingly concealed. He asked the Order for probation for two months on account of these offences concealed for two months. The Order granted him probation for two months on account of these offences, concealed for two months. This monk your reverence, has fallen into these, this monk is under probation on account of these.’ He speaks thus: “The granting of probation, your reverences, for that offence which he knowingly concealed is legally valid¹; because it is legally valid² it is effective;³ but the granting of probation, your reverences, for that offence which he unknowingly concealed is not legally valid; because it is not legally valid it is not effective. For this offence, your reverences, the monk deserves mānatta (discipline).’

3.23.4

3.23.5

5.73

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One offence is concealed, he remembering it, the other offence is concealed, he not remembering it ... One offence is concealed, he being not in doubt (about it), the other offence is concealed, he being in doubt (about it) ... ‘... For this offence, your reverences, this monk deserves mānatta (discipline).’”

Now at that time a certain monk had fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to him: “I have fallen into two offences ... concealed for two months. Suppose that I were to ask the Order for probation for one month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months?” He asked the Order ... The Order granted him probation for one month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. As he was under probation shame overcame him, and he thought: “I have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to me: ... I asked the Order for probation for one month ... The Order granted me probation for one month on account of the two offences concealed for two months. As I was under probation shame overcame me. What now, if I should also ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences concealed for two months?”

He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months ... It occurred to me: ... What now if I should also ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences concealed for two months? Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord.

¹ dhammikaṃ. ² dhammattā. ³ rūhati. As at Kd 13.25,3, Kd 13.27, etc. Cf. Vin 2.203 and Kd 6.14.5. Rūhati means something like “it counts”.

He said: "Well then, monks, let the Order also grant this monk probation for a further month on account of these two offences concealed for two months. And thus, monks, should it be asked for: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, have fallen into two offences ... What now if I should also ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months? So I, honoured sirs, am also asking the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences concealed for two months.' And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so fell into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to him: '... Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months?' He is asking ... If it seems right to the Order, the Order ... If the giving of probation to the monk So-and-so for a further month also on account of the two offences concealed for two months is pleasing to the venerable ones ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Probation is granted by the Order to the monk So-and-so for a further month also on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.' Monks, that monk should do probation for two months from the earlier date.

PROCEDURE FOR ONE GIVEN PROBATION FOR TWO MONTHS

"This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurs to him: 'I have fallen into two offences ... concealed for two months. Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for one month on account of the two offences concealed for two months?' ... (= Kd 13.25.1) ... The Order also grants him probation for a further month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. Monks, that monk should do probation for two months from the earlier date.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He knows the one month, he does not know the other month ... he remembers the one month, he does not remember the other month ... he is not doubtful about the one month, he is doubtful about the other month. He asks the Order for probation for that month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months, about which he is not doubtful. The Order grants him probation ... not doubtful. As he is doing probation he comes to be doubtful about the further month also. It occurs to him: ‘I have fallen into two offences ... concealed for two months. I was not doubtful about the one month, I was doubtful about the other month ... Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for a further month also on account of the two offences concealed for two months?’ He asks the Order ... The Order grants him probation for a further month also on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. Monks, that monk should do probation for two months from the earlier date.

This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One month is knowingly concealed, the other month is unknowingly concealed ... One month is concealed, he remembering it, the other month is concealed, he not remembering it ... One month is concealed, he being not in doubt (about it), the other month is concealed, he being in doubt about it. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of the two offences concealed for two months. The Order grants him probation for two months ... concealed for two months. As he is under probation, another monk arrives¹—one who has heard much ... desirous of training. He speaks thus: ‘Into what, your reverences, has this monk fallen? Why is this monk under probation?’ They speak thus: ‘This monk, your reverence, has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He concealed one month (although) he was not doubtful (about it), he concealed the other month (because) he was doubtful (about it). He asked the Order for probation ... The Order granted him probation for two months on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. This monk, your reverence, has fallen into these, this monk is doing probation on account of these.’ He speaks thus: ‘The granting of probation, your reverences, for that month which he concealed (although) he was not doubtful (about it) is legally valid; because it is legally valid, it is effective; but the granting of probation, your reverences, for that month which he concealed because he was doubtful (about it) is not legally valid; because it is not legally valid, it is not effective. For that month, your reverences, that monk deserves mānatta discipline.’”

¹ As in Kd 13.23.5.

PURIFYING PROBATION

3.26.1 Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; he did not know about the expiration of the offences, he did not know about the expiration of the nights¹ ... He did not remember ... He was doubtful about the expiration of the offences, he was doubtful about the ex-

¹ āpattipariyanta ... rattipariyanta. Pariyanta means literally limit, end, boundary, limitation. On the use of these words here Buddhaghosa leads us to suppose that a monk might be in a state of purification in regard to various offences that he had committed because he had undergone adequate probation. This might last for a day, a half-month, a month or a year. He should then consider for how many months he still has to do probation so as to secure his purification, that is, the removal of the offence. As offences are removed, the amount of time still to be spent on probation automatically becomes less. Moreover, whoever does not know or remember or is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights should, if he has undertaken to do probation, count the nights from that day back to the day of his ordination, and then do probation for this number of nights. In this way, it appears, he would be quite certain of doing probation for all the possible nights which might be necessary for the removal of the offence. See āpattipariyanta and kulapariyanta (“limited to families”) at Vin 4.31 \(BD 2.220\), where defined; and bhesajjapariyanta (“limited to medicines”) and rattipariyanta at Vin 4.103 \(BD 2.371\). See also above, Kd 12.1.2, where pariyanta seems used in a different sense.

piration of the nights. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. I do not know about the expiration of the offences, I do not know about the expiration of the nights ... I am doubtful about the expiration of the nights. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order grant the purifying probation¹ to this monk on account of those offences.

And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. I do not know about the expiration of the offences ... I am doubtful about the expiration of the nights. So I, honoured sirs, am asking the Order for the purifying probation on account of these offences’. And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so has fallen into several offences ... he is doubtful about the expiration of the nights. He is asking the Order for the purifying probation on account of those offences. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may grant the monk So-and-so the purifying probation on account of those offences. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so ... The Order is granting the monk So-and-so the purifying probation on account of those offences. If the granting to the monk So-and-so of the purifying probation on account of those offences is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak: And a second time ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The purifying probation is granted by the Order to the monk So-and-so on account of those offences. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’

“Thus, monks, should the purifying probation be granted, thus should probation be granted. And how, monks, should the purifying probation be granted? If he does not know about the expiration of the offences, if he does not know about the expiration of the nights, if he does not remember about the expiration of the offences, if he does not remember about the expiration of the nights, if he is doubtful about the expiration of the offences, if he is doubtful about the expiration of the nights, the purifying probation may be granted.

¹ suddhantaparivāsa.

“If he knows about the expiration of the offences, if he does not know about the expiration of the nights, if he remembers about the expiration of the offences, if he does not remember about the expiration of nights, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, the purifying probation may be granted.

“If he knows the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he does not know the expiration of the nights, if he remembers the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he does not remember the expiration of the nights, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he is in no doubt as to it in others, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, the purifying probation may be granted.

“If he does not know the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he does not remember the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if in some cases he is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, if he is not in doubt in others, the purifying probation may be granted.

“If he knows the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is in doubt in some cases as to the expiration of the nights, if he is not in doubt in others, the purifying probation may be granted.

“If he knows the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he knows the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he is in doubt as to some offences, if he is not in doubt as to others, if he is in doubt as to some nights, if he is not in doubt as to others, the purifying probation may be granted.

BD 5,7

“And how, monks may probation be granted? If he knows the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights, if he remembers the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, probation may be granted.

Kd 13,2

“If he does not know the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights, if he does not remember the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, probation may be granted.

“If he knows the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he knows the expiration of the nights, if he remembers the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the nights, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he is not in doubt in others, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, probation may be granted. Thus, monks, may probation be granted.”

Told is Probation

FORTY CASES

Now at that time a certain monk, while doing probation, left the Order. Having come back again, he asked the monks for ordination.

Kd 13,2

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk, doing probation, leaves the Order. Monks, the probation of one who leaves the Order is not effective. If he is ordained again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him:¹ whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, he must do probation (for any portion of time) remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, becomes a novice. Monks, the probation of a novice is not effective. If he is ordained again ... (as in preceding paragraph) ... remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, becomes mad. Monks, the probation of one who is mad is not effective. If he becomes sane again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, he must do probation (for any portion of time) remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, becomes unhinged in mind. Monks, the probation of one who is unhinged in mind is not effective. If he becomes not unhinged in mind again ... This is a case, monks, where a monk, doing probation, becomes afflicted by pain. Monks, the probation of one afflicted by pain is not effective. If he becomes not afflicted by pain again ... he must do probation for (any portion of time) remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, is suspended for not seeing an offence ... for not making amends for an offence ... for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the probation of one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, he must do probation for (any portion of time) remaining.

¹ I.e. on being re-ordained, he is to take up his period of probation again where he left it off, so as to complete the number of nights for which probation was originally granted him. Probation is “not broken”, another meaning of rūhati.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning leaves the Order. Monks, the sending back to the beginning is not effective for one who leaves the Order. If he is ordained again, the earlier granting of the probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, that monk must be sent back to the beginning.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... (as in Kd 13.27.1) ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the sending back to the beginning of one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of the probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, that monk must be sent back to the beginning.

BD 5,8

Kd 13,2

This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) leaves the Order. Monks, the imposing of mānatta (discipline) on one who leaves the Order is not effective. If he is ordained again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly-granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the imposing of mānatta (discipline) on one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk.

Kd 13,2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) leaves the Order ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the undergoing of mānatta (discipline) for one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, whatever mānatta (discipline) is imposed is properly imposed, whatever mānatta (discipline) is undergone is undergone thoroughly, it must be undergone for (any portion of time) remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves rehabilitation leaves the Order ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, rehabilitation of one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, whatever mānatta (discipline) is imposed is properly imposed, whatever mānatta (discipline) is undergone is undergone thoroughly, that monk may be rehabilitated.

*Concluded are the Forty Cases.*¹

THIRTY-SIX CASES

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those not concealed not being many.² That monk should be sent back to the beginning. This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those concealed not being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those concealed as well as those not concealed not being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

¹ There are eight possibilities (leaving the Order down to the three reasons for being suspended) under each of the five headings (doing probation, deserving to be sent back to the beginning, deserving mānatta, undergoing mānatta, deserving rehabilitation). ² parimāṇā, but the meaning is not at all clear. See also below:

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those not concealed being many ... those concealed being many ... those concealed as well as those not concealed being many ... those not concealed not being many as well as being many ... those concealed not being many as well as being many ... those concealed as well as those not concealed not being many as well as being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... who deserves rehabilitation meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those not concealed not being many ... those concealed as well as those not concealed not being many and being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

Concluded are the Thirty-six Cases

ONE HUNDRED ON MĀNATTA

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order not having concealed them. He, being ordained again, does not conceal those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed upon that monk.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order not having concealed them. He, on being ordained again, conceals those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on

Kd 13.2

Kd 13.2

BD 5.8

Vin 2.6

that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen ... leaves the Order having concealed them. He, on being ordained again, does not conceal those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen ... leaves the Order, having concealed them. He, on being ordained again, conceals those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. His offences are both concealed and not concealed. He, having left the Order, on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards he conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he concealed, does not¹ afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He knows some to be offences, he does not know others to be offences. The offences which he knows to be offences he conceals, those offences which he does not know to be offences he does not conceal. He, having left the Order, on being ordained again, conceals those offences which earlier he had known, does not conceal those offences which later he had known, does not conceal those offences which earlier he had not known, does not conceal those offences which later he had known. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier concealed.

¹ See Vinaya Texts ii.423, n. 2, on the right way of making up the hundred cases mentioned at the end of Kd 13.30.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, does not conceal those offences, (although) knowing them, which formerly, knowing them he concealed, afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, not knowing them, he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, knowing them he concealed, afterwards does not conceal those offences, knowing them, which formerly he did not conceal, not knowing them. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on this monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, knowing them, he concealed; afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, not knowing them, he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He remembers some to be offences ... (= Kd 13.29.3. Instead of he knows, knowing, not knowing, read he remembers, remembering, not remembering) ... thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He is in no doubt as to some of the offences, he is in doubt as to others of the offences ... thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... becomes unhinged in mind ... this should be explained in detail as below.¹ He comes to be in pain. His offences are concealed as well as unconcealed. He knows that some are offences, he does not know that others are offences. He remembers that some are offences, he does not remember that others are offences. He is in no doubt that some are offences, he is in doubt as to whether others are offences. He conceals those offences about which he is in no doubt, he does not conceal those offences about which he is in doubt. He comes to be in pain. Having come to be again not in pain, those offences which formerly he concealed because he was in no doubt, he afterwards does not conceal although he is in no doubt; those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards does not conceal although he is in doubt, those offences which formerly he concealed, being in no doubt, he afterwards does not conceal, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards conceals, not being in doubt, those offences which formerly he concealed, being in no doubt, he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards does not conceal, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he concealed, being in no doubt, he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on this monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier as well as later concealed.”

¹ I.e. in Kd 13.27, “below” corresponds to our “above” in such contexts, as it refers to the palm-leaf manuscripts

FOUR HUNDRED ON CONCURRENT PROBATION AND BEGINNING

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order not having concealed them. On being ordained again, he does not conceal these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning. Kd 13.3

“This is a case, monks ... not having concealed them. On being ordained again, he conceals these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account on the earlier offences among the offences thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks ... having concealed them. On being ordained again, he does not conceal these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... having concealed them. On being ordained again, he conceals these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed. Kd 13.3

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. His offences are both concealed and not concealed. Having left the Order, he, on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he concealed, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earlier offences of the offences thus concealed. Vin 2.6

“This is a case, monks ... His offences are both concealed and not concealed. Having left the Order, he, on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly be concealed, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards does not conceal those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He knows some are offences, he does not know that others are offences ... (= Kd 13.29.3, Kd 13.29.4, Kd 13.30. The penalty is always the same: that monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation granted him on account of the earlier offences of the offences thus concealed.) ...

“This is a case, monks, where a monk deserving mānatta (discipline) ... undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... deserving rehabilitation, having meantime fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order, not having concealed them ... The one deserving mānatta (discipline) and the one undergoing mānatta (discipline) and the one deserving rehabilitation should be explained in detail similarly to the one doing probation.¹

“This is a case, monks, where a monk deserving rehabilitation, having meantime fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, and not having concealed them, becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... becomes unhinged in mind ... becomes afflicted by pain. His offences are both concealed and not concealed ... (= Kd 13.30) ... he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation granted him on account of the earlier offences of the offences thus concealed.

¹ Kd 13.31.

THE PORTION WITH EIGHTEEN CASES MEASURED,

ETC.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not having concealed not many, not having concealed many, not having concealed one kind, not having concealed different kinds, not having concealed those of a like division,¹ not having concealed those of the other division,² not having concealed separate ones,³ not having concealed connected ones,⁴ leaves the Order.⁵

Kd 13.3

BD 5.8

THE PORTION WITH ELEVEN CASES ON TWO MONKS

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. They come to be of the opinion that the offence is one entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it, the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing, and having granted him proba-

Kd 13.3

¹ sabhāga ... visabhāga, possibly referring to the two divisions of offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; that where offences are offences at once, and that where offences become so after (unsuccessful) admonition up to the third time.

² sabhāga ... visabhāga, possibly referring to the two divisions of offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; that where offences are offences at once, and that where offences become so after (unsuccessful) admonition up to the third time.

³ vavatthitā. ⁴ sambhinnā. For example, there are no other Formal Meetings similar to Bu-Ss 1, Bu-Ss 5, Bu-Ss 12, or Bu-Ss.13. These, therefore, are “separate”. Formal Meetings Bu-Ss 2, Bu-Ss 3, Bu-Ss 4 are “connected” because they deal with the same subject matter and to some extent use the same wording; the same is also true of Formal Meetings Bu-Ss 6, Bu-Ss 7 and Bu-Ss 8; Bu-Ss 9, Bu-Ss 10 and Bu-Ss 11. Vin-a 1191 says that vavatthitā and sambhinnā are pariyāyavacana of sabhāga and visabhāga.

⁵ This is the whole of this paragraph as it stands. See note at Vinaya Texts ii.431 which says that the conclusion should be supplied as in Kd 13.28.1, with the exception that the penalty in each case is “a probation corresponding in length to the period which has elapsed since the first of those offences which the re-ordained bhikkhu has concealed. The details are only worked out in Kd 13.28.1, of the first of the several pairs here enumerated, and are intended to be supplied here for each of the other pairs in a similar way. All the pairs recur in Chapters Kd 13.35, Kd 13.36.”

tion for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. They are doubtful whether the offence is one entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it ... (as above) ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. In regard to this offence they are of the opinion that it is a mixed offence.¹ One conceals it ... (as above) ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into a mixed offence. In regard to this mixed offence they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into a mixed offence. In regard to that mixed offence they are of the opinion that it is a mixed offence. One conceals it ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into a slighter offence.² In regard to this slighter offence they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it, the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing and both should be dealt with according to the rule.³

“Two monks come to have fallen into a slighter offence. In regard to this slighter offence they are of the opinion that it is a slighter offence. One conceals it ... according to the rule.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. In regard to this offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. It occurs to one, ‘I will tell about it,' it occurs to the other, 'I will not tell about it'. He conceals it during the first watch and he conceals it during the second watch and he conceals it during the third watch. If the offence is (still) concealed after the sun has risen, whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing, and having granted him probation for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

¹ missaka, which Vin-a 1191 says means “mixed with a grave offence and so on.”

² suddhaka. Vin-a 1191 says the group of lighter offences, not those entailing a formal meeting of the Order. ³ I.e. the rule for whatever offence it was, for as it was not an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, probation and mānatta would not enter into the penalty.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. In regard to this offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. They go away, thinking, ‘We will tell about it.’ On the way, backsliding arises in one and he thinks, ‘I will not tell about it.’¹ He conceals it during the first watch and ... he conceals it during the third watch. If the offence is (still) concealed after the sun has risen, ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks ... They become mad, and later they, having become sane again, one conceals it the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing and, having granted him probation for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. As the Pātimokkha is being recited, these speak thus: ‘Only now do we understand that the rule, as is said, is handed down in a clause, contained in a clause (and) comes up for recitation every half-month.’² In regard to that offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it, the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing, and having granted him probation for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

¹ makkhadhamma, hypocrisy. Perhaps it here means that he deceived the other monk. ² See the “rule” in Bu-Pc 73 (Vin 4.144).

NINE CASES ON IMPURE BEGINNING

3:35:1 “This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: many and not many and of one kind and of different kinds and of a like division and of a different division and separate and connected.¹ He asks the Order for concurrent probation on account of these offences. The Order grants him concurrent probation on account of these offences. While he is doing probation he falls into several intervening offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, many, not concealed. On account of the intervening offences, he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of the intervening offences the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, (but) it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

1 2:69
0 5:91 “This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many and of one kind and of different kinds and of a like division and of a different division and separate ones and connected ones. He asks the Order for concurrent probation on account of these offences. The Order grants him concurrent probation on account of these offences. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed ... On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

3:35:2 “This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many ... and connected ones. He asks the Order ... While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order:

¹ As in Kd 13:33. The details of the first pair, not many and many, are worked out in relation to “concealed, not concealed” at Kd 13:28.

many, not concealed ... many, concealed ... many, concealed and not concealed I ... not many and many, not concealed. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk ... and connected ones. He asks the Order for concurrent probation on account of these offences. The Order grants him concurrent probation on account of these offences. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many and concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants him concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

“This is a case, monks, ... and connected ones. On account of these offences, he asks the Order for concurrent probation. On account of these offences, the Order grants him concurrent probation. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many and concealed and not concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

Told are the Nine Cases where (a Monk on being sent back to) the

SECOND SET OF NINE CASES

3.36.1 “This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many ... and separate ones and connected ones. On account of these offences he asks the Order for concurrent probation. On account of these offences, the Order grants him concurrent probation. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many, not concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand, it imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

“This is a case, monks, ... While he is under probation he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and concealed and not concealed ... not many, concealed ... On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand, it grants concurrent probation not by rule, imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

3.36.2 “This is a case, monks, ... While he is under probation he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many, concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. It grants him concurrent probation not by rule. He, thinking: ‘I am under probation’, meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed. He, arrived at that stage, remembers among the earlier offences offences (fallen into) meantime, he remembers among the subsequent offence's offences (fallen into) meantime. It occurs to him, 'Now, I have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many and many ... and separate ones and connected ones. On account of these offences I asked the Order for concurrent probation. On account of these offences the Order granted me concurrent probation. While I was under probation, I meantime fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed. So on account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sent me back to the beginning by a (formal) act that was not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. It granted concurrent probation not by rule. Then I, thinking 'I am under probation,' meantime fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed. Then I, arrived at this stage, remembered among the earlier offences offences fallen into meantime, I remembered among the subsequent offences offences fallen into meantime. Suppose that I, on account of those offences among the earlier offences, and on account of those offences among the subsequent offences, should ask the Order for sending back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, for concurrent probation by rule, for mānatta (discipline) by rule, for rehabilitation by rule?' He asks the Order ... The Order, on account of those offences among the earlier offences and on account of those offences among the subsequent offences, sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, it grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is pure in regard to those offences.

“This is a case, monks, ... (This case is identical with the preceding, but instead of concealed read concealed and not concealed) ...

“This is a case, monks ... While he is under probation, he meantime n 2.72 falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, many, not concealed, many, concealed ... not many and many, not concealed. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. It imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, rehabilitates by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

THIRD SET OF NINE CASES

3.36.4 “This is a case, monks, ... While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many and many, and concealed ... not many and many and concealed and not concealed ... On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand, it grants him concurrent probation not by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

“This is a case, monks ... (The two cases given here are identical with those specified in Kd 13.36.2; instead of not many read many) ... Monks, that monk is pure in regard to those offences.”

Told is the Third Section: that on Accumulation (of Offences)

THIS IS ITS KEY

0 5.95 Not concealed, and one day, two days, three days, four days and five days, and for a fortnight, ten days¹: the Great Sage speaks of an offence, / And slighter ones, leaving the Order, about ‘not many’,² two monks there agree, two are doubtful, are of the opinion that it is a mixed offence, /

¹ dasānaṃ should perhaps read dasāha, or dasannaṃ. The reference is probably to Kd 13.21.1: ten offences concealed for ten days. ² Reading with Sinhalese edition parimāṇāsa ca instead of Oldenberg’s parimāṇamukhaṃ, for -mukhaṃ is hard to account for.

They are of the opinion that it is a heavier offence when it is a slighter one,¹ likewise of the opinion that it is a slighter one.² /
One conceals, and then about backsliding,³ and confessing for one who was mad, (sending back) to the beginning, he is pure.⁴ /
The recitation⁵ is for the maintenance of true dhamma among the teachers of the Vibhajja doctrines,⁶ and who, dwellers in the Mahāvihāra,⁷ illuminate Tambapaṇṇidīpa.⁸

¹ Reading with Sinhalese edition suddhake garukadiṭṭhino, and referring to the end of Kd 13.34.1 where two monks think that they have fallen into a Saṅghādisesa offence when really it is a slighter one. ² Reading should probably be sudhakadiṭṭhino instead of suddhadiṭṭhino of Oldenberg's text, and suddadiṭṭhi of Sinhalese edition ³ As Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.312) the pakkhamitena ca should perhaps read makkhadhammena as in Kd 13.34.2. The Sinhalese edition reads pakkamitena ca. ⁴ Reading with Sinhalese edition mūlāya paṭivissuddhako (for mūlāya paṭikassati + visuddhako) instead of Oldenberg's mūlā, pannarasa visuddhato. On the other hand, there seem to be fifteen cases of sending back to the beginning made up of nine to which reference is made at the end of Kd 13.35, with six in Kd 13.36. ⁵ vācanā. ⁶ vibhajjapadānaṃ, which Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.312) should read vibhajjavādānaṃ. Sinhalese edition reads vibhajjāvādānaṃ. ⁷ The great monastery at Anurādhapura, for many centuries the chief seat of Buddhism in Ceylon. ⁸ Tambapaṇṇidīpa was a district in Ceylon, with Anurādhapura as its centre. According to SN-a ii.111, it was a hundred yojanas in extent, but Vb-a 444 says it was three hundred yojanas in extent. See also Vin-a i.102 where Mahinda tells Tissa that although the sāsana is established in Tambapaṇṇidīpa, it will not take root until a boy, born in Tambapaṇṇidīpa of parents belonging there, goes forth there, learns the Vinaya there, and recites it there. Tambapaṇṇidīpa also came to be a name for the whole of the Island of Ceylon. It seems strange to insert references to Anurādhapura and Ceylon here, as though this were, even if not an ending, yet referring to the time when the sāsana had reached this Island.

14. SETTLEMENTS (SAMATHA)

VERDICT IN THE PRESENCE OF

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts of censure and guidance and banishment and reconciliation and suspension against monks who were not present. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six monks carry out (formal) acts of censure ... and suspension against monks who are not present?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that these monks carried out (formal) acts of censure ... and suspension against monks who were not present?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

"It is not fitting, monks, in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men carry out (formal) acts of censure ... and suspension against monks who are not present? It is not monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, a (formal) act of censure or guidance or banishment or reconciliation or suspension should not be carried out against monks who are not present. Whoever should carry one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“An individual who professes non-dhamma makes known to an individual who professes dhamma, disposes him favourably, makes him consider, makes him reconsider, teaches him, teaches him again, saying: ‘This is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, choose this, approve of this.’ If this legal question is settled thus, it is settled by what is not rule, by what has the appearance of a verdict in the presence of.”¹

“An individual who professes non-dhamma makes known to several who profess dhamma ... An individual who professes non-dhamma makes known to an Order which professes dhamma ... Several who profess non-dhamma make known to an individual who professes dhamma ... Several who profess non-dhamma make known to several who profess dhamma ... Several who profess non-dhamma make known to an Order which professes dhamma ... An Order which professes non-dhamma makes known to an individual who professes dhamma ... An Order which professes non-dhamma makes known to several who profess dhamma ... An Order which professes non-dhamma makes known to an Order which professes dhamma, disposes it favourably, makes it consider, makes it reconsider, teaches it, teaches it again, saying: ‘This is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, choose this, approve of this.’ If this legal question is settled thus, it is settled by what is not rule, by what has the appearance of a verdict in the presence of.”

Told are the Nine Cases of the Dark Faction

“An individual who professes dhamma makes known to an individual who professes non-dhamma ... An Order which professes dhamma makes known to an Order which professes non-dhamma ... If this legal question is settled thus, it is settled by rule, by a verdict in the presence of.”

Told are the Nine Cases of the Bright Faction

¹ sammukhāvinayapaṭirūpa. On sammukhāvinaya., see Vin 2.93ff., and BD 3.153, n. 2 for further references.

VERDICT BY MEMORY

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding-place.¹ At that time perfection had been realised by the venerable Dabba the Mallian seven years after his birth. All that should be attained by a disciple had been fully attained by him; for him there was nothing further to be done, no increase to (be added to) that which had been done. Then this reasoning arose in the mind of the venerable Dabba the Mallian as he was meditating in solitude:² "Perfection was realised by me seven years after my birth. All that should be attained by a disciple has been fully attained by me; for me there is nothing further to be done, no increase to (be added to) that which has been done. Now, what service could I render the Order?" Then it occurred to the venerable Dabba the Mallian: "Suppose that I were to assign lodgings to the Order and issue meals?"

Then the venerable Dabba the Mallian, emerging from his meditation in the evening, approached the Lord, having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting at a respectful distance, the venerable Dabba the Mallian spoke thus to the Lord: "Now, Lord, as I was meditating in solitude, this reasoning arose in my mind: '... What service could I render the Order?' Then, Lord, it occurred to me: 'Suppose I were to assign lodgings to the Order and issue the meals?' I want, Lord, to assign lodgings to the Order and issue meals."

"It is good, it is good, Dabba. Well then, do you, Dabba, assign lodgings to the Order and issue meals."

"Very well, Lord," the venerable Dabba the Mallian answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "Well then, monks, let the Order agree upon Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, Dabba should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the venerable Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the venerable Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals. If the agreement upon the venerable Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The venerable Dabba the Mallian is agreed upon by the Order as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.'"

¹ From here to towards the end of Kd 14.9.1 is almost word for word the same as Vin 3.158-Vin.3.163; translated at BD 1.271-BD.1.281. I give the translation again in full here, but I have not repeated the notes, for which readers should refer to the earlier volume. ² The story is given in brief outline at Thag-a i.44.

And the venerable Dabba the Mallian, (thus) agreed upon, assigned lodgings in the same place for those monks who belonged to the same company. For those monks who knew the Suttantas he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: "These will be able to chant over the Suttantas to one another." For those monks who were expert in discipline he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: "They will decide upon discipline together." For those monks who were talkers on dhamma he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: "They will discuss dhamma with one another." For those monks who were musers he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: "They will not disturb one another." For those monks who were talkers on inferior matters and who were athletic he assigned lodgings at the same place, thinking: "These reverend ones will live according to their pleasure." For those monks who came in late at night, he, having attained the condition of heat, assigned lodgings by this light. So much so, that the monks came in late at night on purpose, thinking: "We will see a wonder of the psychic potency of the venerable Dabba the Mallian." And these, having approached the venerable Dabba the Mallian, spoke thus: "Reverend Dabba, assign us lodgings.” The venerable Dabba the Mallian spoke thus to them; “Where do your reverences desire them? Where shall I assign them? These (monks) would quote a distant place on purpose, saying:

“Reverend Dabba, assign us lodgings on the Vultures’ Peak; your reverence, assign us lodgings on the Robber’s Cliff; your reverence, assign us lodgings on the slopes of Isigili Hill on the Black Rock; your reverence, assign us lodgings on the slopes of Vebhāra at Sattapaṇṇi Cave; your reverence, assign us lodgings in Sītā’s Wood on the slopes of the Snake Pool; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Gomaṭa Glen; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Tinduka Glen; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Tapodā Glen; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Tapodā Park; your reverence, assign us lodgings at Jīvaka’s Mango Grove; your reverence, assign us lodgings at Maddakucchi in the deer-park.”

The venerable Dabba the Mallian, having attained the condition of heat, went in front of these (monks) with his finger glowing, and they by this light went behind the venerable Dabba the Mallian. The venerable Dabba the Mallian assigned them lodgings thus: “This is the couch, this the chair, this the mattress, this the squatting mat, this a privy, that a privy, this the drinking water, this the water for washing, this the staff, this is (the form of) the Order’s agreement, this is the time it should be entered upon, this the time it should be departed from.” The venerable Dabba the Mallian, having assigned lodgings to these, went back again to the Bamboo Grove.

Now at that time monks who were the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka were newly ordained and of little merit; they obtained whatever inferior lodgings belonged to the Order and inferior meals. At that time people in Rājagaha wanted to give the monks who were elders almsfood¹ having a specially good seasoning, and ghee and oil and dainties. But to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka they gave sufficient ordinary food, broken rice accompanied by sour gruel.¹ These, on returning from alms-gathering after their meal, asked the monks who were elders: “What did you, your reverences, get at the refectory? What did you?”

¹ Almsfood, piṇḍapāta, is omitted at Vin 2.77 above, but occurs at Vin 3.160.

Some elders spoke thus: “There was ghee for us, your reverences, there was oil for us, there were dainties for us.”

But the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka spoke thus: “There was nothing for us, your reverences, except sufficient ordinary food, broken rice accompanied by sour gruel.”

Now at that time a householder who had nice food gave the Order in continuous food supply meals consisting of four ingredients.² He, with his wife and children, attended and served in the refectory. They offered boiled rice to some (monks), they offered curry to others, they offered oil to others, they offered dainties to others. Now at that time a meal given by the householder who had nice food was apportioned for the following day to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka. Then the householder who had nice food went to the monastery on some business or other and approached the venerable Dabba the Mallian; having approached, having greeted the venerable Dabba the Mallian, he sat down at a respectful distance. As the householder who had nice food was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Dabba the Mallian delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened him with talk on dhamma. Then when the householder who had nice food had been delighted ... gladdened by the venerable Dabba the Mallian with talk on dhamma, he spoke thus to the venerable Dabba the Mallian: “For whom, honoured sir, is the meal apportioned for tomorrow in my house?”

“Householder, the meal apportioned in your house for tomorrow is for monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka.”

Then the householder who had nice food was sorry and said: “Why should these depraved monks enjoy themselves in my house?” And having gone to his house he enjoined a slave-woman, saying:

¹ At AN i.145 called food given to servants. ² “A meal for four monks” at BD 1.276 should be corrected to the above rendering.

“Having prepared a seat in the porch for those who come to eat Tomorrow, serve them with broken rice accompanied by sour gruel.”

“Very well, master,” the woman-slave answered to the householder who had nice food, in assent.

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka said to one another: “Yesterday, your reverences, a meal was apportioned to us by the householder who has nice food. Tomorrow the householder who has nice food attending with his wife and children, will serve us. They will offer boiled rice to some, they will offer curry to others, they will offer oil to others, they will offer dainties to others.” These, because of their happiness, did not sleep that night as much as expected.

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, dressing in the morning and taking their bowls and robes, approached the dwelling of the householder who had nice food. That woman-slave saw the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka coming from afar; seeing them, having prepared a seat in the porch, she said to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “Sit down, honoured sirs.” Then it occurred to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “But undoubtedly the food will not be ready as we are made to sit in the porch.” Then the woman-slave came up with the broken rice accompanied by sour gruel. “Eat, honoured sirs,” she said.

“But, sister, we are those who enjoy a continuous supply of food.”

“I know that the masters enjoy a continuous supply of food. But only yesterday I was enjoined by the householder: ‘Having prepared a seat in the porch for those who come for a meal Tomorrow, serve them with broken rice accompanied by sour gruel’. Eat, honoured sirs,” she said.

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka thought: “Yesterday, your reverences, the householder who has nice food went to Dabba the Mallian in the monastery. Doubtless, Dabba the Mallian has set the householder at variance with us.” These (monks), on account of their distress, did not eat as much as expected.

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, returning from alms-gathering after the meal, having arrived at the monastery, having put away their bowls and robes, sat down outside the gateway of the monastery, squatting against their outer cloaks, silent, abashed, their shoulders bent, their heads lowered, brooding, speechless.

Then the nun Mettiyā approached the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka; having approached, she spoke thus to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “I salute you, masters.” When she had spoken thus, the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond. A second time ... A third time the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond.

“Do I offend against the masters? Why do the masters not respond to me?” she said.

“It is because you, sister, neglected us when we were being got into difficulties by Dabba the Mallian.”

“What can I do, masters?” she said.

“If you would like, sister, this very day you could make the Lord expel Dabba the Mallian.”

“What can I do, masters? How am I able to do that?”

“You come, sister, approach the Lord; having approached, say to the Lord: ‘Now, Lord, it is not proper, it is not becoming that this quarter which should be without fear, secure, without danger, is the very quarter which is full of fear, insecure, full of danger. Where there was a calm, now there is a gale. It seems the very water is blazing. I have been assaulted by master Dabba the Mallian.’”

“Very well, masters,” and the nun Mettiyā having answered the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the nun Mettiya spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, it is not proper ... I have been assaulted by master Dabba the Mallian.”

Kd 14.4

BD 5.10

Vin 2.7

Kd 14.4

Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Dabba the Mallian, saying:

“Do you, Dabba, remember doing as this nun says?”

“Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me.” And a second time ... And a third time ... “Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me.”

“Dabba, the Dabbas do not give evasive answers like that.¹ If what was done was done by you, say so; if it was not done (by you), say it was not.”

“Since I, Lord, was born, I cannot call to mind ever indulging in sexual intercourse even in a dream, much less so when I was awake.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, expel the nun Mettiyā, and take these monks to task.” Having spoken thus, the Lord, rising from his seat, entered a dwelling-place. Then these monks expelled the nun Mettiyā. Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka spoke thus to these monks: “Your reverences, do not expel the nun Mettiyā; in no way has she offended; she was urged on by us because we were angry, displeased and wanted him out of the way.”

“But are not you, your reverences, defaming the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit?”²

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defame the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned

¹ Quoted Thag-a 1.45, which explains dabbo as drabyo, bhabbo (with a number of variant readings). ² At Bu-Ss 8.1.9 he is defamed with an unfounded charge involving defeat. The two versions proceed differently after the end of this paragraph.

talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order give a verdict of innocence¹ to Dabba the Mallian who has remembered fully.² And thus, monks, should it be given: Monks, Dabba the Mallian, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘Honoured sirs, these monks, followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, defamed me with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. But I, honoured sirs, having remembered fully, ask the Order for a verdict of innocence’. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for: ‘Honoured sirs, these monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed me with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. So I, honoured sirs, having remembered fully, for a third time ask the Order for a verdict of innocence’. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. The venerable Dabba the Mallian, having remembered fully, is asking the Order for a verdict of innocence. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully, a verdict of innocence. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka ... is asking the Order for a verdict of innocence. The Order is giving the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully, a verdict of innocence. If the giving of a verdict of innocence to the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ...

¹ sativinaya. See BD 3.153, n. 3. ² See Vinaya Texts iii.16, n. 1 on sativepullapatta. This means arrived at (or attained to) fullness of memory—thus one whose conscience is quite clean, as at Vinaya Texts iii.16. Cf. below, Kd 14.14.27.

And a third time I speak forth this matter ... A verdict of innocence is given by the Order to the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.

“Monks, there are these five legally valid properties in giving a verdict of innocence: if the monk is pure and without offences; and if they reproach him; and if he asks; if the Order gives him a verdict of innocence; if it is by rule, the assembly being complete. These, monks, are the five legally valid properties in giving a verdict of innocence.”

VERDICT BY FORMER MADNESS

Now at that time the monk Gagga¹ was mad, out of his mind,² and while he was mad, out of his mind he perpetrated much and spoke in a way³ that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reproved the monk Gagga because of offences done (by him) while he was mad, out of his mind, saying: “Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?” He spoke thus: “I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken by me that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane.”⁴ Although being spoken to thus by him, they still reproved him, saying: “Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks reprove the monk Gagga because of offences done (by him) when he was mad, out of his mind, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ and he spoke thus: ‘I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken by me that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane'. And although being spoken to by him thus, they still reprovved him, saying: 'Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?'" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Is it true, as is said, monks ...?"

¹ Typifying a mad monk, also at Vin 1.123. ² cittavipariyāsakata; cf. cetaso vipariyāsa at MN ii.248; vipariyādikata citta at Thag 184, and vipariyattha citta at Ja v.372. For this whole passage cf. MN ii.248. ³ bhāsitarikanta. See Pali-English Dictionary, under parikanta. It says this passage is evidently faulty. ⁴ mūlha, astray, erring.

"It is true, Lord." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Well then, monks, let the Order give a verdict of past insanity¹ to the monk Gagga who is no longer insane.

"And thus, monks, should it be given: Monks, that monk Gagga, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having raised his joined palms in salutation, should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, I perpetrated much and spoke in a way that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reprovved me because of offences done (by me) while I was mad, out of my mind, saying: "Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?" So I spoke thus: 'I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind. While I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken (by me) that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane'. And even although they were spoken to thus by me, they still reprovved me, saying: "Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?" So I, honoured sirs, no longer insane, am asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity,' And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for, saying: 'I, honoured sirs, was mad ... even a third time am I asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity'. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Gagga was mad, out of his mind. While he was mad, out of his mind, much was perpetrated and spoken (by him) that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reproved the monk Gagga for offences done (by him) while he was mad, out of his mind, saying: “Does the venerable one remember ...?” He spoke thus: “I, honoured sirs, do not remember ... This was done by me while I was insane.” Even on being spoken to by him thus, they still reproved him, saying: “Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like thus?” He, no longer insane, is asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the monk Gagga, who is no longer insane, a verdict of past insanity. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Gagga ... is asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity. If the giving of a verdict of past insanity to the monk Gagga who is no longer insane is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. A verdict of past insanity is given by the Order to the monk Gagga who is no longer insane. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

¹ amūlḥavinaya. Cf. Vin 4.207 (BD 3.153, n. 4).

“Monks, there are these three not legally valid properties in giving a verdict of past insanity, three that are legally valid. What are the three properties that are not legally valid in giving a verdict of past insanity? This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ If he, although remembering, speaks thus: ‘I do not, your reverences, remember having fallen into an offence like that,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is not legally valid.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence ... ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ If he, although remembering, speaks thus: ‘I, your reverences, remember it as though from a dream,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is not legally valid.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence ...

‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ If he, although not mad, pretends to be mad, saying: ‘I act thus, do you also act thus, this is allowable for me, and it is also allowable for you,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is not legally valid. These three properties in giving a verdict of past insanity are not legally valid.

Kd 14.6

“What are the three properties in giving a verdict of past insanity that are legally valid? This is a case, monks, where a monk is mad, out of his mind. While he is mad, out of his mind, he perpetrates much and speaks in a way that is not worthy of a recluse. An Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this? If he, not remembering, speaks thus: ‘I do not, your reverences, remember having fallen into an offence like that,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is legally valid.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is mad, ... ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ If he, not remembering, speaks thus: ‘I, your reverences, remember as though from a dream,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is legally valid.

Vin 2.8

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is mad ... ‘Does the venerable one remembers having fallen into an offence like this? If he is mad and pretends to be mad and says, ‘I act thus, do you also act thus, this is allowable for me, it is also allowable for you,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is legally valid. These three properties in giving a verdict of past insanity are legally valid.”

BD 5.10

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Now at that time the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts of censure and guidance and banishment and reconciliation and suspension against monks without their acknowledgement.¹ Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks carry out (formal) acts of censure and ... suspension against monks without their acknowledgement?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true as is said, monks ...?”

Kd 14.7

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a (formal) act of censure or of guidance or of banishment or of reconciliation or of suspension should not be carried out against a monk without his acknowledgement. Whoever should (so) carry (one) out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

^{14.8.1} “Monks, the carrying out (of a formal act) on the acknowledgement of (a monk) is not legally valid thus, it is legally valid thus. And how, monks, is the carrying out on the acknowledgement not legally valid? A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving defeat. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘The venerable one has fallen into an offence involving defeat.’ If he speaks thus: ‘I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence involving defeat, I have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

^{5.110} “A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving defeat ... If he speaks thus: ‘I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence involving defeat, I have fallen into a grave offence, into an offence involving expiation, into an offence which ought to be confessed, into an offence of wrong-doing, into an offence of wrong speech,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong speech, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

“A monk comes to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... into a grave offence, into an offence involving expiation, into an offence which ought to be confessed, into an offence of wrong-doing, into an offence of wrong speech. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'The venerable one has fallen into an offence of wrong speech'. If he speaks thus: 'I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence of wrong speech, I have fallen into an offence involving defeat,' and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence involving defeat, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

¹ I.e. of their offence: apaṭiññāya. Cf. paṭiññāya kāretabbaṃ at Vin 4.207 (BD 3.153, n. 5).

Vin 2,8

"A monk comes to have fallen into an offence of wrong speech ... If he speaks thus: 'I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence of wrong speech, I have fallen into a grave offence, into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... into an offence involving expiation, into an offence which ought to be confessed, into an offence of wrong-doing,' and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong-doing, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

Kd 14,8

"And how, monks, is the carrying out on the acknowledgement legally valid? A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving defeat. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'The venerable one has fallen into an offence involving defeat'. If he speaks thus: 'Yes, your reverences, I have fallen into an offence involving defeat,' and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence involving defeat, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is legally valid.

"A monk comes to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... into a grave offence ... into an offence of wrong speech ... If he speaks thus: 'Yes, your reverences, I have fallen into an offence of wrong speech,' and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong speech, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is legally valid."

MAJORITY

Now at that time monks were striving, quarrelling, disputing in the midst of an Order, they were wounding one another with the weapons of the tongue; they were unable to settle that legal question.

Kd 14,9
BD 5,11

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you monks, to settle this kind of legal question by the decision of the majority.”¹ A monk possessed of five qualities should be agreed upon as distributor of (voting) tickets²; one who would not follow a wrong course through favouritism, who would not follow a wrong course through hatred ... through stupidity ... through fear, who would know what is taken and what is not.³ And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First a monk should be asked. Having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon the monk So-and-so as distributor of (voting) tickets. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the monk So-and-so as distributor of (voting) tickets. If the agreement upon the monk So-and-so as distributor of (voting) tickets is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order as distributor of (voting) tickets. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

“Monks, there are ten distributions of (voting) tickets that are not legally valid, ten that are legally valid. What are the ten distributions of (voting) tickets that are not legally valid? When the legal question is only trifling, and when it has not gone its course,⁴ and when it is not remembered or caused to be remembered,⁵ and when he knows that those who profess non-dhamma are more (in number), when he even thinks that those who profess non-dhamma may be more (in number), if he knows that the Order will be divided, if he even thinks that the Order may be divided, if they take (the tickets) not by rule,¹ if they take them in an incomplete assembly, and if they take them not according to their views.² These ten distributions of (voting) tickets are not legally valid.

¹ yebhuyyasikā. See Vin 4.207 (BD 3.153, n. 6). “As long as the majority are speakers of dhamma,” Vin-a 1192. ² salākagāhāpaka. Cf. below, Kd 14.14.24. ³ Referring to the voting tickets. ⁴ gatigata. See Vinaya Texts iii.26. Vin-a 1192 says, if it has not gone to two or three residences, or has not been detailed, avinicchita, here and there two or three times. ⁵ Vin-a 1192 says: “two or three times it is not remembered by these monks themselves, or caused to be remembered by others.”

“What are the ten distributions of (voting) tickets that are legally valid? When the legal question is not merely trifling, and when it has gone its course, and when it is remembered arid caused to be remembered, and when he knows that those who profess dhamma are more (in number), when he even thinks that those who profess dhamma may be more (in number), when he knows that the Order will not be divided, when he even thinks that the Order will not be divided, when they take (the tickets) by rule, when they take them in a complete assembly, and when they take them according to their views. These ten distributions of (voting) tickets are legally valid.”

BAD CHARACTER

Now at that time the monk Uvāḷa, on being examined for offences in the midst of the Order, having denied,³ acknowledged, having acknowledged, denied, he shelved the question by (asking) another, he told a conscious lie. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this monk Uvāḷa, on being examined ... tell a conscious lie?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks ...?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity⁴ against the monk Uvāḷa.

And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Uvāḷa should be reprovved, having reprovved him, he should be made to remember, having made him remember, he should be made to confess⁵ the offence, having made him confess the offence, the Order should ¹ They each take two tickets, saying: “Thus we, speakers of what is not dhamma, will become the majority,” Vin-a 1193. ² Changing their views simply so as to be on the side of the majority. ³ As at Vin 4.1; see BD 2.164. ⁴ tassapāpiyyasikā. See BD 3.154, n. 1; MN ii.249. ⁵ ropeti.

5.113 be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Uvāḷa, on being examined for offences in the midst of the Order, having denied, acknowledged ... he told a conscious lie. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Uvāḷa ... told a conscious lie. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa. If the carrying out of a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... A (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity is carried out by the Order against the monk Uvāḷa. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

12.86
4.12.1 “Monks, these five grounds for a (formal) act for specific depravity are legally valid: if he becomes impure, and if he is unconscientious, and if he is fault-finding,¹ if an Order carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against him, if it is by rule and in a complete assembly. These five grounds, monks, for a (formal) act for specific depravity are legally valid.

4.12.2 “Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of three qualities it comes to be a (formal) act not by rule, a (formal) act not by discipline, and one that is hard to settle: if it is carried out not in the presence of, if it is carried out without interrogation, if it is carried out not with the acknowledgement ...² if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out in an incomplete assembly. Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of these three qualities, it comes to be a (formal) act not by rule, a (formal) act not by discipline, and one that is hard to settle.

5.114 “Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of three qualities it come to be a (formal) act by rule and a (formal) act by discipline, and one that is easily settled if it is carried out in the presence of, if it is carried out on the interrogation, if it is carried out with the acknowledgement ...¹ if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out in a complete assembly. Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of these three qualities, it comes to be a (formal) act by rule, a (formal) act by discipline, and one that is easily settled.

¹ sānuvāda, cf. anuvāda at Vin 2.5. Buddhaghosa glosses by sa-upavāda. ² As at Kd 11.2.1.

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of three qualities,² the Order, if it desires, may carry out a (formal) act for specific depravity against him: if he is a maker of strife, if he is a maker of quarrels, if he is a maker of disputes if he is a maker of contention, if he is a maker of legal questions in the Order; if he is ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them; if he lives in association with householders in inappropriate association with householders. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities, the Order, if it desires, may carry out a (formal) act for specific depravity against him.

“A monk against whom a (formal) act for specific depravity³ has been carried out should conduct himself properly. This is proper conduct in this case: he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him, he should not consent to the agreement to exhort nuns, even if he is agreed upon he should not exhort nuns ... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa.

COVERING OVER WITH GRASS

Now at that time, while monks were striving, quarrelling, disputing, much was perpetrated and spoken that was not worthy of a recluse.⁴ Then it occurred to these monks: “While we were striving ... not worthy of a recluse. If we should deal with one another for these offences, it might even be that that legal question would conduce to harshness, to trouble, to schism. Now, what line of conduct should ¹ As at Kd 11.3.1. ² As at Kd 11.4. ³ As for an act of banishment carried out against a monk, at Kd 11.5. ⁴ As at Kd 14.5.1.

5.115 be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“This is a case, monks, where while monks were striving ... much was perpetrated and spoken that was not worthy of a recluse. Then it occurred to these monks: ‘While we were striving ... it might even be that that legal question would conduce to harshness, to trouble, to schism.’ I allow, monks, a legal question such as this to be settled by the covering up (as) with grass.¹

4.13.2 “And thus, monks, should it be settled: One and all should gather together in the same place; having gathered together, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... ‘... it might even be that this legal question would conduce to harshness, to trouble, to schism.’ If it seems right to the Order, the Order may settle this legal question by the covering up (as) with grass, unless it is a heavy sin,² unless it is connected with the laity.’³ The one side⁴ should be informed by an experienced, competent monk from among the monks siding in with the one (side): ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. While we were striving ... not worthy of a recluse ... to schism. If it is pleasing to the venerable ones, I would confess whatever is the offence of the venerable ones as well as whatever is my own offence both for the sake of the venerable ones and for my own sake, unless it is a heavy sin, unless it is connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order.’ Afterwards, the other side should be informed by an experienced, competent monk from among the monks siding in with the other (side): ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. While we were striving ... a covering up (as with) grass in the midst of the Order.’

4.13.3 “The Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk siding in with the one (side): ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... not worthy of a recluse ...

¹ tiṇavattthāraka. As at Vin 4.207, MN ii.250. See BD 3.154. ² thūlavajja, Vin-a 1194, explaining as Pārājika and Saṅghādisesa. ³ Commentary says: unless it is an offence where he reviles and despises householders by means of a low thing; see under “insulting speech” at Vin 4.6 (BD 2.173ff.); also above, BD 5.25. ⁴ saka pakkha, one’s own side.

to schism. If it seems right to the Order, I would confess whatever is the offence of the venerable ones as well as whatever is my own offence, both for the sake of the venerable ones and for my own sake, unless it is a heavy sin, unless it is connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... not worthy of recluse ... to schism. I am confessing whatever is the offence of these venerable ones and whatever is my own offence ... unless it is a heavy sin, unless it is connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as with) grass in the midst of the Order. If the confession of these offences of ours, unless they are heavy sins, unless they are connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. These offences of ours are confessed (by me), except heavy sins, except those connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.'

“Afterwards the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk from among the monks siding in with the other (side): ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... Thus do I understand this.’

“And thus, monks, do these offences come to be removed from these monks,¹ except for a heavy sin, except for what is connected with the laity, except for (those who make) an open statement of their views,² except for those who are not there.”³

¹ te bhikkhū tāhi āpattihi vuṭṭhitā honti, literally “these monks are risen up (or, removed) from these offences.” ² diṭṭhāvikkamma. Vin-a 1194 says “those who say, ‘It is not pleasing to me’ and explain their views to one another, or, having fallen into offence together with these who have not come there, or who have come and given (someone’s) leave for being absent while sitting down in cells and so on—these have not risen from those offences. Therefore it is said: except for (those who make) an open statement of their views, except for those who are not there.” ³ ṭhapetvā ye na tattha honti. See previous note.

4.14.1 Now at that time monks disputed with monks and nuns disputed with monks and the monk Channa, intruding into the nuns' (quarters), 5.117 disputed together with the monks and was prejudiced on the side of the nuns. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can this monk Channa, intruding into the nuns' (quarters), dispute together with monks and be prejudiced on the side of the nuns?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?"

"It is true, Lord." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned 4.14.2 talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, there are these four kinds of legal questions: legal questions arising out of disputes legal questions arising out of censure, legal questions arising out of offences, legal questions arising out of obligations.¹

"What is here a legal question arising out of disputes This is a case, monks, where monks dispute, saying²: 'It is dhamma' or 'It is not dhamma' or 'It is discipline' or 'It is not discipline' or 'It is spoken, uttered by the Truth-finder', or 'It is not spoken, not uttered by the Truth-finder' or 'It is practised by the Truth-finder' or 'It is not practised by the Truth-finder' or 'It is laid down by the Truth-finder' or 'It is not laid down by the Truth-finder' or 'It is an offence' or 'It is not an offence' or 'It is a slight offence' or 'It is a serious offence' or 'It is an offence that can be done away with' or 'It is an offence that cannot be done away with' or 'It is a bad offence' or 'It is not a bad offence.' Whatever here is strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, difference of opinion, other opinion, because the common appellation of heatedness³ is 'quarrel',⁴, this is called a legal question arising from disputes

"What is here a legal question arising from censure? In this case, monks, monks censure a monk for falling away from moral habit or

¹ As at Vin 3.164. ² Cf. the following with Vin 1.354. ³ vipaccatāya vohāro. Vina 1194 says "the common appellation is due to mental uneasiness, cittadukkha. The meaning is harsh speech." ⁴ medhaka.

for falling away from good habits or for falling away from right view or for falling away from a right mode of livelihood. Whatever here is censure, fault-finding, talking to, scolding, bickering, inciting, instigating, this is called a legal question arising from censure.

“What is here a legal question arising from offences? Both the five classes of offences¹ (yield) legal questions arising from offences, and the seven classes of offences² (yield) legal questions arising from offences. This is called a legal question arising from offences.

“What is here a legal question arising from obligations? Whatever is an Order’s business and ought to be done (by it): a (formal) act for which leave ought to be asked,³ a (formal) act at which a motion is put, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by one resolution, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by a resolution made three times.⁴ This is called a legal question arising from obligations.

“What is the source of a legal question arising from disputes Six sources of dispute are the source of a legal question arising from disputes there are three unskilled sources which are the source of a legal question arising from disputes as well as three skilled sources which are the source of legal questions arising from disputes

“Which are the six sources of dispute which are the source of a legal question arising from disputes In this case, a monk becomes angry and bears ill-will.⁵ Monks, whatever monk becomes angry and bears ill-will, he lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Teacher, and he lives without deference, disrespectful towards

¹ That is to say, those of Defeat, those entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order, those of Expiation, those which ought to be confessed and those of wrong-doing.

² The above five, With grave offences and those of wrong speech added.

³ apalokanakamma. Vin-a 1195 says “having purified the Order living in the boundary, having brought the leave of absence of those who deserve to send leave of absence, the (formal) act should be carried out, having announced it three times for the approval of a complete Order.” Vin-a 1195 refers for all these types of formal acts to the Parivāra, i.e. to Vin 5.229ff. ⁴ These types of formal acts are also mentioned at Vin 4.152 in definition of “legitimate (formal) acts.” See BD 3.59, BD 3.60 for further references.

⁵ This recurs at AN iii.334; DN iii.246; MN i.96, MN ii.245. See Pp ii.1 where kodha and upanāhi form the subjects of questions.

5.119 dhamma, and he lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Order, and he does not complete the training. Monks, whatever monk lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Teacher, dhamma, and the Order and does not complete the training, he causes dispute in an Order, and that dispute comes to be for the harm of the many-folk, for the lack of ease of the many-folk, for the lack of the goal for the many-folk, for the harm and dissatisfaction of devas and mankind. If you, monks, should perceive a source of dispute like this among yourselves or among others, you, monks, should strive therein for the destruction of precisely that evil source of disputes. If you, monks, should perceive no source of dispute like this among yourselves or among others, you, monks, should therein follow a course (to stop) there being future effects of precisely that evil source of disputes. Thus there comes to be destruction of that evil source of disputes thus there come to be no future effects of that evil source of disputes.

“And again, monks, a monk becomes harsh¹ and unmerciful, he becomes envious and grudging, he becomes crafty and deceitful, he comes to have evil desires and wrong views, he comes to be infected with worldliness, obstinate, stubborn.² Monks, that monk who lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Teacher ... thus there come to be no future effects of that evil source of disputes. These six sources of dispute are the source of a legal question arising from disputes.

1.14.4 “Which three unskilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from disputes. In this case, monks dispute covetous in mind, they dispute corrupt in mind, they dispute erring in mind, saying: ‘It is dhamma’ or ‘It is not dhamma’ or ... ‘It is not a bad offence.’³ These three unskilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from disputes.

“Which three skilled sources are the source of a legal question

¹ The first six words occur at MN i.96 (cf. MN i.43) and they form subjects of questions at Pp ii.2–Pp ii.4. The first five occur at Ja iii.259. ² Cf. MN i.43, MN i.96, MN i.402; DN iii.247; AN iii.335, AN v.150. ³ As at Kd 14.14.2.

arising from disputes In this case, monks dispute not covetous in mind, they dispute not corrupt in mind, they dispute not erring in mind, saying: 'It is dhamma' or 'It is not dhamma' ... or 'It is not a bad offence'. These three skilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from disputes

“What is the source of a legal question arising from censure? Six sources of censure are the source of a legal question arising from censure: there are three unskilled sources which are the source of a legal question arising from censure as well as three skilled sources which are the source of a legal question arising from censure; body, too, is a source of a legal question arising from censure; speech, too, is a source of a legal question arising from censure.

“Which are the six sources of censure that are the source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case, monks, a monk becomes angry and bears ill-will ... (as in Kd 14.14.3. Instead of dispute read censure, source of censure, etc.) ... These six sources of censure are the source of a legal question arising from censure.

“Which three unskilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case, monks, covetous in mind, censure a monk, corrupt in mind they censure (him), erring in mind they censure him with falling away from moral habit or with falling away from good habits or with falling away from right view or with falling away from a right mode of livelihood. These three unskilled source are the sources of a legal question arising from censure.

“Which three skilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case monks, not covetous in mind, censure a monk; not corrupt in mind ... not erring in mind, they censure him with falling away from moral habit ... with falling away from a right mode of living. These three skilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from censure.

“Which (kind of) a body is a source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case someone comes to be of a bad colour,¹ ugly, deformed, very ill or blind of one eye or paralysed down one side or lame or a cripple, on account of which they censure him. This (kind of) body is a source of a legal question arising from censure.

¹ As at AN i.107=AN ii.85=SN i.94=MN iii.169=Pp 51.

“Which (kind of) speech is a source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case someone comes to be surly, stuttering, of hoarse enunciation, on account of which they censure him. This (kind of) speech is a source of a legal question arising from censure.

“What is the source of a legal question arising from offences? Six origins of offences are the source of a legal question arising from offences: there is the offence which originates from the body, not from speech, not from mind; there is the offence which originates from speech, not from body, not from mind; there is the offence which originates from body and from speech, not from mind; there is the offence which originates from body and from mind, not from speech; there is the offence which originates from speech and mind, not from body; there is the offence which originates from body and from speech and from mind. These six origins of offences are the source of a legal question arising from offences.

“What is the source of a legal question arising from obligations? The Order is the sole source of a legal question arising from obligations.

“A legal question arising from disputes is it skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? A legal question arising from disputes may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. What here is a legal question arising from disputes that is skilled? In this case monks whose thoughts are skilled dispute, saying, ‘This is dhamma’ or ‘This is not dhamma’ or ... ‘This is not a bad offence.’ Whatever therein is strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, difference of opinion, other opinion, because the common appellation of heatedness is ‘quarrel’, this is called a legal question arising from dispute? that is skilled.

“What here is a legal question arising from disputes that is unskilled? In this case, monks whose thoughts are unskilled dispute, saying: ‘This is dhamma’ or ‘This is not dhamma’ or ... ‘This is not a bad offence’ ... because the common appellation of heatedness is ‘quarrel,’ this is called a legal question arising from disputes that is unskilled.

“What here is a legal question arising from disputes that is indeterminate? In this case, monks whose thoughts are indeterminate dispute, saying: ‘It is dhamma’ or ... ‘It is not a bad offence’ ... called a legal question arising from disputes that are indeterminate.

“A legal question arising from censure: is it skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? A legal question arising from censure may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. What here is a legal question arising from censure that is skilled? In this case monks whose thoughts are skilled censure a monk with falling away from moral habit or with falling away from good habits or with falling away from right views or with falling away from a right mode of livelihood. Whatever herein is censure, blaming, talking to, scolding, bickering, inciting, instigating, this is called a legal question arising from censure that is skilled.

“What here is a legal question arising from censure that is unskilled? In this case, monks whose thoughts are unskilled censure a monk ... What is here a legal question arising from censure that is indeterminate? In this case, monks whose thoughts are indeterminate censure a monk with falling away from ... a right mode of livelihood. Whatever herein is censure, blaming ... instigating, this is called a legal question arising from censure that is indeterminate.

“A legal question arising from offences: is it skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? A legal question arising from offences may be unskilled it may be indeterminate. There is no legal question arising from offences that is skilled. What is here a legal question arising from offences that is unskilled? A transgression committed knowingly, consciously, deliberately¹ is one that is called a legal question arising from offences that is unskilled.

“What is here a legal question arising from offences that is indeterminate? A transgression committed not knowingly, not consciously, not deliberately is one that is called a legal question arising from offences that is indeterminate.

¹ As at Vin 3.73, Vin 3.112, Vin 4.290.

“A legal question arising from obligations: is it skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? A legal question arising from obligations may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. What is here a legal question arising from obligations that is skilled? Whatever (formal) act that an Order, good in mind, carries out: a (formal) act for which leave ought to be asked, a (formal) act at which a motion is put, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by one resolution, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by a resolution made three times¹—this is called a legal question arising from obligations that is skilled.

“What is here a legal question arising from obligations that is unskilled? Whatever (formal) act that an Order bad in mind, carries out ... What is here a legal question arising from obligations that is indeterminate? Whatever (formal) act that an Order, indeterminate in mind, carries out ... this is called a legal question arising from obligations that is indeterminate.

“(Can there be) a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes a dispute (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no dispute, a legal question as well as a dispute? There may be a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes there may be a dispute (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no dispute, there may be a legal question as well as a dispute.

“What is here a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes In this case, monks dispute, saying: ‘This is dhamma’ or ... ‘This is not a bad offence’.² Whatever herein³ is strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, difference of opinion, other opinion, because the common appellation of heatedness is ‘quarrel’ this is called a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes

“What is here a dispute (but) not a legal question? Mother disputes with son and son disputes with, mother, and father disputes with son and son disputes with father, and brother disputes with brother and brother disputes with sister and sister disputes with brother, and friend disputes with friend. This is a dispute (but) not a legal question.

¹ As above, Kd 14.14.2. ² As in Kd 14.14.2. ³ As in Kd 14.14.8.

“What is here a legal question (but) not a dispute? A legal question arising from censure, a legal question arising from offences, a legal question arising from obligations. This is a legal question (but) not a dispute.

“What is here a legal question as well as a dispute? A legal question arising from disputes is a legal question as well as a dispute.

“(Can there be) censure and a legal question arising from censure, censure (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no censure, a legal question as well as censure? There may be censure and a legal question arising from censure, there may be censure (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no censure, there may be a legal question as well as censure.

“What is here censure and a legal question arising from censure? In this case monks censure a monk with falling away from moral habit or ... with falling away from a right mode of living. Whatever herein is censure, blaming ... instigating, this is censure and a legal question arising from censure.

“What is here censure (but) not a legal question? Mother censures son and son censures mother ... and friend censures friend. This is censure (but) not a legal question.

“What is here a legal question (but) not censure? A legal question arising from offences, a legal question arising from obligations, a legal question arising from disputes This is a legal question but not censure.

“What is here a legal question as well as censure? A legal question arising from censure is a legal question as well as censure.

“(Can there be) an offence and a legal question arising from offences, an offence (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no offence, a legal question as well as an offence? There may be an offence and a legal question arising from offences, there may be an offence (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no offence, there may be a legal question as well as an offence.

“What is here an offence and a legal question arising from offences?

Kd 14.1

BD 5.12

Kd 14.1

Vin 2.9

The five classes of offences (yield) a legal question arising from offences and the seven classes of offences (yield) a legal question arising from offences. This is an offence and a legal question arising from offences.

“What is here an offence (but) not a legal question? Stream-attainment and Attainment.¹ This is “falling” but not a legal question.

“What is here a legal question (but) not an offence? A legal question arising from obligations, a legal question arising from disputes a legal question arising from censure. This is a legal question (but) not an offence.

“What is here a legal question as well as an offence? A legal question arising from offences is a legal question as well as an offence.

“(Can there be) an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations, an obligation (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no obligation, a legal question as well as an obligation? There may be an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations, there may be an obligation (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no obligation, there may be a legal question as well as an obligation.

“What is here an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations? Whatever is an Order’s business and ought to be done by it: a (formal) act for which leave ought to be asked, a (formal) act at which a motion is put, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by one resolution, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by a resolution made three times—this is an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations.

“What is here an obligation (but) no legal question? An obligation to a teacher, an obligation to a preceptor, an obligation to one who has the same preceptor, an obligation to one who has the same teacher. This is an obligation (but) not a legal question.

“What is here a legal question (but) not an obligation? A legal question arising from disputes ... arising from censure ... arising from offences. This is a legal question (but) not an obligation.

¹ For this play of words on āpatti, sot-āpatti and sam-āpatti see BD 2.177, n. 5.

“What is here a legal question as well as an obligation? A legal question arising from obligations is a legal question as well as an obligation.

SETTLEMENT OF ISSUES

“By how many kinds of decision is a legal question arising from disputes agreed upon? A legal question arising from disputes is (agreed upon) by two (kinds of) decisions: by a verdict in the presence of and by the decision of the majority. If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from disputes without having recourse to one (kind of) decision—the decision of the majority—one may agree upon it by the other (kind of) decision—the verdict in the presence of?’ he should be told: ‘It can be’. It is like this: In this case monks dispute, saying: ‘It is dhamma’ ... or ‘It is a bad offence’. If, monks, these monks are able to settle that legal question this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of. And what here (is needed) for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of an Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of individuals.

“And what here is the presence of an Order? When as many monks as are competent for (formal) acts have arrived, when the consent of those deserving (to send their) consent has been brought, when being face to face they do not protest. This is here the presence of an Order.

“And what is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline? If that legal question is settled by whatever is rule,¹ by whatever is discipline, by whatever is the Teacher’s instruction, that is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline.

“And what is here the presence of individuals? Whoever quarrels and whoever he quarrels with, both, hostile about the matter,² come face to face. This is here the presence of individuals.

¹ dhammena. ² Oldenberg’s text reads attapaccatthikā. It should probably be attha-. Perhaps the reference is to “the two who are litigating about the matter.” The phrase is not usually repeated in the subsequent parallel passages; but see BD 5.129 below.

“Monks, if a legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.¹ If one who has given his consent² criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.³

“If, monk, these monks are not able to settle that legal question in that residence, then, monks, these monks should go to some residence where there are more monks. If, monks, these monks as they are going to that residence are able to settle that legal question on the way, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of ... (as in Kd 14.14.16) ... in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

“If, monks, these monks as they are going to that residence are not able to settle that legal question on the way, then, monks, these monks, having arrived at that residence, should speak thus to the resident monks: ‘This legal question, your reverences, has arisen thus, has sprung up thus. It were good if the venerable ones could settle this legal question by rule, by discipline, by the Teacher’s instruction, so that this legal question may be properly settled.’ If, monks, the resident monks are the senior and the in-coming monks the more newly ordained, then, monks, the in-coming monks should be spoken to thus by the resident monks: ‘Please do you, venerable ones, remain at a respectful distance for a moment until we have considered.’ But if, monks, the resident monks are the more newly ordained and the in-coming monks are the senior, then, monks, the in-coming monks should be spoken to thus by these resident monks: ‘Well then, do you, venerable ones, remain just here for a moment until we have considered’. If, monks, it occurs to these resident monks while they are thus considering: ‘We are not able to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction,’ that legal question should not be taken up. But if, monks, it occurs to the resident monks while they are thus considering: ‘We are able to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher's instruction,' monks, the incoming monks should be spoken to thus by these resident monks: 'If you, venerable ones, will tell us how this legal question has arisen, how it has sprung up, then in so far as we settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher's instruction, so will it be settled.¹ In this way we will take up this legal question. But if you, venerable ones, will not tell us how this legal question has arisen, how it has sprung up, then in so far as we settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher's instruction, so will it be settled. But we will not take up this legal question.'" Having thus arranged it properly, monks, that legal question should be taken up by the resident monks. Monks, the resident monks should be spoken to thus by the incoming monks: 'We will tell the venerable ones how this legal question has arisen, how it has sprung up. If the venerable ones are able with or without this much² to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher's instruction, then will it be properly settled, and we will therefore give this legal question into the charge of the venerable ones. But if the venerable ones are not able with or without this much to settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher's instruction, then will it be not properly settled and we will not give this legal question into the charge of the venerable ones—we ourselves will become the masters³ in regard to this legal question'. Having thus arranged it properly, monks, the incoming monks should give that legal question into the charge of the resident monks. Monks, if these monks are able to settle that legal question, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? ... (as in Kd 14.14.16) ... in criticising, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Bu-Pc 63. ² chandadāyaka, probably meaning has given his consent for the formal act to be carried out without him as, through illness, he cannot be present for it. ³ Bu-Pc 79.

"If, monks, while those monks are investigating that legal question both endless disputations arise,⁴ and of not one speech is the meaning clear, I allow you, monks, to settle a legal question like this by means of a referendum.¹ A monk possessed of ten qualities should be agreed upon for the referendum: one who is moral in habit,² who lives restrained by the restraint of the Pātimokkha, who, possessed of good conduct, sees danger in the slightest faults, who takes up and trains himself in the rules of training, who has heard much, an expert in the heard, a storehouse of the heard; those things which, lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle and lovely at the ending, declare with the spirit, with the letter the Brahma-faring utterly fulfilled, wholly purified — things like this are much heard by him, learnt by heart, repeated out loud, pondered upon, considered carefully, well penetrated by vision; both the Pātimokkhas are properly handed down to him in detail, properly sectioned, properly regulated, properly investigated clause by clause as to the linguistic form; he comes to be clever in discipline, imperturbable; he comes to be competent in convincing both of those who are hostile about the matter, in winning them over, in making them consider, in understanding, in reconciling them; he comes to be skilled in settling a legal question that has arisen; he knows what is a legal question; he knows the uprising of a legal question; he knows the stopping of a legal question; he knows the course leading to the stopping of a legal question. I allow, monks, a monk possessed of these ten qualities to be agreed upon for a referendum.

¹ Meaning that the incoming monks must abide by the decision. ² ettakena vā antarena. ³ sāmīno, rendered as "we shall retain the custody" at Vinaya Texts iii.49.

⁴ anaggāni c'eva bhassāni. Vin-a 1197 reads anantāni for amaggāni, and glosses by aparimāṇāni, limitless. See Vin 2.305.

“And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, a monk should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the monk So-and-so and So-and-so to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question ... was the meaning clear. The Order is agreeing upon the monk So-and-so and So-and-so to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. If the agreement upon the monk So-and-so and So-and-so to settle this legal question by means of a referendum is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so and So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.'

¹ ubbāhikāya, a committee. See Kd 22.2.7. The following passage = AN v.71. ² As at Vin 4.51 to “linguistic form” below; and as at AN ii.22 to “vision” below. For further references see BD 2.265–BD.2.266. See also Kd 9.5.1.

"If, monks, these monks are able to settle this legal question by means of a referendum, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of. And what is here needed for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of the individuals ... (as in Kd 14.14.16) ... If, monks, the legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.¹

"If, monks, while these monks are investigating that legal question there should be there a monk who is a speaker of dhamma but to whom neither the rule² comes to have been handed down nor the analysis of the rule,³ if he, not considering the meaning, holds back the meaning under the shadow of the letter, these monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Let the venerable ones listen to me. This monk So-and-so is a speaker of dhamma, but he is one to whom neither the rule nor the analysis of the rule has been handed down; not considering the meaning, he holds back the meaning under the shadow of the letter. If it seems right to the venerable ones, let the remainder, having had this monk

¹ Bu-Pc 63. ² sutta, in the singular. It cannot well mean here the "tradition", āgama, or the sayings in which dhamma was set forth. For this monk evidently knew dhamma, which, above, must be different from sutta. There is also a difference between knowing a rule or clause, sutta (in the sense in which it is sometimes used in Vinaya) and its analysis, which implies a wider knowledge as of the material surrounding a rule of training. On sutta, as used in Vinaya see BD 1, Introduction, p. x. Vin-a 1197 says sutta is mātikā, heading or summary. ³ Suttavibhaṅga; Vin-a 1197 says "not versed in discipline" (vinaya).

Kd 14.1

Kd 14.1
BD 5.13

Vin 2.9

removed,¹ settle that legal question'. If, monks, these monks, having had that monk removed, are able to settle that legal question, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of. And what is here needed for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of individuals ... (as in Kd 14.14.16) ... Monks, if a legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

^{14.23} "If, monks, whilst those monks are investigating the legal question there should be there a monk who is a speaker of dhamma and one to whom the rule has been handed down but not the analysis of the rule, if he, not considering the meaning, holds back the meaning under the shadow of the letter, these monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Let the venerable ones listen to me. This monk So-and-so is a speaker of dhamma and he is one to whom the rule has been handed down but not the analysis of the rule; not considering the meaning in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

^{14.24}
^{5.131} "If, monks, these monks are not able to settle that legal question by a referendum, monks, that legal question should be given into the charge of an Order by these monks, saying: 'We, honoured sirs, are not able to settle this legal question by a referendum. Let the Order itself settle this legal question.' I allow you, monks, to settle a legal question like this by the decision of the majority.² A monk possessed of five qualities should be agreed upon as distributor of (voting) tickets ... (as in Kd 14.9) ... '... Thus do I understand this.' The monk who is the distributor of (voting) tickets should make the (voting) tickets pass round. According to the way in which the greater number of monks who profess dhamma speak, so should this legal question be settled. This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by the decision of the majority. And what is here (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of an Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of the individuals. And what is here the presence of an Order? ... (as in Kd 14.14.16) ... This is here the presence of the individuals.

¹ vuṭṭhāpetvā. ² yebhuyyasikāya. See Vin 5.49

“And what is here the decision of the majority? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against a (formal) act (settled) by the decision of the majority, this is here the decision of the majority. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation; if one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.”¹

Now at that time at Sāvaththī a legal question had arisen thus, had sprung up thus. Then these monks were displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the Order at Sāvaththī. They heard it said: “In a certain residence several elders are staying who have heard much, to whom the tradition has been handed down, experts in dhamma, experts in discipline, experts in the headings, learned, experienced, clever, conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training; if these elders would settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction, thus would this legal question be properly settled.” Then these monks, having gone to that residence, spoke thus to those elders: “This legal question, honoured sirs, arose thus, sprang up thus. It were good, honoured sirs, if the elders were to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction, so that this legal question might be properly settled.” Then these elders thought: “Because this legal question was settled by the Order at Sāvaththī, it was therefore properly settled,’ and they settled that legal question in the same way. Then these monks were displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the Order at Sāvaththī, they were displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the several elders.

¹ As at Kd 14.14.16, Kd 14.14.27.

They heard it said: “In a certain residence three elders are staying ... two elders are staying ... one elder is staying who has heard much, to whom the tradition has been handed down ... desirous of training; if this elder would settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher’s instruction, thus would this legal question be properly settled.” Then these monks, having gone to that residence, spoke thus to that elder: “This legal question, honoured sir, arose thus, sprang up thus. It were good, honoured sir, if the elder were to settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher’s instruction, so that this legal question might be properly settled.” Then that elder thought: ‘Because this legal question was settled by the Order at Sāvattḥī, because this legal question was settled by several elders, because this legal question was settled by three elders, because this legal question was settled by two elders it was therefore properly settled,’ and he settled that legal question in the same way. Then these monks, displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the Order at Sāvattḥī, displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the several elders ... by the three elders ... by the two elders, displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the one elder, approached the Lord; having approached, they told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, this legal question is done with, it is exhausted,¹ it is settled, it is properly settled.

“I allow, monks, in order to convince these monks, three methods of taking votes:² the secret, the whispering in the ear, the open. And what, monks, is the secret method of taking votes? The monk who is the distributor of voting tickets, having made the tickets different³ (from one another), having approached each monk, should speak to him thus: ‘This ticket is for one of such a view, this ticket is for one of such a view. Take whichever you like.’ When he has taken it, he should be told: ‘And do not show it to anybody’. If he finds that the majority profess what is not-dhamma and thinks (the voting is) wrongly taken (the result) should be rejected.¹ If he finds that the majority profess dhamma and thinks (the voting is) rightly taken (the result) should be announced. This, monks, is the secret (method of) taking votes.

¹ santa is both worn out, exhausted and (more commonly) appeased, tranquillised.

² salākagāha, more literally “distributing (or, making pass) the (voting) tickets.”

³ vaṇṇāvaṇṇa. Vin-a 1198 says that the tickets for those who profess dhamma and for those who profess non-dhamma should be marked by different signs, nimitta (not different colours, as at Vinaya Texts iii.56).

“And what, monks, is the method of taking votes by whispering in the ear? The monk who is the distributor of voting tickets should speak into the ear of each monk, saying: ‘This ticket is for one of such a view, this ticket is for one of such a view. Take whichever you like.’ When he has taken it, he should be told: ‘And do not tell anyone about it.’ If he finds that the majority profess what is not-dhamma and thinks (the voting is) wrongly taken (the result) should be rejected. If he finds that the majority profess dhamma and thinks (the voting is) rightly taken (the result) should be announced. This, monks, is the method of taking votes by whispering in the ear.

“And what, monks, is the open method of taking votes? If he finds that those who profess dhamma are in the majority, because of his very confidence he should make them take openly. This, monks, is the open method of taking votes. These, monks, are the three methods of taking votes.

“By how many (kinds of) decisions is a legal question arising from censure agreed upon? A legal question arising from censure is agreed upon by four (kinds of) decisions: by a verdict in the presence of, by a verdict of innocence, by a verdict of past insanity, by a decision for specific depravity. If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from censure, without having recourse to two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict of past insanity and the decision for specific depravity—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the verdict of innocence?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where monks defame a monk with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. Monks, a verdict of innocence should be given to that monk who has remembered fully.¹ And thus, monks, should it be given: That monk, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘Honoured sirs, monks defamed me with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. But I, honoured sirs, having remembered fully, ask the Order for a verdict of innocence’. And a second time it should be asked for. And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Monks defamed the monk So-and-so with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit; he, having remembered fully, is asking the Order for a verdict of innocence. If it seems right to the Order ... (as in Kd 14.4.10) ... Thus do I understand this.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence. And what is here needed for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline and the presence of the individuals ... (as at Kd 14.14.16) ... And what is here the presence of the individuals? Whoever quarrels and whoever he quarrels with, if both come face to face,² this is here the presence of the individuals.

¹ paccukkaḍḍhitabbaṃ. Vin-a 1198 says (the distributor) “having said the tickets were wrongly taken, having distributed them again, may distribute them up to a third time.”

“And what is here needed for a verdict of innocence? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against a formal act for a verdict of innocence, that is what is needed here for a verdict of innocence. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

“If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from censure, without having recourse to two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict of innocence and the decision for specific depravity—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the verdict of past insanity?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where a monk becomes mad, out of his mind,¹ and while he was mad, out of his mind, he perpetrated much and spoke in a way that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reprove him because of offences done by him while he was mad, out of his mind, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ He speaks thus: ‘I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken by me that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane.’ Although being spoken to thus, they still reprove him, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like that?’ Monks, a verdict of past insanity should be given to that monk who is no longer insane.

¹ Cf. above, Kd 14.4.10. ² As at Kd 14.14.16, but omitting “hostile about the matter.”

“And thus, monks, should it be given: Monks, that monk, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, was mad ... (as in Kd 14.5.2. Instead of Gagga read the monk So-and-so) ... Thus do I understand this.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of past insanity. And what here (is needed) for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order ... (as in Kd 14.14.16) ... And what is here (needed for) a verdict of past insanity? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of ... the non-protesting against a verdict of past insanity, that here is what (is needed for) a verdict of past insanity. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus and one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

“If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from censure, without having recourse to two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict of innocence and the verdict of past insanity—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the decision for specific depravity?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where a monk reproves a monk in the midst of the Order for a serious offence, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat?’ He speaks thus: ‘I do not remember, your reverence, having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat.’ Although denying this, he presses him, saying: ‘Please, venerable one, find out properly whether you remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat.’ He speaks thus: ‘I, your reverence, do not remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat. But I, your reverence, remember having fallen into a trifling offence like this.’ Although denying this, he presses him, saying: ‘Please, venerable one, find out properly whether you remember ... bordering on one involving defeat’. He speaks thus: ‘Your reverence, unasked I acknowledge having fallen into a trifling offence like this; how could I, when asked, not acknowledge having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat?’ He speaks thus: ‘But, your reverence, unasked you did not acknowledge having fallen into a trifling offence, so how will you, unasked, acknowledge having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat? Please, venerable one, find out properly whether you remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat.’ He speaks thus: ‘Your reverence, I do remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat. When I said: I do not remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat—this was said by me in jest,¹ this was said by me in haste.’²

¹ As at Kd 14.5.1–Kd 14.5.2, for the monk Gagga.

¹ Cf. Vin 4.4 for davā, ravā. ² Cf. Vin 4.4 for davā, ravā.

“Monks, a (formal) act for the decision of specific depravity should be carried out against this monk. And thus, monks, should it be carried out. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying ... (as in Kd 14.11.2. Instead of the monk Uvāḷa read the monk So-and-so; instead of offences read serious offences) ... Thus do I understand this.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a decision for specific gravity. And what is here (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order ... (as in Kd 14.14.16) ... And what here is (needed for) a decision for specific depravity? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against a decision for specific depravity, that is here what is needed for a decision for specific depravity. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus and one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

“By how many (kinds of) decisions is a legal question arising from offences agreed upon? A legal question arising from offences is agreed upon by three (kinds of) decisions: by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out of it on his acknowledgement¹ and by the covering up (as) with grass.² If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from offences, without having recourse to one (kind of) decision—the covering up (as) with grass—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the carrying out of it on his acknowledgement?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where a monk comes to have fallen into a slight offence. Monks, that monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I, your reverence, fallen into such and such an offence, confess it.’ It should be said by him: ‘Do you see it?’ ‘Yes, I see it.’ ‘You should be restrained in the future.’

¹ Cf. Vin 4.4 for davā, ravā. ² See BD 3.153, BD 3.154.

This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out of it of his acknowledgement. And what here is (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of rule¹ and the presence of discipline and the presence of individuals. And what here is the presence of individuals? If both whoever confesses and he to whom he confesses are face to face, this here is the presence of individuals. And what here is (needed for) the carrying out on his acknowledgement? Whatever is the carrying out ... the non-protesting against his making an acknowledgement, that is here what is needed for his making an acknowledgement. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and the one who accepts (the confession) opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

“If he manages this thus, it is good. But if he does not manage it, monks, that monk, having approached several monks, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to them: ‘I, honoured sirs, fallen into such and such an offence, confess it.’ These monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. This monk So-and-so remembers an offence, he discloses it, he declares it, he confesses it. If it seems right to the venerable ones, I will accept (the confession) of the monk So-and-so’s offence.’ He should say: ‘Do you see it?’ ‘Yes, I see it.’ ‘You should be restrained in the future.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of ... (as in Kd 14.14.31) ... in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

“If he manages this thus, it is good. But if he does not manage it, monks, that monk, having approached an Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fallen into such and such an offence, confess it.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk

¹ Presence of the Order not required here, as the monk has confessed to one monk only.

So-and-so remembers an offence, he discloses it, he declares it, he confesses it. If it seems right to the Order I could accept (the confession) of the monk So-and-so's offence.' He should say: 'Do you see it?' 'Yes, I see it.' 'You should be restrained in the future.' This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on his acknowledgement. And what here is (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline and the presence of the individuals ... If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and the one who accepts (the confession) opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

"If one says: 'Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from offences, without having recourse to one decision—the carrying out on his acknowledgement—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the covering up (as) with grass?' he should be told, 'It can be.' It is like this: 'This is a case, monks, where while monks were striving ... (as in Kd 14.13.1-Kd 14.13.3) ... Thus do I understand this.' This is called, monks, a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a covering up (as) with grass. And what here is (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of the individuals. And what here is the presence of the Order? When as many monks as are competent for (formal) acts have arrived, when the consent of those deserving (to send their) consent has been brought, when being face to face they do not protest. This is here the presence of the Order.

"And what is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline? If that legal question is settled by whatever is rule, by whatever is discipline, by whatever is the Teacher's instruction, that is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline.

"And what is here the presence of individuals? If both whoever

Kd 14.1

BD 5.1a

Vin 2.1a

confesses and he to whom he confesses are face to face, this is here the presence of the individuals.

“And what here is (needed for) the covering up (as) with grass? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against the covering up (as) with grass, that is here what is (needed for) the covering up (as) with grass. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and if the one who accepts (the confession) opens it up, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

“By how many (kinds of) decisions is a legal question arising from obligations agreed upon? A legal question arising from obligations is agreed upon by one (kind of) decision: the verdict in the presence of.”

*Told is the Fourth Section: that on Settlements.*¹

¹ There is no uddāna, summary or key to this Section.

15. MINOR MATTERS (KHUDDAKA)

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time the group of six monks, while they were bathing, rubbed their bodies against a tree and their thighs and their arms and their chests and their backs. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about saying: "How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, while they are bathing, rub their bodies against a tree ... and their backs, like boxers and wrestlers and young villagers?"¹ Monks heard these people who were ... spreading it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: "Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks ... and their backs?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

"Monks, it is not suitable in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men, while they are bathing, rub their bodies against a tree ... and their backs? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ gāmapoddavā. Word very uncertain, and seems to show confusion between gāma and kāma, variant reading being kāmapudavā. According to Vin 2.315, Buddhaghosa explains: kāmapudavā ti chavirāgamaṇḍanānuyuttā nāgarikamanussā; gāmaṇḍapodavā ti pi pādho es'ev'attho; the meaning of kāmapudarā is urban people addicted to ornamenting and dyeing the skin: gāmaṇ (village) -podavā is also a reading. TAKAKUSU and NAGAI's edition, Vin-a vi.1199, reads: gāmapūṭavā (variant reading gāmamudavā) ti chavirāgamaṇḍanānuyuttā nāgarikamanussā, gāmapotakā (young village men) ti pi pādho.

“Monks, while a monk is bathing he should not rub his body against a tree. Whoever should (so) rub it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”¹

15.1.2

15.1.2

Now at that time the group of six monks, while they were bathing, rubbed their bodies against a post ... (as in Kd 15.1.1. For tree read post) ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, while they were bathing, rubbed their bodies against a wall² ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

15.1.3

2.106

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe on a rubbing-board.³ People spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, you should not bathe on a rubbing-board. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe using a gandhabba-hand (device)⁴ ... “... Monks, you should not bathe using a gandhabba-hand (device). Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Note that it is not actually made an offence to rub the other parts of the person mentioned; but doubtless these are meant to be included. ² Three kinds of walls are mentioned at Vin 4.266. Vin-a 1199 says that it is one of these. ³ aṭṭāna. Vin-a 1199 reads aṭṭhāna, and explains this as a tree made like a plank of wood, cut into rows of squares and sunk into the ground at a bathing ford. People rub their bodies there, having sprinkled on chunam. ⁴ gandhabbahatthaka. Vin-a 1199 says “by means of a wooden hand set up at a bathing ford; having taken chunam with them, people rub their bodies.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe using a string of vermilion covered beads.¹ ... “... Monks, you should not bathe using a string of vermilion covered beads. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, having plunged into² (water), causing a rubbing to be made.³ ... “Monks, you should not, having plunged into (water), cause a rubbing to be made. Whoever should (so) cause it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe using a scrubber.⁴ ... “Monks, you should not bathe using a scrubber. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be afflicted by a scab disease, and there came to be no comfort for him without a scrubber. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, one who is ill (to use) an unshaped scrubber.”⁵

Now at that time a certain monk, weak through age, was not able

¹ kuruvindakasutta. Quoted at MN-a iii.280. Vin-a 1200 says, “it is called a string of beads made by grinding vermilion chunams and stones with lac dyes. Holding this at both ends, they rub the body.” Cf. kuruvindakacuppa at Ja iii.282 (vermilion coloured chunam). ² vigayha. Pali-English Dictionary under vigāhati says, “At Vin 2.106 we should prefer to react viggayha for vigayha.” Vin-a 1200 has the reading viggayha. One of meanings of vigrah in the Sanskrit Dictionaries is “to lay hold of.” ³ bhikkhū vigayha parikammaṃ kārāpentī, explained by Vin-a 1200 as “each one rubbed up his body against the bodies of the others”—no doubt some kind of enjoyable massage or friction. ⁴ mallaka. Vin-a 1200 says “having cut swordfish teeth, it is called a shaped scrubber, katamallaka, owing to its mallaka form (or configuration, mallakamūla)”. ⁵ akatamallaka. See previous note; and Vin-a 1200 which says “it is made not having cut the teeth. It must be a broken piece of wood or of tortoiseshell.”

while bathing to rub his own body. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a strip of cloth.”¹

Now at that time the monks were doubtful how to give a rubbing to their backs.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, the ordinary mode with the hand.”³

15:2.1
5:14.4
Now at that time the group of six monks wore ear ornaments, they wore chains,⁴ they wore ornamental strings of beads for the throat,⁵ they wore ornaments at the waist,⁶ they wore bangles,⁷ they wore armlets,⁸ they wore bracelets,⁹ they wore finger rings. People ... spread it about, saying ... he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, ear ornaments should not be worn, chains ... ornamental strings of beads for the throat ... ornaments at the waist ... bangles ... armlets ... bracelets ... finger rings should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these things), there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

15:2.2
2:10.7
Now at that time the group of six monks wore their hair long. People ... spread it about ... he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, long hair should not be worn. Whoever should so wear it, there is ¹ ukkāsikā, explained at Vin-a 1200 as vatthavaṭṭi. Vattha is cloth, clothing; vaṭṭi, a strip, ball, pad. Oldenberg’s version of the Commentary reads vaṭṭa (for vattha) which rendered the word “unintelligible” (see Vinaya Texts iii.68, n. 3) and he seems not to have had access to the full exegesis: tasmā nahāyantassa yassa kassaci nahānasātakavaṭṭiyā piṭṭhiṃ ghaṃsiturū vaṭṭati: therefore when anyone is bathing he may rub his back with a strip (or pad) of a cloth for bathing. ² piṭṭhiparikamma, as at SN-a i.296. ³ puthupāṇiya, explained at Vin-a 1200 by hatthaparikamma, hand treatment. ⁴ pāmaṅga. See BD 1.77, n. 9. Vin-a 1200 on word in above passage says whatever is a pāmaṅgasutta. ⁵ kaṅṭhasuttaka. As at BD 1.78. ⁶ kaṭṭisuttaka. See BD 1.78, n. 2. ⁷ ovaṭṭika, perhaps round the ankles. Ovaṭṭika has a different sense at Kd 7.1.5. ⁸ kāyūra, or bracelets for above the elbow. Cf. keyūra at Dh-a ii.220. But as noted at Vinaya Texts iii.69, n. 5. The Jātaka Commentary says that kāyūra is an ornamental decoration for the throat. ⁹ No doubt round the wrist since they are called hatthābharāṇa.

an offence of wrong-doing. I allow it to be of a two months' growth or two finger-breadths (in length)."

Now at that time the group of six monks smoothed their hair with a comb, they smoothed their hair with an instrument shaped like a snake's hood,¹ they smoothed their hair with their hands used as an instrument shaped like a snake's hood,² they smoothed their hair with oil of beeswax,³ they smoothed their hair with oily water. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, the hair should not be smoothed with a comb ... the hair should not be smoothed with oily water. Whoever should smooth it (in any of these ways), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Now at that time the group of six monks examined a mark on the face in a mirror and in a water-bowl.⁴ People spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, a mark on the face should not be examined in a mirror or in a water-bowl. Whoever should (so) examine it, there is an offence of wrong-doing." Now at that time a certain monk had a sore on his face. He asked monks, saying: "What kind of sore have I, your reverences?" The monks spoke thus: "The sore is of such and such a kind, your reverence." He did not believe them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, on account of a disease, to examine a mark on the face in a mirror or in a water-bowl."

Now at that time the group of six monks anointed their faces,⁵

¹ phaṇaka. Vin-a 1200 only says something made of ivory and so on. Vinaya Texts iii.70, n. 2 says "it was a kind of very primitive brush, but without bristles."

² hatthaphaṇaka. The hands would be held as a snake's hood with the fingers curving forwards and the hair would be smoothed with the fingers. Cf. phaṇahatthaka at Vin 1.91, and see BD 4.116, n. 2. ³ Allowed at Vin 2.152 for use in a vihāra. ⁴ Cf. DN i.80, SN iii.105. ⁵ Cf. Vin 2.266, Vin 4.342.

they rubbed (paste) into their faces, they powdered their faces with chunam, they smeared their faces with red arsenic, they painted their limbs, they painted their faces, they painted their limbs and faces. People spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the face should not be anointed, the face should not be rubbed (with paste), the face should not be powdered with chunam, the face should not be smeared with red arsenic, the limbs should not be painted, the face should not be painted, limbs and faces should not be painted. Whoever should do (any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk was afflicted by a disease of the eyes. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, on account of disease, to anoint the face.”

15.2.6
2.108
Now at that time there was a festival on a mountain-top in Rājagaha.¹ The group of six monks went to see the festival on the mountain-top. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans come to see dancing and singing and music like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not go to see dancing² or singing or music. Whoever should go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

15.3.1
5.146
Now at that time the group of six monks sang dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Even as we sing, so do these recluses, sons of the Sakyans sing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks sing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said ...?”

¹ Cf. Vin 4.85 (BD 2.335, and n.) and Vin 4.267 (where the group of six nuns also go to the festival, made into an offence of expiation for them). ² Even to see a peacock dancing is an offence, Vin-a 1201. ³ Cf. AN iii.251.

“It is true, Lord.” ... Having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, there are these five disadvantages to one singing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound: he is pleased with himself in regard to that sound, and others are pleased in regard to that sound, and housepeople look down upon, and while he is himself striving after accuracy in the sound¹ there is an interruption in his concentration, and people coming after fall into the way of (wrong) views.² These, monks, are the five disadvantages to one singing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound. Monks, dhamma should not be sung with a long-drawn plain-song sound. Whoever should (so) sing it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks were doubtful about intoning.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow intoning.”

Now at that time the group of six monks wore woollen clothes with the fleece outside. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasure of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, woollen clothes with the fleece outside should not be worn. Whoever should wear them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”⁴

Now at that time the mango trees in the park of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha were bearing fruit and it was made known by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “Let the masters make as much use of the mangoes as they please.” The group of six monks, having made even young mangoes fall, made use of them. And King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha wanted a mango. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha enjoined people, saying: “Go, good sirs, having gone to the park, bring back a mango.”

¹ sarakutti. ² Vin-a 1202 says the people who come after will say “our teachers and preceptors sang it thus,” and they will sing it in the same way. Cf. AN iii.108, AN iii.256, SN ii.203. ³ sarabhañña. Cf. Vin 1.196, Ja ii.109, Dh-p-a i.154. Explained by Buddhaghosa as sarena bhaṇanam, speaking (or repeating) by means of intonation.

⁴ Vin-a 1202 here refers to the Commentary on the bhūtagāmasikkhāpada. This is Bu-Pc 11. (Vin 4.34; see BD 2.227, n. 1.) and the Commentary is at Vin-a 759ff.

“Very well, your majesty,” and these people having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, having gone to the park, spoke thus to the park keeper: “Good sir, his majesty wants a mango, give (us) a mango.”

“There is not a mango, masters; the monks having made even young mangoes fall, have made use of them.” Then these people told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha. He said: “Good sirs, mangoes are much enjoyed by the masters, yet it is moderation that the Lord extols.” People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, not knowing moderation, make use of the king’s mangoes?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, mangoes should not be made use of. Whoever should make use of them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”¹

Now at that time a certain guild came to have food for an Order.² Mango peels were put into the curry. Monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:) “Accept it, monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, mango peels.” Now at that time a Certain guild came to have food for an Order. They did not know how to prepare the peels; they walked into the refectory with the mangoes whole. Monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:) “Accept them, monks, make use of them. I allow you, monks, to make use of fruit that in five ways is allowable for recluses:³ if it is damaged⁴ by fire, damaged by a knife, damaged by (one’s) nail, if it is seedless, and the fifth is if the seeds are discharged.⁵ I allow you, monks, to make use of fruit that in these five ways is allowable to recluses.”

¹ Cf. BD 1.101f., BD 1.108. ² As at Kd 18.4.1. ³ Quoted Vin-a 767. ⁴ These five clauses are explained in detail at Vin-a 767, which rightly reads parijita (damaged) instead of the above paricita. ⁵ Cf. Kd 6.21.1 for the last two items.

Now at that time a certain monk, bitten by a snake, passed away.¹ They told this matter to the lord. He said: “Monks, this monk certainly did not suffuse with loving-kindness of mind the four royal snake families. For if, monks, this monk had suffused with loving-kindness of mind the four royal snake families, then this monk, although bitten by a snake, would not have passed away. What are the four royal snake families? The royal snake family of Virūpakkha,² the royal snake family of Erāpatha, the royal snake family of Chabyāputta, the royal snake family of Kaṇhāgotamaka. Monks, this monk certainly did not suffuse with loving-kindness of mind these four royal snake families. For if, monks, this monk had suffused with loving-kindness of mind these four royal snake families, then this monk, although bitten by a snake, would not have passed away. Monks, I allow you to suffuse with loving-kindness of mind these four royal snake families, (and) to make a charm³ for the self for self-protection, for self-guarding. And thus, monks, should it be made:

“Love from me for the Virūpakkhas,⁴
Love from me for the Erāpathas,
Love from me for the Chabyāputtas,
Love from me for the Kaṇhāgotamakas.

“Love from me for the footless,
Love for the two-footed from me,
Love from me for the four-footed,
Love for the many-footed from me.

“Do not let the footless harm me,

¹ Cf. AN ii.72 (which lays the scene in Sāvattthī) and Ja ii.144–Ja ii.147. ² Cf. GS ii.82, n. 1. Virūpakkha is also the name of one of the Four Great Kings, the regent of the western quarter and lord of the Nāgas. ³ On pariṭṭa, charm, spell, rune, and mettā-bhāvanā, cf. MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Dialogues of the Buddha iii.185f., Sakya, 221ff. Above reading is attaparittam katum; at AN ii.72 it is attaparittāya, “for self-warding.” ⁴ Loving-kindness or love, mettā, and the three other modes of the brahmavihāras are transferred from the mind of the suffuser to that of the being who is suffused or infused.

Do not let the two-footed harm me,
Do not let the four-footed harm me,
Do not let the many-footed harm me.

5:149

“May all beings, all breathers, all creatures every one,
See all lucky things;¹ may no evil whatever come.

“Immeasurable is the Awakened One, immeasurable dhamma,
immeasurable the Order.
Limited are creeping things: snakes, scorpions, centipedes, spinning spiders, lizards, mice.

“A protection has been made by me, a charm made by me;
Let the creatures withdraw.
I, even I, honour the Lord,
I honour the seven fully self-awakened Ones.”

“I allow you, monks, to let blood.”²

15:7.1

Now at that time a certain monk, tormented by dissatisfaction, cut off his own male organ. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This foolish man, monks, cut off one thing when another should have been cut off. Monks, one should not cut off one’s own male organ. Whoever should cut it off, there is a grave offence.”

15:8.1

Now at that time a block of sandal-wood of costly choice sandal-wood had accrued to a (great) merchant of Rājagaha.³ Then it occurred to this (great) merchant of Rājagaha: “Suppose that I were to have a bowl carved out of this block of sandal-wood? The chips will be for my enjoyment, and I can also give away the bowl as a gift.” Then that (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having had a bowl carved out of that block of sandal-wood, having put a string round it,⁴ having

¹ sabbe bhadrāni passantu. Cf. DN ii.89, sadā bhadrāni passati. ² Allowed also at Vin 1.205. ³ This story is referred to at DN-a ii.388 as the Rājagaha-seṭṭhi-vatthu.

⁴ At Kd 15.24.1 somewhat similar actions are ascribed to a monk.

hung it up on the top of a bamboo (-pole), having tied it to a series of bamboo (-poles); spoke thus: “Let whatever recluse or brahmin who is a perfected one as well as of psychic power get down this bowl and (to him) it is given.”¹ Then Pūraṇa Kassapa² approached the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, he spoke thus to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha:

“Now I, householder, am a perfected one as well as of psychic power; give me the bowl.”

“If, revered sir, the venerable one is a perfected one as well as of psychic power, let him fetch down the bowl and it is given (to him.)”

Then Makkhali Gosāla, Ajita Kesakambalin, Pakudha Kaccāyana, Sañjaya Belaṭṭhiputta, Nātaputta the Jain approached the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached ... “... it is given (to him).”

Now at that time the venerable Moggallāna the Great and the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja,³ having dressed in the morning, taking (each) his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja spoke thus to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

“The venerable Moggallāna the Great is a perfected one as well as of psychic power. Go along, reverend Moggallāna, fetch down this bowl; this bowl is for you.”

“The venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja a perfected one as well as of psychic power. Go along, reverend Bhāradvāja, fetch down this bowl; this bowl is for you.”

Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, having risen above the ground,⁴ having taken hold of that bowl, circled three times

¹ Cf. the words of the robber chief at Vin 3.208. ² He and the five others were the six great “heretical” teachers in Gotama’s times. Their views are given at DN i.52ff.

³ Verses at Thag 123, Thag 124. At AN i.23 he is called chief of the disciples who are lion-roarers. AN-a i.196, which gives his story including the above episode, holds that he was called Scrap-hunter, Piṇḍola, from his greed in searching for coney and rice. Other Commentaries (SN-a ii.393, Ud-a 252) ascribe his name to the large size of his bowl. For notes on the name Piṇḍola see Psalms of the Bretheren, p.110, n. 4, and Psalms of the Bretheren, p.415; KS iv.68, n. 1. ⁴ vehāsa. See BD 1.79, n. 6.

round Rājagaha. Now at that time, the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was standing with his wife and children in his own dwelling holding up his joined palms in salutation, paying homage, and saying: “Honoured sir, let master Bhāradvāja come to rest just here at our dwelling.” Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja came to rest at the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having taken the bowl from the hand of the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, having filled it with costly solid foods, bestowed it on the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja. Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, having taken hold of that bowl, went off to the monastery.

People heard: “It is said that the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was fetched down by master Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja,” and these people (making) a loud noise, a great noise, followed close after the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja. Then the Lord heard the loud noise, the great noise, and having heard it, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “What on earth, Ānanda, is this loud noise, this great noise?”

“Lord, the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha has been fetched down by the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja. Lord, people heard: ‘It is said that the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was fetched down by the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, and, Lord, these people (making) a loud noise, a great noise, have followed close after the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja’; this, Lord, is the loud noise, the great noise which the Lord (hears).”

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, Bhāradvāja, that the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was fetched down by you?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

“It is not suiting, Bhāradvāja, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done.

How can you, Bhāradvāja, on account of a wretched wooden bowl exhibit a condition of further-men,¹ a wonder of psychic power to householders? As, Bhāradvāja, a woman exhibits her loin-cloth on account of a wretched stamped māsaka,² even so by you, Bhāradvāja, was a condition of further-men, a wonder of psychic power exhibited to householders on account of a wretched wooden bowl. It is not, Bhāradvāja, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a condition of further-men, a wonder of psychic power is not to be exhibited to householders.³ Whoever should exhibit them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Break, monks, this wooden bowl; having reduced it to fragments, give them to monks as perfume to mix with ointment.⁴ And, monks, a wooden bowl should not be used.⁵ Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of bowls, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a bowl made of gold should not be used,⁶ a bowl made of silver should not be used, a bowl made of pearls ... made of beryl ... made of crystal ... made of bronze ... made of glass ... made of tin ... made of lead ... a bowl made of copper should not be used. Whoever should use (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, two (kinds of) bowls: an iron bowl, a clay bowl.”⁷

¹ uttarimanussadhamma. See Bu-Pj 4, Bu-Pc 8, and BD 1, Introduction, p.xxiv.

² māsakarūpa. See BD 1.72, n. 1, and BD 1.71, n. 2. The word also occurs at Vin 2.294.

³ Vin-a 1203 says a miracle is objected to, not psychic power that is volitional in nature. ⁴ Cf. Vin 1.203, where sandal-wood was allowed among five perfumes (añjanupapīṣana). ⁵ Cf. BD 2.115, BD 2.415 (and n. 1), and Kd 15.37. ⁶ Cf. Kd 5.8.3.

⁷ As at Vin 3.243, Vin 4.123, Vin 4.243.

Now at that time the bases of the bowls were rubbed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, a circular bowl-rest."

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of circular bowl-rests, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, various kinds of circular bowl-rests should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, two (kinds of) circular bowl-rests; made of tin, made of lead." The thick circular rests could not be inserted.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to plane them." There were jags (on them).² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to cut swordfish teeth."³

Now at that time the group of six monks used carved⁴ circular bowl-rests, loaded with little figures, made with ornamentations, and they toured about showing these on carriage-roads. People ... spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, carved circular bowl-rests should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, ordinary circular rests."⁵

¹ acchupīyanti. Cf. Kd 8.14.1, where the word is used of "inserting a batch into a robe." The meaning above may be "the circular rests were thick and they (i.e. the bowls) could not be inserted." ² valiṃ honti. Pali-English Dictionary suggests reading valiyo. Perhaps vali is here jag or scratch, the planing or adzing not having been well done. The jags could then be made the best of by converting them into crocodile teeth to hold the bowls. But this rendering is as conjectural as that given at Vinaya Texts iii.83. ³ See also Kd 15.11.6. ⁴ Citra, variegated or painted, but not always, and above it appears to be more likely "carved". ⁵ Buddhaghosa says "just (or, only, eva) the circular rests cut with swordfish teeth."

Now at that time monks (each) put away his bowl with water in it and a bowl was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be put away with water in it. Whoever should (so) put it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to put away a bowl having dried it in the sun.”¹

Now at that time monks (each) dried his bowl in the sun with water in it and a bowl came to smell nasty. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl with water in it should not be dried in the sun. Whoever should (so) dry it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to put away a bowl having emptied it of water,² having dried it in the sun.”

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl in the heat and the colour of a bowl was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside in the heat. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to put away a bowl, having dried it for a short time in the sun’s heat.”³

Now at that time many bowls came to be laid aside in the open air without a prop. Having been blown against one another by gusts of wind, the bowls were broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a little prop for bowls.”

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl at the edge of a solid bench.⁴ Having fallen down, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside at the edge of a solid bench. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Cf. Vin 1.46. ² Cf. Vin 1.46. ³ Cf. Vin 1.46. ⁴ miḍhante. At Vin 2.143 miḍḍhi. Vinaya Texts iii.163 say that it is built against the wall of a room or on the veranda against the outer wall of a house or hut. Often made of hardened mud with two wooden legs in front, it is a bench used to sit or sleep on. Vin-a 1203 says ālindaka-(veranda) miḍhakāḍinam ante, and implies that some miḍhis are narrow. Allowed at Vin 2.149 when grass mats had been eaten by rats and so on, and where miḍhi appears as something hard and also as something to sleep on. The meaning is not certain.

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl at the edge of a plaster flooring.¹ Having fallen down, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside at the edge of a plaster flooring. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) turned his bowl upside down² on the ground. A rim was rubbed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a grass mat.”³ The grass mat was eaten by white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a piece of cloth.” The piece of cloth was eaten by white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bowl-stand.”⁴ Having fallen down from a bowl-stand, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a wicker stand for bowls.”⁵ A bowl was rubbed on the wicker stand for the bowls. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bag for bowls.” There was no strap at the edge. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”⁶

Now at that time monks (each) hung his bowl on a peg in the ¹ paribhaṇḍa. Meaning uncertain. Vin-a 1203-Vin-a 1204 says “on the outer side, on the edge of a treated (or, made, erected, kata) narrow miḍhi.” On the word at Vin 2.172 the Commentary says it is made of cow dung and of paste, kāsava, for colouring floors, walls, etc.; and on the word at Vin 2.220 it says bahi jagḡati, he lies awake (or, watches) outside. In explaining “piece of cloth,” coḷaka, below, Vin-a 1204 speaks of mattika-paribhaṇḍakatā bhūmi, which seems to mean “earth treated with clay and plaster.” ² See Kd 15.20.3. ³ Allowed at Kd 15.11.3 below; also at Vin 2.148, to save limbs and robes from being covered with dust. ⁴ pattamāḷaka. Vin-a 1204 says “made of brick or made of wood”. ⁵ pattakaṇḍolika. ⁶ Cf. Kd 6.12.4, Kd 15.11.5. See BD 4.276, n. 8.

wall¹ and on an “elephant-tusk” (peg).² Having fallen down, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be hung up. Whoever should hang one up, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl on a couch. Sitting down heedlessly, they broke a bowl having sat down (hard) on it.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside on a couch. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” ... (The same repeated for laying aside a bowl on a chair) ...

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl on his lap. They got up heedlessly and a bowl, having fallen down, was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside on a lap. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl in a sunshade.⁴ A sunshade was lifted up by gusts of wind⁵ and having fallen down a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside in a sunshade. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) opened a door⁶ when he had a bowl in his hand. As a door was blowing to and fro, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a door should not be opened when one has a bowl in one’s hand. Whoever should (so) open it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ As at Vin 3.48. Allowed at Vin 2.152. ² As at Vin 3.48. Allowed at Vin 2.152. ³ Cf. Vin 3.79 (BD 1.137 and n. 4). ⁴ chatta. N.B. at Vin 1.152 this word appears to mean a large vessel or receptacle. ⁵ Cf. above Kd 15.9.4 and Vin 4.345. ⁶ See BD 1.199, n. 3.

Now at that time monks went about for almsfood (to be put) into a gourd.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like members of other sects.”² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not go about for almsfood (to be put) into a gourd. Whoever should (so) go about, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

12.115
Now at that time monks went about for almsfood (to be put) into a water-pot. People ... (as above) ... “offence of wrong-doing.”

5.10.2
Now at that time a certain monk came to be a wearer of nothing but rag-robcs;³ he carried a bowl made from a skull. A certain woman, terrified at having seen him, uttered a scream of horror;⁴ “How terrible for me, indeed it is a demon⁵ after me.” People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans carry a bowl made from a skull, like demon-worshippers?”⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl made from a skull should not be carried. Whoever should carry one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should you be a wearer of nothing but rag-robcs. Whoever should be, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

5.10.3
Now at that time monks took back in their bowls odd bits and bones and impure water.⁷ People ... spread it about, saying: “That very thing from which these recluses, sons of the Sakyans eat, that is simply their waste-tub.”⁸ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, odd bits and bones and impure water should not be taken back in a bowl. Whoever should (so) take (these things)

¹ Cf. Vin 1.90 (BD 4.114) = BD 3.245 (BD 2.119) where they went about for almsfood to be put into their hands. ² See BD 2.119, n. 4. ³ Buddhaghosa says that in this case his robes, couch and chair were from a rag-heap. ⁴ Cf. MN i.448. ⁵ pisāca, as at MN i.448. MN-a iii.165 explains, “a demon (pisāca) has come to eat me.” ⁶ pisācillikā. Word occurs at Vin 1.152, Vin 2.134, Snp-a 357. ⁷ Same list found at Vin 4.266 in definition of vighāsa, “scraps of food.” ⁸ paṭiggaha, a receptacle, a receiving thing. Word occurs below Kd 15.11.5. (meaning thimble), but cf. udakap- at Vin 2.213.

back, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, a waste-tub.”

Now at that time monks were sewing robe-material having ripped it up with their hands. The robe-material became unsightly.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a small knife, a piece of felt² (to wrap round it).” Now at that time a small knife with a handle³ accrued to the Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a small knife with a handle.” Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of small knives with handles, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of small knives with handles should not be used. Whoever should use (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to be made of bone, made of ivory, made of horn, made of reeds, made of bamboo, made of pieces of stick, made of lac, made of crystal, made of copper, made of the inside of a conch-shell.”⁴

Now at that time monks sewed robe-material with a cock’s feather and with bamboo-rind⁵ and the robe-material came to be badly sewn. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow you a needle.” The needles became rusty.⁶ “I allow you, monks, a tube for (holding) the needles.”⁷ Even in the tubes they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, to fill them with yeast.”⁸ Even in the yeast they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, to fill them with barley-meal.”⁹ Even in the barley-meal they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, powdered stone.” Even in the powdered stone they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, to have it mixed with beeswax.” The powdered stone broke up. “I allow you, monks, powdered stone (mixed) with gum.”¹

¹ viloma. ² namataka, allowed again at Vin 2.123, Vin 2.134. Word also found at Vin 2.267 ³ daṇḍasatthaka. ⁴ Cf. Kd 6.12.1, and see BD 4.276 for notes. ⁵ velu-pesikā. Word found at DN ii.324. ⁶ kaṇṇakita, spoiled in some way, probably rusty, blunt or stained. The word appears to be used in the sense of stained (of the ground and of a wall) at Kd 1.25.15–Kd 18.1.3; and in the sense of stained, soiled or spoiled (of robes) at Nuns’ Bi-Pc 24. Vin-a 1205 explains as mallagahitā honti (variant reading malaggahitā). Mala may mean rust. Vinaya Texts iii.91 translates as “blunt.” ⁷ sūcinālika. Bu-Pc 86 makes it an offence to have a sūcighara made of bone, ivory or horn. ⁸ kiṇṇa, explained at Vin-a 1205 as kiṇṇacuṇṇa. ⁹ rattu. Oldenberg’s text reads satthu. Cf. BD 2.322, n. 4.

Now at that time monks, having driven in posts here and there, having tied them together, sewed robe-material. The robe-material became misshapen at the corners.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a kaṭhina-frame³ (and) strings for the kaṭhina-frame⁴ (and) to sew robe-material having tied it down here and there.” They spread out a kaṭhina-frame in an uneven place; the kaṭhina-frame was split. “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be spread out in an uneven place. Whoever should (so) spread one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” They spread out a kaṭhina-frame on the ground. The kaṭhina-frame was soiled by dust. “I allow you, monks, a grass mat.”⁵ An edge of the kaṭhina-frame was injured.⁶ “I allow you, monks, to put on a braiding, a binding.”⁷ The kaṭhina-frame was not large enough.⁸ “I allow you, monks, a stick in the kaṭhina-frame,¹ a skewer,² a slip of wood,³ a cord for tying,⁴ a thread for tying,⁵ and having tied the robe-material, to sew it.” The spaces between the threads became unequal.⁶ “I allow you, monks, a mark⁷ (to keep the spaces between the threads equal).” The threads became crooked. “I allow you, monks, a false thread.”⁸

¹ saritasipāṭika; cf. hinguṣipāṭika at Vin 1.201 (Kd 6.7). But Vin-a 1206 explains as madhusitthakapilotikam satthakosakam, a little cloth for the beeswax, a little sheath for a knife. Cf. also below, BD 5.185, n. 4. ² vikaṇṇa, as at Vin 1.297. ³ kaṭhina here, as pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.92, n. 8 “is evidently a sort of framework.” Vin-a 1206 says it “is a nisseṇi (ladder, frame?) and another should be spread (attharati) there for the mats.” Or the translation of this may be: “the nisseṇi should be spread out there and another for the mats.” The verb used here in connection with kaṭhina is pattharati, to spread out, to extend; whereas attharati is the verb used in connection with the formal making up of the kaṭhina-cloth; see BD 2.26, n. 3 and Kd 7. ⁴ kaṭhinaraṭṭha (variant reading raṭṭha). Vin-a 1206 says “those who are sewing robe-material double, tie the robe-material to the kaṭhina (-frame).” ⁵ As at Kd 15.9.4 above. ⁶ jīrati, or “wore out (with age).” This would begin a new idea, and perhaps this is intended. On the other hand, to say that it was hurt or damaged would imply that the grass mat was not big enough to protect the edges of the frame, and thus the same idea would be continued. ⁷ anuvāta paribhaṇḍa. See BD 2.409, n. 7, n. 8 (where also further references are given). These two words occur at Vin 1.254 as representing things which must have a place in the making of the kaṭhina-cloth into robes; and again at Vin 1.297 as representing things to be used in strengthening robes. ⁸ Vin-a 1206 says the frame was made according to the height of a tall monk, but when the robe-material was being (formally) made there, it did not suffice for (even) a short monk.

BD 5,15

Now at that time monks trod on a kaṭhina-frame with unwashed feet; the kaṭhina-frame was damaged. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be trodden upon if your feet are unwashed. Whoever should (so) tread upon (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd 15,1

Now at that time monks trod on a kaṭhina-frame with damp feet ... He said: “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be trodden upon if your feet are damp. Whoever should (so) tread upon (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks trod on a kaṭhina-frame with their sandals on.⁹ ... He said: “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be trodden upon if you have your sandals on. Whoever should (so) tread upon (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ daṇḍakaṭhina. Pali-English Dictionary says that this is kaṭhina-cloth stretched on a stick (for the purpose of measuring). Vin-a 1206 says, “it means: ‘I allow you to bind another frame (nisseṇi) of the height of such and such a monk in the middle of that one’” (i.e. of the original nisseṇi, by which the Commentary has already explained kaṭhina). ² pidalaka (Vin-a 1206 vidalaka). Vin-a 1206 says, “it is for making double, having drawn back the ends (pariyante) of the mat in accordance with the measure of the stick in the kaṭhina-frame.” ³ salāka. Vin-a 1206 explains as a slip of wood going in between a double piece of robe-material. ⁴ vinandhanarajju. Vin-a 1206 says “a cord tying the smaller frame (nisseṇi) together with the large frame there.” ⁵ vinandhanasuttaka. Vin-a 1206, “thread for tying the robe-material to the smaller frame.” ⁶ visamā. Vin-a 1206 says that some were large, some small. ⁷ kaḷimbhaka. Vin-a 1206 says “talipot palm leaves and so on—whatever does for knowing the (right) measure.” ⁸ moghasuttaka. Vin-a 1206 says “for recognition by a yellow thread, as carpenters go by a black thread on a piece of wood”. See BD 4.354 and cf. Vin-a 1110 in explanation of bandhanamattena. In both cases the false thread is a guide. ⁹ See BD 3.144, n. 1.

Now at that time monks, sewing robes, pricked¹ their fingers; their fingers became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said. “Monks, I allow a thimble.”² Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of thimbles, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of thimbles should not be used. Whoever should use them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to be made of bone ... made of the inside of a conch-shell.”

Now at that time needles and small knives and thimbles were lost. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a small bowl to hold (these things in).”³ (The contents of) the small bowls got in a muddle. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bag for thimbles.” There was no strap at the edge. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”⁴

Now at that time as monks were sewing robes in the open air they were bothered by cold and heat.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a hall for the kaṭhina-frame, a hut for the kaṭhina-frame.” A hall for the kaṭhina-frame was low to the ground,⁶ it was flooded by water. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground.” The piling collapsed. “I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood.”⁷ They were inconvenienced as they were ascending. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) staircases: a staircase of bricks, a staircase of stones, a staircase of wood.” As they were ascending they fell off. “I allow, monks, a balustrade.”¹ Powdered grass² fell into the hall for the kaṭhina-frame. “I allow you, monks, having lashed³ on (a roof⁴), to give a smearing inside and outside,⁵ whitewash,⁶ black colouring, red chalk, wreath-work, creeper-work, swordfish teeth, the five (pieces of) cloth design, a bamboo for hanging up robe-material,⁷ a cord for hanging up robe-material.”⁸

¹ paṭigaṇhanti. ² paṭiggaha. Cf. above, BD 5.156. ³ āvesanavithaka. Āvesana is dwelling, vittha a bowl, as in surāvittha at Ja v.427, Dh-p-a iii.66. Vin-a 1206 explains by pāti- (bowl) caṅgoṭakādi (box and so on). ⁴ As at Kd 6.12.4. ⁵ Cf. this passage with Kd 15.14.2, Kd 15.14.3, Kd 16.3.6. ⁶ Cf. this passage with Kd 15.14.2. ⁷ As at Kd 15.16.2, Kd 15.17.2, Kd 16.3.3.

BD 5.16

Now at that time monks, having sewn robe-material, went away having left the kaṭhina-frame at that very place, and it was eaten by rats and white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to fold up the kaṭhina-frame.” A kaṭhina-frame was split. “I allow you, monks, to fold up the kaṭhina-frame by using a wooden rod.”⁹ A kaṭhina-frame was twisted out of position.¹⁰ “I allow you, monks, a cord for tying it.” Now at that time monks, having lifted up the kaṭhina-frame on to walls and posts, went away and the kaṭhina-frame, having fallen down, was split. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to hang it on a peg in a wall or on an ‘elephant-tusk’ (peg).”

Kd 15.1

Then the Lord having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting set out on tour for Vesālī. Now at that time the monks went along (each) taking his needle and small knife and medicine in his

Kd 15.1

Vin 2.11

¹ ālambanabāha. Ālambana by itself is “the plinth of a railing or balustrade,” A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p. 251. ² tiṇacuṇṇa, as at Vin 1.203. ³ ogumphetvā. Cf. ogumphiyanti at Vin 1.194. ⁴ So Vin-a 1207, chadanam odhunitvā. ⁵ ullitāvalitta, as in definition of “hut” and “dwelling-place” at Vin 3.149, Vin 3.156 respectively (see BD 1.267, n. 3). ⁶ This and the following terms, as far as “five (pieces of) cloth design,” mentioned again at Vin 2.121, Vin 4.47. Cf. Vin 2.172. For notes see BD 2.259. ⁷ Allowed at Vin 1.286. ⁸ Allowed at Vin 1.286. ⁹ goghamsikā. I do not follow the meaning as given at Vinaya Texts iii.98, for monks were not allowed to use cowhides (Vin 1.193). Vin-a 1207 says, “having arranged (katvā) a bamboo or a stick (daṇḍaka) from a tree inside, to fold it up (i.e. the frame) together with that.” ¹⁰ viveṭhiyati.

bowl. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bag for medicine.” There was no strap at the edge. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”

Now at that time a certain monk, having tied his sandals to his girdle entered a village for almsfood. A certain lay-follower, greeting that monk, knocked up against the sandals with his head. That monk became ashamed. Then that monk, having arrived at a monastery, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bag for sandals.” There was no strap at the edge. “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”

Now at that time on a certain road there was water that was not allowable¹ (for) there was no strainer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a strainer.” A little piece of cloth was not enough. “I allow, monks, a strainer on a ladle.” The little piece of cloth was not enough. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow a regulation waterpot.”²

Now at that time two monks were going along a high road in the Kosalan country. One monk indulged in bad habits.³ The other monk spoke thus to that monk: “Do not do that, your reverence, it is not allowable.” He grumbled at him. Then that monk, tormented by thirst, spoke thus to the monk who had grumbled: “Give me the strainer,⁴ your reverence, I will drink (some) water.” The monk who had grumbled did not give it. That monk passed away, tormented by thirst. Then that monk, having arrived at a monastery, told this matter to the monks. They said: “But did you, your reverence, (although) being asked, not give a strainer?”

¹ Doubtless meaning that it had “living creatures” in it—an offence to make use of water like this, Bu-Pc 62, and cf. Bu-Pc 20. ² dhammakaraka, as at Vin 2.177, Vin 2.302. Cf. Dhp-a iii.290. ³ Cf. Vin 4.83 (BD 2.332). ⁴ It looks as if the strainer, at the date of this episode, was communal, one serving a number of monks. At Vin 2.302 it is given among a “recluse’s requisites.”

“No, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this monk, when being asked for a strainer, not give it?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned this monk, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, when being asked for a strainer, did not give it?”

“It is true, Lord.” The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

“It is not suitable in you, foolish man, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, when being asked for a strainer, not give it? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, if a monk is going along a highroad and is being asked for a strainer, he should not not give it. Whoever should not give it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should you go along a highway without a strainer. Whoever should (so) go, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If there is not a strainer nor a regulation water-pot, then a corner of the outer cloak should be determined upon with the words, ‘I will drink (water) having strained it with this’.”

Then the Lord, walking on tour gradually arrived at Vesālī. The Lord stayed there in Vesālī in the Great Grove at the Hall of the Gabled Pillars. Now at that time monks were making repairs. The water-strainer did not cease (to be in use¹). They told this matter to the ¹ na sammati, did not rest, cease. The meaning must be that the thirsty monks made such constant demands upon it that it did not meet their needs and that therefore something larger was wanted to give more water and more quickly.

Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a double water-strainer.”¹ The double water-strainer did not cease (to be in use). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a filter.”² Now at that time monks were pestered by mosquitoes. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a mosquito-net.”³

5:14.1
5:16.4
Now at that time at Vesālī a succession of meals of sumptuous foods came to be arranged.⁴ Monks, having eaten the sumptuous foods, became very ill with their bodies full of (bad) humours.⁵ Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca went to Vesālī on some business or other. Jīvaka Komārabhacca saw the monks who were very ill with their bodies full of (bad) humours; seeing them, he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord:

“At present, Lord, monks are very ill with their bodies full of (bad) humours. It were well, Lord, if the Lord allowed the monks a place for pacing up and down in and a bathroom.⁶ Thus will the monks come to have few afflictions.”⁷ Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with talk on dhamma. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ daṇḍaparissāvana. Cf. daṇḍasatthaka and daṇḍakaṭhina at Kd 15.11.1, Kd 15.11.3. Vinaya Texts iii.102 gives “double strainer” with note that it is “apparently a long box, both ends of which strain the water which is poured into the middle by means of a pipe (daṇḍaka).” Daṇḍakaṭhina certainly has nearly the meaning of a “double kaṭhina-frame.” Vin-a 1207 says “like dyers’ strainers for alkaline dyes, having tied a piece of cloth to the four ends of a frame, water should be poured into a pipe (daṇḍaka) in the middle. Then you strain, having filled both the divisions.” ² ottharaka, a kind of strainer. It seems, from Buddhaghosa’s remarks, that this is a strainer which by means of four pipes filters water that monks can then take in a pitcher. ³ makasakuṭikā, or mosquito-curtain. Vin-a 1207 explains by cīvarakuṭikā. Does this mean a little hut (made of robe-material)? ⁴ As at Vin 4.75; Vin 1.57 (Rājagaha), Vin 1.248 (Kusinārā). ⁵ As at Vin 1.206. ⁶ jantāghara, as at Kd 1.25.12; see BD 4.62, and Vinaya Texts iii.103, n. 2. ⁷ appābādā. Jīvaka was probably taking a wider view of maintaining the monks’ health than the “convalescent” of Vinaya Texts iii.103 allows for.

“I allow, monks, a place for pacing up and down in, and a bathroom.”

Now at that time monks paced up and down in an uneven place for pacing up and down in; their feet became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make it level.” A place for pacing up and down in was low to the ground; it was flooded by water. “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) ... I allow you, monks, a balustrade.”

Now at that time, monks, as they were pacing up and down in the place for pacing up and down in, fell off. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a railing round the place for pacing up and down in.”¹ Now at that time monks, pacing up and down in the open air, were bothered by cold and heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a hall in the place for pacing up and down in.” Powdered grass fell into the hall in the place for pacing up and down in. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof) ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) ... a cord for hanging up robe-material.”

A bathroom was low to the ground; it was flooded by water. “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) ... a balustrade.” There was no door² to a bathroom. “I allow, monks, a door, a doorpost and lintel,³ a hollow like a mortar (for the door to revolve in¹), a small upper projection,² a post for the bolt,³ a ‘monkey’s head,’⁴ a pin (to secure the bolt),⁵ a (stick used as a) bolt,⁶ a keyhole,⁷ a hole for pulling through (the cord),⁸ cord for pulling through.”⁹

¹ caṅkamanavedikā. As noted by A.K. COOMARASWAMY in Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p.273 (q.v. for further references), DN ii.179 gives the component parts of a vedikā: the uprights, the cross-bars and the coping. Cf. vedikāvātāpāna at Kd 16.2.2. ² kavāṭa, the door itself, that which closes the aperture. ³ piṭṭhasaṅghāṭa. Allowed again with the two following items at Kd 16.2.1.

The lower part of the lath and plaster wall¹⁰ of a bathroom decayed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a facing (round it).”¹¹ The bathroom had no pipe for the steam.¹² “I allow, monks, a pipe for the steam.”

Now at that time monks made a fireplace in the middle of a small bathroom, and there was no access.¹³ “I allow you, monks, to make a fireplace at one side of a small bathroom, in the middle of a large one.” The fire in the bathroom scorched their faces. “I allow, monks, clay for the face.”¹⁴ They moistened the clay with their hands. “I allow, monks, a tub for the clay.” The clay came to smell nasty. “I allow you, monks, to cure¹ it.” The fire in the bathroom scorched their bodies. “I allow you, monks, to take in water.” They took in water in dishes and bowls. “I allow you, monks, a receptacle for water,² a saucer³ for the water.” A bathroom with a grass roofing did not make them sweat. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof),⁴ to give it a smearing inside and outside.” The bathroom became swampy. “I allow you, monks, to spread three (kinds of) spreadings: a spreading of bricks, a spreading of stones, a spreading of wood.”⁵ Even so it became swampy. “I allow you, monks, to wash it.” Water remained. “I allow, monks, a drain for the water.”⁶ Now at that time monks sat down on the ground in a bathroom and they got pins and needles in their limbs. “I allow, monks, a chair for the bathroom.” Now at that time a bathroom was not fenced in. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence it in with: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.”⁷

¹ udukkhalika. I follow translation at Vinaya Texts iii.105. ² uttarapāsaka. Vinaya Texts iii.105 “projections to revolve in these hollows.” ³ aggaḷavaṭṭi. Vin-a 1207 says, “the same measure as the doorpost, dvārabāhā, it is simply called aggaḷathambha (post for a bolt or bar). Having made three or four holes there, they put in pins” (sūci, or cross-bars). ⁴ kapisīsaka. Vin-a 1207 says, “this means, having perforated the doorpost, it is called a bolt-projection, aggaḷapāsaka, put in there”. Critical Pali Dictionary (under aggaḷapāsaka) notes that “according to Vin-a (Vin 2.120)=kapisīsaka, quadrangular end of the bolt of a door, Sacred Books of the East xx.106.” Cf. DN ii.143, kapisīsam ālambitvā ṭhito, which DN-a 584 explains as kapisīsakam ti dvārabāhakoṭiyam ṭhitam aggaḷarukkham, “a piece of wood for the bolt fixed at the top of the doorpost.” It must be a hole or cavity to receive the bolt. The word also occurs at Ja iii.23. ⁵ sūcika. Vin-a 1207 says, “it is put in, having made a hole in the middle there” (i.e. in the “monkey’s head”). Cf. aggaḷasūci at MN i.126, “the pin for the bolt.” ⁶ ghaṭikā. Vin-a 1207 merely says “joined above,” upari yojitā. Cf. ghaṭikam ugghātetvā, having undone the bolt, at Vin 2.207, and sūciḡhaṭikā at Vin 2.237, SN iv.290, Ud 52. It is explained at Ud-a 298: sūciḡhaṭikā means having fixed (ādahitvā, variant reading ādim katvā) the pin for the bolt, aggaḷasūci, and the upper bolt, upariḡhaṭikā, having closed it firmly. The ghaṭikā would appear to be a subsidiary bolt, the main one being the aggaḷa. ⁷ Cf. below, Vin 5.207. ⁸ āvīñchanachidda. This and the next allowed again at Kd 16.2.1 because there doors could not be made to meet (the doorposts), na phassīyanti. ⁹ āvīñchanarajju. ¹⁰ kuḍḍapāda; also below Kd 16.3.4 of a dwelling-place and where a different remedy was “allowed.” ¹¹ maṇḍalikam kātum. Vin-a 1207 says nīcavatthukam cinitum, “to pile low to the ground,” for which expression cf. Kd 15.11.6. ¹² dhūmanetta. Cf. Kd 6.13.2. Vin-a 1207 says a hole for letting out the steam. ¹³ upacāra as in Kd 16.3.3. ¹⁴ mukhamattikā. Cf. Kd 1.25.12.

There was no porch.⁸ “I allow, monks, a porch.” The porch was low to the ground; it was flooded by water. “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) ... a balustrade.” There was no door to the porch. “I allow, monks, a door, doorposts and lintel ... (as in Kd 15.14.3) ... a hole for pulling through (the cord), cord for pulling through.” Powdered grass fell on to the porch. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof), to give it a smearing inside and outside, whitewash, black colouring, red chalk, garland design, creeper design, swordfish teeth, the five (pieces of) cloth design.”⁹

A cell became swampy.¹⁰ “I allow you, monks, to sprinkle gravel.”¹¹

¹ vāsetumh, in the sense of to prepare, to treat, as at Kd 6.17. Buddhaghosa says “to cure with perfumes.” ² udakaṭṭhāna. Buddhaghosa reads udakanidhāna, a receptacle for water, and explains, “a place for putting water; having put the water in a pitcher (ghaṭa) there, one can use it by means of a saucer” (or cup). ³ sarāvaka, as at Vin 1.203. Cf. ācamanasarāvaka at Kd 15.35.4. ⁴ See above, Kd 15.11.6. ⁵ As in Kd 15.17.1. ⁶ As at end of Kd 15.14.5; Kd 15.17.2. ⁷ As at Kd 15.17.1; cf. Vin 4.266. ⁸ koṭṭhaka. Vin-a 1208 says this means dvārakoṭṭhaka, gateway in the porch. See Kd 15.35.4. ⁹ As at Kd 15.11.6. ¹⁰ As at Kd 15.35.4; Kd 16.3.8. ¹¹ marumbā, as in Bu-Pc 10 in definition of “natural ground” (see BD 2.224 and n. 1).

They did not succeed in doing so. “I allow you, monks, to lay down flagstones.” Water remained. “I allow, monks, a drain for the water.”¹

5:15:1 Now at that time monks, while naked,² greeted others who were naked and caused others who were naked to greet them; did a service to others who were naked and made others do a service to those who were naked; while naked they gave to others who were naked, accepted naked, ate naked, partook of naked, tasted naked, drank naked. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who is naked should neither greet nor be greeted by one who is naked; one who is naked should not cause another to greet nor to be greeted by one who is naked; a service for one who is naked should not be done by one who is naked, a service for one who is naked should not be caused to be done by one who is naked; one who is naked should not give to a naked one, one who is naked should not accept, one who is naked should not eat, one who is naked should not partake of, ... should not taste ... should not drink. Whoever should (so) drink, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

5:16:1 Now at that time monks laid aside their robes on the ground in a bathroom; the robes became soiled with dust.³ They told this matter
5:16:8 to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.” When it rained the robes got wet. “I allow, monks, a hall in
2:122 the bathroom.” The hall in the bathroom was low to the ground. “I allow, monks, ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) ... a balustrade.” Powdered grass fell on to the hall in the bathroom. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof) ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) ... a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.”

5:16:2 Now at that time monks were doubtful about doing a service both when in a bathroom and in the water. They told this matter to the ¹ As in Kd 15.14.3. ² That is, in the bathroom. ³ As at Kd 15.11.3.

Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) coverings: a covering to the bathroom, a covering to the water, a covering by clothes.”¹

Now at that time there was no water in a bathroom. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a well.” The facing of the well fell in.² “I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood.” The well was low to the ground ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) “... I allow, monks, a balustrade.”

Now at that time monks drew water by means of jungle rope, and by means of a waistband. “I allow you, monks, a cord for drawing water.” Their hands became painful. “I allow, monks, a well-sweep,³ a hand-wheel,⁴ a wheel and buckets.”⁵ Many vessels were broken. “I allow monks, three (kinds of) jars: a copper jar, a wooden jar, strips of animals’ hide.”⁶

Now at that time monks, drawing water in the open air, were bothered by cold and heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a hall for a well.” Powdered grass fell on to the hall for a well. “I allow, monks, ... (as in Kd 15.11.6) ... a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.” The well was not covered. It was littered with powdered grass and with dust. “I allow, monks, a lid.”⁷ There was no vessel for the water. “I allow, monks, a trough for water, a pot¹ for water.”

¹ Vin-a 1208 says that the two former are for doing a service, but not for greeting, etc., the last is for doing all kinds of services. ² As at Kd 15.17.2. ³ tulā. Vin-a 1208 says “a pole for lifting up (or pulling up, ubbāhana) the water like that used for vegetables, paṇṇikānaṃ.” A.K. COOMARASWAMY says it means here “well-sweep,” Indian Architectural Terms, p. 271, which also see for the two following terms. The three terms indicate different methods of pulling up water. Editors Vinaya Texts iii.112 had a corrupt copy of the Commentary before them. ⁴ karakāṭaka. Kaṭaka is anything circular, so a wheel. Vin-a 1208 says “either having harnessed it to bullocks or having taken it with the hands, it is an instrument with a long strap for pulling up” (a bucket of water). ⁵ cakkavaṭṭaka. Vin-a 1208 says “it is a contrivance for jars to be taken off the spokes of a wheel,” arahattaḡhaṭṭiyantaṃ (variant reading arahattaḡhaṭṭi-). ⁶ Vin-a 1208, “a hide vessel that can be joined to the well-sweep or the hand-wheel.” ⁷ apidhāna, as at Kd 6.12.2.

5.17.1 Now at that time monks bathed here, there and everywhere in a monastery; the monastery became swampy. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a pool.” The pool was public. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence it in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.”² The pool became swampy. “I allow you, monks, to spread three (kinds of) spreadings: a spreading of bricks, a spreading of stones, a spreading of wood.”³ The water remained. “I allow, monks, a drain.”⁴ Now at that time monks’ limbs cooled down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a wiper (with which to wipe off) the water⁵ and to sponge yourselves down with a cloth.”⁶

5.17.2
2.123 Now at that time a certain lay follower was anxious to build a tank for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a tank.” The facing of the tank fell in.⁷ “I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood.”⁸ They were inconvenienced as they were ascending. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) staircases: a staircase of bricks, a staircase of stones, a staircase of wood.”⁹ As they were ascending they fell off. “I allow, monks, a balustrade.” The water in the tank became stale. “I allow, monks, a pipe for the water,¹⁰ a drain for the water.”

5.170
¹ kaṭāha, or receptacle. ² As at Kd 15.14.3. ³ As at Kd 15.14.3. ⁴ As at Kd 15.14.3, Kd 15.14.5. ⁵ udakapuñchanī. In view of the fact that Buddhaghosa says “made of ivory, made of horn, made of wood,” it cannot unhesitatingly be rendered “towel” (as at Vinaya Texts iii.114). Yet the three sorts allowed at Vin 2.174 are those of bearskin, drapery and cloth and Buddhaghosa mentions colakapādapuñchana in Commentary on Kd 16.2.2. Cf. pādapuñchanī at Vin 4.40. The word also occurs at Vin 4.168 (BD 3.89). ⁶ colakena paccuddharitum as at Kd 16.3.1. ⁷ As at Kd 15.16.2. ⁸ As at Kd 15.11.6. ⁹ As at Kd 15.11.6. ¹⁰ udakāyatika. Vin-a 1208 (reading udakamātikā, a channel, course, as does Sinhalese edition of Vinaya) says this is a mātikā for bringing water in. The drain will have been to lead it away.

Now at that time a certain monk was anxious to build a bathroom with a curving roof¹ for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bathroom with a curving roof.”

Now at that time the group of six monks were away, separated from² their pieces of cloth to sit upon³ for four months. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not be away, separated from your pieces of cloth to sit upon for four months. Whoever should be (so) away, separated from, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks lay down to sleep on beds which were scattered over with flowers. People, touring the dwelling-place, having seen them ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not lie down to sleep on beds scattered over with flowers. Whoever should (so) lie down to sleep, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time people, taking scents and garlands, came to a monastery. Monks being scrupulous, did not accept them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having taken the scents, to give the five-finger mark⁴ on the door; having taken ¹ This rendering is taken from Vin-a 1208 which says that nillekha is called “a projection curving at the side, āviddhapakkhapāsaka; having fixed the side projections in the upper round part, uparimaṇḍale, of the beams, this (i.e. nillekha) is the name of the finished covering roof.” One might compare the “curved house,” aḍḍhayaoga, of Vin 1.58 and other passages. See BD 4.75. ² vippavasati; see Bu-NP 2. ³ See Bu-NP 15, Vin 3.232 where nisīdana is defined, and BD 2.87, n. 2, n. 3. ⁴ kavāṭe pañcaṅgulikaṃ dātum. See article on pañcaṅgulika in Pali-English Dictionary. It is either a magical and protective or a decorative mark. At the present day impressions of the human hand are still made on walls in India, the hand having been first dipped in some colouring matter. See also Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.84f. Pañcaṅgulikaṃ datvā occurs at Ja i.166 in connection with slaying a goat; at Ja i.192 (gandhena pañc- datvā) of an ox; at Ja ii.104, Ja iii.23 of a tree, and also as lohitapañc- of a tree at Ja iii.160.

the flowers, to lay them down in a dwelling-place at one side.”

5.19.1
5.171
Now at that time a piece of felt¹ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a piece of felt.” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, should a piece of felt be allotted or should it be assigned?”² “A piece of felt, monks, should be neither allotted nor assigned.”

2.124
Now at that time the group of six monks ate (leaning against) chased cushions.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not eat (leaning against) chased cushions. Whoever should (so) eat there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill. While he was eating he was not able to hold a bowl in his hand. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks a stand.”⁴

5.19.2
Now at that time the group of six monks ate from one dish⁵ and drank from one beaker and shared one couch⁶ and shared one cloth and shared one covering and shared one covering-cloth.⁷ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not eat from one dish nor drink from one beaker nor share one couch nor share one cloth nor share one covering nor share one covering-cloth. Whoever should share (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ namataka, as at Vin 2.115, Vin 2.134. Vin-a 1208 on its meaning above says that it is made of sheep’s wool (or goats’ hair, eḷakaloma). ² Not included among the articles about which the same question was asked at Vin 1.296-7. ³ āsittakūpadhāna. Vin-a 1208 says that a synonym for this is “a peḷā (basket, chest?) made of copper or silver.” ⁴ maḷorikā. Vin-a 1208 explains as a prop (made of) sticks, daṇḍādāhā aka. ⁵ As lax monks did at Vin 2.10, Vin 3.180. ⁶ As the lax monks and as two nuns did at Vin 4.288 (see BD 3.304). ⁷ As the lax monks and as the two nuns at Vin 4.289 (see BD 3.30, n).

Now at that time the Licchavi Vaḍḍha was a friend of the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka.¹ Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha approached the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka; having approached, he spoke thus to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “I salute you, masters.” When he had spoken thus, the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond. And a second time ... And a third time did the Licchavi Vaḍḍha speak thus to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “I salute you, masters.” And a third time the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond. He said: “Do I offend against the masters? Why do the masters not respond to me?”

“It is because you, friend Vaḍḍha, were indifferent when we were being molested by Dabba the Mallian.”

“What can I, masters, do?”

“If you, friend Vaḍḍha, were willing you could get the Lord to expel the venerable² Dabba the Mallian this very day.”

“What can I, masters, do? How am I able to do that?”

“Come you, friend Vaḍḍha, go up to the Lord; having gone up, speak thus to the Lord: ‘This, Lord, is not suitable, it is not becoming that this quarter which should be without fear, secure, without danger, is the very quarter which is full of fear, insecure, full of danger. Where there was a calm, now there is a gale. It seems as if the very water is blazing. My wife has been seduced by master Dabba the Mallian.’”

“Very well, masters,” and the Licchavi Vaḍḍha, having answered the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Licchavi Vaḍḍha spoke thus to the Lord: “This, Lord, is not suitable ... My wife has been seduced by master Dabba the Mallian.”

¹ Cf. Vin 2.78f., Vin 3.162. ² He is not called āyasmā by the monks at the parallel passage at Vin 3.162, but he is at Vin 2.78.

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Dabba the Mallian, saying: “Dabba, do you remember doing as this Vaḍḍha says?”

“Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me.” And a second time the Lord ... And a third time the Lord spoke thus to the venerable Dabba the Mallian: “Dabba, do you remember doing as this Vaḍḍha says?”

“Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me,” he said.

“Dabba, the Dabbas do not give evasive answers thus. If what was done was done by you, say so: if it was not done by you, say it was not.”

“Lord, since I was born I cannot call to mind indulging in sexual intercourse even in a dream; much less so when I was awake.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Because of this, monks, let the Order turn the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl upside down,¹ let it impose non-eating with the Order.² Monks, if a lay-follower is possessed of eight qualities his bowl may be turned upside down:³ if he tries for non-receiving (of gains) by monks, if he tries for non-profiting by monks, if he tries for non-residence for monks, if he ¹ Not a literal turning upside down, but a symbolical one performed by a formal act of the Order for turning down, nikkujjanā and, a bowl, as described below in Kd 15.20.4. Vin-a 1209 says “here, if a person is possessed of any one of these eight qualities, having gone within the boundaries or outside them (the Order) may turn it down. When anyone’s bowl is turned upside down thus, no alms may be taken in his house ... It is set upright (again) by a formal act consisting of a motion and a resolution, ñattidutiya-kamma.” AN-a iv.159 explains, “(the Order) may turn it upside down by a proclamation, kammavācā for turning a bowl upside down, on account of which there is no receiving of alms given—not by placing it face downwards.” The phrase pattam nikkujjati although used in the ordinary signification above, Kd 15.9.4 (Vinaya Texts iii.119, n. 2) is not here. A layman certainly would have had no begging bowl that could have been, literally, turned upside down. ² asambhogam saṅghena karotu. See above, Kd 11.25.1 where non-eating with an Order goes with and is a mark of an act of suspension. ³ This passage recurs at AN iv.345. The first five qualities are also found at Vin 1.84, Vin 2.18.

reviles and abuses monks, if he causes monk to break with monk,¹ if he speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, if he speaks dispraise of dhamma, if he speaks dispraise of the Order. I allow you, monks, to turn a lay-follower's bowl upside down if he is possessed of these eight qualities.

And thus, monks, should it be turned upside down: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha is defaming the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit.'² If it seems right to the Order, the Order may turn the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl upside down, it may impose non-eating with the Order This is the motion Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha is defaming ... of falling away from moral habit. The Order is turning the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl upside down, it is imposing non-eating with an Order. If the turning upside down of the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl and the imposing of non-eating with the Order is pleasing to the venerable ones they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing, should speak. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl is turned upside down by the Order (and there is to be) non-eating with the Order. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.'"³

Then the venerable Ānanda, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, went up to the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's dwelling; having gone up, he spoke thus to the Licchavi Vaḍḍha: "Your bowl, friend Vaḍḍha, is turned upside down by an Order, you are non-eating with the Order." Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha, thinking: "It is said that my bowl is turned upside down by an Order, it is said that I am non-eating with the Order," fainted and fell on that very spot. Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's friends and intimates, his kith and kin³ spoke thus to the Licchavi Vaḍḍha:

¹ At Vin 2.18 a formal act of reconciliation may be carried out for a monk if he has the first five of these qualities in respect of householders; and it may be too if he has spoken dispraise of the awakened one, etc., to householders. ² As at Vin 2.79, where a "verdict of innocence" is given for Dabba. ³ Cf. AN i.222.

“Enough, Vaḍḍha, do not grieve, do not lament, we will reconcile¹ the Lord and the Order of monks.” Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha with his wife and children, with his friends and intimates, with his kith and kin, his clothes wet, his hair wet approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, a transgression has overcome me,² in that I, foolish, misguided, wrong that I was, defamed master Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. For this, Lord, let the Lord acknowledge my transgression as a transgression for the sake of restraint in the future.”

“Truly a transgression overcame you, friend Vaḍḍha, in that you, foolish, misguided, wrong that you were, defamed Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. But if you, friend Vaḍḍha, having seen the transgression as a transgression, confess according to the rule, we³ acknowledge it for you. For, friend Vaḍḍha, in the discipline of the noble, this is growth: whoever having seen a transgression as a transgression, confesses it according to the rule, he attains restraint in the future.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well, now monks, let the Order set upright the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl, let it grant eating with the Order. Monks, if a lay-follower is possessed of eight qualities his bowl may be set upright: if he does not try for non-receiving (of gains) by monks, if he does not try for non-profiting by monks, if he does not try for non-residence for monks, if he does not revile and abuse monks, if he does not cause monk to break with monk, if he does not speak dispraise of the Awakened One, if he does not speak dispraise of dhamma, if he does not speak dispraise of the Order. I allow you, monks, to set upright a lay-follower’s bowl if he is possessed of these eight qualities.

¹ As noted at Vinaya Texts iii.122, n. 1 this same verb is used in Kd 11.22.3 when a monk has offended against a layman. ² As at Vin 1.315, Vin 4.18–Vin.4.19. See BD 2.200 for notes. ³ In parallel passages the first person plural is likewise used here, perhaps to emphasise that “confession according to the rule” is to be made to monks and they acknowledge it and are the means by which a transgression can be removed. At the same time, since Gotama seldom, as recorded, addressed laypeople as āvuso, friend, it is doubtful whether he is or is intended to be speaking here at all.

“And thus, monks, should it be set upright: Monks, that Licchavi Vaḍḍha, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks’ feet, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted them with joined palms, should speak thus to them: ‘Honoured sirs, my bowl was turned upside down by the Order, I am not eating with the Order. But I, honoured sirs, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways, and I ask the Order for the setting upright of the bowl.’ And a second time it should be asked for. And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl was turned upside down by the Order, he is not eating with the Order; but he is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways; he asks the Order for the setting upright of the bowl. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may set upright the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl, it may grant eating with the Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl was turned upside down ... he asks the Order for setting upright the bowl. The Order is setting upright the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl, it is granting eating with the Order. If the setting upright of the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl and the granting of eating with the Order is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl is set upright by the Order (and there is) eating with the Order. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Then the Lord, having stayed in Vesālī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for the Bhaggas.¹ In due course, walking on tour, the Lord arrived at the Bhaggas. The Lord stayed there among the Bhaggas on Suṃsumāra Hill¹ in the Bhesakaḷā Grove in the deer park. Now at that time Kokanada² was the name of Prince Bodhi's³ palace; it had not long been built and was as yet uninhabited by recluse or brahmin or by any human creature. Then Prince Bodhi addressed the brahmin youth, the son of Sañjikā,⁴ saying: "Come along, good son of Sañjikā, go up to the Lord; having gone up, in my name salute the Lord's feet with your head, ask whether he is well, not indisposed, of bodily vigour, strong, abiding in comfort, and say: 'Lord, Prince Bodhi salutes the Lord's feet with his head and asks whether he is well ... abiding in comfort,' and says this: 'Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with Prince Bodhi tomorrow together with the Order of monks.'"

¹ yena Bhaggā. See MN ii.91 where this story also appears, going as far as BD 5.178 below, “as he was sitting at a respectful distance,” where the Majjhima version proceeds differently. See also SN iii.1 and B.C. LAW, Tribes in Ancient India, 1943, p.292f.

"Very well, good sir," and the brahmin youth, Sañjikā's son, having answered Prince Bodhi in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having exchanged greetings with the Lord, having conversed in a courteous and friendly way, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the brahmin youth, the son of Sanjika, spoke thus to the Lord: "Prince Bodhi salutes the revered Gotama's feet with his head ... and says may the revered Gotama consent to a meal with Prince Bodhi tomorrow together with the Order of monks." The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then the brahmin youth, Sañjikā's son, having understood the Lord's consent, rising from his seat approached Prince Bodhi; having approached, he spoke thus to Prince Bodhi: "I spoke, good sir, in your name to the Lord Gotama, saying: 'Prince Bodhi salutes ... together with the Order of monks.' And the recluse Gotama consented." Then Prince Bodhi towards the end of that night, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared, and having had Kokanada palace strewn with white cloths as far as the last flight of stairs,¹ spoke thus to the brahmin youth, the son of Sañjikā: “Come you along, good fellow, approach the Lord; having approached, announce the time to the Lord, saying: ‘It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.’”

¹ SN-a ii.249 says that it was called Crocodile Hill because as it was being built a crocodile made a noise, the Bhesakaḷā Grove was called after a yakkhinī who lived there. ² Lotus. See BD 3.139, n. and MN-a iii.321. ³ Dhp 157 is said to have been uttered on his account, see Dhp-a iii.134. ⁴ Sañjikāputta. See Dhp-a iii.134, where he warned the architect that Bodhi contemplated killing or maiming him so that he could never build another palace like Kokanada.

“Very well, good sir,” and the brahmin youth, Sañjikā’s son, having answered Prince Bodhi in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, he announced the time to the Lord, saying: “It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached Prince Bodhi’s dwelling. Now at the time when the Lord was coming Prince Bodhi was standing at the porch of the outside gateway. Prince Bodhi saw the Lord coming in the distance, and seeing him, having gone from there to meet him, having greeted the Lord, having honoured him, he approached Kokanada palace. Then the Lord stood still at the last flight of stairs. Then Prince Bodhi spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, let the Lord tread on² the cloths, let the well-farer tread on the cloths so that it may be for a long time for my blessing and happiness.” When he had spoken thus the Lord became silent. And a second time ... And a third time Prince Bodhi spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord tread on ... for my blessing and happiness.” Then the Lord looked towards the venerable Ānanda. Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to Prince Bodhi:

“Let the cloths, prince, be packed away, the Lord will not tread upon the cloth carpeting,³ the Truth-finder has compassion⁴ for the folk who come after.”⁵

Then Prince Bodhi, having had the cloths packed away, had a seat made ready upstairs in Kokanada.⁶ Then the Lord having ascended ¹ Cf. MN ii.92, MN iii.1. ² akkamatu. MN ii.92 reads abhirūhatu. ³ celapattikā. For a monk to do so was apparently an auspice that the householder would have a child. ⁴ anukampati, MN ii.93 apaloketi, DhP-a iii.136 oloketi. The legend is that Gotama knew that Bodhi would have no children because in a former birth, while he was living on an island, he ate and cooked birds (MN-a iii.322, DhP-a iii.137). He therefore would not bring monks into contempt by walking on the cloths when he knew Bodhi would have no child (Vin-a 1209). ⁵ pacchimā janatā. See BD 1.66, n. 1 for further references. ⁶ MN ii.93 reads Kokanade pāsāde.

the Kokanada palace, sat down together with the Order of monks on the seat made ready. Then Prince Bodhi, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, sat down at a respectful distance.¹ Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Prince Bodhi as he was sitting at a respectful distance with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, you should not tread on a cloth carpeting.”² Whoever should tread on one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain woman who had had a miscarriage, having invited monks, having had cloth prepared, spoke thus: “Revered sirs, tread on the cloth.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not tread on it. She said: “Revered sirs, tread on the cloth for good luck’s sake.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not tread on it. Then that woman spread it about, saying: “How can these masters (although) being asked for good luck’s sake not tread on the cloth carpeting?” Monks heard this woman who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Householders, monks, look out for lucky signs.³ I allow you, monks, when being asked by householders for good luck’s sake, to tread on a cloth carpeting.”

Now at that time monks were doubtful whether to tread on a sheet for use after feet had been washed.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you; monks, to tread on a sheet for use after feet have been washed.”

¹ Majjhima version goes on differently from here. ² Quoted at MN-a iii.323. Vin-a 1209 says that he laid down this rule in case a monk should tread on one not knowing whether the householder would have a child or not; and that he did it to safeguard the monks from the householders’ contempt should there not be a child after they had trodden on the cloth carpeting. ³ gihī maṅgalikā, as at Kd 15.33.3. See also Commentary on Kd 1.2.2. Quoted at MN-a iii.323.

The Second Portion for Repeating¹

Then the Lord having stayed among the Bhaggas for as long as he found suiting set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, taking a small jar² and a (clay foot-) scrubber³ and a broom, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord accept my little jar and (clay foot-) scrubber and broom so that it may be for a long time for my blessing and happiness.” The Lord accepted the little jar and the broom; the Lord did not accept the (clay foot-) scrubber. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with talk on dhamma. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from her seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, a little jar and a broom. Monks, you should not make use of a (clay foot-) scrubber. Whoever should make use of one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, three (kinds of) foot-rubbers:⁴ a stone,⁵ a pebble,⁶ sea-scum.”⁷

⁴ dhotapādaka. Vin-a 1209 says “it is a sheet spread out for treading on after the feet have been washed at the place for washing feet.” Monks were allowed to tread on this, and evidently no symbolic meaning was attached. ¹ As pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.130, n. 1 “there is no mention in the text of where the first such Portion ends.” ² ghaṭaka. ³ kataka. This is one of the two things made of clay not allowed at Kd 15.37. Vin-a 1209 says “it is made, having raised up protuberances, for rubbing the feet; it may be round or four-sided; it is forbidden as a thing connected with luxury, it must not be accepted nor made use of.”

Then Visākḥā, Migāra’s mother, taking a fan¹ and a palmyra-whisk,² approached the Lord ... (as in Kd 15.22.1) ... The Lord accepted the fan and the palmyra-whisk ... Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, a fan and a palmyra-whisk.”

Now at that time a mosquito-fan³ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a mosquito-fan.” A chowry-fan⁴ accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a chowry-fan should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fans: made of bark, made of khus-khus,⁵ made of peacocks’ tail feathers.”

Now at that time a sunshade⁶ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a sunshade.”

Now at that time the group of six monks toured about having put up their sunshades. Now at that time a certain lay-follower went to a pleasure grove⁷ together with several disciples of Naked Ascetics. These disciples of Naked Ascetics saw the group of six monks coming in the distance with their sunshades up; seeing them, they spoke thus ⁴ pādaghamsanī. ⁵ sakkharā. Here Vin-a 1209 says it is called a stone, pāsāṇa. Word also at Vin 3.147=Ja ii.284; see BD 1.250, n. 1. ⁶ kaṭhala. Cf. sakkharakaṭhala at DN i.84, AN i.9. ⁷ samuddaṭṭhaka. This may be the name of a bone; cf. phañaka among the “bones” at Vism 254, Vb-a 237. Vinaya Texts iii.131, n. 2 says that the word designates “the bones of the cuttle-fish.” ¹ vidhūpana. See BD 3.253, n. 3. ² tālavaṇṭa. Vin-a 1210 says this is made with palmyra palm leaves or it may be made with bamboo, ivory and bamboo chips, or with peacocks’ tail feathers or with hides. Cf. tālavaṇṭaka at Kd 15.29.4. ³ makasavijānī. Vin-a 1210 says it is a little stick made of horn, made of ivory. It is difficult to know the difference intended by the two words, vidhūpana and vijānī, both here translated as “fan.” At Vin 4.263 the former is defined by the latter. ⁴ camaravijānī. Camara is a yak. Its bushy tail is made into a fan or whisk to drive the flies away. ⁵ usīra; see BD 2.228, n. 1. ⁶ Defined at Vin 4.200, Vin 4.338. ⁷ Defined at Vin 4.298.

to that lay-follower: “These revered sirs of yours, master, are coming along with their sunshades up like a group of chief ministers.”

“These, masters, are not monks, they are wanderers.” They made a bet as to whether they were monks or not. Then that lay-follower, having recognised them as they came up, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs tour about with their sunshades up?” Monks heard that lay-follower who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a sunshade should not be used.¹ Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill²; there came to be no comfort for him without a sunshade. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a sunshade to one who is ill.” Now at that time monks, thinking: “A sunshade is allowed by the Lord to one who is ill, but not to one who is not ill,” were doubtful whether to use a sunshade in the monastery and monastery precincts. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a sunshade to be used in a monastery and monastery precincts both by one who is ill and by one who is not ill.”

Now at that time a certain monk, having tied up his bowl with string,³ having hung it on his walking staff,⁴ passed at the wrong time⁵ through a certain village gateway. People, saying: “This, masters, is a thief who is coming, his sword is gleaming,”⁶ having followed him and seized him, let him go on recognising him. Then this monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks.

¹ Nuns are not allowed to use them, Vin 4.338. Cf. DN i.7 where it is said that Gotama refrains from using them, but see Dialogues of the Buddha i.13, n. 2 which maintains, “This is not quite accurate.” Vin-a 1210 says in all cases a sunshade made of one leaf is meant. ² Cf. Vin 4.337–Vin.4.338 (of a nun). ³ For similar phraseology cf. Kd 15.8.1. ⁴ daṇḍa is defined at Vin 4.200. ⁵ Cf. Vin 4.164 (BD 3.82f.). ⁶ Cf. MN i.86.

“But did you, your reverence, carry a walking staff with string on it?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this monk carry a walking staff with string on it?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a walking staff with string on it should not be carried. Whoever should carry one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; he was not able to tour about without a walking staff. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to give an agreement as to a walking staff to a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, am ill; I am not able to tour about without a walking staff, so I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for the agreement as to a walking staff.’ And a second time it should be asked for. And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so is ill; he is not able to tour about without a walking staff; he asks the Order for the agreement as to a walking staff. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the agreement as to a walking staff to the monk So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk ... as to a walking staff. The Order is giving the monk So-and-so the agreement as to a walking staff. If the giving to the monk So-and-so of the agreement as to a walking staff is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The agreement as to a walking staff is given by the Order to the monk So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; he was not able to carry his bowl about without string. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to give an ill monk the agreement as to string. And thus, monks, should it be given. That ill monk ... (as in Kd 15.24.2. Instead of to tour about without a walking staff, etc., read to carry his bowl about without string, etc.) ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; he was not able to tour about without a walking staff nor was he able to carry his bowl about without string. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to give an ill monk the agreement as to a walking staff and string. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk ... (as in Kd 15.24.2. Read: I am not able to tour about without a walking staff nor am I able to carry my bowl about without string, etc.) ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Now at that time a certain monk was a ruminator;¹ he ate ruminating continually. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “This monk is partaking of a meal at the wrong time.”² Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, this monk has recently passed on from the womb of a cow. I allow, monks, rumination for a ruminator. But, monks, one should not eat (anything), having brought it back from the mouth³ to outside of it. Whoever should (so) eat should be dealt with according to the rule⁴.”

¹ Romanthaka. ² See Bu-Pc 37. ³ mukhadvāra as at Bu-Pc 40 and Bu-Sk 41. ⁴ I.e. according to Bu-Pc 37 or Bu-Pc 38.

Now at that time a certain guild had food for an Order; many heaps of boiled rice were allowed to fall in a refectory. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, on being given boiled rice, not accept it carefully?"⁵ Each one of these heaps of boiled rice is the result of a hundredfold labour." Monks heard these people ... who spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"I allow you, monks, if anything falls that is being given to you,¹ to make use of it having picked it up yourselves, for it is left behind (for you), monks, by benefactors."

Now at that time a certain monk walked for almsfood with long (finger-) nails.² A certain woman, having seen him, spoke thus to that monk: "Come, honoured sir, indulge in sexual intercourse."

"No, sister, that is not allowable."

"If you do not, honoured sir, I will now, having scratched my limbs with my own nails, make a row,³ saying, 'this monk has maltreated me.'"

"You, sister, understand that." Then that woman, having scratched her limbs with her own nails, made a row, saying, "This monk has maltreated me." People, having run up, took hold of that monk. But these people saw skin and blood on that woman's nails; seeing this, they said: "This is the work of this woman herself, the monk is innocent," and they let go of that monk. Then that monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. They said: "But do you, your reverence, wear long nails?"

"Yes, your reverences." Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can this monk wear long nails?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, long nails should not be worn.⁴ Whoever should wear them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

⁵ sakkaccaṃ, duly, properly, carefully, respectfully. ¹ Buddhaghosa says that this is explained in the Bhojanavagga (Vin 4.69-Vin.4.90). ² Nails are defined at Vism 250f. ³ kuppa, explained by Buddhaghosa as sadda, noise. ⁴ Vin-a 1210 points out that the cutting of the nails was allowed for reasons of self-protection.

Now at that time monks cut⁵ their nails with their nails and they cut their nails with their mouth and they rubbed them down on a wattle and daub wall; their fingers became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, cutting of the nails.” They cut their nails down to the blood; their fingers became painful. “I allow you, monks, to cut your nails down to the height¹ of the flesh.”

Now at that time the group of six monks had their twenty (nails) polished. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have your twenty (nails) polished. Whoever should do so, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to remove the dirt only.”

Now at that time monks’ hair² came to be long. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “But, monks, are the monks able to cut one another’s hair?”

“They are able (to do so), Lord.” Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, a razor, a whetstone, a razor-case,³ a piece of felt,⁴ and all a barber’s equipment.”⁵

Now at that time the group of six monks had their beards trimmed,⁶ they made their beards grow (long⁷), they had them shaped like ⁵ chindati, to cut off, to cut down, to remove, to destroy. But as Vin-a 1210 says there was no offence in cutting the nails by means of the nails and so on. I do not think we need translate chindati by “tore off” as at Vinaya Texts iii.137. ¹ pamāṇa, measure; often, as in “the pamāṇa of an average man,” meaning height. ² kesa, defined at Vism 249f. ³ khurasipāṭika, explained at Vin-a 1210 as khurakosaka, a little sheath for a razor. ⁴ namataka, as at Kd 15.11.1; Kd 15.19.1; Kd 20.10.4. ⁵ khurabhaṇḍa, as at Vin 1.249. See BD 4.345, n. 5. Cf. tantabhaṇḍa at Kd 15.28.2. ⁶ massum kappāpentī. Vin-a 1211 says kattariyā massum chedāpentī, caused their beards to be cut off with scissors (or with a knife). ⁷ Added at Vin-a 1211.

a goat's beard,⁸ they had them shaped into four corners,⁹ they had the hair on their chests shaped,¹⁰ they had the hair on their stomachs shaped,¹¹ they arranged whiskers, they had the hair on their bodies removed.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, you should not have your beards trimmed ... you should not have the hair of your bodies removed. Whoever should have it removed there is an offence of wrong-doing."²

Now at that time a certain monk came to have a sore on a certain part of his body;³ the medicament would not adhere. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to remove the hair on the body in the case of illness."

Now at that time the group of six monks had the hair of their heads cut off with scissors. People ... spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, you should not have the hair of your heads cut off with scissors. Whoever should (so) have it cut off, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Now at that time a certain monk came to have a sore on his head; he was not able to shave the hair of his head with a razor. They told ⁸ golomikaṃ kārāpentī. Vin-a 1211 says, "having made them long on the chin, they are called: arranged as a goat's beard, ḷakamassuka." ⁹ caturassakan ti catukoṇaṃ, Vin-a 1211. ¹⁰ parimukhaṃ kārāpentī, of which Vin-a 1211 says this was a growing, gathering, collecting (therefore a cutting), saṃharaṇa, into lines of the hair of the chest. ¹¹ aḍḍharuka. Vin-a 1211 says "an arrangement into lines of the hair on the stomach." ¹ sambādhe lomaṃ saṃharāpentī. See note but one above on saṃharaṇa. Corresponding rule for nuns at Nuns' Bi-Pc 2 and where sambādha is defined. I think saṃharāpentī is more correctly to remove (thus cutting into a shape) than "grow" (a meaning given above), in view of the other "shapings," and also because of the objections levelled at the nuns and also, above, at the monks. ² As Vin-a 1211 notes there is a dukkaṭa for the shaping of the beard and everything else. ³ sambādhe which, as defined in Nuns' Bi-Pc 2 means the armpits and private parts.

this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cut off the hair of the head with scissors in the case of illness.”

Now at that time monks wore the hair in their nostrils long. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like demon-worshippers.”⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not wear the hair in your nostrils long. Whoever should (so) wear it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks had the hair in their nostrils taken out with pieces of crystal¹ and by means of beeswax; their nostrils became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, tweezers.”²

Now at that time the group of six monks had grey hairs³ taken out. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have grey hairs taken out. Whoever should have them taken out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk’s ears were stopped with wax. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, an instrument for removing dirt from the ears.”⁴

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of instruments for removing dirt from the ears, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of instruments for removing dirt from the ears should not be used. Whoever should use (these), there is an ⁴ pisācillika, as at Kd 3.12.3, Kd 15.10.2. ¹ sakkharikā. Cf. Kd 6.14.5, loṇa-sak-.

² saṅḍāsa as at MN ii.75, Ja i.138. ³ palita. Cf. palitakesi at MN i.88. MN-a ii.60, paṇḍarakesa. ⁴ Allowed again below, Kd 15.28.2.

offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, (to be) made of bone, made of ivory, made of horn, made of reeds, made of bamboo, made of a piece of stick, made of lac, made of crystal, made of copper, made of the centre of a conchshell.”⁵

5.28.1 Now at that time monks made a large store of copper goods, of bronze goods. People touring the dwelling-place, having seen this, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make a large store of copper goods, of bronze goods like dealers in bronze?”¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a store of copper goods, of bronze goods should not be made. Whoever should make one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

5.28.2
5.188 Now at that time monks were (too) scrupulous to use an ointment box² and an ointment stick³ and an instrument for removing dirt from the ears⁴ and a handle.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, an ointment box ... a handle.”

Now at that time the group of six monks sat down lolling⁶ on their outer cloaks,⁷ the cotton cloth⁸ of the outer cloaks gave way.⁹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not sit down lolling on outer cloaks. Whoever should (so) sit down, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

⁵ As at Kd 6.12.1, Kd 6.12.3; Kd 15.11.1, etc. ¹ kaṃsapattharikā. Vin-a 1211 explains as kaṃsabhaṇḍavānija, merchants in bronze goods. ² añjanī, allowed at Kd 6.12.1, Kd 6.12.2, Kd 6.12.4. ³ Allowed at Kd 6.12.3. ⁴ Allowed at Kd 15.27.6. ⁵ bandhanamatta. Meaning uncertain. Vin-a 1211 says a bandhanamatta for a vāsikat-tarayaṭṭhikādīnaṃ, a knife and mendicant’s staff. Or should kattara read kattarī, scissors? We should then get “a stick for knife and scissors.” Cf. bandhanamattaṃ at Kd 5.11.1, Kd 7.1.5, but in both passages it seems to have a different meaning from above. ⁶ Cf. Bu-Sk 26 where “lolling” is defined as lolling on the hands, lolling on cloths. ⁷ As at Kd 14.4.7 (end). ⁸ Read paṭṭā instead of text’s pattā, as noted at Vinaya Texts iii.141, n. 6. ⁹ As at Kd 8.21.1 where a remedy is “allowed”. See BD 4.424. Lujjanti, “gave way,” occurs also at Kd 15.16.2, Kd 15.17.2 and is there translated “fell in.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; there was no comfort for him without a bandage.¹⁰ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bandage.” Then it occurred to monks: “Now how should a bandage be made?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a loom, shuttles, strings, tickets and all the equipment for a loom.”

Now at that time a certain monk entered a village for alms-food without his waistband; on a carriage road his inner robe dropped down.¹ People shouted out² and that monk became ashamed. Then that monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter a village without your waistband. Whoever should (so) enter one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a waistband.”³

Now at that time the group of six monks wore various kinds of waistbands: those of many strands,⁴ those like the head of a water-snake,⁵ those like tambourine drums,⁶ those like chains.⁷ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of waistbands should not be worn: those of many strands ... those like chains. Whoever should wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁸ I allow, monks, two (kinds of) waist-

¹⁰ āyoga, as at Vin 3.257, Vin 4.170. See BD 2.144, n. 2. ¹ pabhassittha, as at Vin 4.159.

² As at Vin 4.345. ³ Taken for granted at Kd 1.25.9, Kd 1.25.10. ⁴ kalābuka. Vin-a 1211 explains by bahurajjuka. ⁵ deḍḍubhakaṃ nāma udakasappiṣṣasadisaraṃ, so Vin-a 1211. ⁶ muraja. Vin-a 1211 says they are made, having twisted the shape into a tambourine drum (vaṭṭa, circle, round). ⁷ maddaviṇa. Vin-a 1211 (reading -vāṇa) says pāmaṅgasanthānaṃ. Cf. Kd 15.2.1 where pāmaṅga occurs. See also BD 1.77, n. 9.

⁸ Buddhaghosa says there must not be even one of these, much less many.

bands: a strip of cotton cloth,⁹ one with a well made end.”¹⁰

The borders of a waistband wore out. “I allow, monks, those like tambourine drums, those like chains.” The end of a waistband wore out. “I allow, monks, a sewing round,¹ a knotting.”² The end of a waistband where it was looped³ wore out. “I allow, monks, a buckle.”⁴

Now at that time the group of six monks wore various kinds of buckles, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of buckles should not be worn. Who ever should wear one, there is a offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the inside of a conchshell, made of thread.”⁵

Now at that time the venerable Ānanda having put on light-weight upper robes,⁶ entered a village for almsfood; his upper robes were blown up by gusts of wind.⁷ Then the venerable Ānanda, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. The ⁹ paṭṭikā. Vin-a 1211 explains that here it is a paṭṭikā that is woven ordinarily or that is woven in the fish and thorn design (? macchakaṅṭhakavāyimā), and it continues, “there are to be no divisions into kuñjaracchikādi,” Kuñja is a hollow. ¹⁰ sūkarantaka. Vinaya Texts iii.143 “do not venture to translate the term,” and its meaning is extremely doubtful. Vin-a 1211 has variant reading sūkaraṅḍaka, and also (at Vin 2.319) sukarantaka, which I adopt as the most intelligible, although possibly not the most correct reading. Vin-a 1211 explains by saying it is fashioned into a well made (sūkara) round case for a key. ¹ sobhaṇa. Vin-a 1212 says “having twisted it, there is the sewing of a circular end,” mukhavatṭhisibbana. ² guṇaka. Cf. saguṇaṃ katvā at Kd 1.25.9. Vin-a 1212 says “a sewing after the style of muddikā (i.e. a signet ring, a bunch of grapes; or muddika, an accountant may be meant—one who ties coins, etc., into knots in his waistband?). ³ pavananta. ⁴ vidha, as at Bu-Pc 86.2.2. See BD 3.89, n. 1. ⁵ This last, thread, is in addition to the usual list as given above, e.g. at Kd 15.27.6. ⁶ saṅghāṭiyo as it is in the plural must refer to more than the outer cloak; and since the verb pārupati is used the reference is probably to this and to the upper robe. ⁷ Cf. Vin 4.345.

monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a block,⁸ something to tie.”⁹

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of blocks, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of blocks should not be used. Whoever should use them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of thread.”

Now at that time monks inserted blocks and things to tie into their robes; the robes wore out. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a shield¹ for the blocks, a shield for the things to tie.” They inserted the shields for the blocks and the shields for the things to tie at the edge (of the robe); a corner was revealed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to insert a shield for the blocks at the edge; to insert a shield for the things to tie having taken it back seven finger breadths or eight finger breadths.”

Now at that time the group of six monks dressed in householders’ under garments: “the elephant’s trunk,”² “the fish’s tail,”³ “the four corner arrangement,”⁴ “the palmyra whisk arrangement,”⁵ “the hundred jungle ropes.”⁶ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not dress in householders’ under garments: ‘the elephant’s trunk’ ... ‘the hundred jungle ropes’. Whoever should (so) dress, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

⁸ gaṇṭhikā. See BD 3.88, n. 4. ⁹ pāsaka, perhaps a bow for the dress. Cf. Thig.411 and MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1893, p.45. ¹ phalaka, perhaps a slip of wood or bark as in phalakacira, used in making an ascetic’s dress, Vin 1.305, DN i.167. ² hatthisoṇḍaka. Vin-a 1212 says dressed, having made an appendage (hanging down) in the form of an elephant’s trunk. ³ macchavālaka. Vin-a 1212 says dressed, having hung the edge of the border on one side, the edge of the tie on the other. ⁴ Vin-a 1212 explains there were two above and two below, hence showing four corners when clothed thus. ⁵ tālavaṇṭaka. Cf. Kd 15.22.2. Vin-a 1212 says that when clothed one suspends the outer cloak in the manner of a palmrya whisk.

Now at that time the group of six monks put on¹ householders’ upper garments.² People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not put on householders’ upper garments. Whoever should put one on, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks dressed in loincloths.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like a king’s shaven bearers with coils.”⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not dress in loincloths. Whoever should (so) dress, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

⁶ satavallikā. Cf. vallikā at Kd 15.2.1 where although the word may mean ear ornaments, these may be formed like jungle ropes. See also Kd 15.16.2. Vin-a 1212 says dressed by making a bracelet (-like arrangement), ovaṭṭika, having folded over the long outer cloak a number of times; or, dressed showing continual jungle ropes at the left and right sides. If one or two jungle ropes appear from the knee it is all right. Cf. ovaṭṭika at Kd 15.2.1. ¹ On pārupati and nivāseti, put on and dress in, see BD 2.32, n. 2, n. 3. ² Buddhaghosa enumerates a number of upper garments which he classifies as householders’, including a Jain’s, a wanderer’s, a one-cloth ascetic’s, and a brahmin’s. ³ saṃvelliyaṃ. Cf. saṃvelliyaṃ kaṭṭisuttakaṃ at Kd 20.16.2. Vin-a 1212 says that they dressed having tied on long grass, kaccha, like wrestlers and workmen, and that it is explained in the Sekhiyas that a monk must be dressed having covered up the three circles all round. (See Bu-Sk 1, Bu-Sk 2). ⁴ muṇḍavaṭṭi. Vin-a 1213 (with variant reading -veṭhi) says “the meaning is people going anywhere for a king and carrying goods and equipment”. The coils vaṭṭi, would be the pads they wear on their heads to support the burden.

Now at that time the group of six monks carried a double carrying-pole.⁵ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like a king’s shaven bearers with coils.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not carry a double carrying-pole. Whoever should carry one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a single carrying-pole, a carrying-pole for two bearers,⁶ a weight (carried) on the head, a weight (carried) on the shoulders, a weight (carried) on the hips, one hung on.”

Now at that time monks did not chew⁷ tooth-wood⁸; their mouths came to smell nasty. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these five disadvantages in not chewing tooth-wood¹: it is bad for the eyes, the mouth becomes nasty smelling, the channels of taste are not purified, phelgm and mucus get on food, one’s food is not enjoyed. These, monks, are the five disadvantages of not chewing tooth-wood. Monks, there are there five advantages in chewing tooth-wood: it is good for the eyes, the mouth does not become nasty smelling, the channels of taste are purified, phelgm and mucus do not get on food, one’s food is enjoyed. These, monks, are the five advantages of chewing tooth-wood. I allow, monks, tooth-wood.”

Now at that time the group of six monks chewed long pieces of tooth-wood; they even flicked novices with these. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a long piece of tooth-wood should not be chewed. Whoever should chew one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a piece of tooth-wood to be eight finger breadths (in length) at the most. And a novice should not be flicked with it. Whoever should flick him, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

⁵ I.e. with the weight at each end. Cf. kāja at Kd 1.20.19. ⁶ antarākāja, which Vin-a 1213 explains as one having the weight in the middle and that may be transported by two (men). ⁷ khādanti, eat. ⁸ dantakaṭṭha, used in cleaning the teeth. ¹ As at AN iii.250.

Now at that time as a certain monk was chewing a piece of tooth-wood that was too short it became lodged in his throat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, too short a piece of tooth-wood should not be chewed. Whoever should chew one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a piece of tooth-wood to be four finger breadths (in length) at the least.”

^{5:32.1}
^{5:193} Now at that time the group of six monks set fire to a forest.² People ... spread it about, saying: “Like forest firers.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a forest should not be set on fire. Whoever should set one on fire, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time dwelling-places were tangled over with grass.¹ As the forest fires were burning (forests and so on) they burned the dwelling-places. Monks were doubtful whether to make a counter-fire² to give protection. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if a forest fire is burning, to make a counter-fire to give protection.”

^{5:32.2} Now at that time the group of six monks climbed a tree and jumped from tree to tree. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like monkeys.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a tree should not be climbed. Whoever should climb one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time an elephant infested the way of a certain monk who was going to Sāvattthī through the Kosalan districts. Then that monk rushed up to the foot of a certain tree (but) being scrupulous did not climb the tree; the elephant went off by another (track).

² As at Vin 3.85. ¹ As at AN i.153, AN iii.128. ² paṭaggim dātum. Cf. Ja i.212. Vin-a 1214 says having made the ground square, it is possible to convey grass there and dig it in carefully, and having broken off damp branches to cool down the fire.

Then that monk, having reached Sāvattḥī, told this matter to the monks. (The monks told this matter to the Lord).³ He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to climb a tree to the height of a man, and as high as you like in cases of distress.”⁴

Now at that time Yameḷu and Tekula⁵ were the names of two monks who were brothers, brahmins by birth, with lovely voices, with lovely enunciation. They approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord: “At present, Lord, monks of various names, various clans, various social strata have gone forth from various families; these corrupt the speech of the Awakened One in (using) his own dialect.¹ Now we, Lord, give the speech of the Awakened One in metrical form.”² The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How can you, foolish men, speak thus: ‘Now we, Lord, give the speech of the Awakened One in metrical form’? It is not, foolish men, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, the speech of the Awakened One should not be given in metrical form. Whoever should (so) give it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to learn the speech of the Awakened One according to his own dialect.”

³ Omitted in the text. ⁴ Such as seeing wild animals, forest fires, or approaching floods, or such as wanting to see the right direction if one is on the wrong road (so Vin-a 1214). ⁵ Yameḷutekulā. This compound should possibly be resolved into Yameḷa and Utekuḷa, but is taken as reproduced above by Dictionary of Pali Proper Names (under Tekuḷa) and Vinaya Texts iii.149, q.v. note 3. These monks are mentioned nowhere but here, I think. ¹ sakāya niruttīyā. Vin-a 1214 says the current Magadhese manner of speech according to the awakened one. Cf. nirutti at MN iii.234. ² chandaso āropema. Vin-a 1214 explains, “we give (āropema) a way of speech according to the honoured dialect (or vernacular, sakkata bhāsā) like a Veda”. Sakkata, variant reading sakkata, may be Sanskrit. See four reasons for supposing so at Vinaya Texts iii.150, n. Cf. Sāvittḥī chandaso mukhaṃ at Snp 568, Vin 1.246, and chando nidānaṃ gāthānaṃ at SN i.38.

Now at that time the group of six monks learnt metaphysics.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Now, monks, can one who sees the essence (as being) in metaphysics attain to growth, increase, maturity in this dhamma and discipline?”

“This is not so, Lord.”

“Or could one who sees the essence (as being) in this dhamma and discipline learn metaphysics?”

“This is not so, Lord.”

“Monks, metaphysics should not be learnt. Whoever should learn them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks taught metaphysics. People ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks learnt worldly knowledge.¹ People ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks taught worldly knowledge. People ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the Lord, surrounded by a large assembly, sneezed while he was teaching dhamma. Monks, saying: “Lord, may the ³ lokāyata, name of a branch of brahmin learning, probably metaphysics. See Dialogues of the Buddha i.166–172; Vinaya Texts iii.151, n. 2; BD 3.83, n. 1. Word also occurs at AN i.163, AN i.166, AN iii.223, Snp p.105, MN ii.147. Vin-a 1214 says “it means everything is rejected, everything is unrejected; it is the lore of other sects, connected with what is utterly groundless and which says by this or that method a crow is white, a crane is black.” ¹ tiracchānavijjā. Learnt and then taught by the group of six nuns at Vin 4.305–6; a pācittiya for them. The Old Commentary, on these Nuns’ Bi-Pc 49, Bi-Pc 50, defines both tiracchānavijjā and pariyāpuṇāti, “learn.” See BD 3.337–9 and notes there.

Lord live (long), may the wellfarer live (long),” made a loud noise, a great noise; the talk on dhamma was interrupted by this noise. Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Now, monks, when (the phrase) ‘Long life’ is spoken to one who has sneezed, can he for this reason live or die?”

“That is not so, Lord.”

“Monks, ‘Long life’ should not be said to one who has sneezed. Whoever should say it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time people said “May you live (long), honoured sirs” to monks who had sneezed. The monks, being scrupulous, did not respond. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans not respond when (the phrase) ‘May you live (long), honoured sirs’ is being spoken to them?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, householders like lucky signs.¹ I allow you, monks, when (the phrase) ‘May you live (long), honoured sirs’ is being spoken to you by householders to say, ‘Long life’ (to them).”

Now at that time the Lord, surrounded by a large assembly, was teaching dhamma sitting down. A certain monk had eaten garlic;² he sat down to one side, thinking: “In case the monks are incommoded.” The Lord saw that monk who was sitting down at one side; seeing him, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, why is this monk sitting to one side?”

“Lord, this monk has eaten garlic, so he sat down at one side, thinking: ‘In case the monks are incommoded’.”

“But, monks, should that be eaten which, when eaten, can (make the eater) outside such a dhamma-talk as this?”

“That is not so, Lord.”

“Monks, garlic should not be eaten. Whoever should eat it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”³

¹ As at Kd 15.21.4. ² lasuṇa, defined at Vin 4.259. ³ A Pācittiya for nuns, Nuns’ Bi-Pc 1.

Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta had wind in his stomach. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great approached the venerable Sāriputta; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta: “When you had wind in your stomach before, reverend Sāriputta, by what means did you get comfort?”

“I had garlic, your reverence.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to eat garlic in the case of illness.”⁴

5:35-1 Now at that time monks relieved themselves here, there and everywhere in a monastery; the monastery was soiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you monks, to relieve yourselves at one side.” The monastery became nasty smelling. “I allow you, monks, a vessel.” Sitting down, it was painful. “I allow, monks, urinal shoes.”¹ The urinal shoes were public;² monks were ashamed to relieve themselves. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence them in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.” The vessel being uncovered became nasty smelling. “I allow, monks, a lid.”

5:35-2 Now at that time monks evacuated here, there and everywhere in a monastery ... (as in Kd 15.35.1) ... The monastery became nasty smelling. “I allow, monks, a cesspool.” The facing of the cesspool fell in.³ “I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood.” The cesspool was too low to the ground⁴ ... “... I allow, monks, a balustrade.” Sitting inside, they fell off. “I allow you, monks, to evacuate having spread (something) and made a hole in the middle.” Sitting down, it was painful. “I allow you, monks, privy shoes.”

5:35-3 They evacuated outside. “I allow, monks, a trough.” There was no wood for scraping. “I allow, monks, wood for scraping.” There was no receptacle⁵ for scraping. “I allow, monks, a receptacle (for the wood) for scraping.” The cesspool being uncovered became nasty smelling. “I allow, monks, a lid.” Evacuating in the open air, they were bothered by the cold and heat. “I allow, monks, a hut for the privy.” There was no door to the hut. “I allow, monks, a door ...⁶ ... swordfish teeth, the five (pieces of) cloth design, a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.”⁷ Now at that time a certain monk, weak through age, having evacuated, fell down as he was getting up. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a chair with supports.” The hut was not fenced in. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences with which to fence it in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.”

⁴ As a medicine, Vin-a 1214. ¹ Allowed at Kd 5.8.3. ² Cf. Kd 15.17.1. ³ As at Kd 15.17.2. ⁴ As at Kd 15.11.6. ⁵ pidhara.

There was no porch. “I allow, monks, a porch.” There was no door to the porch. “I allow, monks, a door ...¹ ... a cord to pull through.” Powdered grass fell on to the porch ...² “... five (pieces of) cloth design.” A cell became swampy³ ... “I allow, monks, a drain for the water.” There was no vessel for the water for rinsing. “I allow, monks, a vessel for the water for rinsing.” There was no saucer for the water for rinsing. “I allow, monks, a saucer for the water for rinsing.” They rinsed sitting down; it was painful. “I allow, monks, shoes to be worn for rinsing.”⁴ The shoes for rinsing were public; monks were ashamed to rinse. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence them in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.” The vessel for the water for rinsing was uncovered; it was littered over with powdered grass and dust. “I allow, monks, a lid.”

Now at that time the group of six monks indulged in bad habits like this⁵: they planted and caused to be planted small flowering trees ... and indulged in various bad habits. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of bad habits should not be indulged in. Whoever should indulge in them, should be dealt with according to the rule.”⁶

⁶ As at Kd 15.14.3. ⁷ Last two items also at Kd 15.11.6. ¹ As at Kd 15.14.3. ² As at Kd 15.11.6. ³ As at Kd 15.14.5. ⁴ Allowed at Kd 5.8.3. ⁵ As at Kd 11.13.2 and Bu-Ss 13. The passage has been translated at BD 1.314–BD.1.318. ⁶ Vin-a 1214 says they should be dealt with by a pācittiya for a pācittiya matter and by a dukkaṭa for a dukkaṭa matter.

Now at the time when Kassapa of Uruvelā went forth many copper goods, wooden goods, clay goods accrued to the Order. Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, what copper goods are allowed by the Lord, what are not allowed? What wooden goods are allowed, what are not allowed? What clay goods are allowed, what are not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, all copper goods except a weapon; all wooden goods except a sofa,⁷ a divan,⁸ a wooden bowl,⁹ wooden shoes;¹⁰ all clay goods except a (clay-foot-) scrubber¹ and a large earthen vessel.”²

Told is the Fifth Section: that on Minor Matters

THIS IS ITS KEY

Against a tree, and against a post, and against a wall, on a rubbing-board (using a) gandha (-bba hand instrument), a string, having plunged into, a scrubber, scab, and age, ordinary mode with the hand.

And also ear-ornaments, chains, ornamental strings of beads for the throat³ should not be worn, ornamental girdles, bangles, armlets, bracelets, finger rings, Long, with a comb, with a snake’s hood instrument, with the hands, with beeswax, with oily water, sores in a mirror and bowl of water, ointment, with paste and chunan, They smeared,⁴ and painting the limbs, painting the faces, both these, disease of the eyes, and the mountain top, long-drawn, intoning,⁵ outside,⁶

⁷ āsandī. See BD 3.326, n. 1, and BD 4.256, n. 5. ⁸ pallaṅka. See BD 3.271, n. 3. ⁹ See definition of bowl at BD 2.115, BD 2.415, BD 3.213. At Kd 15.8.2 it is made a dukkāṭa to use a wooden bowl. ¹⁰ Cf. Kd 5.6.4 (kaṭṭhapāduka), above dārupāduka. ¹ kataka. See Kd 15.22.1. ² kumbhakārikā. Vin-a 1215 says “this is a hut made entirely of clay like Dhaniya’s”. Dhaniya’s story is told at the beginning of Bu-Pj 2. ³ Reading above is kaṇṇasuttaṃ, an ornamental string hanging from the ear Oldenberg at Vin 2.320 queries whether it should not be kaṇṭhasuttaṃ (see Kd 15.2.1) which is the reading in the Sinhalese and Siamese editions. ⁴ Text here lañcanti; at Kd 15.2.5, as also in Sinhalese edition lañcenti. Siamese edition lañcenti. ⁵ These two words, run together as sara-bāhiraṃ, stand for sarabhañña and bāhiralomi (Kd 15.3.2 and Kd 15.4). ⁶ These two words, run together as sara-bāhiraṃ, stand for sarabhañña and bāhiralomi (Kd 15.3.2 and Kd 15.4).

Mango peels, with whole (mangoes), a snake, and he cut off, sandal wood, various kinds, bases of bowls, gold, thick, jags, Carved, was spoiled,⁷ nasty smelling, in the heat, were broken, by a solid bench, plaster flooring, grass (mat), piece of cloth, a stand, and on a wicker stand,
A bag, and a strap at the edge, thread made for tying, a peg, and on a couch, and on a chair, on a lap, in a sunshade, opened,
A gourd, a water-pot, a skull, odd bits, waste-tub, split open,⁸ handle, gold, feathers and rind, a tube,
And yeast, barley-meal, powdered stone, beeswax, gum, misshapen at the corners, tying, uneven place, on the ground, old¹ and was (not) enough,²
A mark, and a false thread, unwashed, damp, sandals, fingers, and a thimble, a small bowl, a bag, tyings,
In the open air, low to the ground, and also a piling, they were inconvenienced,
they fell off, powdered grass, a smearing inside and out, Whitewash and treatment with black colouring and red chalk, wreathwork, creeperwork, swordfish teeth, strips (of cloth)³
And a bamboo and cord for robes—the Leader allowed (these).
And they went away having left, a kaṭhina frame was split,
Was twisted out of position,⁴ and on to a wall, they went along taking in a bowl, a bag, and a thread for tying, having tied, sandals,⁵
On a road water that was not allowable, strainer, little piece of cloth, regulation water-pot, two monks, the Sage reached Vesālī,
Double (water-strainer), filter, he allowed a strainer.
By mosquitoes, very ill through sumptuous (foods) and Jīvaka, Place for pacing up and down in, bathroom, in an uneven place, low to the ground,

⁷ Reading should be dussati as at Kd 15.9.3 and Sinhalese and Siamese editions, not as with Oldenberg dussanti. ⁸ vippāri. Sinhalese edition vippāli and Siamese edition viphāli. At Kd 15.11.1 it is vipāṭetvā. ¹ vippāri. Sinhalese edition vippāli and Siamese edition viphāli. At Kd 15.11.1 it is vipāṭetvā. ² Text reads jira-patoti ca; Sinhalese edition jiṇṇaṃ pahoti ca; Siamese edition jirappahoti ca. ³ Text reads paṭikā; Siamese edition pātikāṃ; Sinhalese edition paṭṭikā; Kd 15.11.6 and similar passages pañcapaṭṭhikāṃ. Pali-English Dictionary takes paṭṭikā = paṭṭaka “made of or forming a strip of cloth; a bandage, a strip (of cloth).” Thus pañcapaṭṭhika may be a design: the five strips (of cloth) design. ⁴ viniveṭhiya; Siamese edition viniveṭhiyati. ⁵ Sinhalese edition here inserts upāhanatthavikaṇ ca aṃsabandhanasuttakaṃ, bag for sandals and thread or tying at the edge; and Siamese edition upāhanatthavikaṇ ca aṃsavaddhaṇ ca suttakaṃ, bag for sandals and a strap at the edge and thread.

three pilings, they were inconvenienced, stairs, balustrade, railing,
In the open air, powdered grass, a smearing inside and out whitewash and treatment with black colouring and red chalk Wreathwork creeperwork swordfish teeth strips (of cloth)⁶ bamboo and cord for robes, and it may be built high to the ground,
A piling, staircase and balustrade,⁷ a door, doorpost and lintel, a hollow like a mortar, a small upper projection, and a post, a “monkey’s head,”

A pin, a (stick used as a) bolt, a keyhole, and pulling through, a cord, a facing, and a pipe for steam, and in the middle, clay for the face,
And nasty smelling,¹ it scorched, a receptacle for water,² a saucer, and it did not make them sweat, swampy, to wash, one may make a drain,
And a chair,³ about a porch, work,⁴ gravel, stones, a drain, naked, on the ground, when it rained, three coverings there,
A well, and it fell in,⁵ by means of a creeper,⁶ by means of a waistband, a well-sweep, hand-wheel, a wheel, many vessels were broken, Copper, wooden, strips of animals’ hides, a hall, grass, a lid, a trough, a pool, a fence, swampy, and about a drain, Cooled down, a tank, and stale, with a curving roof,
for four months, and lay down to sleep, and a piece of felt, and it should not be allotted,
Chased (cushions), a stand,⁷ eating they would share one,⁸ Vaḍḍha, and Bodhi, tread on it, little jar, (clay foot-) scrubber, broom, Stone pebble and scum as a foot-rubber, fan, palmyra-whisk, and also a mosquito fan, a chowry, Sunshade, and⁹ without, in a monastery—the three¹⁰—with string, agree-

⁶ Text here reads makarantakapaṭṭikam, but Sinhalese edition makaradantaka-paṭṭikam and Siamese makaradantapātīkam. ⁷ bāha here stands for ālambanabāha.

¹ In Siamese edition this word is preceded by doṇi, a tub or a trough, and in Sinhalese edition by mattikādoṇi, a tub for clay, as at Kd 15.14.3. ² Text reads udakātara, Siamese edition udakhānam, and Sinhalese edition udakādhanaṃ, with which cf. Buddhaghosa’s udakanidhāna on Kd 15.14.3, BD 5.166 above (udakaṭṭhāna), and also cf. udakādhāna at MN i.414. ³ Reading pītham with Sinhalese edition instead of text’s pīṭhe.

⁴ This must refer to the wreath work and creeperwork mentioned in Kd 15.14.4. ⁵ Reading lujjati with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of text’s lujja-tīṇi. ⁶ valliyā; at Kd 15.16.2 vallikāya. ⁷ Kd 15.19.1 and Siamese edition maḷorīkam; above maḷorakam; Sinhalese edition malojīkam.

⁸ Text reads bhuñjanto ka tuvaṭṭayyum; Sinhalese edition bhuñjant’eka tuvaṭṭīkam; Siamese edition bhuñjant’ekam tuvaṭṭayum. ⁹ Read ca with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of text’s va. ¹⁰ This refers to three (of the four) rulings laid down at Kd 15.23.2, Kd 15.23.3 for the use of sunshades: (1) allowed, (2) not allowed, (3) allowed (only) to an invalid, (4) allowed to be used by a monk whether ill or well in a monastery and monastery precincts.

ment,

ruminator, lumps of boiled rice, long nails, they cut, painful fingers,

Down to the blood, and to the height, the twenty, long-haired, razor, whetstone, razor-case, piece of felt, a barber's equipment,

They trimmed beards, they let them grow, goat's beard, four cornered arrangement, on their chests and on their stomachs, whiskers, removed the hair on their bodies,

Illness, scissors, a sore, long, and with a piece of crystal, grey hair, stopped, and various kinds of copper goods, a store,¹

And lolling, a bandage, strings,² tickets, (waist-)band, those of many strands, like the head of a water-snake, like tambourine drums, those like chains,³

Palmyra whisk, hundred jungle-ropes,⁴ having put on householders' upper garments, loin cloths, double carrying-pole, toothwood, on flicking,

Lodged in the throat, and a forest, counterfire, a tree, and by an elephant,

Yamelu (and Tekula),⁵ they learnt metaphysics, they taught it,

Worldly knowledge,⁶ he sneezed, good luck, and he ate, affliction of wind, and it was soiled, nasty smelling, painful, shoes,

They were ashamed, nasty smelling (un-) covered,⁷ and they did it here and there, nasty smelling, cesspool, it fell in,⁸ high to the ground, and about a piling, ¹ nīcayā. Sinhalese edition nīcayā, text nisaha. Siamese edition lohabhaṇḍaṅkhanīsaha. Sinhalese edition inserts between this word and “lolling” bandhanamattaṃ kukkucā, (too) scrupulous (to use) a handle, see note at Kd 15.28.2 above. ² Text paṭaṃ; Sinhalese edition and Kd 15.28.2 vaṭaṃ. ³ Sinhalese and Siamese editions here have the following: paṭṭikaṃ (Siamese paṭṭikā) sūkarantaṅ ca / dasā muraja-veṇikā (Siamese murajja-) pavananto pi jirati / gaṇṭhikaṃ uccāvacaṅ ca phalakante pi ogahe gihīvatthaṃ hatthisoṇḍaṃ macchakaṃ catukaṇṇakaṃ / (Siamese gihivatthaṃ soṇḍaṃ macchavāḷakaṃ catukkaṇṇakaṃ)—a strip of cotton cloth and one with a well made end/borders, like tambourine drums, a twisting (veṇikā, probably for sobhaṇa at Kd 15.29.2), an end, and knotting the rest, also where it was looped, / it wore out, a block, and various kinds, also shields and edges, taking back, / householders' undergarments: the elephant's trunk, the fish arrangement, the four cornered arrangement. This covers Kd 15.29.2–Kd 15.29.4 (beginning), and clearly should be inserted. ⁴ Reading with Sinhalese edition satavallim, instead of satavali above. ⁵ Text reads Yameḷe, which I take to be a plural of “Yameḷa and Tekula”. But Sinhalese edition reads Yameḷa. Siamese Sakaṭe, with variant reading Yameḷe. See note above to Kd 15.33.1. ⁶ Text and Siamese edition tiračchānakathā. I follow Sinhalese tiračchānagatā vijjā since there is no mention of “talk” in Kd 15.33.2. ⁷ pāru. ⁸ Should read lujjati as in Sinhalese and Siamese editions, not lujjanti as in text.

Staircase, balustrade, inside, painful and shoes, outside, a tub and wood, and a stick,⁹ uncovered,
A hut for the privy, both a door as well as a doorpost and lintel, a hollow like a mortar, an upper projection, a post, and a “monkey’s head,”
A pin, a bolt, a keyhole, and a hole for pulling (cord) through as well as a cord, a smearing inside and out, whitewash and black colouring Wreathwork creeperwork swordfish five strips of cloth (design) a bamboo and a cord for robes, weak through age, a fence,
And about a porch, as before, and gravel, flagstones,
(water) remained, a drain, and also a vessel, a saucer,
Painful, shame, a lid, and they indulged in bad habits.
He allowed copper goods a weapon being excepted.
A sofa and divan, a wooden bowl and shoes being excepted—
the Great Sage allowed all (other) goods made of wood.
And the Truth-finder, a (clay foot-) scrubber and an earthen vessel having been excepted, compassionate, allowed also all (other) goods made of clay.
The character of whatever matter, if equal to the preceding, even if it is brief, is known from the context in the key.
Thus the hundred and ten matters in the Minor Matters in the discipline are based on what is dhamma indeed—also there is help for the well behaved.
The expert in discipline is well trained, friendly in mind, very well behaved, bringing light, steadfast, worthy of honour, one who has heard much.

⁹ Kd 15.35.3 pidharo; above pidhāro; Sinhalese edition Pidharo; Siamese edition pīṭharo.

16. LODGINGS (SAYANĀSANA)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

ALLOWANCE FOR DWELLINGS

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time lodgings had not been permitted to monks by the Lord. So these monks stayed here and there: in a forest, at the root of a tree, on a hillside, in a glen, in a mountain cave, in a cemetery, in a forest glade, in the open air, on a heap of straw.¹ Early in the mornings these went out from this and that place: from the forest ... from the heap of straw, pleasing when approaching and when receding, when looking before, when looking back, when bending back (their arms), when stretching them out, their eyes cast down and possessed of pleasant behaviour.²

Kd 16.1
BD 5.2

Now at that time a (great) merchant of Rājagaha went early one morning to a pleasure grove.³ The (great) merchant of Rājagaha saw these monks going out from this and that place: from a forest ... from a heap of straw, and seeing them he made up his mind.⁴ Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha approached those monks; having

Kd 16.1

¹ Cf. same list at DN i.71, MN iii.3, AN ii.210, and a shorter one at AN i.241 The terms are defined at DN-a 209-DN-a 210, Vb-a 366-Vb-a 367. ² More or less stock; cf. Vin 3.181, DN i.70, MN iii.35, MN iii.90, AN ii.104, AN ii.106, AN ii.210. ³ Defined at Vin 4.298. ⁴ assa cittam padīdi, his mind became clear or bright.

approached, he spoke thus to those monks: “If I, revered sirs, were to have dwelling-places built, would you stay in my dwelling-places?”

“Householder, dwelling-places have not been allowed by the Lord.”

“Well then, revered sirs, having inquired of the Lord, tell me (what he says).”

“Very well, householder,” and these monks, having answered the (great) merchant of Rājagaha in assent, approached the Lord; having approached the Lord, having greeted him, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the (great) merchant of Rājagaha is anxious to have dwelling-places built. What line of conduct should be followed by us, Lord?” Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, five (kinds of) abodes:¹ a dwelling-place, a curved house, a long house,² a mansion,³ a cave.”⁴

Then these monks approached the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, they spoke thus to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha: “Householder, dwelling-places have been allowed by the Lord. Do now what seems right.” Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha had sixty dwelling-places established on one day alone. When the (great) merchant of Rājagaha had had these sixty dwelling-places finished he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the (great) merchant of Rājagaha spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat departed keeping his right side towards him.

¹ Cf. Kd 1.30.4, and also BD 2.16, n. 6 (on BD 5.17). ² See BD 2.16, n. 5. Pāsāda is again called ḍiḥapāsāda at Vin-a 1215, on above passage. ³ hammiya. See BD 2.16, n. 6. Vin-a 1215 says “a hammiya is like a pāsāda with a chamber placed on the top-most open-air floor.” ⁴ Vin-a 1215 says a cave, guhā, in bricks, in stones, in wood, in laterite, paṃsu. On paṃsu as meaning “laterite” in this connection see A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, no. 3, p. 266.

Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the (great) merchant of Rājagaha spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, I had these sixty dwelling-places built because I need merit, because I need heaven. What line of conduct am I, Lord, to follow in regard to these dwelling-places?”

BD 5.2

“Well now, do you, householder, establish these sixty dwelling-places for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters,¹ present and to come.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having answered the Lord in assent, had those sixty dwelling-places established for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters, present and to come.

Kd 16.1

Then the Lord thanked the (great) merchant of Rājagaha in these verses:²

“They ward off cold and heat and beasts of prey from there
And creeping things and gnats and rains in the wet season.

When the dreaded hot wind arises, that is warded off.
To meditate and obtain insight in a refuge and at ease:—

“A dwelling-place is praised by the Awakened One as chief gift to an Order.

Therefore a wise man, looking to his own weal,

¹ See S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p. 83ff., p. 131, p. 143. ² As at Kd 16.9.2 below, and Ja i.93, DN-a i.304.

Should have charming dwelling-places built so that those who have heard much can stay therein.¹

“To these² food and drink, raiment and lodgings
He should give, to the upright, with mind purified.
(Then) these³ teach him dhamma dispelling every ill;
He, knowing that dhamma, here attains nibbāna, cankerless.”⁴

Then the Lord, having given thanks to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha in these verses, rising from his seat, departed.

People heard: “It is said that dwelling-places are allowed by the Lord,” and they zealously had dwelling-places built. These dwelling-places did not have doors, and snakes, scorpions and centipedes got in. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a door.” Having made a hole in the wall, they tied on the door with jungle creeper and with cord, but these were eaten by rats and white ants and when the tyings were eaten the doors fell down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a doorpost and lintel, a hollow like a mortar (for the door to revolve in) a small upper projection.”⁵ The doors did not meet. “I allow, monks, a hole for pulling through (the cord), cord for pulling through.”⁶ The doors could not be closed. “I allow, monks, a post for the bolt, a ‘monkey’s head,’ a pin (to secure the bolt), a stick (used as a bolt).”⁷

Now at that time monks were not able to open a door. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a keyhole and three (kinds of) keys: a copper key, a wooden key, a horn key.” But the dwelling-places were unguarded⁸ when those who, having unfas-

¹ Cf. Mil 211. ² For this line and next, cf. SN 1.100. ³ This line and next at AN iii.41, AN iii.43. ⁴ Cf. this line with Snp 765. ⁵ On these items see Kd 15.14.3. ⁶ On these items see Kd 15.14.3. ⁷ On these items see Kd 15.14.3. ⁸ agutta, as were the lodgings at Kd 18.3.1.

tened¹ (the doors), entered. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bolt and a pin (to secure the bolt).”²

Now at that time dwelling-places were roofed with grass; they were cold in the cold weather, hot in the hot weather. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roofing), to give it a smearing inside and out.”³ Now at that time dwelling-places had no windows.⁴ They were bad for the eyes and nasty smelling. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) windows: a railing window,⁵ a lattice window,⁶ a stick window.”⁷ Squirrels and bats got through the spaces in the windows. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, drapery⁸ across the windows.” Squirrels and bats got in even through the drapery. “I allow, monks, shutters⁹ across the windows, little bolsters¹⁰ across the windows.”

Now at that time monks lay down to sleep on the ground and their limbs and robes were soiled with dust. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a grass matting.” The grass matting was eaten by rats and white ants. “I allow, monks, a solid ¹ ugghātetvā, as at Kd 18.1.1 of the ghaṭikā, stick used as a bolt. ² yantakaṃ sūcikaṃ. Vin-a 1216 says “Whatever one sees that is a yantaka, and one can make a pin to open it”. Cf. yantakaṃ deti, to secure the bolt, to lock up, at Dh-p-a i.220. ³ As at Kd 15.11.6: Kd 15.14.3, etc. ⁴ Probably window holes, because the above word, vātapāna, is used at Vin 4.47 to explain ālokasandhi, the holes for light and air. Vātapāna mentioned at Kd 1.25.18. ⁵ vedikāvātapāna. Vin-a 1216 says like the railing of a shrine. So, a grille in a railing pattern. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society Vol. 48, no. 3, p.273 for short discussion of these three types of windows. ⁶ jālavātapāna. Vin-a 1216 says something tied net wise, so a lattice. ⁷ salākavātapāna. Vin-a 1216 says a little post or pillar window. These words will be more readily understood if it is remembered that vātapāna is an aperture and not what closes it. ⁸ cakkalikā. Vin-a 1216 says “I allow you to tie on cloth used for wiping the feet” ⁹ kavāṭaka. ¹⁰ bhisikā. Cf. BD 2.47, n. 1 on bhisi.

bench.”¹ Because of the solid bench their limbs became painful. “I allow, monks, a little couch of split bamboo.”²

ALLOWANCE FOR COUCHES AND CHAIRS

Now at that time a bierlike long couch³ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a long couch.” A long chair accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a long chair.” Now at that time a bierlike couch with slats⁴ accrued to an Order ... a chair with slats ... a bierlike couch with curved legs⁵ ... a chair with curved legs ... a bierlike couch with removeable legs⁶ ... a chair with removeable legs accrued. “I allow, monks, a chair with removeable legs.”

Now at that time a rectangular chair⁷ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a rectangular chair.” A tall rectangular chair⁸ accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, even⁹ a tall rectangular chair.”¹⁰ A three-sided (couch)¹¹ accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a three-sided (couch).” A tall three-sided (couch) accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, even a tall three-sided (couch).” A plaited chair¹ accrued ... a cloth chair² ... a sheep-footed³ chair ... a “stalks of the emblic myrobalan” chair⁴ ... a wooden (chair)⁵ ... a stool⁶ ... a straw chair accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a straw chair.”

¹ miḍhi. See Kd 15.9.4. Vin-a 1216 here explains by pīṭhaphalaka. ² bidalamañ-caka. Cf. Ja i.9, Dh-p-a i.135 where mentioned as a feature in the life of one who has gone forth. Vin-a 1216 says a twig couch or one woven with bamboo chips.

³ masāraka defined in Bu-Pc 14. For notes on these four kinds of couches and chairs see BD 2.240. ⁴ bundikābaddha, defined in Bu-Pc 14, as are also the next two terms.

⁵ kulīrapādaka. ⁶ āhaccapādaka. ⁷ āsandika. Vin-a 1216, reading āsandhika, says it is called a four-cornered (or square, caturassa) chair. Cf. Kh-a 44. ⁸ uccako āsandiko. ⁹ pi, also meaning “too, also,” but in view of the efforts made to prevent monks from using chairs, couches and beds that were too high, “even” seems a permissible translation. ¹⁰ Vin-a 1216 says a long chair is on a support eight fingerbreadths (high), but if it exceeds that measure it should be called a rectangular chair. ¹¹ sattaṅga, literally seven limbs, parts, members or constituents. Vin-a 1216 says that “it is a couch that is finished, a support having been made towards three (of the) quarters.” It therefore occupied three sides of a square, and had four ends (two outer and two inner), making a total of seven parts.

Now at that time the group of six monks lay down to sleep on high couches. People touring the lodgings, having seen them ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not lie down to sleep on high couches. Whoever should (so) lie down to sleep, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk, lying down to sleep on a low couch, was bitten by a snake. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, supports for the couches.”⁷

Now at that time the group of six monks used tall supports for the couches; they rocked to and fro together with the tall supports for the couches. “Monks, tall supports for couches should not be used. Whoever should use them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a support for a couch to be eight finger-breadths at the most.”⁸

¹ baddhapīṭha. Vin-a 1216 says a chair made entirely of twigs. ² pīṭhikā. Vin-a 1216 says just a chair plaited in cloth. ³ eḷakapādaka. Vin-a 1216 says “having placed the upper parts of the legs in white woollen cloth round the wood, it is a finished chair like a slab for food, bhojanaphalaka”. Cf. kulīrapādaka, literally “crab-footer,” for which see BD 2.240, n. 4. ⁴ āmālakavaṇṭhika pīṭha. Vin-a 1217 says this is a chair of many legs plaited in the manner (or on the pattern) of emblic myrobalan. ⁵ phalaka. See phalakapīṭha at Vin 4.40 and BD 2.242, n. 5. Cf. apassenaphalaka at Kd 1.25.15, Kd 16.20.2. ⁶ koccha. See BD 2.239, n. 1, and Old Commentary’s definition at BD 2.240. On above passage Vin-a 1217, omitting “made of bark,” says made of khus-khus, made of muñja-grass (which at Vin-a 1217 reads puñjamaya), made of reeds. ⁷ mañcapaṭipādaka, as at Kd 1.25.16, Kd 18.1.3. See BD 4.64, n. 4. ⁸ Cf. Bu-Pc 87.

Now at that time thread accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to weave a couch.” The ends used up much thread. “I allow you, monks, having pierced the ends,¹ to weave small squares.”² A piece of cotton cloth accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a carpet.”³ A cotton quilt⁴ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having unravelled it, to make a squatting mat⁵ of three (kinds of) cotton:⁶ cotton from trees, cotton from creepers, cotton from grass.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used squatting mats half (the size of a man’s) body. People, touring the dwelling-places, having seen them ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, squatting mats half (the size of a man’s) body should not be used. Who-ever should use one, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, to make a squatting mat the size of a head.”⁷

Now at that time there came to be a festival on a mountain top near Rājagaha.⁸ People arranged mattresses⁹ for the great ministers: mattresses of wool, mattresses of cotton cloth, mattresses of bark, mattresses of tiṇa-grass, mattresses of leaves.¹⁰ When the festival was over they conveyed them away having taken off the covers. Monks saw much wool and cotton cloth and bark and tiṇa-grass and leaves thrown away at the festival place; and seeing it they told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, five (kinds of) mattresses: a mattress of wool ... of cotton cloth ... of bark ... of tiṇa-grass, a mattress of leaves.”

¹ aṅge vijjhitvā. On this expression see BD 2.240, n. 5. “Legs” is I think a better translation than “sides” (Vinaya Texts iii.166). ² aṭṭhapadaka as at Kd 8.21.1. Perhaps meaning “in the chequered board fashion,” aṭṭhapada, on which see BD 1.316, n. 2.

³ cilimikā. See BD 2.241, n. 8. Vin-a 1217 on above says “when the earth is treated with plaster, a cilimikā is called a covering, attharaṇa, for protecting the surface, chavi.” ⁴ tūlikā, as at Kd 5.10.4. ⁵ bimbohana. Similar allowance made at Kd 6.14.

⁶ tūla. See similar definition at Vin 4.170 (BD 3.93, q.v. n. 2). Vin-a 1217 says cotton from any vegetable growth can be used for squatting mats, but apart from trees, creepers and grasses there is no other vegetable growth. ⁷ Cf. Vb-a 365 which elaborates saying that in width it can be four standard finger breadths, in length the measure of the width of the couch. ⁸ See BD 2.335, n. 1. Phrase also occurs at Kd 15.2.6. ⁹ bhisi. See BD 2.47, n. 1. ¹⁰ Same five kinds given at Vin 4.40. See BD 2.240, n. 7.

Now at that time woven cloth¹ as a requisite for lodgings accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cover a mattress (with it).” Now at that time monks packed away a couch-mattress on a chair, they packed away a chair-mattress on a couch; the mattresses fell to bits.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a covered couch, a covered chair.”³ They packed them away without having put a cobweb cloth (beneath⁴ and the stuffing) came out from below. “I allow you, monks, having put a cobweb cloth (beneath the mattress), having spread it, to cover a mattress.” Having removed the covers, they carried them away. “I allow you, monks, to sprinkle⁵ them.” They still carried them away. “I allow, monks, line decoration.”⁶ They still carried them away. “I allow you, monks, the outline of the hand.”⁷

¹ dussa. ² As at Kd 15.11.2. ³ onaddhamañca onaddhapīṭha. This must mean covered with mattresses to fit them. Cf. Vin 1.194, Vin 2.270. ⁴ ullokaṃ akaritvā, which Vin-a 1218 explains by hetthā cimilikāṃ adatvā. On cimilikā see above, BD 5.210, n. 4. Ullokā occurs at Vin 1.48 = Vin 2.209. ⁵ posituṃ, which should read phosituṃ as does Vin 1.205 and Vin-a 1218. This latter says “to give sprinklings (or touches, phusitāni) on top with dyes or with turmeric.” ⁶ bhattikamma. Vin-a 1219 reads bhittikamma, wall-work, and says it is a bhittikamma on top of the mattress cover. Whatever the exact meaning of the term, it is no doubt a different process from the “sprinkling” which, as perhaps a forerunner to the tie-and-dye industry, would probably result in spots. Cf. bhatikamma at Kd 15.9.2. ⁷ hatthabhitti. Bhitti is of course a wall. Vin-a 1219 says pañcaṅgulabhitti, the wall of the five fingers. All these marks were probably applied so as to disfigure the mattresses and thus dissuade monks from carrying them off; cf. Bu-Pc 58. Or they may have been identification marks. But all the readings, and therefore the meanings, are uncertain. Reading in the “key,” Vin 2.178, is hatthabhatti, line of the hand. On pañcangulikāṃ dātuṃ cf. above, BD 5.170.

ALLOWANCE FOR WHITEWASH, ETC.

16,3:1
5,212

Now at that time the sleeping places¹ of members of other sects were whitewashed, the ground was coloured black, the walls were treated with red chalk.² Many people went to see the sleeping places. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, whitewash, black colouring, red chalk (to be used) in a dwelling-place.” Now at that time the whitewash did not adhere to the rough walls. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied lumps of grain-husks, having kept some back with a spoon,³ to put on the whitewash.” The whitewash would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied soft clay, having kept some back with a spoon, to put on the whitewash.” The whitewash would not stick on. “I allow, monks, what exudes from trees⁴ and flour-paste.”

Now at that time the red chalk did not adhere to the rough walls ... (as above) ... The red chalk would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied the red powder of rice husks (mixed with) clay, having kept some back with a spoon, to put on the red chalk.” The red chalk would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, mustard-powder,⁵ oil of beeswax.” It was too thick.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sponge it over⁷ with a piece of cloth.”

Now at that time the black colouring did not adhere to the rough walls ... (as above) ... The black colouring would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied

¹ seyyā, defined at Vin 4.17 = Vin 4.20, Vin 4.41. ² See Kd 15.11.6 for these words.

³ pāṇikā, Buddhaghosa says nothing. Cf. pāṇiyā at Kd 15.1.5. ⁴ ikkāsa. Vin-a 1219 says rukkhaniy(y)āsaṃ vā silesaṃ vā. Gum, resin, and juice all exude from trees. Cf. niyyāsakhādaniya at Vin-a 832, Vin-a 837 and niyyāsarukkha at Vism 74. ⁵ -kuḍḍa of text should read -kuṭṭa.

⁶ Vin-a 1219 says it stayed there in drop upon drop.

⁷ paccuddharitum (as at Kd 15.17.1) explained at Vin-a 1219 as puñchitum, to wipe.

clay (mixed with the excrement of) earthworms,¹ having kept some back with a spoon, to put on the black colouring.” The black colouring would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord He said: “I allow, monks, what exudes from trees, an astringent decoction.”²

REJECTION OF A BOLD DESIGN

Now at that time the group of six monks had a bold design³ made with figures of women, figures of men, in a dwelling-place. People touring the dwelling-places, having seen this, ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have a bold design made with figures of women, figures of men. Whoever should have one made, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, wreath-work, creeper-work, swordfish teeth, the five strips (of cloth design).”⁴

ALLOWANCE FOR A BALUSTRADE

Now at that time dwelling-places were low to the ground ...⁵ “... I allow monks, a balustrade.”

Now at that time dwelling-places were thronged with people.⁶ Monks were (too) modest to lie down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a curtain.”⁷ They looked in, having lifted up the curtain. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a small half-wall.” They looked in over the top of the small half-wall. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) inner rooms: a palanquin-like inner room,¹ a tube-like inner room,² an inner room on the roof.”³ Now at that time monks made an inner room in the middle of a small dwelling-place; there was no access.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make an inner room at one side of a small dwelling-place, in the middle of a large one.”

¹ gaṇḍamattikā. Vin-a 1219, reading taṇḍa- with variant reading gaṇḍu-, explains as above. ² kasāva. Cf. Kd 4.4, where certain specified ones are allowed as medicines.

³ paṭibhānacitta, as at Vin 4.61 (see BD 2.285, n. 5) and BD 4.298. Vin-a 1219 says “not only the figures of women and men, but also figures of animals, even of an earthworm.” ⁴ As at Kd 15.11.6. ⁵ As at Kd 15.11.6. ⁶ ālakamandā. At DN ii.147, DN ii.170 said to be the capital of the devas, with many people and crowded with yakkhas. Spelt in both passages as Ālaka-. Vin-a 1219 says each open space was crowded with people. ⁷ tirokaraṇī as at Vin 1.276.

Now at that time the base of a wall of a dwelling-place disintegrated. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a timber buttress.”⁵ A wall of a dwelling-place let in the rain.⁶ “I allow, monks, a protecting screen⁷ (and) paste and water.”⁸

Now at that time a snake fell from a grass roofing on to a certain monk’s shoulder. Terrified, he uttered a cry of distress. Monks, having run up, spoke thus to this monk: “Why did you, your reverence, utter a cry of distress?” Then this monk told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a canopy.”⁹

Now at that time monks hung their bags at the feet of couches, and at the feet of chairs: they were eaten by rats and white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a peg in the wall, an ‘elephant-tusk’ (peg).”¹⁰ Now at that time monks laid aside their robes on a couch and on a chair. The robes fell to pieces. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.”¹¹

¹ sivikāgabbha. Vin-a 1219 calls it a quadrangular (or four-sided) inner room.

² nāḷikāgabbha. Vin-a 1219 says it is a long room whose length is two or three times its width. ³ hammiyagabbha. See BD 2.16, n. 6 on HAMMIYA. Vin-a 1219 calls it a room in the gable on the open air floor or a room on the bare roof. ⁴ As at Kd 15.14.3

⁵ kulaṅkapādaka. See MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p. 78. ⁶ ovasati also at Kd 15.16.1. ⁷ parittānakiṭṭika. Cf. saṃsaraṇakiṭṭika ughātanakiṭṭika in Kd 16.3.5 below. ⁸ uddhasudha. Vin-a 1219 reading uddhā- with variant reading uda-, says clay pounded together with ashes and cowdung. Sinhalese edition reads udda-. ⁹ vitāna, an item in some of the “no offence” clauses in the Suttavibhaṅga, e.g. at Vin 3.225, Vin 3.227, Vin 3.229, Vin 3.233, Vin 4.171, Vin 4.279. ¹⁰ Cf. Kd 15.9.5 where monks hung their bags on these pegs.

Now at that time dwelling-places had no verandahs¹ and were without shelter.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a verandah, a covered terrace,³ an inner court,⁴ a verandah roofing.”⁵ The verandahs were public. Monks were (too) modest to lie down. “I allow, monks, a moveable screen,⁶ a screen that can be drawn.”

ALLOWANCE FOR AN ASSEMBLY HALL

Now at that time monks participating in a meal in the open air were bothered by cold and heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, an assembly hall.” The assembly hall was low to the ground ...⁷ “... a cord for robes.” Now at that time monks spread out their robes in the open air on the ground. The robes were soiled by dust. “I allow, monks, a bamboo for robes and a cord for robes in the open air.”

The drinking water became tepid.⁸ “I allow, monks, a hall for the drinking water, a shed for the drinking water.” The hall for the drinking water was low to the ground ...⁹ “... a cord for robes.” There was no vessel for the drinking water. “I allow, monks, a conchshell for drinking water, a saucer for drinking water.”

¹¹ Also allowed at Kd 15.11.6; Kd 15.14.3. ¹ ālinda. Vin-a 1219 explains as pamukha. See Kd 6.36.4, and BD 4.342, n. 3. ² apaṭissaraṇa. Sinhalese edition appatissaraṇā. ³ paghana. Vin-a 1220, reading palighana but saying it is also called paghana, speaks of it as a katapadesa, a shaped (artificial) place or locality. It was at the door of the dwelling-places. ⁴ pakuṭa. Sinhalese edition pakuḍḍa-. Vin-a 1220 reading pakudda and saying pakuṭṭa is also a reading, explains as “the whole of the inner room in the middle is called pariyāgāro: pakuddan ti majjhe gabbhassa samantā pariyāgāro vuccati. With this phrase cf. Vin 3.119. Pariyāgāra means “surrounded by a house.” ⁵ osarika. Vin-a 1220 reads, osārika, with variant reading osaraka and says “having put a bamboo in a dwelling-place without a verandah, having had small sticks taken from that, tato osāretvā, a verandah-covering, chadanapamukha, is made. ⁶ saṃsaraṇak-iṭṭika. Vin-a 1220 says cakkalayutta. Cf. cakkalikā at Kd 16.2.2 and cakkkalī at Kd 16.19 ⁷ As at Kd 15.11.6. ⁸ otappati, perhaps “evaporated, dried up.” Cf. otāpeti, to dry in the sun. ⁹ As at Kd 15.11.6.

ALLOWANCE FOR A PORCH

16.3.8 Now at that time dwelling-places were not fenced in. "I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence them in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood." There was no porch. "I allow, monks, a porch." The porch was low to the ground. It was flooded with water. "I allow you, monks, to build it high to the ground." There was no door to the porch. "I allow, monks, a door, a door-post and lintel ... a cord to pull through."¹ Powdered grass fell from the porch.² "I allow, monks, ... the five (pieces of) cloth design."³

2.15.4 Now at that time a cell came to be swampy.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord He said: "I allow you, monks, to sprinkle gravel." They did not succeed in doing so. "I allow you, monks, to lay down flagstones." Water remained. "I allow, monks, a drain for the water."

16.3.9 Now at that time monks made a fireplace here and there in a cell; the cell became soiled.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to make at one side a hall for the fire." The hall for the fire was low to the ground ...⁶ "I allow, monks, a balustrade." 5.21.6 The nail for the fire had no door. "I allow, monks, a door, a doorpost and lintel ...⁷ a cord for pulling through." Powdered grass fell into the hall for the fire. "I allow you, monks, ... a cord for robes."

ALLOWANCE FOR A FENCED MONASTERY

6.3.10 A monastery was not fenced in: goats and cattle⁸ injured the little plants.⁹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, three (kinds of) hedges to fence it in: a hedge of bamboo, a hedge of thorns, a ditch." There was no porch. As before, goats and cattle injured the little plants. "I allow, monks, a porch, an interlacing of stakes and thorns,¹ a hedge of swallow-wort,² a gateway, a door-bar.”³ Powdered grass fell from the porch. “I allow you, monks, ...⁴ the five (pieces of) cloth design.” The monastery became swampy⁵ “... a drain for the water.”

¹ As at Kd 15.14.4. ² koṭṭhakā above; koṭṭhake at Kd 15.14.4. ³ As at Kd 15.14.4.

⁴ As at Kd 15.14.5; Kd 15.35.4. ⁵ uklāpa, as at Vin 1.46. ⁶ As at Kd 15.11.6. ⁷ As at Kd 15.14.3. ⁸ pasuka. ⁹ uparopa. Cf. uparopaha at Ja ii.345, Ja iv.359.

Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha wanted to have a long house with a smearing of plaster and clay built for an Order. Then it occurred to monks: “Now what kind of roofing is allowed by the Lord, what is not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, five (kinds of) roofings: a roofing of tiles, a roofing of stones, a roofing of plaster, a roofing of tiṇa-grass, a roofing of leaves.”⁶

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

THE STORY OF ANĀTHAPIṆḌIKA

Now at that time the householder Anāthapiṇḍika was the husband of a sister of a (great) merchant of Rājagaha. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went to Rājagaha on some business or other. At that time the Order with the Awakened One at its head had been invited for the morrow by the (great) merchant of Rājagaha. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha enjoined slaves and servants, saying: “Well now, good people, getting up early in the morning, cook conjeys, cook rice,⁷ prepare⁸ curries, prepare vegetables.”⁹ Then it occurred to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: “Now, on my arrival formerly this householder, having put aside all duties, did nothing except exchange greetings with me, but now he seems excited and enjoins slaves and servants, saying: ‘Well now, good people ... prepare vegetables.’ Now can there be for this householder a leading to¹ (a bride’s home) or can there be a leading away from² (a bride’s home) or is a great oblation arranged or is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha invited for the morrow together with his troops?”

¹ apesiyam. Sinhalese edition apesim. Vin-a 1220 reading apesi, says “having inserted stakes with long pieces of wood, having covered with thorny branches, it is made for closing up the doorway.” ² akkavāṭa. Sinhalese edition reads yamakakavāṭa, a pair of doors. ³ paligha. Vin-a 1220 says “as in village gateways, it is for closing a door that is joined to a wheel.” ⁴ As at Kd 15.14.4. ⁵ As at Kd 15.14.5; Kd 15.35.4. ⁶ These five kinds of roofings mentioned at Vin 4.48. ⁷ bhattāni. Cf. BD 2.149, BD 3.11 These four words are, above, all in the plural suggesting that separate portions should be got ready for each monk. ⁸ sampādeti, as at Vin 3.208. ⁹ uttaribhaṅga, or tit-bits, dainties. See BD 1.275, n. 5.

Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having enjoined the slaves and servants, approached the householder Anāthapiṇḍika; having approached, having exchanged greetings with the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, he sat down at a respectful distance. The householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha as he was sitting down at a respectful distance: “Formerly you, householder, on my arrival, having put aside all duties, did nothing except exchange greetings with me, but now you seem excited and enjoin slaves and servants, saying: ‘Well now, good people ... prepare vegetables.’ Now can there be for you, householder, a leading to ... or is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha invited for the morrow together with his troops?”

“There is to be for me, householder, neither a leading to (a bride’s home), nor is there to be a leading away from (a bride’s home), nor is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha invited for the morrow together with his troops. But a great oblation is arranged by me: the Order is invited for the morrow with the Awakened One at its head.”

“Did you, householder, say ‘Awakened One?’”

“‘Awakened One’ I did say, householder.”

“Did you, householder, say ‘Awakened One?’”

“‘Awakened One’ I did say, householder.”

“Did you, householder, say ‘Awakened One?’”

“‘Awakened One’ I did say, householder.”

“Even this sound, householder, is hard to come by in the world, that is to say ‘Awakened One, Awakened One.’ Now would it be possible, householder, at this time¹ to go up and see this Lord, a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened One?”

¹ As at Vin 3.135. See BD 1.229, n. 2. ² As at Vin 3.135. See BD 1.230, n. 1.

“This time is not a right time, householder, to go up and see this Lord, a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened One. But now, early Tomorrow you shall go up to see this Lord, a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened One.”

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, thinking: “Early Tomorrow I will go up to see this Lord ... fully Self-Awakened One,” lay down with mindfulness (so much) directed to the Awakened One,² that he got up three times during the night thinking it was daybreak.

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika approached the gateway to the Cool Grove,³ and non-human beings opened the gateway. Then as the householder Anāthapiṇḍika was going out from the town, light vanished, darkness appeared; fear, consternation, hair standing on end⁴ arose so that he was desirous of turning back from there. Then the yakkha Sīvaka, invisible, made this sound heard:

“A hundred elephants,⁵ a hundred horses, a hundred chariots with she-mules,⁶

A hundred thousand maidens adorned with jewelled earrings—

These are not worth the sixteenth part of one length of stride.

“Advance, householder, advance, householder.

Advance is better for you, not retreat.”

Then darkness vanished for the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, light appeared, so that his fear, consternation, hair standing on end subsided. And a second time ... And a third time did the yakkha Sīvaka make this sound heard: “... Advance is better for you, not retreat.”

¹ For this episode to the end of Kd 16.4.4 cf. SN i.210. ² buddhagatāya satiyā. ³ Sītavana. SN i.211 reads Sīvathika, from the name of Sīvathika (variant reading Sivaka) of the yakkha who lived in the Sitavana. ⁴ As at e.g. Vin 3.69. ⁵ Cf. the first three of these lines with Vv 20.8; Vv 43.8. ⁶ assatarī. Cf. vaccharī at Kd 5.9.1, Kd 5.9.3.

And a third time darkness vanished for the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, light appeared, so that his fear, consternation, hair standing on end subsided.

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika approached the Cool Grove. Now at that time the Lord was pacing up and down in the open air, having got up in the night towards dawn. Then the Lord saw the householder Anāthapiṇḍika coming in the distance; seeing him, having stepped down from the place for pacing up and down in, he sat down on an appointed seat, and sitting down the Lord spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: “Come, Sudatta.”¹ Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, thinking: “The Lord addressed me by name,” joyful, elated, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined his head to the Lord’s feet, he spoke thus to the Lord: “I hope, Lord, that the Lord is living at ease.” He said:

“Yes, always at ease he lives, the brahmin, attained to nibbāna,

Who is not stained by lusts,² cooled, without attachments.³

Having rent all clingings, having averted heart’s care, Tranquil he lives at ease, having won to peace of mind.”⁴

Then the Lord talked a progressive talk⁵ to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of the householder Anāthapiṇḍika was ready, ¹ SN-a i.315 says that Anāthapiṇḍika thinks that there are many other sects, those of Pūraṇa Kassapa and so on, who say they are awakened ones; but if this teacher is the awakened one he will address him by his kuladattika name, i.e. by the name given him in his family, because no one but Anāthapiṇḍika himself knows this. See also KS i.273, n. 1. ² yo na lippati kāmesu, as at Snp 625. Cf. Kaṭha Upaniṣad 5.11 where the Sun is not defiled or contaminated, na lipyate, by what he sees outside himself. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, A Note on the Stickfast Motif, Journal American Folklore, Vol. 57, No. 224, April–June, 1944, p.128. ³ Cf. Snp 642. ⁴ Besides SN i.212, where the Saṃyutta version of this episode ends, this verse occurs at AN i.138. ⁵ As at Kd 1.7.5, Kd 1.7.10; Kd 5.1.9, Kd 5.1.10; Kd 6.26.8, Kd 6.26.9.

malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, that “whatever is liable to uprising, all that is liable to stopping.” Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the Teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Even, Lord, as one might set upright what has been upset, or might uncover what was concealed, or might show the way to one who is astray, or might bring an oil lamp into the darkness, thinking, ‘Those with eyes to see may see shapes,’ even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. I myself, Lord, go to the Lord for refuge, to dhamma, and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts. And, Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

The (great) merchant of Rājagaha heard: “It is said that the Order with the Awakened One at its head is invited for the morrow by the householder Anāthapiṇḍika.” Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: “It is said, that the Order with the Awakened One at its head is invited by you, householder, for the morrow. But you are incoming.¹ I can give you, householder, the means by which you can make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at its head.”

“Thank you, householder, but I have the means by which I can

¹ As opposed to resident.

5.221 make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at, its head.”

The urban council of Rajagana heard: “The Order with the Awakened One at its head is invited for the morrow by the householder Anāthapiṇḍika.” Then the urban council of Rājagaha spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: “It is said that the Order ... We can give you, householder, the means by which you can make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at its head.”

“Thank you, masters, but I have the means ... at its head.”

King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha heard: “The Order ...” ...

16.4.7 “Thank you, sire, but I have the means by which I can make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at its head.”

2.158 Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night in the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a rains-residence¹ from me at Sāvattthī together with the Order of monks.”

“But, householder, Truth-finders delight in empty places.”

“It is understood, Lord, it is understood, Well-farer.” Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the householder Anāthapiṇḍika with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

16.4.8 At that time the householder Anāthapiṇḍika had many friends, many companions, his word carried weight.¹ Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having concluded that business at Rājagaha, set out for Sāvattihī. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika enjoined people on the way, saying: “Masters, build monasteries, prepare dwelling-places, furnish gifts; an Awakened One has arisen in the world, and this Lord, invited by me, will come along by this road.”

¹ vassāvāsa, as in Kd 3.1.1, and cf. Kd 3.14.

Then these people, urged on by the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, built monasteries, prepared dwelling-places, furnished gifts. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having arrived at Sāvattihī, looked all round Sāvattihī, thinking:² “Now where could the Lord stay that would be neither too far from a village, nor too near, suitable for coming and going, accessible to people whenever they want, not crowded by day, having little noise at night, little sound, without folks’ breath, secluded from people, fitting for meditation?”

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika saw Prince Jeta’s pleasure grove, neither too far from a village ... fitting for meditation, and seeing it, he approached Prince Jeta; having approached he spoke thus to Prince Jeta: “Give me, young master, the pleasure grove to make a monastery.”

“The pleasure grove is not to be given away, householder, even for the price of a hundred thousand.”³

“Young master, the monastery is taken.”

“The monastery is not taken, householder.” They asked the chief ministers of justice,⁴ saying: “Is it taken or is it not taken?” The chief ministers spoke thus: “The monastery is taken at the price fixed by you, young master.” Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having had gold coins⁵ brought out by means of wagons, had the Jeta Grove

¹ ādeyyavāca. Vin-a 1220 says “his speech would be taken up by the many folk thinking, ‘It seems he should be heard’.” ² As at Kd 1.22.16, Kd 1.22.17 where Bimbisāra is giving the Bamboo Grove. ³ As at Ja i.94. ⁴ Cf. similar passage at Vin 4.223 (BD 3.178). ⁵ hirañña; see note at BD 1.28.

spread with the price of a hundred thousand.¹

The gold coins that were taken out the first time were not enough for a small open space near to the porch. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika enjoined the people, saying: “Go back, good people, bring (more) gold coins, I will spread this open space.” Then it occurred to Prince Jeta: “Now this can be no ordinary matter² inasmuch as this householder bestows so many gold coins,” and he spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika:

“Enough, householder; let me spread this open space, give this open space to me, it will be my gift.”

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, thinking: “This Prince Jeta is a distinguished, well-known man; surely the faith in this dhamma and discipline of well-known men like this is very efficacious,”³ made over that open space to Prince Jeta. Then Prince Jeta built a porch⁴ on that open space. The householder Anāthapiṇḍika had dwelling-places made, he had cells⁵ made ... porches ... attendance halls ... fire halls ... huts for what is allowable ... privies ... places for pacing up and down in ... halls in the places for pacing up and down in ... wells ... halls at the wells ... bathrooms ... halls in the bathrooms ... lotus ponds ... he had sheds made.

GIVING BUILDING WORK

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Vesālī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Vesālī. The Lord stayed there at Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Hall of the Gabled Pillars. Now at that time people were making repairs carefully and they were also attending carefully, with the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings and medicines for the sick, to those monks who were looking after the repairs. Then it occurred to a certain poor tailor: “Now this can be no ordinary matter inasmuch as these people are making repairs carefully. What now if I too should make repairs?” Then that poor tailor, having himself kneaded mud, having piled up bricks, had wattle and daub walls erected. But because he was not skilful the piling was crooked and a wall fell down. And a second time ... And a third time ... a wall fell down.

¹ koṭisantharam santharāpesi. Vin-a 1220 says “having given a hundred thousand kaḥāpaṇas, having had them spread out (on the ground), having taken the measure of the circumference of trees and ponds there, he gave having had them (i.e. the kaḥāpaṇas) spread out in a certain place”. Most likely the gold coins were not round but square, see Vinaya Texts iii.188, n. 1. ² na orakam bhavassiti. Cf. Kd 1.9.1, and below Kd 16.5.1. ³ As at Kd 6.36.3. ⁴ koṭṭhaka is a word of unsettled meaning. Vin-a 1221 says that he built a seven storeyed long house with a porch (or storehouse) at the gateway (dvārakoṭṭhakapāsāda). ⁵ Cf. this list with that at Kd 3.5.6, Kd 3.5.9.

Then that poor tailor ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, exhort, instruct those who give them the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick, and these look after their repairs. But I am poor. No one exhorts or instructs me or looks after my repairs.” Monks heard this poor tailor as he was ... spreading it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to put repairs in charge (of a monk).¹ Monks, the monk who is in charge of repairs should make an effort,² thinking, ‘How can the dwelling-place be brought to a rapid termination?’ and he should restore broken and dilapidated parts.³

“And thus, monks, should they be given in charge: First, a monk should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order give the repairs to the dwelling-place of the householder So-and-so in charge of the monk So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is giving the repairs ... in charge of the monk So-and-so. If the giving in charge of the monk So-and-so, of the repairs to the dwelling-place of the householder So-and-so, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Repairs to the dwelling-place of the householder So-and-so are given in charge of the monk So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

¹ navakammaṃ dātuṃ. For various rules for making repairs see Kd 16.17. ² ussukkaṃ āpajjissati. Cf. ussukkaṃ karoti at Vin 4.280, Vin 4.291, Vin 4.300. ³ At AN iii.263 this is one of five things said to make a resident monk very useful to his residence.

ALLOWANCE FOR THE FIRST SEAT, ETC.

16.6.1 Then the Lord, having stayed at Vesālī for as long as he found suiting,¹ set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Now at that time monks who were 5.225 pupils of the group of six monks, having gone along in front of the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, took possession of dwelling-places, they took possession of sleeping places, saying:
“This will be for our preceptors, this will be for our teachers, this will be for us.” Then the venerable Sāriputta, having gone along close behind the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, not being able to get a sleeping place—the dwelling-places being taken possession of, the sleeping places being taken possession of—sat down at the root of a certain tree. Then the Lord, getting up during the night towards morning, coughed. The venerable Sāriputta also coughed.

“Who is there?”

“It is I, Lord, Sāriputta.”

16.6.2 “Why are you, Sāriputta, sitting here?” Then the venerable Sāriputta told this matter to the Lord.²

12.161 Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are pupils ... ‘... this will be for us?’”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men, having gone along in front of ... saying ‘... this will be for us’? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ For the incident related here, cf. Ja no.37. ² Cf. a similar passage at Vin 4.16.

“Who, monks, is worthy of the best seat, the best water¹ (for washing), the best alms?” Some monks spoke thus: “Whoever, Lord, has gone forth from a noble family, he is worthy of the best ... alms.” Some monks spoke thus: “Whoever, Lord, has gone forth from a brahmin family ... from a householder’s family ... Whoever, Lord, knows the *suttantas*² ... is an expert on discipline ... is a teacher of dhamma ... is possessed of the first meditation³ ... is possessed of the second meditation ... is possessed of the third meditation ... is possessed of the fourth meditation ... is a stream winner ... a once-returner ... a non-returner ... one perfected ... a threefold wisdom man ... a sixfold superknowledge man, he is worthy of the best seat, the best water (for washing), the best alms.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Formerly,⁴ monks, there used to be a large banyan on a slope of the Himalayas. Three friends lived near it: a partridge, a monkey and a bull-elephant. These lived courteous, deferential, polite⁵ to one another. Then, monks, it occurred to these friends: ‘Now let us find out which of us is the eldest by birth. We should respect, revere, reverence, honour him, and we should abide by his advice.’ Then, monks, the partridge and the monkey asked the bull-elephant: ‘You, friend, what long-ago thing do you remember?’

“When I, friends, was young I used to pass over this banyan keeping it between my thighs, and the topmost shoots brushed against my belly. This, friends, is a long-ago thing that I remember.’

“Then, monks, the partridge and the bull-elephant asked the monkey: ‘You, friend, what long-ago thing do you remember?’

“When I, friends, was young, having sat down on the ground, I used to eat the topmost shoots of this banyan. This, friends, is a long-ago thing that I remember.’

¹ aggodakam, explained by dakkhiṇodaka at Vin-a 1221=MN-a i.145. Cf. MN i.28, MN ii.204. ² With this and the next two items compare a similar list at Vin 3.159.

³ With this list to the end, cf. Vin 4.24. ⁴ This episode forms the Tittirajāta, Ja no.37. ⁵ As at Kd 1.25.6, Kd 5.4.3.

“Then, monks, the monkey and the bull-elephant asked the partridge: ‘You, friend, what long-ago thing do you remember?’

“‘Friends, in a certain open space there was a great banyan. I, having eaten one of its fruits, relieved myself in that open space, and this banyan has grown from that. So I, friends, am the eldest by birth’.

“Then, monks, the monkey and the bull-elephant spoke thus to the partridge: ‘You, friend, are the eldest of us by birth. We will respect, revere, reverence, honour you and we will abide by your advice.’

“Then, monks, the partridge caused the monkey and the bull-elephant to undertake the five moral habits and himself followed the observance of the five moral habits. They, having lived courteous, deferential, polite to one another, at the breaking up of the body after dying arose in a happy bourn, a heaven world. This, monks, came to be known as the ‘Partridge Brahma-faring.’¹

“Those who reverence the old—those men are skilled in dhamma, Worthy of praise here and now and a happy bourn here-after.

“Well then, monks, if animals, breathers, can live courteous, deferential, polite to one another, so do you, monks, let your light shine forth here so that you, gone forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught, live likewise courteous, deferential, polite to one another. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, greeting, rising up for, joining the palms in salutation, proper homage, the best seat, the best water (for washing), the best alms according to seniority. But, monks, what belongs to an Order should not be reserved according to seniority. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

PERSONS NOT TO BE BOWED TO

16.6.5

“Monks, there are these ten who are not to be greeted: one ordained later is not to be greeted by one ordained earlier; one not ordained is not to be greeted; one belonging to a different communion (even) if he is more senior (yet) speaks what is not-dhamma is not to be greeted; a woman is not to be greeted; a eunuch ... one under probation¹ ... one who deserves to be sent back to the beginning² ... one who deserves mānatta ... one undergoing mānatta ... one deserving rehabilitation is not to be greeted. These, ten, monks, are not to be greeted. These three, monks, are to be greeted: one ordained earlier is to be greeted by one ordained later; one belonging to a different communion if he is more senior and speaks what is dhamma is to be greeted; and, monks, a Truth-finder, a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened one³ is to be greeted in the world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, by creatures with recluses and brahmins, with devas and mankind. These three, monks, are to be greeted.”

BD 5.2

REJECTION OF RESERVED SEATING

Now at that time people prepared sheds for an Order, they prepared rugs, they prepared open spaces. Monks who were pupils of the group of six monks,⁴ saying: “Only what belongs to an Order is not allowed according to seniority by the Lord, not what is made on purpose for it,” having gone along in front of the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, took possession of the sheds, took possession of the rugs, took possession of the open spaces, thinking: “This will be for our preceptors, this will be for our teachers, this will be for us.” Then the venerable Sāriputta, having gone along close behind the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, not having a chance to get an open space—the sheds being taken possession of, the rugs being taken possession of, the open spaces being taken possession of—sat down at the root of a certain tree. Then the Lord, getting up during the night towards morning, coughed. The venerable Sāriputta also coughed.

Kd 16.7

Vin 2.10

¹ This sentence is quoted at DN-a.i.178. ² See Kd 12.1.2. ³ Cf. AN ii.34, Iti p. 87f. ⁴ As in Kd 16.6.1.

“Who is there?”

“It is I, Lord, Sāriputta.”

“Why are you, Sāriputta, sitting here?” Then the venerable Sāriputta told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?” ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, even what is made on purpose for an Order should not be reserved according to seniority. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ALLOWANCE FOR WHAT IS DISPLAYED BY HOUSEHOLDERS

16.8.1 Now at that time in a refectory inside a house people appointed high and broad things to recline upon, that is to say:¹ a sofa,² a divan, a long-haired coverlet, a many-coloured coverlet, a white coverlet, a wool coverlet besprent with flowers, a cotton quilt, a wool coverlet decorated with animals forms, a wool covering with hair on the upper side, a wool covering with hair at one side, a silken sheet studded with jewels, a sheet made with silk thread and studded with jewels, a dancer’s carpet, an elephant rug, a horse rug, a chariot rug, rugs of black antelope skins, a splendid sheeting of the hide of the kadali-deer, a sheet with an awning above, a couch with a red cushion at either end. Monks, being scrupulous, did not sit down on them.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, except for the three: a sofa, a divan, a cotton quilt, to sit down on what is displayed by householders, but not to lie down on it.”⁴

¹ List as at Kd 5.10.4. See BD 4.256 for notes ² Definition of āsandi at Thag-a i.137 is that it is a long-legged four-cornered chair upon which it is possible to sit but not to lie. ³ Made an offence of wrong-doing at Kd 5.10.5 to use any of these things.

⁴ Cf. Vin 1.194 (BD 4.259).

Now at that time in a refectory inside a house people appointed a couch and a chair, both covered up with cotton.¹ Monks, being scrupulous, did not sit down on them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sit down on what is displayed by householders, but not to lie down on it.”

APPRECIATION FOR THE JETAVANA MONASTERY

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the householder Anāthapiṇḍika; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the Lord: “What line of conduct am I, Lord, to follow in regard to the Jeta Grove?”

¹ tūlonaddha. Cf. onaddhamañca onaddhapīṭha at Kd 16.2.7, and Vin 2.270. Cf. also Vin 1.194.

“Well now, do you, householder, have the Jeta Grove prepared for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters,¹ present and to come.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having answered the Lord in assent, had the Jeta Grove prepared for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters, present and to come.

Then the Lord thanked the householder Anāthapiṇḍika in these verses:²

“They ward off cold and heat and beasts of prey from there

...

He, knowing that dhamma here, attains nibbāna, cankerless.”

Then the Lord, having given thanks to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika in these verses, rising from his seat departed.

RESERVATION OF A SEAT, ETC.

Now at that time a certain chief minister who was a disciple of the Naked Ascetics had a meal for an Order. The venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having arrived after (the others) while the meal was yet unfinished, turned away the monk who was next to him,³ and there was an uproar in the refectory. Then that chief minister ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, having arrived after (the others) turn away monks while a meal is yet unfinished so that there is an uproar in the refectory? Now, is it not possible, even sitting somewhere else, to eat as much as one pleases?” Monks heard this chief minister as he ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having arrived after (the others), turn away the monk who is next to him while the meal is yet unfinished so that there is an uproar in the refectory?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ See Kd 8.275; Kd 16.1.4. ² As at Kd 16.1.5 above and Jai i.93. ³ I.e. in the procession for alms. Text reads here and at Vin 4.234 anantavika which Vinaya Texts iii.198, n. 4 says “is a misprint” for ānantarika. Cf. Vin 1.321.

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Upananda, having arrived ... in the refectory?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

How can you, foolish man, having arrived ... in a refectory? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a monk should not turn (another) away while a meal is yet unfinished. Whoever should turn (another) away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If he turns (another) away who is invited (to the meal), he should be told, ‘Go and fetch water.’ If this is thus accomplished, that is good; if it is not accomplished, having swallowed lumps of boiled rice properly, his seat should be given to a senior monk. But this I say, monks: that not by any method should a seat be reserved for a senior monk. Whoever should reserve one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks turned ill monks away. The ill ones spoke thus: “We, your reverences, are not able to get up, we are ill.” Saying, “We will turn the venerable ones away,” having taken hold of them, having turned them away, they let go (of them) while they were standing. The ill ones, on being let go of, fell down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is ill should not be turned away. Whoever should turn him away, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, saying: “We are ill, we are not to be turned away,” kept to the best sleeping places. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give a suitable sleeping place to one who is ill.”

Now at that time the group of six monks reserved lodgings on (some slight) pretext.¹ They told this matter to the Lord He said: “Monks, a lodging should not be reserved on (some slight) pretext. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

Now at that time the group of seventeen monks² were repairing³ a large dwelling-place in the neighbourhood, thinking: ‘We will spend the rains here.’ The group of six monks saw the group of seventeen monks as they were repairing the dwelling-place, and seeing them, they spoke thus:

“Your reverences, the group of seventeen monks are repairing a dwelling-place. Come, we will turn them away.”

Some spoke thus: “Wait, your reverences, until they have repaired it; when it is repaired, we will turn them away.” Then the group of six monks spoke thus to the group of seventeen monks: “Go away, your reverences, the dwelling-place was obtained⁴ by us.”

“Your reverences, should not this have been explained before, and we would have repaired another?”

“Your reverences, does not a dwelling-place belong to the Order?”

“Yes, your reverences, a dwelling-place belongs to the Order.”

“Go away, your reverences, the dwelling-place was obtained by us.”

“Your reverences, the dwelling-place is big; you stay, and we too will stay.”

“Go away, your reverences, the dwelling-place was obtained by us,” and angry, displeased, having taken them by the throat, they threw them out. These being thrown out, wept. Monks spoke thus:

“Why do you, your reverences, weep?”

“Your reverences, this group of six monks, angry, displeased, threw us out of a dwelling-place belonging to the Order.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, angry, displeased, throw out monks from a dwelling-place belonging to an Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ lesakappa. Vin-a 1222 says for a small thing, nothing more than a headache. ² As at Bu-Pc 17. Translated at BD 2.250-BD.2.251, q.v. for notes. ³ paṭisaṃkharoti, restore, repair, mend. ⁴ pāpuṇāti.

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, angry, displeased, threw out monks from a dwelling-place belonging to an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.”¹ Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a monk should not be thrown out of a dwelling-place belonging to an Order by one who is angry, displeased. Whoever (such) should throw him out should be dealt with according to the rule.”² I allow you, monks, to assign³ lodgings.”

AGREEMENT FOR AN ASSIGNER OF LODGINGS

Then it occurred to the monks: “Now by whom should lodgings be assigned?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as assigner of lodgings:⁴ one who would not follow a wrong course⁵ through desire, one who would not follow a wrong course through hatred, one who would not follow a wrong course through stupidity, one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is taken and what is not taken. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, a monk should be asked. Having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon the monk So-and-so as assigner of lodgings. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the monk So-and-so as assigner of lodgings. If the agreement upon the monk So-and-so as assigner of lodgings is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order as assigner of lodgings. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

¹ Cūlavagga and Pācittiya versions proceed differently from here. ² Bu-Pc 17.

³ gāheturī. ⁴ Senāsanagāhāpaka; cf. pattagāhāpaka and see BD 2.122, n. 1. To the end of Kd 16.11.2 is the same as the passage at Vin 3.246-7 (BD 2.122) dealing with the assigner of bowls. ⁵ See BD 2.122, n. 2.

Then it occurred to the monks who were the assigners of lodgings: “Now, how should the lodgings be assigned?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, first to count the monks; having counted the monks, to count the sleeping places;¹ having counted the sleeping places, to assign according to the accommodation for sleeping places.”² Assigning according to the accommodation for sleeping places (some) sleeping places were left over.³ “I allow you, monks, to assign according to the accommodation in dwelling-places.” Assigning according to the accommodation in dwelling-places (some) dwelling-places were left over. “I allow you, monks, to assign according to the accommodation in cells.”⁴ Assigning according to the accommodation in cells (some) cells were left over. “I allow you, monks, to give an additional share⁵ also.”

When an additional share had been occupied another monk arrived. “It need not be given (to him if the occupier) is not willing.”⁶

Now at that time monks assigned lodgings to one who was standing outside a boundary. They told this matter to the Lord. He said; “Monks, a lodging should not be assigned to one standing outside a boundary. Whoever should (so) assign it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Vin-a 1223 calls these the places for couches. ² seyyaggena. Vin-a 1223 explains by seyyaparicchadena, by the space, range, and speaks of each monk having a place for a couch. Cf. bhikkhaggena, at Kd 12.1.1, apparently meaning the number of monks.

³ ussādiyimsu. Cf. Vin 4.99 and BD 2.364, n. 1. ⁴ pariveṇa. As pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.203, n. 1 a “cell” here appears to be a unit larger than a dwelling-place. But I do not think that this is necessarily the case. Probably not more than one monk slept in a cell, but a dwelling-place might have been used by two at least. Vin-a 1223 in explaining anubhāga, says that if there are too few monks (for the available space) two or three cells should be given to each monk. ⁵ anubhāga. ⁶ na akāmā as at Kd 8.24.4.

Now at that time monks, having occupied lodgings, reserved them for all time. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having occupied a lodging, it should not be reserved for all time. Whoever should reserve it (thus), there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, to reserve it for the three months of the rains but not to reserve it for the dry season.”¹

BD 5.23

Kd 16.1

Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, how many (times for) the assignment of lodgings are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these three (times for) the assignment of lodgings: the earlier,² the later, the intervening.³ The earlier on which they are to be assigned is the day following the full moon of Āsālha; the later on which they are to be assigned is the month following the full moon of Āsālha; the intervening on which they are to be assigned is the day following the Invitation, with reference to the next rains-residence. These, monks, are the three (times for) the assignment of lodgings.”

The Second Portion for Repeating.

Vin 2.1

THIRD RECITATION SECTION

Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having occupied a lodging in Sāvattḥī, went away to some village residence and occupied a lodging there too. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now your reverences, this venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, is a maker of strife, a maker of quarrels, a maker of contention, a maker of disputes a maker of legal questions in the Order. If he will spend the rains here, not one of us can live in comfort. Come, let us ask him.” Then these monks spoke thus to the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans: “Have you not, reverend Upananda, occupied a lodging in Sāvattthī?”

¹ Cf. Kd 16.17.2, below. ² See Kd 3.2.2. These two dates are the same as the earlier and the later periods for entering on the rains-residence. ³ The “intervening,” antarāmuttaka, does not refer to a date between these earlier and later times, but to the time between the rains-residence of one year and the next. Lodgings would become vacant at the end of the rains (see above Kd 16.11.3) and then assignment for the next rains could take place. It seems that the first two are compulsory, the third optional, see Vin-a 1223.

“Yes, your reverences.”

“But do you, reverend Upananda, (although) alone reserve two (lodgings)?”

“I, your reverences, am giving up the one here and occupying the one there.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying:

5.236 “How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, (although) alone reserve two (lodgings)?” They told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Upananda ... (lodgings)?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked him, saying:

“How can you, foolish man, (although) alone reserve two (lodgings)? The one occupied by you there, foolish man, is lost here,¹ the one occupied by you here is lost there. Thus are you, foolish man, excluded from both. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” ... having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, two (lodgings) should not be reserved by one (monk). Whoever should reserve (them), there is an offence of wrong doing.

6.13.1 Now at that time the Lord² in many a figure talked a talk on discipline to the monks, he spoke in praise of discipline, he spoke in praise of accomplishment in discipline, he spoke in praise of the venerable Upāli, referring (to him) again and again. Monks spoke thus: “The Lord in many a figure talked a talk on discipline ... he spoke in praise of the venerable Upāli, referring (to him) again and again. Come, your reverences, let us master discipline under the venerable

¹ The one taken in each place is automatically lost just because a monk has taken them both. ² The two introductory sentences occur also at Vin 4.142 \(BD 3.40\).

Upāli,” and they, many monks—elders and newly ordained and those of middle standing—mastered discipline under the venerable Upāli. The venerable Upāli, out of respect for the monks who were elders, recited standing, and also the monks who were elders, out of respect for dhamma,¹ had it recited standing, so that the monks who were elders were tired as well as the venerable Upāli. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, when a newly ordained monk is reciting to sit down on a seat that is the same (height) or on a higher one out of respect for dhamma; when a monk who is an elder is having it recited to sit down on a seat that is the same (height) or on a lower one out of respect for dhamma.”

Vin 2.1

BD 5,2

Now at that time many monks standing near the venerable Upāli grew tired waiting for the recitation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sit down with those entitled to seats of an equal (height).” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, in respect of what is one entitled to seats of an equal (height)?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sit down together with those who are within three years (of your) standing.”²

Kd 16.1

Now at that time several monks entitled to seats of an equal (height), having sat down on a couch, broke the couch; having sat down on a chair, they broke the chair. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a couch for a group of three (persons),³ a chair for a group of three (persons).” But a group of three (people), having sat down on a couch, broke the couch; having sat down on a chair, they broke the chair. “I allow, monks, a couch for a group of two (persons), a chair for a group of two (persons).”

Now at that time monks were (too) scrupulous to sit down on a long seat with those not entitled to a seat of an equal (height). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, except with a eunuch, a woman, a hermaphrodite, to sit down on a long seat with those not entitled to a seat of an equal (height).” Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, what is the maximum (length) of a ‘long seat’?”

¹ Cf. Bu-Sk 57–Bu-Sk 72 and especially Bu-Sk 69. ² I.e. since the time of ordination.

³ tivagga, threefold.

“I allow, monks, the maximum (length) of a ‘long seat’ (to be) whatever is the maximum (length) that suffices (to seat) three (persons).”

Now at that time Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, wanted to have a long house with a verandah of the “elephant-nail” type¹ built for an Order. Then it occurred to the monks: “What appurtenances of a long house are allowed by the Lord, what are not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, all the appurtenances of a long house.”

Now at that time the grandmother of King Pasenadi of Kosala passed away.² On her passing many unallowable goods accrued to an Order, that is to say³ a sofa, a divan ... a cotton quilt ... a couch with a red cushion at either end. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having broken off⁴ the legs of a sofa, to make use of it; having destroyed the horse-hair (stuffing) of a divan, to make use of it; having unravelled the cotton quilt, to make a squatting mat;⁵ to make a ground covering with what is over.”

THINGS NOT TO BE DISPOSED OF

Now at that time in a certain village residence not far from Sāvattthī the resident monks were worried at preparing lodgings for the incoming monks who arrived. Then it occurred to these monks: “At present we, your reverences, are worried at preparing lodgings for incoming monks who arrive. Come, your reverences, let us make over all the lodgings belonging to the Order to one (monk) and we will make use of them as belonging to him.” So these made over to one (monk) all the lodgings belonging to the Order. Incoming monks spoke thus to these monks: “Make ready lodgings, your reverences, for us.”

¹ hatthinakhaka. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p.258. ² Cf. SN i.97. ³ List as at Kd 5.10.4; Kd 16.8. ⁴ Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc 42, where a nun may use a sofa and a divan if she cuts down, chinditvā, the legs of the former and cuts out, chinditvā, the stuffing from the latter. Above bhinditvā occurs in both places instead of chinditvā. See BD 3.326, n. 1; BD 3.327, n. 3. DN-a 88, quoting above passage, uses both words: āsandiya pāde chinditvā ... pallāṅkassa vāḷe bhinditvā. At Kd 5.10.5 it is a dukkaṭa for a monk to use a sofa, divan or cotton quilt. At Kd 16.8 they form the three exceptions to the things displayed by a householder that a monk may sit down on. Above they are allowed if certain conditions are fulfilled. ⁵ Similar allowance at Kd 16.2.6.

“Your reverences, there are no lodgings belonging to the Order, we have made them all over to one (monk).”

“But have you, your reverences, disposed of lodgings belonging to an Order?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks dispose of what belongs to an Order?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks disposed of lodgings belonging to an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men dispose of lodgings belonging to an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, these five things not to be disposed of¹ should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of they are not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of them, there is a grave offence. What are the five?

1. A monastery, a site for a monastery. This is the first thing not to be disposed of that should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of it is not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of it, there is a grave offence.

¹ avissajjiyāni. Cf. avissajjikam at Kd 8.275; and appamattakavissajjaka at Vin 2.177, Vin 4.38.

2. A dwelling-place, a site for a dwelling-place. This is the second thing ...
3. A couch, a chair, a mattress, a squatting mat. This is the third thing ...
4. A copper pot, a copper box, a copper jar, a copper vessel, an adze, a hatchet, an axe, a hoe, a spade. This is the fourth thing ...
5. Jungle-rope, bamboo, coarse grass, reeds, tiṇa-grass, clay, wooden goods, clay goods. This is the fifth thing not to be disposed of that should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of it is not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of it, there is a grave offence.

Monks, these five things not to be disposed of should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of they are not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of them, there is a grave offence.”

THINGS NOT TO BE DISTRIBUTED

6.16.1 Then the Lord, having stayed at Sāvattihī for as long as he found 12.171 suiting, set out on tour for Kiṭṭāgiri with a large Order of monks, with 5.240 at least five hundred monks and with Sāriputta and Moggallāna. Then the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka heard:
 “They say that the Lord has arrived at Kiṭṭāgiri with a large Order of monks ... and with Sāriputta and Moggallāna. Come, your reverences, let us distribute all the lodgings belonging to the Order. Sāriputta and Moggallāna are of depraved desires, they are under the influence of depraved desires; we will not make ready lodgings for them.” They distributed all the lodgings belonging to the Order. Then the Lord, walking on tour, gradually reached Kiṭṭāgiri. Then the Lord addressed several monks, saying:

“Do you go, monks, and having gone up to the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka, speak thus: ‘The Lord, your reverences, has come together with a large Order of monks ... and with Sāriputta and Moggallāna; so, your reverences, make ready lodgings for the Lord and for the Order of monks and for Sāriputta and Moggallāna.’”

“Very well, Lord,” and these monks, having answered the Lord in assent, went up to the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka; having gone up to the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka, they spoke thus: “The Lord, your reverences, has come ... make ready lodgings for the Lord and for the Order of monks and for Sāriputta and Moggallāna.”

“There are no lodgings, your reverences, belonging to the Order; all were distributed by us. The Lord, your reverences, is welcome, the Lord can stay in whatever dwelling-place he likes. Sāriputta and Moggallāna are of depraved desires, they are under the influence of depraved desires; we will not make ready lodgings for them.”

“But did you, your reverences, distribute lodgings belonging to the Order?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying:

“How can these monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka distribute lodgings belonging to an Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks distributed ... to an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.”

“How, monks, can these foolish men distribute lodgings belonging to an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, these five things not to be divided up¹ should not be divided up by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if divided up they are not (really) divided up. Whoever should divide them up, there is a grave offence. What are the five?²

¹ avebhaṅgiyāni. Cf. avebhaṅgikam at Kd 8.275. ² As at Kd 16.15.2.

1. A monastery, a site for a monastery. This is the first thing not to be divided up that should not be divided up by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if divided up it is not (really) divided up. Whoever should divide it up, there is a grave offence.
2. A dwelling-place, a site for a dwelling-place. This is the second thing ...
3. A couch, a chair, a mattress, a squatting mat. This is the third thing ...
4. A copper pot, a copper box, a copper jar, a copper vessel, an adze, a hatchet, an axe, a hoe, a spade. This is the fourth thing ...
5. Jungle-rope, bamboo, coarse grass, reeds, tiṇa-grass, clay, wooden goods, clay goods. This is the fifth thing not to be divided up that should not be divided up by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if divided up it is not (really) divided up. Whoever should divide it up, there is a grave offence.

ON THE GIFT OF BUILDING WORK

Then the Lord, having stayed at Kiṭāgiri for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Āḷavī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Āḷavī. The Lord stayed there at Āḷavī at the chief shrine of Āḷavī.¹ Now at that time the monks of Āḷavī gave repairs such as these into the charge (of a monk):² they gave repairs in charge when there was merely putting aside in heaps³ ... when there was merely smearing a wall ... when there was merely placing a door ... when there was merely making a socket for a bolt ... when there was merely making a window-hole ... when there was merely treating with whitewash ... when there was merely treating with black colouring ... when there was merely treating with red chalk ... when there was merely roofing ... when there was merely joining ... when there was merely ¹ See BD 1.247, n. 2. ² Cf. the giving in charge of repairs in a general way at Kd 16.5.

³ Vinaya Texts iii.213 takes this to refer to “clay or earth.”

putting on a bar (to a doorpost)¹ ... when there was merely restoring broken and dilapidated parts² ... when there was merely plastering the floors;³ and they gave repairs in charge for twenty years, and they gave repairs in charge for thirty years, and they gave repairs in charge for life, and they gave the repairs to a completed dwelling-place into the charge (of a monk until) the time of his cremation.⁴

BD 5.2

Those who were modest monks spread it about, saying: “How can the monks of Ālavī give repairs such as these into the charge (of a monk) ... (until) the time of his cremation?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monks of Ālavī ... the time of his cremation?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, repairs when there is merely putting aside in heaps should not be given into the charge (of a monk) ... nor should repairs to a completed dwelling-place be given into the charge (of a monk) until the time of his cremation. Whoever should (so) give in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to give repairs to a dwelling-place into the charge (of a monk) if it is not (yet) built or if it is not (yet) finished;⁵ in reference to work on a small dwelling-place, repairs may be given in charge for six or five years; in reference to work on a curved house repairs may be given in charge for seven or eight years; in reference to work on a large dwelling-place or a long house, repairs may be given in charge for ten or twelve years.”

Now at that time monks gave the whole of a dwelling-place into charge for repairs. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the whole of a dwelling-place should not be given in charge for repairs. Whoever should give one in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd 16.1

¹ Oldenberg's text reads gaṇḍikādhānamattena; Vin-a 1245 reads bhaṇḍika-. At Ja iii.41 bhaṇḍikā is variant reading for gaṇḍikā. See Vinaya Texts iii.213, n. 4 ² As at Kd 16.5.2. ³ paribhaṇḍa. Vin-a 1245 says doing up a “floor” with cowdung, with an astringent decoction. Cf. Kd 15.9.4. ⁴ dhūmakālika, smoke-time, i.e. when the smoke arises from his funeral pyre. Cf. Ja iii.422. Word occurs at Kd 21.1.9. ⁵ According to Vin-a 1245-6, if the rafters have not been put up, for when they are up much has been built.

“Now at that time monks gave two (dwelling-places) into the charge of one (monk). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, two (dwelling-places) should not be given into the charge of one (monk). Whoever should (so) give in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs, made another live (there). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having taken on repairs, you should not make another live (there). Whoever should make (another) live (there), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs, reserved (for their own use) what belonged to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having taken on repairs, you should not reserve (for your own use) what belongs to an Order. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to occupy one good sleeping place.”

Now at that time monks gave repairs into the charge of one outside a boundary. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, repairs should not be given into the charge of one outside a boundary. Whoever should (so) give them in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs (to a building), reserved it for all time. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having taken on repairs (to a building), you should not reserve it for all time. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to reserve it for the three months of the rains, but not to reserve it for the dry season.”¹

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs, went away² and left the Order and passed away, and they pretended to be novices and they pretended to be disavowers of the training ... to be committers of extreme offences ... to be mad ... to be unhinged ... to have bodily pains ... to be suspended for not seeing an offence ... to be suspended for not making amends for an offence ... to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view and they pretended to be eunuchs ... to be living in communion as it were by theft ... to have gone over to a sect ... to be animals ... to be matricides ... to be parricides ... to be slayers of one perfected ... to be seducers of nuns ... to be schismatics ... to be shedders of a (Truth-finder's) blood and they pretended to be hermaphrodites. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, goes away. Thinking, ‘Do not let the Order suffer,’ (the repairs) should be given into the charge of another. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, leaves the Order, passes away, pretends to be ... a hermaphrodite. Thinking, ‘Do not let the Order suffer,’ (the repairs) should be given into the charge of another. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, goes away while they are yet unfinished ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite. Thinking, ‘Do not let the Order suffer,’ (the repairs) should be given into the charge of another. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion goes away; they are still in his (charge).³ This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion leaves the Order ... pretends to have committed an extreme offence: the Order is the owner. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion pretends to be mad ... pretends to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view: they are still in his (charge). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion pretends to be a eunuch ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite: the Order is the owner.”

¹ Cf. Kd 16.11.3 above. ² See Kd 2.22.3; Kd 2.36.1-Kd 2.36.3; Kd 9.4.2, Kd 9.4.7. ³ tass'eva tam. Vin-a 1248 elaborates “for the rains.”

REJECTION OF USING ELSEWHERE, ETC.

^{6.18.1} Now at that time monks made use elsewhere¹ of lodgings—appurtenances of a dwelling-place—belonging to a lay-follower. Then that lay-follower ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs make use elsewhere of appurtenances belonging somewhere else?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not make use elsewhere of appurtenances belonging somewhere else. Whoever should (so) make use of them, there is an offence of wrong doing.”

Now at that time monks,² being (too) scrupulous to convey to the Observance house and to the meeting place (things to sit on), sat down on the ground. Their limbs and robes were covered with dust. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to convey (things) temporarily.”

^{5.245} Now at that time a great dwelling-place belonging to an Order fell into decay. Monks, being scrupulous, did not take out the lodgings.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to convey (things) for the sake of protecting (them).”

^{6.19.1} Now at that time a costly woollen blanket—an accessory to a lodging—accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to barter⁴ it for (something) advantageous.”

¹ As at Vin 3.65–Vin 3.66. Cf. Vin 4.76, Vin 4.81 (both “eating elsewhere”). ² As at Vin 3.66. ³ Vin-a 1248 explains that having conveyed them elsewhere they do not make use of them. ⁴ parivatteti. Cf. BD 2.55, n. 8. Vin-a 1248 says that the meaning is to get a lodging, couch or chair of equal or greater value.

Now at that time a costly woven cloth ... “to barter it for (something) advantageous.”

Now at that time a bear’s hide¹ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a towel for the feet.” Drapery² accrued. “I allow you, monks, to make a towel for the feet.” Cloth³ accrued. “I allow you, monks, to make a towel for the feet.”

Now at that time monks trod upon a lodging while their feet were unwashed;⁴ the lodging was soiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a lodging should not be trodden upon while your feet are unwashed. Whoever should (so) tread upon one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” Now at that time monks trod upon a lodging while their feet were damp with their sandals on ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks spat on ground that had been treated;⁵ the colour was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not spit upon ground that has been treated. Whoever should (so) spit, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, a spittoon.” Now at that time the legs of couches and the legs of chairs scratched ground that had been treated. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to wrap them round with a piece of cloth.”

Now at that time monks leant against a wall that had been treated; the colour was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ At Vin 1.192 this is not included among the large hides which were not allowed.

² cakkali. Cf. Kd 16.2.2. ³ colaka. Cf. Kd 8.18. ⁴ Cf. Kd 5.6.1 where monks are allowed to wear sandals so as not to soil couches and chairs when they get up on to them. ⁵ Either with whitewash, black colouring or red chalk; cf. Kd 15.11.6;

Kd 16.8.1; Kd 16.17.1. Kd 1.25.15 makes it appear as if black were for the ground and red for the walls.

“Monks, you should not lean against a wall that has been treated. Whoever should lean against one, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, a reclining board.”¹ The reclining board scratched the ground underneath, it destroyed the wall above. “I allow you, monks, to wrap it round with a piece of cloth at the lower and the upper (ends).”

Now at that time monks² were (too) scrupulous to lie down on a place for treading on with washed feet.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to lie down (in such a place), having spread a sheet.”⁴

ALLOWANCE FOR MEALS FOR THE ORDER, ETC.

^{6.21.1} Then the Lord, having stayed at Ālavī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Great Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place. Now at that time Rājagaha was short of food. People were not able to make a meal for the Order (but) they wanted to make a meal for special (monks),⁵ an invitation (-meal),⁶ food (allowed by) ticket,⁷ (food given) on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon, (given) on an Observance day, (given) on the day after an Observance day. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a meal for an Order, a meal for a special (monk), an invitation (meal) ... (food given) on the day after an Observance day.”⁸

¹ Mentioned at Kd 1.25.15, Kd 1.25.16. ² Omitted in Oldenberg’s text. ³ dhotapādakā. Vin-a 1249 gives the above meaning, and says that dhotapādake is also a reading. ⁴ paccattharivā. On “sheet,” paccattharaṇa, see BD 2.34, n. 1; BD 2.46, n. 3. ⁵ Cf. Kd 6.19.1 and Bu-Pc 46. ⁶ Defined at Vin 4.100. ⁷ For this and the next three see notes at BD 2.313–314. ⁸ Vin-a 1250 says that this allowance was made by the Lord for times of plenty when people can again give food to a whole Order.

AGREEMENT FOR AN ISSUER OF MEALS

Now at that time the group of six monks, having chosen the sweet foods for themselves, gave poor foods to (other) monks. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk possessed of five qualities as issuer of meals:¹ one who would not follow a wrong course from desire ... from hatred ... from stupidity ... from fear, and one who would know what is issued and what is not issued. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, a monk should be asked ...² ‘... Thus do I understand this’.”

Then it occurred to the monks who were issuers of meals: “Now, how should a meal be issued?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to issue (the food) after having put it into heaps and having tied on a ticket or a leaf.”³

AGREEMENT FOR AN ASSIGNER OF LODGINGS

Now at that time there was no assigner of lodgings⁴ for an Order.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as assigner of lodgings ... and one who would know what is assigned and what is not assigned. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ...⁶ ‘... Thus do I understand this’.”

Now at that time there was no keeper of the storeroom⁷ for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, ... and one who would, know what is guarded and what is not guarded. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ... ‘... Thus do I understand this’.”

¹ Dabba was agreed upon for this office at Kd 14.4 above, and at Bu-Ss 8 (Vin 3.158 = Vin 2.75). See also AN iii.275. ² As in Kd 14.9 ³ paṭṭikā. Buddhaghosa, reading pattikā, says it is a leaf (paṇṇa) of a bamboo, reed or palm. ⁴ This office was also given to Dabba. ⁵ The following list of offices also occurs at AN iii.274–AN iii.275. ⁶ As in Kd 14.4.3. ⁷ bhaṇḍāgārika, as at Vin 1.284.

Now at that time there was no acceptor of robes¹ for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow ... and one who would know what is taken and what is not taken ... ‘... Thus do I understand this’.”

Now at that time there was no distributor of robe material² ... no distributor of conje³ ... no distributor of fruit for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks ... and one who would know what is distributed and what is not distributed ... ‘... Thus do I understand this’.”

Now at that time there was no distributor of solid food⁴ for an Order. The solid food, not being distributed, was lost. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you ... and one who would know what is distributed and what is not distributed ... ‘... Thus do I understand this’.”

AGREEMENT ON ONE TO DISPOSE OF TRIFLES

Now at that time trifling accessories had accrued in the storeroom of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as disposer of trifles:⁵ ... one who would know what is disposed of and what is not disposed of ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’ Each needle is to be given by the monk who is the disposer of trifles, pairs of scissors are to be given, sandals are to be given, waistbands ... shoulder straps ... strainers ... regulation water pots⁶ ... cross-seams⁷ ... short cross-seams ... circular seams ... short circular seams ... braiding⁸ ... binding is to be given. If there comes to be ghee or oil or honey or molasses for an Order, it may be given to be partaken of at once;¹ if there is need for it yet again, it may be given yet again; if there is need for it yet again, it may be given yet again.”

¹ cīvarapaṭiggāhaka, as at Vin 1.283. ² cīvarabhājaka, as at Vin 1.285. ³ Mentioned at Vin 4.38, Vin 4.155. ⁴ Mentioned at Vin 4.38, Vin 4.155. ⁵ Mentioned at Kd 15.13.1. ⁶ Mentioned at Kd 15.13.1. ⁷ See Kd 8.12.2. ⁸ See BD 2.409, n. 7, BD 2.409, n. 8; BD 4.354, n. 7, BD 4.354, n. 8; and Kd 15.11.3.

AGREEMENT ON AN ACCEPTER OF OUTER CLOAKS

Now at that time there was no accepter of outer cloaks² ... accepter of bowls³ for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon ... one who would know what is taken and what is not taken. And thus, monks, ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..”

Now at that time an Order had no superintendent of monastery attendants. The monastery attendants, not being superintended, did not do the work (properly). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a superintendent of monastery attendants ... and one who knows what is superintended and what is not superintended ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..”

BD 5.2

Now at that time an Order had no superintendent for the novices. The novices, not being superintended, did not do the work (properly) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..”

The Sixth Section: that on Lodgings

THIS IS ITS KEY

At that time a dwelling-place had not been permitted by the best of Awakened Ones; these, disciples of the Conqueror went out from this and that place—(their) habitation.⁴ /

A merchant householder, having seen them, said this to the monks: “If I were to have (dwelling-places) built,

¹ Cf. Bu-NP 23 and Kd 6.15.10, when these things—medicines—may not be stored for more than seven days. ² sāṭiyagāhāpaka. ³ See Bu-NP 22 (Vin 3.246–Vin 3.247).

⁴ Text reads āvāsā tamhā te; Sinhalese and Siamese editions. vāsā te. Oldenberg, Vin 2.323 says “the meter is quite correct if we expunge tamhā te.”

would you stay (in them)?” They asked the Leader. / Dwelling-place, curved house, and long house, mansion, cave, he allowed five (kinds of) abodes. The merchant had dwelling-places built.
 People had a dwelling-place built doorless, unclosed, door, doorpost and lintel, hollow like a mortar and so on, / Hole and cord for pulling through, post for a bolt, and “monkey’s head,” a pin, a stick, a key of copper, wood, horn, /
 And just a bolt and a pin, roofing smeared inside and out, railing, lattice and stick, cloth and about matting, / Solid bench, and couch of split bamboo, bierlike long couch, with slats, and curved legs, removeable, rectangular, tall ones, /
 And three-sided, plaited chair, cloth chair, sheep-footed, emblic myrobalan,¹ wooden,² stool, and just a straw chair, /
 One a high one,³ and a snake,⁴ supports,⁵ and supports of eight fingerbreadths, thread, squares, cotton cloth, cotton quilt, half (the size of a man’s) body, / Festival and also mattresses, woven cloth, and also lodgings, covered, it fell from below, and having removed they carried away, /
 And line, and the Truth-finder⁶ allowed the outline of the hand, and also other sects in a dwelling-place,⁷ grain-husk, and soft clay, / What exudes from trees, a spoon, a wall, mustard powder (and) oil of beeswax, to sponge over the thick (places), rough, clay (and the excrement of) earthworms,⁸ /
 What exudes from trees, and a bold design, low, and a piling, they ascended, they fell off, thronged, half-wall, again three, /
 In a small (one), and a buttress,⁹ let in the rain, cry of distress,¹⁰ peg, and bamboo and cord for robes, verandah, and about a screen, /

¹ Siamese edition, which I follow, reads āmalakā phalakā. Vin.2.323 suggests āmalaka-phalakā. Text reads āmaṭāmalaka; Sinhalese edition āmalāmalakā.

² Siamese edition, which I follow, reads āmalakā phalakā. Vin.2.323 suggests āmalaka-phalakā. Text reads āmaṭāmalaka; Sinhalese edition āmalāmalakā.

³ Reading ucce ca ahi with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of Text’s uccā hi.

⁴ Reading ucce ca ahi with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of Text’s uccā hi. ⁵ I suggest pādakā, instead of Text’s atipādakā and Sinhalese and Siamese editions. pādāni, legs.

⁶ Siamese edition omits tathāgata and reads instead titthiyā setakālavihāre cāpi. Sinhalese edition has tathāgato but not titthiyā, reading tathāgato setakālavihāre pi.

⁷ Siamese edition omits tathāgata and reads instead titthiyā setakālavihāre cāpi. Sinhalese edition has tathāgato but not titthiyā, reading tathāgato setakālavihāre pi. ⁸ Siamese edition reads laṇḍumattikam, Sinhalese laṇḍa-. ⁹ Here kuḍḍapāda. ¹⁰ Reading vissaraṃ with Siamese edition instead of saraṃ.

Balustrade, powdered grass—the method should be done in the way below,¹ in the open air, became tepid, hall, and as below, vessel, / Dwelling-place, and just a porch, little hall for a fire in a cell, monasteries, porches again, the method should be done just (as) below. / Plaster,² and faithful Anāthapaṇḍika went to the Cool Grove, things seen, he invited the Leader with the Order. /
He enjoined on the way, a group built a monastery, repairs at Vesālī, in front of and taking possession of, /
Who is worthy of the best food? and the partridge, not to be greeted, taken possession of, inside a house, cotton, he visited Sāvattthī, /
He prepared a monastery, and an uproar in a refectory, ill, and a good sleeping place, pretexts, the seventeen there, / “Now, by whom?” “Now, how?” he distributed according to the accommodation in the dwelling-places, and in cells, an additional share, shares need not be given if one is not willing, / Outside a boundary, and for all time, three (times for) assignment of lodgings, and Upananda, he praised, standing, equal seats, /
Those entitled to seats of an equal (height) broke them, groups of three (and) for a group of two,³ a long (seat) for those not entitled to seats of an equal (height), to make use of a verandah,⁴ /
Grandmother,⁵ and not far, and distributed, Kiṭṭāgiri, Ālavī: in heaps, on walls, door, socket, /
And window-hole, whitewash, black colouring, red chalk, roofing, joining, bar, broken (parts), doing up, twenty, thirty and for life, / Completed, not built, incomplete,⁶ for six or five years if it is a small one, and seven or eight if it is a curved house, ten and twelve for a large one, /
A whole dwelling-place, of one, they made another live (there), what belongs to an Order,
outside a boundary, and for all time, he goes away, and they leave the Order, /
And passed away, and (pretended to be) a novice,

¹ See e.g. “key” to Kd 15 (towards end of Vin 2.143 and again towards top of BD 5.144).

² This should read sudha as in Kd 16.3.11 above, and as in Siamese edition, and as suggested at Vin 2.323, and not suddha. ³ Reading with Sinhalese edition ca duvaggikaṃ, as surmised would be right at Vin 2.323, instead of text’s catuvaggikaṃ. Siamese reads ca duvaggikā. ⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese editions. ālindam paribhuñjituṃ, as for Kd 16.14, instead of text’s taṃ dvinnam, paribhuñjisu. ⁵ Sinhalese ayyakā ca, as surmised would be right at Vin 2.323. Siamese ayyikā ca; text ayyā ca. ⁶ There is no sabbaṃ, whole, in the context to which this refers (i.e. Kd 16.17.1). Should read vippaṃ as does Siamese (for vippakatam).

disavowers of the training, extreme, mad, and unhinged, pains, not seeing an offence, /
 Not making amends for, wrong view, eunuchs, as it were by theft, other sects, animals, (slayers) of mother, of father, and of one perfected, seducers, /
 Schismatics, shedders of (a Truth-finder's) blood, and then hermaphrodites,
 "Do not let the Order suffer"—the work should be given to another, /
 And when (yet) unfinished to another;
 if he goes away when it is built it is still in his (charge);
 if he leaves the Order, passes away, and pretends to be a novice, /
 And disavows the training, (pretends to have committed an) extreme (offence and to be) a eunuch, the Order itself becomes the owner; if he is mad, unhinged, in pain, / (Suspended for) not seeing, for not making amends for, (for not giving up) a wrong view—they are still in his (charge);
 Eunuch, and as it were by theft, member of another sect, animal, matricide, parricide,
 Slayer of one perfected, and then a seducer, schismatic, shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood, hermaphrodite—
 if he pretends thus, the Order itself becomes the owner. /
 They conveyed, elsewhere, scrupulous, and fell into decay, woollen blanket, and woven cloths, hide, drapery, a cloth, and they trod upon, / Damp, sandals, should not spit, they scratched,¹ and they leant against, reclining board, even then it scratched,² about spreading where washed,³ /
 They were unable to in Rājagaha, poor, issuer of meals,
 "Now, how?" assigner, agreement upon a storeroom keeper, /
 And then accepter, distributor, and conje, distributor of fruit, and even a distributor of solid food, disposer of trifles, /
 And even an accepter of outer cloaks, likewise an accepter of bowls, and agreement upon a superintendent of monastery attendants and of novices. /
 The Leader who has overcome all, knower of the worlds, his mind benevolent,
 (is one) to meditate upon and have insight into the need for abodes and ease.

¹ Sinhalese and Siamese Likhanti; text khilanti; Kd 16.20.2 vilikhanti. ² Siamese likhat'eva; Sinhalese likhaṇ evā; text khalite vā; Kd 16.20.2 vilikhati. ³ Referring to the dhotapādaka at Kd 16.20.2.

17. SCHISM IN AN ORDER (SAṄGHABHEDA)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

ON THE GOING FORTH OF THE SIX SAKYANS

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Anupiyā. Anupiyā¹ is a little town² of the Mallas.³ Now at that time many distinguished Sakyan young men had gone forth in imitation of the Lord who had gone forth. Now at that time Mahānāma the Sakyan and Anuruddha the Sakyan were two brothers. Anuruddha the Sakyan was delicately nurtured. He had three palaces,⁴ one for the cold weather, one for the hot, one for the rains. Being waited on for four months in the palace for the rains by female musicians, he did not come down from that palace. Then it occurred to Mahānāma the Sakyan:⁵ “At present many distinguished Sakyan young men have gone forth in imitation of the Lord who has gone forth, but no one from our family has gone forth from home into homelessness. Suppose I should go forth, or Anuruddha?” Then Mahānāma the Sakyan approached Anuruddha the Sakyan; having approached, he spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “At present, dear Anuruddha, many distinguished Sakyan young men ... but no one from our family has gone forth from home into homelessness. Well now, either you go forth or I will go forth.”¹

¹ Neuter form used here, although the locative is formed as though the word were feminine. Cf. Ja i.65–Ja i.66, Bv-a 284 which say the Bodhisatta spent the first week after he had gone forth in the mango grove at Anupiyā. ² See BD 2.63, n. 2. ³ It is more usual to name the exact locality in the place where the Lord was staying.

⁴ Cf. Kd 1.71 where the same is said of Yasa. ⁵ At AN i.26 he is called chief of those who give sumptuous alms.

“But I have been delicately nurtured, I am not able to go forth from home into homelessness.² You go forth.”

“Come along, dear Anuruddha, I will instruct you in what belongs to the household life. First the fields have to be ploughed;³ having had them ploughed they must be sown; having had them sown water must be led in to them; having had water led in to them the water must be led away; having led the water away you must have the weeds dug up; having had the weeds dug up you must get the crop reaped; having had the crop reaped you must have it harvested; having had it harvested you must have it made into stooks; having had it made into stooks you must have it threshed; having had it threshed you must have the straw winnowed; having had the straw winnowed you must have the chaff winnowed; having had the chaff winnowed you must have it sifted; having had it sifted you must have it⁴ brought in;⁵ having had it brought in it is to be done just the same the next year, and it is to be done just the same the next year.”

“The operations do not stop,⁶ no end to the operations is to be seen. When will the operations stop? When will an end to the operations be seen? When will we, possessed of and provided with the fivefold strand of sense pleasures, amuse ourselves unconcernedly?”

“But, dear Anuruddha, the operations do not stop, no end to the operations is to be seen. Even when our fathers and grandfathers passed away the operations were not stopped.”

“Well now, you understand⁷ just what belongs to the household life. I will go forth from home into homelessness.”

Then Anuruddha the Sakyan approached his mother; having approached, he spoke thus to his mother: “I, mother, want to go forth from home into homelessness. Consent to my going forth from home into homelessness.”¹ When he had spoken thus, the mother of Anuruddha the Sakyan spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan:

¹ Quoted Dh-p-a i.133; AN-a i.191. ² Quoted Dh-p-a i.135-Dh-p-a i.136. ³ Quoted Dh-p-a i.136. Cf. similar list of operations at Ja i.215 and an other at AN i.241. ⁴ I.e. the grain, or the good grass. ⁵ atiharati, as at Nuns’ Bi-Pc 7 (also of grain). ⁶ na khiyanti, do not wear away, become exhausted or used up. ⁷ Text reads upajāna; Vin-a 1274 upajānāhi.

“You two boys, dear Anuruddha, are dear to me,² beloved, agreeable. In the case of your death I would be unwillingly separated from you. So how can I, while you are still living, allow a going forth from home into homelessness?” And a second time ... And a third time Anuruddha the Sakyan spoke thus to his mother: ... the mother of Anuruddha the Sakyan spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “... how can I, while you are still living, allow a going forth from home into homelessness?”

Now at that time Bhaddiya³ the Sakyan chieftain was ruling over the Sakyans and was a friend of Anuruddha the Sakyan. Then the mother of Anuruddha the Sakyan thinking: “Now this Bhaddiya ... is a friend of Anuruddha; he will not be able to go forth from home into homelessness,” spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “If, dear Anuruddha, Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain goes forth from home into homelessness you can go forth likewise.”⁴

Then Anuruddha the Sakyan approached Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain; having approached, he spoke thus to Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain: “My going forth, friend, is dependent on yours.”

“If your going forth, friend, is dependent on mine, let it be independent. I, with you ...⁵ Go forth according to your wish.”

“Come, friend, we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

“I, friend, am not able to go forth from home into homelessness. Whatever else I am able to do for you, that will I do. You go forth.”

“My mother, friend, spoke thus to me: ‘If, dear Anuruddha, Bhad-

¹ Cf. Dhp-a i.137. Boys under fifteen had to obtain their parents’ consent for going forth, Vin 1.79, Vin 1.83. ² Cf. Vin 3.13; MN ii.58. ³ He was, as said at Ud ii.10, AN-a i.192, the son of Kālī of the Godhas, see Psalms of the Bretheren p. 315, n. 2. Bhaddiya’s verses are at Thag 842–Thag 865. At AN i.23 he is called chief among the disciples of high family. AN-a i.192 says he went forth with Anuruddha. ⁴ Cf. Dhp-a i.137. ⁵ Vin-a 1274 says that out of affection for his friend he wanted to say, “I, with you, will go forth,” but he was not able to finish the sentence as the greed for ruling overcame his heart.

diya the Sakyan chieftain goes forth from home into homelessness, you can go forth likewise.’ But, friend, these words were spoken by you: ‘If your going forth is dependent on mine, let it be independent. I, with you ... Go forth according to your wish.’ Come, friend, we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

Now at that time people were speakers of truth, pledged to the truth. Then Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “Wait, friend, for seven years. After seven years we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

“Seven years are too long, friend, I am not able to wait for seven years.”

“Wait, friend, for six years ... live ... four ... three ... two years ... for one year.”

“One year is too long, friend, I am not able to wait one year.”

“Wait, friend, for seven months. After seven months we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

“Seven months are too long, friend, I am not able to wait seven months.”

“Wait, friend, for six ... five ... four ... three ... two months ... one month ... for half a month, after half a month we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

“Half a month is too long, friend, I am not able to wait half a month.”

“Wait, friend, for seven days until I hand over the kingdom to my sons and brothers.”

“Seven days are not too long, friend, I will wait.”

Then¹ Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain and Anuruddha² and Ānanda and Bhagu³ and Kimbila⁴ and Devadatta with Upāli the barber⁵ as the seventh, as they had often previously gone out to a ground in a pleasure grove with a fourfold army,⁶ so did they (now) go out with a fourfold army. Having gone far, having sent back the army, having passed into other territory, having taken off their ornaments, having tied them up into a bundle with their upper robes,¹ they spoke thus to Upāli the barber: “Come, good Upāli, return, this will be enough for your livelihood.” Then it occurred to Upāli the barber as he was going back: “The Sakyans are fierce. Thinking: ‘This one has made the young men come forth,’ they may even kill me. But if these young Sakyans will go forth from home into homelessness, why should not I?”

¹ For the following incident cf. Dh-p-a i.137f. ² See BD 4.501. ³ See BD 4.428, BD 4.500. ⁴ See BD 4.501. ⁵ See Vin 4.308 and BD 3.344, n. 2. ⁶ See definition of “army” at Vin 4.105.

Having loosened the bundle, having hung the goods up on a tree, and having said: “Whoever sees it, it is given (to him), let him take it,”² he approached the young Sakyans. These young Sakyans men saw Upāli the barber coming in the distance; having seen him, then spoke thus to Upāli the barber: “Why have you, good Upāli, returned?”

“Now, it occurred to me, young gentlemen, as I was going back, ‘The Sakyans are fierce ... they may even kill me. But if these young Sakyans men will go forth from home into homelessness, why should not I?’ So I, young gentlemen, having loosened the bundle ... ‘... let him take it,’ returned again from there.”

“You did well, good Upāli, in that you did not go back. The Sakyans are fierce ... they might even have killed you.” Then these young Sakyans men, taking Upāli the barber, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these young Sakyans men spoke thus to the Lord:

“We, Lord, are Sakyans, we are proud. Lord, this barber, Upāli, has been our attendant for a long time. May the Lord let him go forth first. We will greet him, rise up before him, salute him with joined palms, and do the proper duties. Thus will the Sakyans pride be humbled in us Sakyans.” Then the Lord let Upāli the barber go forth first, and afterwards these young Sakyans men. Then the venerable Bhaddiya within one year realised the threefold knowledge,³ the venerable

¹ As at Vin 3.208, Vin 4.162. ² As at Vin 3.208. ³ AN-a.i.191 says Bhaddiya attained arahantship in the same year (as he went forth).

Anuruddha obtained deva-sight,¹ the venerable Ānanda realised the fruit of stream attainment, Devadatta acquired ordinary psychic power.²

17.1.5 Now at that time³ the venerable Bhaddiya, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, constantly uttered this utterance: “Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!” Then several monks approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

5.258 “Lord, the venerable Bhaddiya, dwelling in a forest utters this utterance: ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’ Doubtless, Lord, the venerable Bhaddiya fares the Brahma-faring dissatisfied,⁴ and (although) dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, he utters this utterance, ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’ while he is recalling the former joys of kingship.”

2.184 Then the Lord addressed a certain monk, saying: “Come you, monk, in my name address the monk Bhaddiya saying: ‘The Teacher, reverend Bhaddiya, is summoning you.’”

“Very well, Lord,” and that monk, having answered the Lord in assent, approached the venerable Bhaddiya; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Bhaddiya: “The Teacher, reverend Bhaddiya, is summoning you.”

17.1.6 “Very well, your reverence,” and the venerable Bhaddiya, having answered that monk in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord spoke thus to the venerable Bhaddiya as he was sitting down at a respectful distance: “Is it true, as is said, that you, Bhaddiya, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, are constantly uttering this utterance, ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’?”

¹ At AN i.23 called chief of monks of deva-sight. ² AN-a i.191 says Devadatta won the eight attainments; and adds that Bhagu and Kimbila attained arahantship later.

³ As at Ud ii.10. The following incident, with a summary of the preceding sections, also forms the introductory story to the 10th Jātaka. ⁴ Quoted Ud-a 161.

“Yes, Lord.”

“What circumstances were you, Bhaddiya, taking into account when, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, you constantly uttered this utterance, ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’?”

“Formerly, Lord, when I was a ruler there was a fully appointed guard both within my private quarters and outside my private quarters, there was a fully appointed guard both within the town and outside the town, and there was a fully appointed guard within the country districts. But I, Lord, although being guarded and warded thus, dwelt afraid, anxious fearful, alarmed.¹ But now I, Lord, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, am unafraid, not anxious, not fearful, not alarmed. I am unconcerned, unruffled,² dependent on others,³ with a mind become as a wild creature’s.⁴ This, Lord, was the circumstance I was taking into account when, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, I constantly uttered this utterance, ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’”

BD 5, 25

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

“In whom there inly lurk no spites.

¹ Same quartet of words below, Kd 17.2.1; Kd 17.3.4, Kd 17.3.7. ² pannaloma. Cf. lomariṇ pāṭeti as at Kd 11.6.1. ³ paradattavutta. Vin-a 1275, MN i.450, Ud 19 read paradavutto, with variant readings Ud-a 163 says “living on the gifts of others in respect of robes and so on.” MN-a iii.167 explains by parehi dinnavuttino parato laddhena yāpentā, whose livelihood is given by others, subsisting on what is obtained from another. WOODWARD, Verses of Uplift, p. 24, n. 3 says that “such meanings are hardly applicable in the context.” He translates as “lightsome,” following Pali-English Dictionary’s suggestion that parada is “fond of” with vutta “being prepared,” active, alert. I choose “dependent on others,” following the Commentaries, and as balancing his former dependence on those others who guarded him. ⁴ Same quartet of words as at MN i.450, MN ii.121. MN-a iii.167 seems to explain the last word, migabhūtena cetasā, as not expecting or hoping for anything.

Who has overcome becoming and not becoming thus or thus,¹
Him, gone past fear, blissful, sorrowless,
The devas do not win to see.”

THE STORY OF DEVADATTA

17.2.1 Then the Lord, having stayed at Anupiyā for as long as he found suiting, set out on almstour for Kosambī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Kosambī. The Lord stayed there at Kosambī in Ghosita’s monastery. Then as Devadatta was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Whom² now could I please, so that because he is pleased with me, much gain and honour would accrue (to me)?”³ 2.185 Then it occurred to Devadatta: “This Prince Ajātasattu is young and also has an auspicious future. What now if I were to make Prince Ajātasattu pleased, so that because he is pleased with me, much gain and honour would accrue (to me)?”
5.260

Then Devadatta, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Rājagaha; in due course he arrived at Rājagaha.⁴
Then Devadatta, having thrown off his own form, having assumed the form⁵ of a young boy clad in a girdle of snakes,⁶ became manifest in Prince Ajātasattu’s lap. Then Prince Ajātasattu was afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed.⁷ Then Devadatta spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu:
“Are you, prince, afraid of me?”

¹ itibhavābhavataṃ. Here Vin-a 1275 and Ud-a 164 explain bhava and vibhava much as do Snp-a 20, SN-a iii.295, MN-a iii.223, and say that one is freed from this state of becoming this or that by means of the four ways. Cf. also fuller explanation at Ud-a 164, the rather different explanation at MN-a ii.74, and note that Vin-a 1275 says that vibhava and abhava are identical in meaning. This line occurs at Ud ii.10 and Snp 6. Cf. itibhavābhavakathā at Vin 4.164 and parallel passages mentioned at BD 2.82, n. 3. ² Read kaṃ for text’s kiṃ. ³ Cf. Ja i.185–Ja i.186. ⁴ This episode, as far as where Devadatta stands before Ajātasattu, is also told at Dh-p-a i.139. ⁵ Cf.
Vin 1.3, where Mucalinda assumed the form of a brahmin youth. ⁶ Vin-a 1275 says having bound a snake round the hips. Dh-p-a i.139 elaborates that there were four poisonous snakes, i.e. one on each hand and foot; also one hung round the neck, one was made into a coil on the head, and one arranged over one shoulder. ⁷ As above, Kd 17.1.6.

“Yes, I am afraid. Who are you?”

“I am Devadatta.”

“If you, honoured sir, are really master Devadatta, please become manifest in your own form.” Then Devadatta, having thrown off the young boy’s form, stood, wearing his outer cloak and (other) robes and carrying his bowl, before Prince Ajātasattu. Then Prince Ajātasattu, greatly pleased with this wonder of psychic power on Devadatta’s part, morning and evening¹ went to wait on him with five hundred chariots, and five hundred offerings of rice cooked in milk were brought as a gift of food.² Then there arose to Devadatta, overcome by gains, honours and fame,³ his mind obsessed by them, some such longing as this: “It is I who will lead the Order of monks.”⁴ But at the very occurrence of this thought Devadatta declined in his psychic power.⁵

Now at that time⁶ Kakudha⁷ the Koliyan,⁸ the venerable Moggallāna the Great’s attendant, had just died and had arisen in a certain mind-made⁹ body, and such was the reinstatement of his individuality¹⁰ that it was like two or three Magadhan village fields,¹¹ yet even with that reinstatement of individuality he injured neither himself nor another. Then Kakudha the young deva approached the venerable Moggallāna the Great; having approached, having greeted the venerable Moggallāna the Great, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, the young deva Kakudha spoke thus to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

“To Devadatta, honoured sir, overcome by gains, honours and fame, his mind obsessed by them, some such longing as this arose: ‘It is I who will lead the Order of monks’. But, honoured sir, at the very

¹ As at SN ii.242. ² Cf. Vin 3.15. ³ As at SN ii.228f. Cf. Lābhasakkāra Saṃyutta, SN ii.225–SN ii.244. ⁴ Cf. Dh-p-a i.139. At DN ii.100 Gotama tells Ānanda that this thought does not occur to the Truth-finder. ⁵ See E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.132ff.

⁶ This incident to the end of Kd 17.2.4 is also told at AN iii.122–AN iii.126. ⁷ See note at GS iii.95. ⁸ Spelt Koliya above. On this tribe see C.H.I. i.177 and B.C. LAW, Tribes in Ancient India, p.290ff. ⁹ manomaya, as again at AN iii.192.

¹⁰ attabhāvapaṭilābha. AN-a iii.277 explains attabhāva by sarīra, body. ¹¹ Sizes of these given at AN-a iii.277.

occurrence of this thought Devadatta declined in his psychic power.” Thus spoke Kakudha the young deva. Having spoken thus, having greeted the venerable Moggallāna the Great, keeping his right side towards him he vanished then and there. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to the Lord:

“Kakudha the Koliyan, Lord, my attendant, has just died and has arisen in a certain mind-made body ... Then Kakudha the young deva approached me ... keeping his right side towards me, he vanished then and there.”

“But, Moggallāna, does Kakudha the young deva so compass your mind with his mind for you to know that whatever Kakudha the young deva says, all that is so and not otherwise?”

“Lord, Kakudha the young deva so compasses my mind with his mind for me to know that whatever Kakudha the young deva says, all that is so and not otherwise.”

“Mind what you say, Moggallāna, mind what you say,¹ Moggallāna. This foolish man² will now betray himself, by himself.

ON THE FIVE TEACHERS

“Moggallāna, these five teachers are found in the world.³ What five?

“This is a case, Moggallāna, when some teacher, not pure in moral habit, pretends ‘I am pure in moral habit,’ and he says, ‘My moral habit is pure, clean, untarnished.’ Disciples know this about him: ‘This worthy teacher, not pure in moral habit pretends ... untarnished.’ But they think: ‘If we should tell this to householders, he would not like it, and how could we carry out⁴ what he would not like? Moreover he consents to (accept)⁵ the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings and medicines for the sick. Whatever anyone¹ shall do, even by that shall he be known.’ Moggallāna, disciples protect such a teacher in regard to moral habit and such a teacher expects protection from disciples in regard to moral habit.

¹ As at MN i.502. ² I.e. Devadatta. ³ Sections Kd 17.2.3, Kd 17.2.4 repeated below Kd 17.3.10. ⁴ samudācareyyāma, explained at AN-a iii.278 as katheyāma, say, speak.

⁵ sammannati, Vin-a 1275 explaining as sammāneti, and AN-a iii.278 as sammānaṃ karoti, he makes or produces honour, i.e. by accepting these gifts.

“And again, Moggallāna, this is a case when some teacher, not pure in mode of livelihood, pretends ... not pure in teaching of dhamma, pretends ... not pure in exposition ... not pure in knowledge and vision, pretends ... Moggallāna, disciples protect such a teacher in regard to knowledge and vision, and such a teacher expects protection from disciples in regard to knowledge and vision. These, Moggallāna, are the five teachers found in the world.

“But I, Moggallāna, am pure in moral habit, I acknowledge that I am pure in moral habit, that my moral habit is pure, clean, untarnished. And disciples do not protect me in regard to moral habit and I do not expect protection from disciples in regard to moral habit. I am pure in mode of livelihood ... I am pure in dhamma teaching ... I am pure in exposition ... I am pure in knowledge and vision. I acknowledge that I am pure in knowledge and vision, that my knowledge and vision are pure, clean, untarnished. And disciples do not protect me in regard to knowledge and vision, and I do not expect protection from disciples in regard to knowledge and vision.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Kosambī for as long as he found suiting, set out on a tour for Rājagaha. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place.² Then several monks approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

“Prince Ajātasattu, Lord, goes morning and evening to wait on ¹ tumo, explained by Vin-a 1275 as so, he, and by AN-a iii.278 as esa ... eso (variant reading so), this one. Cf. tumo at Snp 890, Snp 908. ² Cf. SN ii.242 for this episode down to the end of the simile of the fierce dog.

Devadatta with five hundred chariots, and five hundred offerings of rice cooked in milk are brought as a gift of food.”

“Do not, monks, envy Devadatta’s gains and honours and fame. For as long, monks, as Prince Ajātasattu goes morning and evening to wait on Devadatta with five hundred chariots and (as long as) five hundred offerings of rice cooked in milk are brought as a gift of food, there may be expected for Devadatta decline in skilled mental states, not growth. It is as if, monks, they were to throw¹ a bladder² at a fierce dog’s nose—as that dog, monks, would become much fiercer, even so, monks, for as long as Prince Ajātasattu goes morning and evening ... there may be expected for Devadatta decline in skilled mental states, not growth. Devadatta’s gains, honours and fame³ bring about his own hurt, Devadatta’s gains, honour and fame bring about his destruction. As, monks, a plantain bears fruit to its own hurt, bears fruit to its destruction, even so, monks, do Devadatta’s gains, honours and fame bring about his own hurt, do Devadatta’s gains, honours and fame bring about his destruction. As, monks, a bamboo ... a reed bears fruit to its own hurt ... even so, monks, do Devadatta’s gains, honours and fame bring about ... his destruction. As, monks, a she-mule conceives to her own hurt, conceives to her destruction, even so, monks, do Devadatta’s gains, honours and fame bring about ... his destruction.

“Truly its fruit the plantain does destroy,
Its fruit the bamboo, its fruit the reed;
So honour does destroy the fool,
Just as its embryo the mule.”⁴

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

¹ bhindeyyum is explained at SN-a ii.212 by pakkhipeyyum. ² pitta. See MORRIS, JOURNAL OF THE PALI TEXT SOCIETY 1893, p. 4 and Ud-a 65. SN-a ii.212 explains pitta as that of a bear or a fish. ³ Cf. SN ii.241, AN ii.73 to the end of the verse. ⁴ Quoted SN i.154, Mil 166, Ne 130.

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

ACT OF INFORMING

Now at that time the Lord was sitting down teaching dhamma surrounded by a large company, by a company which included the king.¹ Then Devadatta, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is now old, worn, stricken in years, he has lived his span and is at the close of his life;² Lord, let the Lord now be content to live devoted to abiding in ease here and now,³ let him hand over the Order of monks to me. It is I who will lead the Order of monks.”

“Enough, Devadatta, please do not lead the Order of monks.” And a second time ... And a third time Devadatta spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is now old, worn, stricken in years ... It is I who will lead the Order of monks.”

“I, Devadatta, would not hand over the Order of monks even to Sāriputta and Moggallāna. How then could I to you, a wretched one to be vomited like spittle?”⁴

Then Devadatta, thinking: “The Lord in an assembly which included a king disparaged me by (using) the term, ‘one to be vomited like spittle,’ while he extolled Sāriputta and Moggallāna,” angry, displeased, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

And this was the first time that Devadatta felt malice towards the Lord.

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of Information¹ against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that whereas Devadatta's nature was formerly of one kind, now it is of another kind; and that whatever Devadatta should do by gesture and by voice, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order should be seen but in that only Devadatta should be seen. And thus, monks, should it be carried out: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order carry out an act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha, to the effect that whereas Devadatta's nature was formerly of one kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta should do ... in that only Devadatta should be seen. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is carrying out the (formal) act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha, to the effect that ... in that only Devadatta should be seen. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that ... in that only Devadatta should be seen is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The (formal) act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that ... in that only Devadatta should be seen is carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this'."

¹ Cf. another version of this episode, as far as “the act of information” at Dhpa i.139–Dhp-a i.140. ² Stock, as at Vin 3.2, MN i.82, Snp p.50, Snp p.92. ³ diṭṭhadhammasukhavihāra, as at Vin 1.341. ⁴ Text reads kheḷāpakassa, Vin-a 1275 kheḷāsaka. Vin-a 1275 explains: requisites accruing by means of an evil mode of livelihood should be ejected like spittle by the noble ones. That is why the Lord said “to be vomited like spittle,” kheḷāsaka, (to explain) that he (Devadatta) eats requisites of this nature.

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Sāriputta, saying: "Well then, do you, Sāriputta, inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha."

"Formerly, Lord, I spoke praise of Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: 'Godhi's son is of great psychic power, Godhi's son is of great majesty.' How can I, Lord, inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha?"

"Was not the truth spoken by you, Sāriputta, when you spoke praise of Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: 'Godhi's son is of ... great majesty'?"

¹ pakāsaniyakamma. Vinaya Texts iii.239, n. 2 rightly says "This is not among the regular official acts of the Order as described in Kd 11," but it is wrong to say "it is not referred to by the Dhammapada Commentator" for it is mentioned at Dh-p-a i.140.

“Yes, Lord.”

“Even so, Sāriputta, when you inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha it will be just as true.”

“Very well, Lord,” the venerable Sāriputta answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, let the Order agree for Sāriputta to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of such a kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta should do by gesture and by voice, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order should be seen, but in that only Devadatta should be seen.’ And thus, monks, should Sāriputta be agreed upon: First, Sāriputta should be asked; having been asked, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree for the venerable Sāriputta to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind ... in that only Devadatta should be seen.’ This is the motion. If the agreement upon Sāriputta to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha, saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind ... in that only Devadatta should be seen’ is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The venerable Sāriputta is agreed upon by the Order to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha, saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind ... in that only Devadatta should be seen.’ ... It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

The venerable Sāriputta, (thus) agreed upon, having entered Rājagaha together with several monks, informed against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that: “Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta should do by gesture and by voice, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order should be seen, but in that only Devadatta should be seen.” Those people who were of little faith, not believing, who were of poor intelligence, spoke thus: “These recluses, sons of

Kd 17,3

BD 5,20

Vin 2,19

the Sakyans are jealous, they are jealous of Devadatta's gains and honours." But those people who had faith and were believing, who were wise, intelligent, spoke thus: "This can be no ordinary matter in that the Lord has Devadatta informed against in Rājagaha."

THE STORY OF PRINCE AJĀTASATTU

^{173.4} Then Devadatta approached Prince Ajātasattu; having approached, he spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu: "Formerly,¹ prince, people were long-lived, nowadays they are short-lived, and it is possible that you, while still a prince, might pass away. Well now, do you prince, having slain your father, become king. I, having slain the Lord, will become the Awakened One." And Prince Ajātasattu, thinking: "Now, master Devadatta is of great psychic power, of great majesty; master Devadatta must know (what is right)," having fastened a dagger² against his thigh, at an early hour (although) afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed, entered the (king's) private quarters forcibly. But the chief ministers in attendance in the private quarters saw Prince Ajātasattu at an early hour (although) afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed, entering the (king's) private quarters forcibly. Seeing him, they laid hold of him. These examining him, and having seen the dagger bound against his thigh, spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu: "What is it that you, prince, want to do?"

"I want to slay my father."

"By whom are you being incited?"

"By master Devadatta." Some chief ministers gave this opinion: "The Prince should be slain and Devadatta and all the monks should be slain."³ Some chief ministers gave this opinion: "The monks should not be slain for the monks are not giving offence,⁴ but the Prince should be slain and Devadatta." Some chief ministers gave this opinion: "The Prince should not be slain, nor Devadatta, the monks should not be slain. The king should be told and we will do whatever the king says.”

¹ Quoted DhP-a i.140, DN-a 135. ² potthanikam. As at Vin 1.217, where translated "butcher's knife." ³ Quoted at DN-a 135. ⁴ aparajjhanti, as at Vin 3.162.

“Then these chief ministers, taking Prince Ajātasattu, approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, they told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha. He said: “What opinion, my good men, have the chief ministers formed?”

“Some chief ministers, Sire, gave this opinion ... Some chief ministers gave this opinion ... Some chief ministers gave this opinion: ‘The Prince should not be slain, nor Devadatta, the monks should not be slain. The king should be told and we will do whatever the king says’.”

“What, my good men, can the Awakened One or dhamma or the Order have to do (with this)? Has not the Lord already had Devadatta informed against in Rājagaha to the effect that formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta may do by gesture or by speech, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order is to be seen, but in that only Devadatta should be seen?”

Those chief ministers who had given their opinion thus: “The Prince should be slain and Devadatta and all the monks should be slain,” these he discharged.¹ Those chief ministers who had given their opinion thus: “The monks should not be slain, for the monks do not give any offence, but the prince should be slain and Devadatta,” these he set in lowly positions. Those chief ministers who had given their opinion thus: “The prince should not be slain, nor Devadatta, nor should the monks be slain. The king should be told and we will do whatever the king says,” these he set in high positions. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu:

“Why do you, prince, want to slay me?”

“Sire, I have need of a kingdom.”

“If it be that you, prince, have need of a kingdom, this kingdom is yours,” and he handed over the kingdom to Prince Ajātasattu.

¹ te abhabbe akāsi, he rendered them incapable (of holding an official position).

17.3.6 Then Devadatta approached Prince Ajātasattu¹; having approached, he spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu:

“Your Majesty, command your men so that they deprive the recluse Gotama of life.” Then Prince Ajātasattu commanded his men, saying: “My good men, do whatever master Devadatta says.” Then Devadatta enjoined the men, saying: “Go along, friends, the recluse Gotama is staying at a certain place. Having deprived him of life, come back by a certain road,” and he set two men on that road, saying: “Whatever man comes alone along this road, having deprived him of life, come back by this road,” and having set four men on that road, saying: 5.269 “Whatever couple of men come along by this road, having deprived them of life, come back by this road,” and having set eight men on that road, saying: 2.192 “Whatever four men come along by this road, ... come back by this road,” and having set sixteen men on that road, he said: “Whatever eight men come along by this road, having deprived them of life, come back.”

17.3.7 Then that man who was alone, having grasped a sword and shield, having bound on a bow and quiver,² approached the Lord; having approached, when he was quite near the Lord he stood still, his body quite rigid³ afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed.⁴ The Lord saw that man standing still, his body quite rigid, afraid ... alarmed and seeing him, he spoke thus to that man: “Come, friend, do not be afraid.” Then that man, having put his sword and shield to one side, having laid down his bow and quiver, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined his head to the Lord’s feet, he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, a transgression has overcome me, foolish, misguided, wrong that I was, in that I was coming here with my mind malignant,⁵ my mind on murder.¹ Lord, may the Lord acknowledge for me the transgression as a transgression for the sake of restraint in the future.”

¹ Vinaya Texts iii.243, n. 2 points out that Ajātasattu is not called “king” here, and that therefore the events described in this paragraph took place before he actually became king, and that the paragraph probably stood originally in some other connection. On the other hand, it should be noticed that Devadatta addresses him as mahārāja. ² Stock, as at e.g. AN iii.93–AN iii.94, MN i.86, MN ii.99. ³ patthaddha, as at Thag 1074. Vin-a 1275, says “with his body motionless like a figure modelled in clay.” ⁴ As at Kd 17.1.6. ⁵ duṭṭhacitta, as at MN iii.65.

“Truly, friend, a transgression overcame you, foolish, misguided, wrong that you were, in that you were coming here, with your mind malignant, your mind on murder. But if you, friend, having seen the transgression as a transgression, confess according to the rule, we acknowledge it for you; for friend in the discipline of the noble, this is growth: whoever having seen a transgression as a transgression, confesses according to the rule, he attains restraint in the future.”²

Then the Lord talked a progressive talk³ to this man, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... sorrow, its uprising, stopping, the Way. Just as a clean cloth without black specks will take a dye easily, even so (as he was sitting) on that very seat did dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arise to that man, that “whatever is of a nature to arise, all that is of a nature to stop.” Then that man⁴ as one who has seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the Teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Excellent, Lord: Lord, it is excellent. It is as if one were to set upright what has been upset ... thus is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. So I, Lord, am going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

Then the Lord spoke thus to that man: “Do not you, friend, go by that road. Go by this road,” and he sent him off by another road.

Then those two men, thinking: ‘Why is that man who is alone so slow in coming?’ going along to meet him saw the Lord sitting at the root of a tree. Seeing him, they approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord talked a progressive talk to these ... to full confidence in the Teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, ¹ vadhakacitta, as at DN iii.72. ² Cf. Vin 4.18–Vin 4.19, etc. ³ As at Vin 1.15. ⁴ As at Vin 1.12.

BD 5.27

Vin 2.19

Kd 17.3

Lord ... May the Lord accept us as lay-followers going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

Then the Lord spoke thus to these men: “Do not you, friends, go by that road. Go by this road,” and he sent them off by another road. Then those four men, thinking: ‘Why are these two men so slow in coming?’ ... and he sent them off by another road. Then those eight men, thinking: ‘Why are these four men so slow in coming?’ ... and he sent them off by another road. Then those sixteen men, thinking: ‘Why are these eight men so slow in coming?’ ... “May the Lord receive us as lay-followers going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”¹

Then that one man approached Devadatta²; having approached, he spoke thus to Devadatta: “Honoured sir, I am not able to deprive that Lord of life, that Lord is of great psychic power, of great might.”

“All right, friend, do not you deprive the recluse Gotama of life. I myself will deprive the recluse Gotama of life.”

SHEDDING BLOOD

Now at that time the Lord was pacing up and down in the shade³ of Mount Vulture Peak. Then Devadatta, having climbed Mount Vulture Peak, hurled down a great stone, thinking: “With this I will deprive the recluse Gotama of life.” But two mountain peaks, having met, crushed that stone, and (only) a fragment of it, having fallen down, drew blood on the Lord’s foot.⁴ Then the Lord, having looked upwards, spoke thus to Devadatta: “You have produced great demerit, foolish man, in that you, with your mind malignant, your mind on murder, drew the Truth-finder’s blood.” Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “This, monks, is the first deed whose fruit comes with no delay⁵ accumulated by Devadatta since he, with his mind malignant, his mind on murder, drew the Truth-finder’s blood.”

¹ A version noticed by Oldenberg (Vin.2.324) adds that “the Lord spoke thus to those men ... sent them off by another road.” ² From here, cf. Ja v.333ff. ³ Cf. Vin 1.180. ⁴ An echo of widespread folk-tradition, where the Hero, on his quest, passes with all speed through clashing rocks, sometimes sustaining an injury.

⁵ ānantarikamma. Cf. Vism 177.

Monks heard: “It is said that Devadatta schemed to murder the Lord,” and so these monks paced up and down on every side of the Lord’s dwelling-place doing their studies together with a loud noise, with a great noise for the protection, defence and warding of the Lord. The Lord heard the loud noise, the great noise, the noise of studying, and hearing it, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

“What on earth, Ānanda, is this loud noise, this great noise, this noise of studying?”

“Lord, the monks heard that Devadatta schemed to murder the Lord, and so, Lord, these monks are pacing up and down ... for the protection, defence and warding of the Lord. This, Lord, is the loud noise, the great noise, the noise of studying.”

“Well now, Ānanda, address these monks in my name, saying: “The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones.””

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered the Lord in assent, approached those monks; having approached, he spoke thus to those monks: “The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones.”

“Very well, your reverence,” and these monks, having answered the venerable Ānanda in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord spoke thus to these monks as they were sitting down at a respectful distance:

“This is impossible, monks, it cannot come to pass that anyone could deprive a Truth-finder of life by aggression; monks, Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack.¹ Monks, there are these five teachers found in the world. What five? ...² and I do not expect protection from disciples in respect of knowledge and vision. This is impossible, monks, it cannot come to pass that anyone could deprive a Truth-finder of life by aggression; monks, Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack. Go, monks, to your own dwelling-places³; Truth-finders, monks, do not need to be protected.”

¹ anupakkama, “not by attack (from external enemies),” as at Critical Pali Dictionary.

² As at Kd 17.2.3, Kd 17.2.4 (to end). Read above “monks” instead of “Moggallāna.”

³ yathāvihāraṃ, as at Vin 4.15.

SENDING OUT NĀLĀGIRI

73.11 Now at that time there was a fierce elephant in Rājagaha, a man-slayer, called Nālāgiri. Then Devadatta, having entered Rājagaha, having gone to the elephant stable, spoke thus to the mahouts: “We, my good fellows, are relations of the king. We are competent to put in a high position one occupying a lowly position and to bring about an increase in food and wages. Well now, good fellows, when the recluse Gotama is coming along this carriage road,¹ then, having let loose this elephant, Nālāgiri, bring him down this carriage road.”

“Very well, honoured sir,” these mahouts answered Devadatta in assent.

5-273
2.195 Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood together with several monks. Then the Lord went along that carriage road. Then those mahouts saw the Lord coming along that carriage-road; seeing him, having let loose the elephant Nālāgiri, they brought him down that carriage-road. The elephant Nālāgiri saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him, having lifted up his trunk, he rushed towards the Lord, his ears and tail erect. Those monks saw the elephant Nālāgiri coming in the distance; seeing him, they spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, this elephant Nālāgiri, coming along this carriage-road, is a fierce man-slayer; Lord, let the Lord turn back, let the well-farer turn back.”

“Wait, monks, do not be afraid; this is impossible, monks, it cannot come to pass that anyone should deprive a Truth-finder of life by aggression; monks, Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack.” And a second time ... And a third time these monks spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this elephant Nālāgiri, ... let the well-farer turn back.”

“Wait, monks, ... Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack.”

73.12
¹ racchā. See BD 3.268, n. 1.

Now at that time people, having mounted up on to the long houses and the curved houses and the roofs, waited there. Those people who were of little faith, not believing, who were of poor intelligence,¹ these spoke thus: “This great recluse is indeed lovely; he will be hurt by the bull elephant.”² But those people who had faith and were believing, who were wise and intelligent, these spoke thus: “Soon, good sirs, the bull-elephant will come into conflict with the elephant (among men).”

Then the Lord suffused the elephant Nālāgiri with loving-kindness of mind. Then the elephant Nālāgiri, suffused by the Lord with loving-kindness of mind, having put down his trunk, approached the Lord; having approached, he stood in front of the Lord. Then the Lord, stroking the elephant Nālāgiri’s forehead with his right hand, addressed the elephant Nālāgiri with verses:

“Do not, elephant,³ strike the elephant (among men), for painful, elephant, is the striking of the elephant (among men),
For there is no good bourn, elephant,⁴ for a slayer of the elephant (among men) when he is hence beyond.

“Be not proud,⁵ be not wanton,⁶ for the wanton reach not a good bourn;
Only that should you do by which you will go to a good bourn.”

Then the elephant Nālāgiri, having taken the dust of the Lord’s feet with his trunk, having scattered it over his head, moved back bowing while he gazed upon the Lord. Then the elephant Nālāgiri, having returned to the elephant stable, stood in his own place; and it was in this way that the elephant Nālāgiri became tamed. Now at that time people sang this verse:

¹ As at Kd 173.3. ² nāga. Cf. the matted hair ascetics’ speech at Kd 1.15.4. ³ kuñjara. Verses also at Ja v.336. ⁴ kuñjara. Verses also at Ja v.336. ⁵ mada ... pamāda, also at Snp 218. ⁶ mada ... pamāda, also at Snp 218.

“Some are tamed by stick, by goads and whips.
The elephant was tamed by the great seer without a stick, without a weapon.”¹

^{73,13} People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How evil is this Devadatta, how inauspicious,² in that he tried to murder the recluse Gotama who is of such great psychic power, of such great might,” and Devadatta’s gains and honours declined; the Lord’s gains and honours increased.

ON THE REQUEST FOR THE FIVE POINTS

Now at that time Devadatta, gains and honours lost,³ ate with his friends, having asked and asked among households. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans eat, having asked and asked among households? Who is not fond of well-cooked things?
Who does not like sweet things?”

^{5,275} Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can Devadatta eat with his friends, having asked and asked among households?”
They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Devadatta, ate with your friends, having asked and asked among households?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well now, monks, I will lay down for monks the eating by a triad

¹ Cf. MN ii.105, Thag 878. ² alakkhika. Vin-a 1275-6 says “here it means he does not discriminate, he does not know. He does not know ‘I am doing an evil deed’.” Cf. version of Vin-a given at Vinaya Texts iii.250, n. 1. In interpreting the word like the corresponding Sanskrit alakaṃika, as does Vinaya Texts iii, I prefer “inauspicious, unlucky,” to their “wretched,” with the sense of its being unlucky for donors to give alms to Devadatta. ³ Down to “It is true, Lord” = Bu-Pc 32 where this episode is used to lead up to the framing of a rule against a group-meal, see BD 2.306f. for notes.

(of monks)¹ among households—founded on three reasons:² for the restraint of evil-minded³ individuals; for the living in comfort⁴ of well behaved monks⁵ lest those of evil desires should split the Order by means of a faction;⁶ out of compassion for families.⁷ In eating a group meal, one should be dealt with according to the rule.”⁸

Then Devadatta⁹ approached Kokālika,⁹ Kaṭamorakatissaka, the son of the lady Khaṇḍā, and Samuddadatta, having approached, he spoke thus to Kokālika, Kaṭamorakatissaka, the son of the lady Khaṇḍā, and Samuddadatta: “Come, we, your reverences, will make a schism in the recluse Gotama’s Order, a breaking of the concord.” When he had spoken thus, Kokālika spoke thus to Devadatta:

“But, your reverence, the recluse Gotama is of great psychic power, ¹ tikabhajana, a meal to be eaten by three people, so Vin-a 1276. See also SN-a ii.178. Just as gaṇabhajana is a group-meal, so tikabhajana is a three-party meal. It is apparently meant that a “group” is larger than three monks, since at the end of Kd 173.13 it is specially said that one who eats a group-meal must be treated according to the rule. On gaṇabhajana see BD 2.307, n. 1. ² The subject of a question put by Kassapa to Ānanda at SN ii.218. ³ SN-a ii.178, AN-a ii.163 explain dummaṅkūnaṃ by dussīla, bad moral habit. ⁴ phāsuvihāra, cf. Vin 1.92, etc. ⁵ This and the first reason are among the ten reasons sometimes ascribed to the Lord for laying down a rule of training, as at Vin 3.21 and other Vinaya passages. Cf. also AN i.99. ⁶ SN-a ii.178 explains that as Devadatta and his friends split the Order by means of their evil desires, so too others of evil desires, on account of their bond as a group, having begged among families, were eating having made the group increase; so it was said “Lest they split the Order by means of that faction.” ⁷ AN i.100 has gihīnaṃ anukampāya pāpicchānaṃ pakkhupachedāya, translated at GS i.84 “out of compassion for householders and to uproot the factions of the evilly disposed.” If “the idea is here, of course, lest any particular layman should be burdened by providing for many bhikkhus,” as stated at Vinaya Texts iii.251, n. 3, it is the exact opposite of the opinion given at SN-a ii.178 for allowing three monks to eat together among families. For this is that “having carried out the Observance and the Invitation in the Order of monks, and (the monks) being all together, people having given (them) meals by ticket and so on become bound for heaven”. So the compassion for families is in allowing them scope to give and thereby to acquire merit. AN-a ii.164 less cogently says: “A rule of training laid down when householders complain is called “laid down out of compassion for householders.” ⁸ I.e. to the rule laid down in Bu-Pc 32. ⁹ Almost word for word the same as Bu-Ss 10.1.1, Bu-Ss 10.1.2 and part of Bu-Ss 10.1.3. See BD 1.296–299 for footnotes.

of great might. How can we make a schism in the recluse Gotama's Order, a breaking of the concord?"

"Come, we, your reverence, having approached the recluse Gotama, will ask for five items, saying: 'Lord, the Lord in many a figure speaks in praise of desiring little, of being contented, of expunging (evil), of being punctilious, of what is gracious, of decrease (in the obstructions), of putting forth energy. Lord, these five items are in many a way conducive to desiring little, to contentment, to expunging (evil), to being punctilious, to what is gracious, to decrease (in the obstructions), to putting forth energy.

1. It were good, Lord, if the monks, for as long as life lasted, might be forest-dwellers; whoever should betake himself to the neighbourhood of a village, sin would besmirch him.
2. For as long as life lasts, let them be beggars for alms; whoever should accept an invitation, sin would besmirch him.
3. For as long as life lasts, let them be rag-robe wearers; whoever should accept a robe given by a householder, sin would besmirch him.
4. For as long as life lasts, let them live at the root of a tree; whoever should go under cover, sin would besmirch him.
5. For as long as life lasts, let them not eat fish and flesh; whoever should eat fish and flesh, sin would besmirch him.'

The recluse Gotama will not allow these. Then we will win over the people by means of these five items."

"It is possible, your reverence, with these five items, to make a schism in the recluse Gotama's Order, a breaking of the concord. For, your reverence, people esteem austerity."

Then Devadatta together with his friends approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Devadatta spoke thus to the Lord:

"Lord, the Lord in many a figure speaks in praise of desiring little ... whoever should eat fish and flesh, sin would besmirch him."

“Enough, Devadatta,” he said. “Whoever wishes, let him be a forest-dweller; whoever wishes, let him stay in the neighbourhood of a village; whoever wishes, let him be a beggar for alms; whoever wishes, let him accept an invitation; whoever wishes, let him be a rag-robe wearer; whoever wishes, let him accept a householder’s robes. For eight months, Devadatta, lodging at the root of a tree is permitted by me. Fish and flesh are pure in respect of three points: if they are not seen, heard or suspected (to have been killed on purpose for him).”¹

Then Devadatta, thinking: ‘The Lord does not permit these five items,’ joyful, elated, rising from his seat with his friends, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then Devadatta, having entered Rājagaha with his friends, taught the people by means of the five items, saying: “We, friends, having approached the recluse Gotama, asked for five items, saying: ‘Lord, the Lord in many a figure speaks in praise of desiring little ... whoever should eat fish and flesh, sin would besmirch him’. The recluse Gotama does not allow these five items, but we live undertaking these five items.”

Those people who were there of little faith, not believing, who were of poor intelligence, these spoke thus: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are punctilious, are expungers (of evil), but the recluse Gotama is for abundance and strives after abundance.” But those people who had faith and were believing, who were wise and intelligent, these looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this Devadatta go forward with a schism in the Lord’s Order, with a breaking of the concord?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying:

“How can this Devadatta go forward with a schism in the Order, a breaking of the concord?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said that you, Devadatta, went forward with a schism in the Order, a breaking of the concord?”

¹ Cf. Vin 1.238 (BD 4.325).

“It is true, Lord.”

“Enough, Devadatta, do not let there be a schism in the Order, for a schism in the Order is a serious matter,¹ Devadatta. Whoever, Devadatta, splits an Order that is united, he sets up demerit that endures for an aeon;² he is boiled in hell for an aeon; but whoever, Devadatta, unites an Order that is split, he sets up sublime³ merit, he rejoices in heaven for an aeon. Enough, Devadatta, do not let there be a schism in the Order, for a schism in the Order is a serious matter, Devadatta.”

Then the venerable Ānanda,⁴ having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. Devadatta saw the venerable Ānanda walking in Rājagaha for almsfood; seeing him, he approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Now from this day forth will I, reverend Ānanda, carry out Observance both in contradistinction to⁵ the Lord and in contradistinction to the Order of monks and will (so) carry out (formal) acts of the Order.”⁶ Then the venerable Ānanda, having walked in Rājagaha for almsfood, on returning from the almshouse, after his meal, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

“Just now, Lord, I, having dressed in the morning, taking my bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. Devadatta, Lord, saw me walking in Rājagaha for almsfood; seeing me, he came up; having come up, he spoke thus to me: ‘Now from this day forth will I ... (so) carry out (formal) acts of the Order.’ Today, Lord, Devadatta will split the Order.”⁷

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

¹ Quoted at Vin 1.150. ² kappaṭṭhika. But Vin-a 1276 says that kappa is āyukappa, “for the duration of life.” ³ brahma=seṭṭha, Vin-a 1276. ⁴ This episode also appears at Ud v.8 and Dh-p-a iii.154. ⁵ aññatr’eva. ⁶ saṅghakammaṇi. Ud v.8 reads -kammāni. ⁷ Udāna adding “and will carry out Observance and (formal) acts of the Order.”

“Easy is good for the good, good for the evil is hard, Evil for the evil is easy, evil for the noble ones is hard.”¹

Told is the Second Portion for Repeating

THIRD RECITATION SECTION

ON SCHISM IN THE ORDER

Then Devadatta on that Observance day rising from his seat gave out voting tickets,² saying: “We, your reverences, having approached the recluse Gotama, asked for five items.³ ... The recluse Gotama does not allow these, but we live undertaking these five items. If these five items are pleasing to the venerable ones, let each one take a voting ticket.”

Now at that time as many as five hundred monks, Vajjis of Vesālī, were newly ordained and were not properly versed,⁴ and these, thinking: “This is the rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction,” took voting tickets. Then Devadatta, having split the Order, set out for Gayā Head taking as many as the five hundred monks. Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna⁵ approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “Devadatta, Lord, having split the Order, is setting out for Gayā Head with as many as five hundred monks.”

“Can there not be for you, Sāriputta and Moggallāna,⁶ compassion for these newly ordained monks? Go you along, Sāriputta and Moggallāna, before these monks fall into trouble and distress.”

¹ Cf. Dhṛp 163, ascribed by Dhṛp-a iii.154 to this occasion. ² salāka. Method of appointing distributor of voting tickets laid down at Kd 14.9–Kd 14.10. On process to be followed when voting by ticket see Kd 14.14.26. This incident is briefly recounted at Dhṛp-a i.142–Dhṛp-a i.143. ³ As at Kd 17.3.14, Kd 17.3.15. ⁴ apakataññuno, or, did not know what had been appointed; cf. Vin 4.112, Vin 4.143. ⁵ Sāriputtamoggallānā. “The venerable” is not used in such cases. ⁶ Sāriputtā.

5.280 “Very well, Lord,” and Sāriputta and Moggallāna having answered the Lord in assent, rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, keeping their right sides towards him, approached Gayā Head. Now at that time a certain monk was standing weeping not far from the Lord. Then the Lord spoke thus to that monk: “Why are you, monk, weeping?”

“Even those, Lord, who are the Lord’s chief disciples—Sāriputta and Moggallāna—even these are going to Devadatta approving of Devadatta’s dhamma.”

“This is not possible, monk, it cannot come to pass that Sāriputta and Moggallāna should approve Devadatta’s dhamma. They have merely gone so as to convince the monks.”¹

17.4.2
2.200 Now at that time Devadatta, surrounded by the large company, was teaching dhamma sitting down. Then Devadatta saw Sāriputta and Moggallāna coming in the distance; seeing them, he addressed the monks, saying: “You see, monks, how well taught is dhamma by me that even these who are the recluse Gotama’s chief disciples—Sāriputta and Moggallāna—that even these are coming to me approving of my dhamma.” When he had spoken thus Kokālika spoke thus to Devadatta: “Reverend Devadatta, do not put your trust in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have evil desires and are under the influence of evil desires.”²

“Enough, your reverence, let us give a welcome to these since they approve of my dhamma.” The Devadatta invited the venerable Sāriputta to half his seat, saying: “Come, reverend Sāriputta, sit here.”

“No, your reverence,” and the venerable Sāriputta, having taken another seat, sat down at a respectful distance; and the venerable Moggallāna too, having taken another seat, sat down at a respectful distance. Then Devadatta, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the monks far into the night with talk on dhamma, asked¹ the venerable Sāriputta, saying:

¹ bhikkhusaññatiyā. Cf. same expression at Kd 22.2.8. Cf. gihisañatti at SN i.199, translated at KS i.254 “imparting matters to the laity”; and explanation at SN-a i.292, KS i.254, n. 1. Also cf. AN i.75. ² Quoted at Dhpa-a i.143.

“The Order of monks, reverend Sāriputta, is without sloth or drowsiness; may a talk on dhamma occur to² you, reverend Sāriputta, for the monks. My back aches and I will stretch it.”³

“Very well, your reverence,” the venerable Sāriputta answered Devadatta in assent. Then Devadatta, having laid down his outer cloak folded in four, lay down to sleep on his right side,⁴ and as he was tired, forgetful and inattentive, he fell asleep that very moment.

Then the venerable Sāriputta exhorted, instructed the monks with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of thought-reading;⁵ the venerable Moggallāna exhorted, instructed the monks with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of psychic power. Then as the monks were being exhorted, instructed by the venerable Sāriputta with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of thought-reading; were being exhorted, instructed by the venerable Moggallāna with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of psychic power, dhamma vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them, that ‘whatever is of the nature to uprise all that is of the nature to stop.’ Then the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying: “We are going, your reverences, to the Lord. Whoever approves of this Lord’s dhamma, let him come along.” Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna, taking those five hundred monks, approached the Bamboo Grove. Then Kokālika wakened Devadatta, saying: “Wake up,⁶ reverend Devadatta, those monks have been led away by Sāriputta and Moggallāna. Now, did I not say to you, reverend Devadatta, ‘Reverend Devadatta, do not put your trust in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have evil desires and are under the influence of evil desires’?” Then at that ¹ ajjhesi, as at Kd 5.13.9. ² paṭibhātu, as at Kd 5.13.9 and see note at BD 4.264, n. 1.

³ Cf. MN i.354, where these same words are ascribed to Gotama. ⁴ Cf. MN i.354. But here Gotama lies down mindful and circumspect. ⁵ Among the three “wonders” mentioned at AN i.170–AN i.171, DN i.212–DN i.214 and explained at both passages. Cf. AN v.327. ⁶ Quoted at Dhp-a i.143.

very place hot blood issued from Devadatta's mouth.¹

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: "It were well, Lord, if the monks who were partisans of the schismatics could be ordained again."

"Be careful, Sāriputta, about any reordination of monks who were partisans of the schismatics. But do you, Sāriputta, make the monks who were partisans of the schismatics confess a grave offence. But what line of conduct, Sāriputta, did Devadatta follow in regard to you?"

"Even, Lord, as the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted monks with dhamma-talk far into the night, he asked me: 'The Order of monks, Sāriputta, is without sloth or drowsiness, may a talk on dhamma occur to you, Sāriputta, for the monks. My back aches and I will stretch it.' Just this, Lord, was the line of conduct which Devadatta followed."

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: "Formerly,² monks, there was a great pond in a stretch of forest; bull elephants lived near it and these, having plunged into that pond,³ having tugged out the lotus fibres and stalks with their trunks, having washed them well, and having chewed them free of mud, swallowed them. Thus there came to be for them both beauty and strength, and not for this reason did they incur death or suffering like unto death. But, monks, among these great bull elephants were young elephant calves and these, imitating them, having plunged into that pond, having tugged out the lotus fibres and stalks with their trunks, but not having washed them well, having chewed them with the mud, swallowed them. Thus there came to be for them neither beauty nor strength, and for this reason they incurred death or suffering like unto death. Likewise, monks, Devadatta will die, a wretched creature, copying me.

¹ The same is recorded of Sañjaya at Kd 1.24.3. ² As at SN ii.269. ³ Cf. Vin 1.214-Vin 1.215.

“While the great beast¹ is shaking the earth, grazing on lotus stalks, keeping alert among the waters—

Copying me, the wretched creature will die, like a calf having eaten mire.

“Monks, a monk who is possessed of eight qualities is fit to go a message.² What are the eight? Herein, monks, a monk is a hearer and one who makes others hear and a learner and an instructor and a knower and an expounder and one skilled in (recognising) conformity and non-conformity³ and not a maker of quarrels. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities he is fit to go a message. Monks, because he is possessed of these eight qualities, Sāriputta is fit to go a message. What are the eight? Herein, monks, Sāriputta is a learner ... and not a maker of quarrels. Monks, because Sāriputta is possessed of these eight qualities he is fit to go a message.

“Who, to some high assembled council come,
Wavers not, nor in discourse fails, nor hides
The teaching, nor speaks⁴ in doubtfulness,⁵
And who, being questioned, is not agitated—
A monk like this is fit to go a message.

“Monks, Devadatta,⁶ overcome and his mind controlled by eight

¹ mahāvarāha, which as pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.261, n. 1 can also mean a boar.

² dūteyyaṃ gantum arahati. This paragraph recurs at AN iv.196. Cf. the qualities of a messenger, dūta, at Manu 7.63ff. Also see DN i.5, DN i.8 where it is held by some ordinary people that Gotama abstains from sending messages and going on them.

³ I copy the note at GS iv.135: sahitāsahita; cf. DN i.8, AN ii.138; Dialogues of the Buddha i.14, n. 6. Some of these terms recur at DN i.56. Cf. S.B.E. xxi, p. 352f. for what may be the Mahāyāna version of this sutta. ⁴ akkhāti. AN iv.196 reads bhaṇāti. ⁵ asandiddho. AN iv.196 reads asandiṭṭhan, but AN-a iv.106 has asandiddham which it glosses as vigatasamsayam, without doubts. Vin-a 1276 reads asandiṭṭho ca akkhāti ti nissandeho hutvā akkhātā anusandhivasena yojetvā. At Mil 295 sandeha occurs, meaning “doubt.” At DN-a 282 sandiddha occurs with variant reading sandiṭṭha. See GS iv.135, n. 4.

⁶ Down to “thus it is that you, monks, should train” = AN iv.160–AN iv.161.

wrong conditions,¹ is doomed to the Downfall,² to Niraya Hell,³ staying there for an aeon, incurable.⁴ What eight?

1. Devadatta, monks, overcome and his mind controlled by gain⁵ is doomed to the Downfall ... incurable.
2. Devadatta, monks, overcome and his mind controlled by lack of gain ...
3. ... by fame ...
4. ... by lack of fame ...
5. ... by honours ...
6. ... by lack-of honours ...
7. ... by evil desire ...
8. ... by evil friendship is doomed to the Downfall ... incurable.

Monks, Devadatta, overcome and his mind controlled by these eight wrong conditions is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, staying there for an aeon, incurable.

“Monks, it is well that a monk should live constantly overcoming gain⁶ that has arisen, lack of gain that has arisen, fame that has arisen, lack of fame that has arisen, honours that have arisen, lack of honours that has arisen, evil desire that has arisen, evil friendship that has arisen. And why, monks, for what good purpose should a monk live constantly overcoming gain ... evil friendship that has arisen? Monks, if a monk live not constantly overcoming gain that has arisen, the cankers, that are destructive and consuming,⁷ may arise, but if he lives constantly overcoming gain that has arisen, then it follows that the cankers, that are destructive and consuming, will not be in him ... if he lives constantly overcoming evil friendship that has arisen, then it follows that the cankers, destructive and consuming, will not be in him.

¹ asaddhammehi. See Vinaya Texts iii.262, n. 2. ² āpāyika nerayika. See Vinaya Texts iii.262, n. 3. ³ āpāyika nerayika. See Vinaya Texts iii.262, n. 3. ⁴ This quartet of words occurs at AN iii.402, AN iv.160, MN i.393 also in connection with Devadatta. Vin-a 1276 says “now it is not possible to cure him even with a thousand Buddhas.”

⁵ Gain, lack of gain, fame, lack of fame are four of the eight worldly conditions mentioned at DN iii.260, AN ii.188, AN iv.157. ⁶ Also see DN i.8 where an ordinary man would say that Gotama abstains from avariciously adding gain to gain, or benefit to benefit. ⁷ As at AN ii.197; MN i.9.

“It is for this good purpose, monks, that a monk should live constantly overcoming gain that has arisen ... evil friendship that has arisen. Wherefore, monks, saying, ‘We will live constantly overcoming gain that has arisen ... evil friendship that has arisen’—thus it is that you, monks, should train.¹

“Monks, Devadatta,² overcome and his mind controlled by three wrong conditions, is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, staying there for an aeon, incurable. What three? Evil desire, evil friendship, the coming to a halt midway in his career because his special attainments are of trifling value.³ Monks, a monk who is overcome ... by these three wrong conditions is ... incurable.

“Never⁴ let anyone of evil desires arise in the world;
And know it by this: as the bourn of those of evil desires.
Known as ‘sage,’⁵ held as ‘one who made the self become,’

Devadatta stood shining as with fame—I heard tell.

“He, falling into recklessness,⁶ assailing the Truth-finder,⁷ Attained Avīci Hell,⁸ four-doored, frightful.
For he who would injure one without hatred, not doing an evil deed—
That evil touches only him of mind of hate, contemptuous.⁹

¹ Version at AN iv.160–1 stops here. ² Rest of this paragraph and the whole of the next (the verses) given also at It BD 5.85ff. ³ Cf. AN v.157, AN v.164, DN ii.78.

⁴ These verses occur also at It p.85–It p.86. See Woodward’s translation and notes at Minor Anthologies ii.p.177–178. ⁵ Cf. SN i.65. ⁶ so pamādaṃ anuciṇṇo. Iti-a ii.100–Iti-a ii.101 says “Devadatta, saying ‘I am the awakened one,’ and so on, not knowing his own measure (attano pamāṇaṃ ajānitvā)” falling into recklessness (or perhaps ‘error,’ pamādaṃ āpajjanto) as to himself as an awakened one, said, “Now I will become an awakened one, I will lead the Order of monks.” ⁷ āsajja taṃ (or naṃ) tathāgataṃ. Text reads āsajjanaṃ, but Sinhalese and Siamese editions have āsajja taṃ. Iti-a ii.101 explains as āsādetvā viheṭhetvā, having assailed (insulted, offended), having annoyed. ⁸ Described at AN i.141. ⁹ This resembles Dhp 125.

“Who should think to pollute the sea with pot of poison—
He would not pollute it with that, for sublime¹ is the great ocean.

So he who with abuse² afflicts the Truth-finder Who has rightly gone, his mind tranquil—on him the abuse has no effect.

“A wise man should make a friend of such a one and follow him,
A monk following the way of him³ should achieve destruction of ill.”

QUESTIONS OF UPĀLI

^{175.1} Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord, having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, as to the words: Dissension in an Order,⁴ dissension in an Order—to what extent, Lord, is there dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order? And then to what extent is there dissension in an Order as well as schism in an Order?”

^{5,286}

“If, Upāli, there is one on one side⁵ and two on another⁶ and if a fourth⁷ speaks out⁸ and offers a voting ticket, saying: ‘This is the rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, take this (voting ticket), approve of this'—this, Upāli, is dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order.

¹ Reading bhesmā with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, Vin-a 1277 and Iti-a ii.101, instead of text’s bhasmā and It tasmā. Bhesmā means awful, terrible, and hence may be taken as sublime. ² vādena. Iti-a ii.101 explains by dosena, anger, hatred. ³ yassa maggānugo bhikkhu. ⁴ saṅgharāji. Cf. Vin 4.37, Vin 4.128, Vin 4.153, Vin 4.217, Vb-a 428, and DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.193ff. Other expressions for differences in the Order occur at e.g. Vin 1.339. There is also cakkabheda, “breaking of the concord,” as at Vin 3.171, and above Kd 17.3.14. ⁵ Vin-a 1277, “if there is one on the side (or in the faction or party) of dhamma-speakers.” ⁶ Vin-a 1277, “on the side of non-dhamma speakers.” ⁷ Vin-a 1277, “if there is a fourth, a non-dhamma speaker, who thinks ‘I will split the Order’.” ⁸ anussāveti, not here I think in the technical sense of making a proclamation. Vin-a 1277 says, “fawning, he announces, sāveti.”

“If, Upāli, there are two on one side and two on another and if a fifth speaks out ... two on one side and three on another and if a sixth speaks out ... three on one side and three on another and if a seventh speaks out ... three on one side and four on another and if an eighth speaks out and offers a voting ticket, saying: ‘This is the rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, take this (voting ticket), approve of this’—this, Upāli, is dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order.

“If, Upāli, there are four on one side and four on another and a ninth speaks out ... this, Upāli, is dissension in an Order as well as schism in an Order. Dissension in an Order, Upāli, as well as schism in an Order is (due to there being) nine or more than nine.¹ Upāli, a nun does not split an Order even if she goes forward with a schism² ... a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... a lay-follower ... a woman lay-follower does not split an Order even if she goes forward with a schism. Only a regular monk, Upāli, belonging to the same communion, staying within the same boundary, splits an Order.”

“Lord, as to the words:³ Schism in an Order, schism in an Order—to what extent, Lord, can an Order become split?”

“As to this, Upāli, monks explain non-dhamma as dhamma, they explain dhamma as non-dhamma, they explain non-discipline as discipline, they explain discipline as non-discipline, they explain what was not spoken, not uttered by the Truth-finder as spoken, uttered by the Truth-finder, they explain what was spoken, uttered by the Truth-finder as not spoken, not uttered by the Truth-finder, they explain what was not practised by the Truth-finder as practised by the Truth-finder, they explain what was practised by the Truth-finder as not practised by the Truth-finder, they explain what was not laid down by the Truth-finder as laid down by the Truth-finder, they explain what was laid down by the Truth-finder as not laid down by the Truth-finder, they explain what is no offence as an offence, they explain an offence as no offence, they explain a slight offence as a serious offence, they explain a serious offence as a slight offence, they explain an offence that can be done away with as an offence that cannot be done away with, they explain an offence that cannot be done away with as an offence that can be done away with, they explain a bad offence as not a bad offence, they explain not a bad offence as a bad offence.¹ These, in regard to these eighteen points draw away and separate (a company),² they carry out a separate³ Observance, they carry out a separate Invitation, they carry out a separate (formal) act of the Order. To this extent, Upāli, does an Order become split.”

¹ Thus for a schism to occur at least nine monks must break off from the main body of the Order. ² Cf. Vin 1.151. ³ Cf. AN v.73, AN v.75.

“Lord, as to the words:⁴ Harmony in an Order, harmony in an Order—to what extent, Lord, does an Order come to be harmonious?”

“As to this, Upāli, monks explain non-dhamma as non-dhamma, they explain dhamma as dhamma ... they explain not a bad offence as not a bad offence. These, in regard to these eighteen points, do not draw away, do not separate (a company), they do not carry out a separate Observance, they do not carry out a separate Invitation, they do not carry out a separate (formal) act of the Order. To this extent, Upāli, an Order comes to be harmonious.”

“But, Lord,⁵ having split⁶ an Order that was harmonious, what does he set up?”

“Now, Upāli, having split an Order that was harmonious, he sets up demerit that endures for an aeon and he is boiled in hell for an aeon.”⁷

“A schismatic in the Order, doomed to the Downfall,

¹ As at Kd 10.5.4, Kd 10.5.5; Kd 14.14.2, Cf. AN i.19–AN i.20. ² Oldenberg’s text reads apakāsanti avapakāsanti, which Vin-a 1280 interprets: they draw over a company, extract it (vijaṭenti) and set it up (ussādentī) on one side. They make it widely known that they are separated. AN v.74, AN v.75 reads avakassanti vavakassanti (with variant reading). Cf. AN iii.145. ³ āveṇi. Vin-a 1280 gives visuṇi. ⁴ Cf. AN v.74, AN v.76. ⁵ Cf. AN v.75. ⁶ bhinditvā. AN v.75 reads bhetvā with variant readings chetvā, bhinditvā. ⁷ Cf. Kd 17.3.16 for many of these expressions.

to Niraya Hell for an aeon,
To disharmony prone,
standing on non-dhamma,
falls away from peace from bondage.
Having split an harmonious Order, he boils for an aeon in hell.”¹

“But, Lord,² having united an Order that was split, what does he set up?”

“Now, Upāli, having united an Order that was split, he sets up sublime merit and he rejoices in heaven for an aeon.
Blessed is harmony for an Order, and the friend of those who are harmonious,

“To harmony prone,
standing on dhamma,
falls not away from peace from bondage.
Making an Order harmonious, he rejoices for an aeon in heaven.”³

“Now, could it not be, Lord, that a schismatic in the Order is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, remaining there for an aeon, incurable?”

“It could be, Upāli, that a schismatic in the Order is doomed to the Downfall ... incurable.”

“But could it be, Lord, that a schismatic in the Order is not doomed to the Downfall, not to Niraya Hell, not remaining there for an aeon, not incurable?”

“It could be, Upāli, that a schismatic in the Order is not doomed to the Downfall ... not incurable.”

“But which (kind of) schismatic in an Order, Lord is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, remaining there for an aeon, incurable?”

¹ Cf. AN v.76. ² Cf. AN v.76. ³ Cf. AN v.76.

“This is a case, Upāli, where a monk explains non-dhamma as dhamma; if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is non-dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is non-dhamma, misrepresenting opinion, misrepresenting approval, misrepresenting pleasure, misrepresenting intention,¹ and if he speaks out and offers a voting ticket, saying: ‘This is rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction; take this (voting ticket), approve of this’—this schismatic in the Order, Upāli, is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, remaining there for an aeon, incurable.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk explains non-dhamma as dhamma, if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is non-dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is dhamma, misrepresenting opinion ... incurable.

“And again, Upāli, if he explains non-dhamma as dhamma, if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is non-dhamma, if he is doubtful as to a schism ... if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is non-dhamma ... if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma, if he is doubtful as to a schism ... if he is doubtful as to this (explanation), if he has the view that in schism there is non-dhamma ... if he is doubtful as to this (explanation), if he has the view that in schism there is dhamma ... if he is doubtful as to this (explanation), if he is doubtful as to a schism, misrepresenting opinion ... incurable.”

“But which (kind of) schismatic in the Order, Lord, is not doomed to the Downfall, nor to Niraya Hell, not remaining there for an aeon, not incurable?”

“This is a case, Upāli, where a monk explains non-dhamma as dhamma; if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is dhamma, yet not misrepresenting opinion, not misrepresenting approval, not misrepresenting pleasure, not misrepresenting intention, he speaks out and offers a voting ticket, saying, ‘This is rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction; take this (voting ticket), approve of this’—even this schismatic in the Order, Upāli, is not doomed to the Downfall, not doomed to Niraya Hell, not remaining there for an aeon, not incurable.

¹ On these four psychological modalities, see BD 1.163, n.

“And again, Upāli, a monk explains dhamma as non-dhamma ... explains a not bad offence as a bad offence, but (although) he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma the view that in schism there is dhamma, yet not misrepresenting opinion ... not incurable.”

Told is the Third Portion for Repeating

Told is the Seventh Section: that on Schism in an Order

THIS IS ITS KEY

In Anupiyā, distinguished, the delicately nurtured one did not want to, ploughing, sowing, leading in, led away, digging up and reaping, Harvesting, making into stooks, threshing and winnowing, sifting, bringing in, the next and they do not stop, fathers and grandfathers.

Bhaddiya, Anuruddha and Ānanda, Bhagu, Kimbila, and the Sakyan pride, at Kosambī, he declined, and about Kakudha.

He informed against, and a father's, by a man, Nālāgiri, a triad, five, a serious matter, he splits, and about a grave offence, three, eight, three again, dissension, schism, “Could it not be?”

18. DUTIES (VATTA)

ON THE DUTIES OF VISITORS

18.1.1 At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Sāvattthī
5.291 in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time incoming monks entered the monastery with their sandals on,¹ and they entered the monastery with sunshades up,² and they entered the monastery with their heads muffled up,³ and they entered the monastery having put their robes on their heads, and they washed their feet in the drinking water, and they did not greet the resident monks who were senior nor ask about lodgings. And a certain incoming monk, having unfastened the bolt⁴ of an unoccupied dwelling-place, having opened the door,⁵ entered hastily. A snake fell on to his shoulder from a lintel above; terrified, he uttered a cry of distress. Monks, having run up, spoke thus to that monk: "Why did you, your reverence, utter a cry of distress?" Then this monk told this matter to the monks. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these incoming monks enter a monastery with their sandals on ... nor ask about lodgings?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that incoming monks entered a monastery with their sandals on ... and did not ask about lodgings?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

¹ A sign of disrespect, see Kd 5.12 and Bu-Sk 61, Bu-Sk 62. ² See Kd 15.23.2. ³ See Bu-Sk 23, Bu-Sk 67 at the latter of which "head muffled up" is defined. ⁴ ghaṭikā, as at Kd 15.14.3, Kd 16.2.1. See also Vin 3.119. ⁵ See BD 1.199, n. 3.

“How, monks, can incoming monks enter a monastery with their sandals on ... nor ask about lodgings? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance¹ for incoming monks which should be observed by incoming monks.

“Monks, an incoming monk, thinking, ‘I will now enter a monastery,’ having taken off his sandals, having put them down,² having beaten them, having taken them up (again), having lowered his sunshade, having uncovered his head, having put his robe over his shoulder, should enter the monastery carefully and unhurriedly.³ While he is entering the monastery, he should notice where the resident monks have withdrawn to.⁴ Wherever resident monks have withdrawn to—whether to an assembly hall or to a hut or to the root of a tree—having gone there, he should put down his bowl at one side, he should put down his robe at one side, and having taken a suitable seat he should sit down. He should ask about the drinking water, he should ask about the washing water—which the drinking water is, which the washing water. If he wants drinking water, having taken drinking water he should drink; if he wants washing water, having taken washing water he should wash his feet. When he is washing his feet he should sprinkle water (over them) with one hand and wash his feet with the other; but he should not sprinkle water and wash his feet with one and the same hand. Having asked for a piece of cloth to wipe his sandals, he should wipe the sandals. While he is wiping his sandals he should first wipe them with a dry piece of cloth, afterwards with a damp one; having washed the pieces of cloth for wiping the sandals he should spread⁵ them on one side. If a resident monk is senior he should greet him; if he is newly ordained he should make him greet (him). He should ask about lodgings, saying: ‘Which lodging pertains to⁶ me?’ He should ask whether it is occupied or unoccupied. He should ask about resorts for alms,¹ he should ask about non-resorts for alms,² he should ask about the families which are agreed upon as learners,³ he should ask about the privies, he should ask about the drinking water,⁴ he should ask about the water for washing,⁵ he should ask about a staff, he should ask about (the form of) the Order's agreement, saying: 'What time should it be entered upon, what time should it be departed from?'⁶

¹ vatta, custom, duty, habit. ² nīcam katvā occurs also at Kd 1.25.11, Kd 1.25.15; Kd 18.4.4; Kd 18.6.2. ³ ataramānena as at Vin 1.248. ⁴ Vin-a 1281, “have assembled.” ⁵ vissajjetabbam. Vin-a 1281, attharitabbam. ⁶ pāpuṇāti. Cf. Kd 16.11.3; Kd 16.21.2 for rules for apportioning lodgings.

5.293
18.1.3

2.209
"If the dwelling-place is unoccupied, having knocked at the door, having waited a moment, having unfastened the bolt, having opened the door, he should watch out while standing outside.⁷ If the dwelling-place is soiled or if couch is piled on couch or if chair is piled on chair and lodgings heaped on top of them, he should clear (the dwelling-place) if he is able to do so. While clearing⁸ the dwelling place, having first taken out the ground covering he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the beds ... having taken out the mattress and the squatting-mat ... the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet, he should lay them to one side. Having lowered the couch, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the spittoon, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining board, he should lay it to one side. If there are cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering. He should wipe the corners of the window-holes. If a wall that was coloured red becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground has not been treated, he should sweep it having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: ‘Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust.’ Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side.

¹ gocara. Vin-a 1281 says "he should ask about walking for alms thus: Is the village which gives alms, gocaraḡama, near or far? May one walk for alms early, or during the day?" ² agocara. Vin-a 1281 says this is a village of people of wrong views or a village with a limited supply of alms. And he should ask if it is where alms are given to one or two (monks only). ³ See Bu-Pd 3. ⁴ These questions do not this time refer to finding out which is which but, according to Vin-a 1281, what pond's drinking water it is that they drink, and what washing water it is that they use for bathing and so on. ⁵ These questions do not this time refer to finding out which is which but, according to Vin-a 1281, what pond's drinking water it is that they drink, and what washing water it is that they use for bathing and so on. ⁶ Cf. Vin 3.160 = Vin 2.76. ⁷ For, according to Vin-a 1281, he may have seen the path of a snake or a non-human creature. ⁸ Rest of this section also at Kd 1.25.15. Kd 18.7.2.

BD 5.29

Kd 18.1

“Having dried the ground-covering in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was before.¹ Having dried the supports for the couch in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them as they were before. Having dried the couch in the sun ... the chair in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, it should be laid down as it was before. Having dried the mattress and the squatting mat in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, they should be laid down as they were before. Having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, they should be laid down as they were before. Having dried the spittoon in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, it should be placed where it was before. Having dried the reclining-board in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, it should be placed where it was before.

Kd 18.1

“He should² lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When laying aside the robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or along the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

¹ yathābhāgaṃ. ² See also Kd 1.25.11; Kd 18.73.

“If dusty winds blow from the east, he should close the eastern windows. If dusty winds blow from the west, he should close the western windows. If dusty winds blow from the north, he should close the northern windows. If dusty winds blow from the south, he should close the southern windows. If the weather is cool, he should open the windows by day, he should close them by night. If the weather is warm, he should close the windows by day, he should open them by night.

“If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch is soiled, the porch should be swept. If an attendance-hall ... if a fire-hall ... if a privy is soiled, the privy should be swept. If there is no drinking water, drinking water should be provided. If there is no water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing. This, monks, is the observance for incoming monks that is to be observed by incoming monks.”

ON THE DUTIES OF RESIDENTS

Now at that time resident monks, having seen incoming monks, neither appointed a seat nor brought forward water for the feet, a footstool, a footstand, nor, having gone to meet them, did they receive their bowls and robes, they did not offer drinking water, they did not greet the senior incoming monks, nor appoint lodgings. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these resident monks, having seen incoming monks, neither appoint a seat ... nor appoint lodgings?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks ...?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well now, monks, I will lay down an observance for resident monks that should be observed by resident monks.

“Monks, when a resident monk has seen an incoming monk who is senior, he should appoint a seat, he should bring forward water for the feet, a footstool, a footstand, having gone to meet him he should receive his bowl and robe, he should offer him drinking water, and if he is able he should wipe his sandals. When he is wiping his sandals, he should first wipe them with a dry piece of cloth, afterwards with a damp one; having washed the pieces of cloth for wiping the sandals he should spread them on one side. An incoming monk should be greeted and a lodging appointed with the words, ‘This lodging pertains to you.’ He should explain whether it is occupied or unoccupied, the alms resorts should be explained, the non-alms resorts ... the families agreed upon as learners ... the privies ... the drinking water ... the washing water ... the staff ... the form of the Order’s agreement should be explained with the words, ‘This is the time to enter upon it, this is the time to depart from it.’

BD 5.29

“If it is a newly ordained monk (who is incoming) then (the resident one) sitting down should explain: ‘Put aside your bowl in this place, put aside your robe in this place, sit on this seat.’ The drinking water should be explained (to him), the water for washing should be explained, the pieces of cloth for wiping the sandals should be explained. And incoming monks should be made to greet (him). The lodgings should be explained to him with the words, ‘This lodging pertains to you.’ He should explain whether it is occupied or unoccupied, alms resorts should be explained ... (the form of) the Order’s agreement should be explained with the words, ‘This is the time to enter upon it, this is the time to depart from it.’ This, monks, is the observance for resident monks that should be observed by resident monks.”

Vin 2.21

Kd 18.2

ON THE DUTIES OF TRAVELLERS

Now at that time monks who were going away set out without having packed away their wooden goods and clay goods, having opened the doors and windows, and without having asked (for permission) as to their lodgings.¹ The wooden goods and the clay goods were lost and the lodgings came to be unguarded.² Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who are going away set out ... lodgings came to be unguarded?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd 18.3

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks who are going away and which should be observed by monks who are going away.

“Monks, when a monk is going away, having packed away his wooden goods, his clay goods, having closed the doors and windows, he may set out having asked (for permission) as to his lodgings. If there is no monk, he should ask a novice (for permission).³ If there is no novice, he should ask a monastery attendant (for permission). If there is no monk or novice or monastery attendant, having laid a couch down on four stones,⁴ having piled couch on couch, having piled chair on chair, having made the lodgings into a heap on top⁵ (of them), he may set out having packed away the wooden goods the clay goods, having closed the doors and windows.

“If the dwelling-place is leaking he should roof it if he is able to do so, or he should make an effort, thinking, ‘How then can this dwelling-place be roofed?’ If he thus succeeds in this, that is good, but if he does not succeed, having laid down a couch on four stones in a place where it is not leaking, having piled couch on couch, having piled chair on chair, having made the lodgings into a heap on top (of them), he may set out, having packed away his wooden goods, his clay goods, having closed the doors and windows. If the whole dwelling-place is leaking, if he is able he should convey the lodgings to a village, or he should make an effort, thinking, ‘How then can this lodging be conveyed to a village?’ If he thus succeeds in this, that is good. If he does not succeed, having laid a couch down on four stones in the open air, having piled couch on couch, having piled chair on chair, having made the lodgings into a heap on top (of them), having packed away his wooden goods, his clay goods, having covered them with grass or leaves, he may set out, thinking, ‘So can the different things surely remain.’¹ This, monks, is the observance for monks who are going away and which should be observed by monks who are going away.”

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc 14, Bu-Pc 15, and see BD 2.238, n. 4. ² agutta, as were dwelling-places at Kd 16.2.1. ³ Cf. Bu-Pc 14.2.1; Bu-Pc 15.2.1. ⁴ As a protection from white ants.

⁵ uparipuñjaṃ karitvā; above, in corresponding passage Kd 18.1.3 uparipuñjakita.

ON THE DUTIES OF EXPRESSING APPRECIATION

Now at that time monks did not give thanks in a refectory. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, not give thanks in a refectory?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to give thanks in a refectory.” Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, by whom should thanks be given in a refectory?” They told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to give thanks in a refectory through a monk who is an elder.”

Kd 18.4

BD 5.2

Now at that time a certain guild had food for an Order;² the venerable Sāriputta was the elder in the Order. Monks, thinking, ‘The Lord has allowed thanks to be given in a refectory through a monk who is an elder,’ departed, leaving the venerable Sāriputta alone. Then the venerable Sāriputta, having returned thanks to these people, later went away alone. The Lord saw the venerable Sāriputta coming in the distance; seeing him, he spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta: “I hope, Sāriputta, that the meal was successful?”³

¹ app’eva nāma añgāni pi seseyyurū. Vin-a 1282 reads seyyurū, with variant reading seseyyurū, and says that the advantage of leaving things in the open air is that the parts of beds and chairs are not destroyed by grass and lumps of clay falling on them from above as happens in a leaking house. ² Cf. Kd 15.5.2. ³ iddha, as in Nuns’ Bi-Pc 56, there rendered “effective.”

“The meal, Lord, was successful, even though the monks departed leaving me alone.” Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, four or five monks who are elders or next (in age) to the elders¹ to wait in a refectory.”

Now at that time a certain elder waited in a refectory although he wanted to relieve himself, and through restraining himself he fell down fainting. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to go away, having asked (permission from) the monk immediately next² (to you).”

ON DUTIES IN THE REFECTORY

Now at that time the group of six monks, wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, improperly attired,³ went into a refectory and turning aside went in close in front of monks who were elders, and sat down encroaching on⁴ (the space intended for) the elders and kept newly ordained monks from a seat and sat down amid the houses having spread out their outer cloaks. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the group of six monks, wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, improperly attired, go into a refectory ... sit down encroaching on ... and sit down amid the houses having spread out their outer cloaks?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, wrongly dressed ... having spread out their outer cloaks?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ therānuthera. At Vin-a 1283, Dh-p-a ii.211 anuthera appears to be in opposition to mahāthera and saṅghathera, and at Dh-p-a iii.412 to mahāthera. ² ānantarika bhikkhu, as at Kd 9.4.8; Kd 16.10.1; Kd 17.3.9 and Vin 4.234. ³ As at Vin 1.44. ⁴ anupakhajja, as at Bu-Pc 16, Bu-Pc 43. See BD 2.247, n. 3. This expression and the next also occur at Kd 1.25.13.

“Well then, monks, I will lay down a refectory observance for monks and which should be observed by monks in a refectory.

“If the time is announced in a monastery, (a monk), having dressed with the inner robe all round him for covering the three circles,¹ having tied on his waistband, having made one bundle,² having clothed himself in his upper robes, having fastened the block,³ having washed, having taken a bowl, he may enter a village carefully and unhurriedly. He should not, turning aside, go in close in front of monks who are elders, he should go (sit down) amid the houses properly clad,⁴ well controlled should he go (sit down) amid the houses, with eyes cast down should he go (sit down) amid the houses, not lifting up the robes ... not with loud laughter ... with little noise ... not swaying the body ... not swaying the arms ... not swaying the head ... not with the arms akimbo ... not muffled up should he go (sit down) amid the houses, he should not go amid the houses crouching down on his heels, he should not go amid the houses lolling, he should not sit down amid the houses encroaching (on the space intended) for monks who are elders, newly ordained monks should not be kept from a seat, he should not sit down amid the houses having spread out his outer cloak.

“When water is being given out, having grasped the bowl with both hands,⁵ the water should be received I having put it down carefully⁶ the bowl should be washed without rubbing it. If there is a receiver of (used) water, having put the bowl down, the water should be sprinkled into a waste-tub⁷ thinking, ‘Be careful not to splash the receiver of (used) water with the water, not to splash the neighbouring monks with the water, not to splash the outer cloak with water.’ If there is no receiver of (used) water, having put down the bowl, the water should be sprinkled on to the ground, thinking, 'Be careful not to splash the neighbouring monks with water nor to splash the outer cloak with water.' If cooked rice is being given, having grasped the bowl with both hands, the cooked rice should be received. Room should be left for the curry. If there is ghee or oil or tit-bits an elder should say: 'Obtain the same for all.' Almsfood should be received attentively¹ ... thinking of the bowl ... with equal curry, almsfood should be received at an equal level. The elder should not eat until the cooked rice has been served to all.

¹ Bu-Sk 1. Many of Sekhiyas Bu-Sk 1–Bu-Sk 26 recur here. For notes, see BD 3.120ff.

² saguṇaṃ katvā. Cf. Kd 1.25.9. ³ gaṇṭhikā, as at Kd 15.29.3. ⁴ The items from here to “lolling” are the same as those occurring at Bu-Sk 1–Bu-Sk 26. ⁵ According to Vin-a 1284, the water is being given for washing the bowl, as is clear from the context. More water is apparently given after the meal for again washing the bowl, see Kd 18.4.6 below. ⁶ Vin-a 1284 says without making the sound of water.

⁷ paṭiggaha, as at Kd 15.10.3.

"Almsfood should be eaten attentively². For notes see BD 3.128ff. ... thinking of the bowl ... on continuous almsround ... with equal curry ... not having chosen from the top; neither the curry nor the condiment should be covered up with cooked rice, (the monk) desiring something more; neither the curry nor the cooked rice should be eaten by one who is not ill having asked for it for himself; others' bowls should not be looked at captious-mindedly; too large a mouthful should not be made up; pieces (of food) should be made up into a round; the door of the face should not be opened if the mouthful is not brought close; while eating, the whole hand should not be put into the mouth; one should not talk with a mouthful in the mouth; one should not eat tossing up balls (of food); one should not eat breaking up the mouthfuls ... stuffing the cheeks ... shaking the hands about ... scattering lumps of boiled rice ... putting out the tongue ... smacking the lips ... making a hissing sound ... licking the fingers ... licking the bowl ... licking the lips, one should not accept a drinking cup with a hand (soiled) with food.

"An elder should not accept water³ until everyone has eaten. When the water is being given, having grasped the bowl in both hands ...⁴ '... nor to splash the outer cloak with water.' One should not throw out amidst the houses rinsings of the bowl with lumps of boiled rice.⁵ When they are returning,⁶ newly ordained monks should return first,

¹ Cf. Bu-Sk 27–Bu-Sk 30. ² The items in this paragraph occur at Bu-Sk 31–Bu-Sk 55.

³ Vin-a 1284 says water for washing the hands is meant here. ⁴ As in Kd 18.4.4

above. ⁵ Bu-Sk 56. ⁶ I.e. leaving the refectory, rising from it, so Vin-a 1284.

afterwards the elders. One should go properly clad amid the houses, well controlled should one go amid the houses ...¹ ... one should not go amid the houses crouching down on the heels. This, monks, is the refectory observance for monks and which monks should observe in a refectory.”

The First Portion for Repeating

ON DUTIES FOR THOSE GOING ON ALMSROUND

Now at that time monks who walked for almsfood walked for almsfood wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, improperly attired, and they entered a dwelling without deliberation and they left without deliberation, and they entered very hastily and they left very hastily, and they stood too far away and they stood too close, and they stood too long and they turned away too soon. And a certain monk who was walking for almsfood entered a dwelling without deliberation; taking (a doorway) for the house-door, he entered an inner chamber. In that inner chamber a woman was lying naked on her back. That monk saw that woman lying naked on her back; seeing her, he thought: “This is not the house-door, this is an inner chamber,” and he went away from that inner chamber. That woman’s husband saw that woman lying naked on her back: seeing her, he thought: “My wife has been seduced by that monk,” and having seized that monk, he thrashed him. Then that woman, waking up at the noise, spoke thus to that man: “Why are you, master, thrashing this monk?”

Kd 18.5

“You were seduced by this monk.”

BD 5.30

“I was not, master, seduced by this monk. This monk is innocent,”² and she made him let go of that monk. Then that monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who walk for almsfood walk for almsfood wrongly dressed ... enter ... depart ... stand ... and turn away too soon?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks ...?”

¹ As in Kd 18.4.3. ² Cf. the incident related in Bu-Pc 67.

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks when they are walking for almsfood and which should be observed by monks when they are walking for almsfood.

“Monks, if a monk when he is walking for almsfood thinks: ‘I will enter this village,’ having dressed himself¹ with his inner robe all round him so as to cover the three circles, having fastened his waistband, having made one bundle, having clothed himself in his upper robes, having fastened the block, having washed, having taken a bowl, he may enter the village carefully and unhurriedly. He should go amid the houses properly clad ... he should not go amid the houses crouching down on his heels. When he is going amid the houses he should consider: ‘I will enter in this (fashion), I will leave in this.’ He should not enter too hastily, he should not leave too hastily, he should not stand too far away, he should not stand too close, he should not stand too long, he should not turn away too soon. While he is standing, he should consider: ‘Are they willing to give alms or are they not willing?’ If she puts aside her work² or rises from her seat or wipes a spoon or wipes a dish or sets it out, he should stand still, thinking: ‘It is as though she is willing to give.’ When alms are being given, having raised the outer cloak with the left hand, having uncovered the bowl with the right hand, having grasped the bowl with both hands, the alms should be received, but one should not look at the face of the donor of the alms.³ He should consider: ‘Are they willing to give curry or are they not willing?’ If she wipes a spoon or wipes a dish or sets it out, he should stand still, thinking: ‘It is as though she is willing to give'. When the alms have been given, having covered the bowl with the outer cloak, one should turn away carefully and unhurriedly. One should go amid the houses properly clad ... one should not go amid the houses crouching down on one's heels.

¹ As at Kd 18.4.3. ² Vin-a 1285 says “whether she is standing or sitting at her work—cotton or winnowing or grinding—she puts aside whatever it may be that she has chosen.” Vin-a 1285 reads nikkhipanti, they put aside, with variant reading nikkhipati. The work mentioned seems to suggest women’s work; but below, the donor of the almsfood may be a woman or a man. ³ Vin-a 1285 says that the donor may be a woman or a man. One is not to look at his face at the time when the alms are being given.

“Whoever returns first from the village for almsfood should make ready a seat, he should bring forward water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a footstand, he should set out a refuse bowl, having washed it, he should set out drinking water and water for washing. Whoever should return last from the village for almsfood,¹ if there should be the remains of a meal and if he should so desire, he may eat them; but if he should not so desire, he may throw them away where there is but little green grass or he may drop them into water where there are no living creatures. He should put up the seat, he should put away the water for (washing) the feet, the footstool, the footstand, he should put away the refuse-bowl, having washed it, he should put away the drinking water and the water for washing, he should sweep the refectory. Whoever should see a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after evacuation, void and empty, should set out (water). If it is impossible for him (to do this) he should set out (water) by signalling with his hand, having invited a companion (to help him) by a movement of his hand; but he should not for such a reason break into speech. This, monks, is the observance for monks when they are walking for almsfood and which should be observed by monks when they are walking for almsfood.”

ON DUTIES FOR FOREST DWELLERS

Now at that time several monks were living in a forest. They neither set out drinking water, nor did they set out water for washing, nor did they set out a fire,² nor did they set out kindling wood,³ they did not know the positions of the lunar mansions, they did not know the divisions of the quarters. Thieves, having gone there, spoke thus to these monks: “Is there drinking water, honoured sirs?”

¹ As at Vin 1.157, etc. ² Cf. Bu-Pc 56 where it is an offence for a monk to kindle a fire to warm himself. ³ araṇisahita. See BD 3.88, n. 5, and Vinaya Texts iii.292, n. 2.

“There is not, friends.”

“Is there water for washing ... Is there a fire ... Is there kindling wood, honoured sirs?”

“There is not, friends.”

“What is there a conjunction with today, honoured sirs?”

“Indeed, we do not know, friends.”

“Which quarter is this, honoured sirs?”

“Indeed, we do not know, friends.” Then these thieves thought: ‘These have no drinking water nor water for washing, there is no fire, there is no kindling wood, they do not know the positions of the lunar mansions, they do not know the divisions of the quarters. These are thieves, these are not monks,’ and having thrashed them, they departed. Then these monks told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks who are forest-dwellers and which should be observed by monks who are forest-dwellers.

“Monks, a monk who is a forest-dweller, getting up early, having placed his bowl in a bag, having hung it on his shoulder, having arranged his robe¹ over his shoulder, having put on his sandals, having packed away the wooden goods, the clay goods, having closed the doors and windows, may leave² his lodgings. If he thinks: ‘Now I will enter a village,’ having taken off his sandals, having put them down, having beaten them, having placed them in a bag, having hung it on his shoulder, having dressed himself all round covering the three circles, having fastened his waistband ... (as in Kd 18.5.2) ... he should turn away carefully and unhurriedly. He should go amid the houses properly clad ... he should not go amid the houses crouching down on his heels.

¹ cīvara, not specified here as “outer cloak”. ² senāsanā otaritabbaṃ. Vin-a 1285 says vasanaṭṭhānato nikkhamitabbaṃ, should depart from the place where he was staying.

“Having set out from the village, having placed his bowl in the bag, having hung it on his shoulder, having rolled up his robe, having placed it on his head,¹ having put on his sandals, he should go along. Monks, a monk who is a forest-dweller should set out drinking water, he should set out water for washing, he should set out a fire, he should set out kindling wood, he should set out a walking staff,² he should learn the positions of the lunar mansions, either the whole or one part, he should become skilled in the quarters. This, monks, is the observance for monks who are forest-dwellers and which should be observed by monks who are forest-dwellers.”

ON DUTIES REGARDING LODGINGS

Now at that time several monks were making robes in the open air. The group of six monks beat their lodgings to windward (of them) and in the open space;³ the monks were covered with dust. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks beat their lodgings ... so that monks are covered with dust?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks beat their lodgings ... covered with dust?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks in respect of lodgings that should be observed by monks in respect of lodgings.

“In whatever dwelling-place he is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, he should, if he is able, clean it.⁴ When he is cleaning the dwelling-place, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the piece of cloth for to sit upon and the sheet ... the mattress and squatting mat, he should lay them to one side. Having lowered the couch, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the couch, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the spittoon, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining board, he should lay it to one side. Having observed how the ground covering was laid down, having taken it out, he should lay it to one side. If there are cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering. He should wipe the corners of the window-holes. If a wall that was coloured red becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground was not treated, he should sweep it; having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: 'Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust.' Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side. He should not beat the lodgings near monks ... near dwelling-places ... near drinking-water ... near water for washing, he should not beat the lodgings to windward in the open space, he should beat the lodgings to leeward.

¹ See Kd 8.13.1. ² kattaraḍaṇḍa. See Kd 5.6.2 and Vin 2.76, Vin 2.208. ³ ariṅgaṇa. Vinaya Texts iii.295, n. 1 say that this is “a part of the ārāma immediately in front of the hut or vihāra, which is kept as an open space, and daily swept ... The term is a common one, and its meaning is not doubtful.” ⁴ Cf. this passage with Kd 1.25.14, Kd 1.25.15, Kd 18.1.3. See BD 4.63, BD 4.64 for notes.

18:7,3
2:219
5:307
“Having dried the ground-covering to one side in the sun,¹ having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was laid down (before). Having dried the supports for the couch to one side in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them where they were (before). Having dried the couch to one side in the sun, having cleaned it, having beaten it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down (before). Having dried the chair to one side in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down (before). Having dried the mattress and the squatting mat to one side in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down (before). Having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet to one side in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down (before). Having dried the spittoon to one side in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was (before). Having dried the reclining board to one side in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was (before). The bowl and robe should be laid aside.¹ When he is laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other hand under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside; but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When he is laying aside the robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other along the bamboo for robes or the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

¹ Cf. Kd 1.25.16; Kd 18.1.4.

Kd 18.7

“If dusty winds² blow from the east, the eastern windows should be closed. If dusty winds blow from the west ... from the north ... from the south, the south windows should be closed. If the weather is cool, the windows should be opened during the day, closed at night. If the weather is warm, the windows should be closed during the day, opened at night. If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch is soiled, the porch should be swept. If an attendance-hall ... a fire-hall ... a privy is soiled, the privy should be swept. If there is no drinking water, drinking water should be provided. If there is no water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be poured into the pitcher of water for rinsing. If he is staying in a dwelling-place together with a senior, he should not give a recitation³

BD 5.30

¹ Cf. Kd 1.25.11. ² Cf. Kd 1.25.18, Kd 1.25.19, etc. ³ Cf. Kd 1.26.1; Kd 1.32.1; Kd 1.37.6, and Vin 4.15.

without asking the senior (for permission), he should not give the interrogation, he should not study, he should not speak dhamma,¹ he should not light a lamp, he should not extinguish a lamp, he should not open windows, he should not close windows. If he is pacing up and down in the same place for pacing up and down in with a senior, he should turn when the senior turns, but he should not touch the senior (even) with a corner of his outer cloak. This, monks, is the observance for monks in respect of lodgings that should be observed by monks in respect of lodgings.”

ON DUTIES IN THE SAUNA

Now at that time the group of six monks, being hindered in (their use of a) bathroom by monks who were elders, having brought, out of disrespect, a quantity of sticks, having made a fire, having closed the doorway, sat down in the doorway. The monks, overcome by the heat, not being able to get through the doorway, fell down fainting. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, being hindered (in their use of a) bathroom by monks who are elders ... sit down in the doorway, so that monks ... fell down fainting?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, being hindered in (their use of a) bathroom by monks who are elders ... sat down in the doorway so that monks ... fell down fainting?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, on being hindered in (your use of) a bathroom by monks who are elders, having out of disrespect brought a quantity of sticks, a fire should not be made. Whoever should make one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And nor, monks, having closed a doorway, should you sit down in the doorway. Whoever should (so) sit down, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“On account of this, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks as to a bathroom and which should be observed by monks in a bathroom. Whoever goes first to a bathroom, if ashes have accumulated, should throw out the ashes. If the bathroom is soiled, the bathroom should be swept. If the flooring¹ ... cell ... the porch ... the hall in the bathroom is soiled, the hall in the bathroom should be swept. Chunam should be kneaded, clay should be moistened, water should be poured into the water-jar. On entering the bathroom, having smeared the face with clay, having covered oneself front and back, one may enter the bathroom. One should not sit down so as to encroach on (the space intended for) monks who are elders, nor should newly ordained monks be turned away from a seat.² If one is able, a treatment should be done in the bathroom for monks who are elders. On leaving the bathroom, having taken the chair for the bathroom and having covered oneself front and back, one may leave the bathroom. If one is able, a treatment should also be done in the water for the monks who are elders. One should not bathe before the monks who are elders, nor should one bathe above them. Way should be made by one who has bathed and is getting out (of the water) for those who are getting into it. Whoever leaves the bathroom last, if the bathroom is swampy, he should wash it. Having washed the tub for the clay, having put away the chair for the bathroom, having extinguished the fire, having closed the door, he may depart. This, monks, is the observance for monks as to a bathroom and which should be observed by monks in a bathroom.”

¹ As above; and see definition of dhamma at Vin 4.15 = Vin 4.22 = Vin 4.200.

BD 530

Vin 2.2

ON DUTIES IN THE TOILET

Now at that time a certain monk who had been born a brahmin, having relieved himself, did not want to rinse, thinking: “Who would touch this foul evil smell?” A worm remained in his rectum. Then this monk told this matter to the monks. They said: “But did you, your reverence, not rinse after relieving yourself?” “No, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about ... Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, did not rinse after relieving yourself?” “It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd 18.9

¹ paribhaṇḍa. It is doubtful whether Buddhaghosa has understood this term: he explains it by bahi jaggati, he lies awake outside, Vin-a 1286. ² Cf. Kd 1.25.12, Kd 1.25.13.

“Monks, if there is water you should not not rinse after relieving yourselves. Whoever should not rinse, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks relieved themselves in the privy according to seniority. Newly ordained monks, having arrived first, waited and through restraining themselves, they fell down fainting.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks?” “It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not relieve yourselves in a privy according to seniority. Whoever does (this), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, you monks, to relieve yourselves according to the order of arrival.”

Now at that time the group of six monks entered a privy very hastily and they entered forcibly² and they relieved themselves while groaning³ and while chewing toothwood and outside the proper vessels and they spat into a vessel and they scraped themselves with a rough piece of wood and they dropped a piece of wood for scraping into a cesspool; and they left very hastily and they left forcibly and they rinsed smacking their lips and they left water in the saucer for rinsing (-water). Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks enter a privy very hastily ... and leave water in the saucer for rinsing (-water)?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks?" "It is true, Lord." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ Cf. Kd 18.4.1. ² ubbhujitvā, as at Vin 3.40. ³ nitthunantā. Or is this “spitting”?

"Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance in respect of privies and which is to be observed by monks in privies.

"Whoever goes to a privy, standing outside should cough, and the one sitting inside should cough too. Having laid aside the robe on a bamboo for robes or on a cord for robes, one should enter the privy carefully and unhurriedly. One should not enter too hastily, one should not enter forcibly, one should stand firmly on the privy shoes. One should not relieve oneself while groaning ... you should not drop a piece of wood for scraping into a cesspool. You should get rid of it while standing on the privy shoes. You should not depart too quickly, nor forcibly. You should stand firmly on the rinsing shoes. You should not rinse smacking your lips, you should not leave water in the saucer for rinsing (-water). You should get rid of it while standing on the rinsing shoes. If the privy is dirty it should be washed. If the receptacle for (wood for) scraping is full, the pieces of wood for scraping should be thrown away. If the privy is soiled, it should be swept. If the plaster flooring ... if the cell ... if the porch is soiled the porch should be swept. If there is no water in the vessel for rinsing-water, water should be tipped into it. This, monks, is the observance for monks in respect of privies and which should be observed by monks in respect of privies."

ON DUTIES TO THE PRECEPTOR

Now at that time those who shared cells did not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can these who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Is it true, as is said, monks, that those who share cells do not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?" "It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can those who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors? It is not, monks ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for those who share cells towards their preceptors and which should be observed by those who share cells towards their preceptors:

“The one who shares a cell,¹ monks, should conduct himself properly towards the preceptor. This is the proper conduct in this respect: having got up early, having taken off his sandals, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, he should give toothwood, he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conjei, having washed a bowl, the conjei should be placed near (the preceptor). When he has drunk the conjei, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, it should be put away. When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed. If that place is soiled, that place should be swept.

“If the preceptor wishes to enter a village, his inner clothing should be given (to him), the inner clothing (that he is wearing) should be received (from him) in return, the waistband should be given (to him); having folded them (into two or four folds), the outer robes are to be given (to him); having washed it, a bowl with water is to be given (to him). If the preceptor desires an attendant, (the latter) having put on his inner robe all round so as to cover the three circles, having bound on the waistband, having folded them, and having dressed in the outer robes, having fastened the ties, having washed, having taken a bowl, should be the preceptor’s attendant. He should not walk too far away (from him), he should not walk too close. He should receive the bowl and its contents.

“He should not interrupt the preceptor when he is speaking. (But) if the preceptor is bordering on an offence, then, speaking himself, he should warn him. When he is returning, he should make ready a seat, having come back first; he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand; having gone to meet him, he should receive his bowl and robe, he should give back the inner clothing (given) in return, he should receive his inner clothing. If a robe is damp with perspiration, he should dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but a robe should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should fold up the robe. When folding up the robe, having made the corners turn back four finger-breadths, he should fold up the robe, thinking 'Mind there is no crease in the middle.' The waistband should be placed in a fold (of the robe). If there is almsfood and the preceptor wishes to eat, having given him water, almsfood should be placed near (him).

¹ From here to the end of Kd 18.11.2 see Kd 1.25.8–Kd 1.25.24, and for notes see BD 4.59ff.

"He should offer the preceptor drinking-water. When he has eaten, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, having emptied out the water, he should dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but a bowl should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other hand under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When laying aside a robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or along the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside. When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed, the water for washing the feet, the foot-stool, the foot-stand should be put away. If that place comes to be soiled that place should be swept.

"If the preceptor wishes to bathe, he should prepare a bath. If he wants a cold (bath), he should prepare a cold one; if he wants a hot (bath), he should prepare a hot one. If the preceptor wishes to enter a bathroom, he should knead chunam, should moisten clay; taking a chair for the bathroom, having gone close behind the preceptor, having given him the chair for the bathroom, having received his robe he should lay it to one side. He should give him the chunam, he should give him the clay. If he is able to do so, he should enter the bathroom. When he is entering the bathroom, having smeared his face with clay, having covered himself front and back, he should enter the bathroom.

8.11.7 “He should not sit down so as to encroach upon (the space intended for) monks who are elders. He should not keep newly ordained monks from a seat. He should make preparation for the preceptor in a bathroom. When he is leaving the bathroom, taking the chair for the bathroom, having covered himself front and back, he should leave the bathroom. He should also make preparation for the preceptor in the water. When he is bathing, having come out of the water (first), having dried his own body, having put on his inner robe, he should wipe off the water from the preceptor’s limbs, he should give him his inner clothing, he should give him his outer cloak; taking the chair for the bathroom, having come back first, he should make ready a seat, he should put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand. He should offer the preceptor drinking-water.

5.314 8.11.8 “If he wishes to make him recite, he should make him recite. If he wishes to interrogate, he should be interrogated. In whatever dwelling-place the preceptor is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, it should be cleaned if he is able (to do so). When he is cleaning the dwelling-place, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the mattress and the squatting-mat, he should lay them to one side.

8.11.9 2.225 “Having lowered the couch, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the couch, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the spittoon, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining-board, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the ground-covering, having observed how it was laid down, he should lay it to one side. If there come to be cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering; he should wipe the corners of the window-holes. If a wall that was coloured red comes to be stained, he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked becomes stained, he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground did not come to be treated, he should sweep it, having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: 'Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust'. Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side.

“Having dried the ground-covering in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the supports for the couch in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them where they were before. Having dried the couch in the sun, ... the chair in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the mattress and the squatting mat in the sun ... having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down before. Having dried the spittoon in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before. Having dried the reclining-board in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before.

“He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl ... (as in Kd 18.11.5) ... When laying aside a robe ... the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

“If dusty winds blow from the east, he should close the eastern windows. If dusty winds blow from the west ... the north ... from the south, he should close the southern windows. If the weather is

Kd 18.1

BD 5.31

Kd 18.1

Kd 18.1

Vin 2.21

cool, he should open the windows by day, he should close them at night. If the weather is warm, he should close the windows by day, he should open them at night.

“If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch ... an attendance hall ... a fire-hall ... a privy is soiled, the privy should be swept. If there is no drinking-water, drinking-water should be provided. If there is no water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing.

“If dissatisfaction has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell should allay it or get another to allay it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If remorse has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares the cell should dispel it or get another to dispel it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If wrong views have arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell should dissuade him (from them) or get another to dissuade him (from them), or he should give him a talk on dhamma.

“If the preceptor has committed an offence against an important rule and deserves probation, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order grant the preceptor probation?’ If the preceptor deserves to be sent back to the beginning, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order send the preceptor back to the beginning?’ If the preceptor deserves mānatta (discipline), the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) on the preceptor?’ If the preceptor deserves rehabilitation, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order rehabilitate the preceptor?’

“If the Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against the preceptor—one of censure or one of guidance or one of banishment or one of reconciliation or one of suspension—the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order not carry out a (formal) act against the preceptor, or change it to a lighter one?’ Yet if a (formal) act—one of censure ... one of suspension—is carried out by the Order against him, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: 'How then could the preceptor conduct himself properly, be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order could revoke that (formal) act?'

"If the preceptor's robe should be washed, the one who shares his cell should wash it or he should make an effort, thinking: 'How then could the preceptor's robe be washed?' If the preceptor's robe-material should be made up, the one who shares his cell should make it up or he should make an effort, thinking: 'How then could the preceptor's robe-material be made up?' If dye should be boiled for the preceptor, the one who shares the cell should boil it or he should make an effort, thinking: 'How then can the dye be boiled?' If the preceptor's robe should be dyed, the one who shares his cell should dye it or should make an effort, thinking: 'How then can the preceptor's robe be dyed?' When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased.

"Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not give an almsbowl to anyone nor should he receive an alms bowl from anyone; he should not give a robe to anyone nor should he receive a robe from anyone; he should not give a requisite to anyone nor should he receive a requisite from anyone; he should not cut off anyone's hair, nor should he have his hair cut off by anyone; he should not render a service to anyone nor should he cause a service to be rendered by anyone; he should not execute a commission for anyone nor should he cause a commission to be executed by anyone; he should not become an attendant on anyone nor should he take anyone as an attendant; he should not bring back almsfood for anyone nor should he have almsfood brought back by anyone. Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not enter a village, he should not go to a cemetery, he should not leave the district. If the preceptor becomes ill, he should tend him for as long as life lasts; he should wait (with him) until he recovers. This, monks, is the observance for those who share cells towards preceptors and which should be

Kd 18.1

Vin 2.2

Kd 18.1

BD 5.3

observed by those who share cells towards preceptors.”

ON DUTIES TO ONE WHO SHARES HIS CELL

8.12.1 Now at that time preceptors did not conduct themselves properly towards those who shared their cells. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these preceptors not conduct themselves properly towards those who share their cells?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that preceptors do not conduct themselves properly towards those who share their cells?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for preceptors towards those who share their cells and which should be observed by preceptors towards those who share their cells.

8.12.2 “The preceptor,¹ monks, should conduct himself properly towards the one who shares his cell. This is the proper conduct in this respect: the one who shares the cell should be furthered, he should be helped by the preceptor in regard to recitation, interrogation, exhortation, instruction. If there is a bowl for the preceptor but no bowl for the one who shares his cell, a bowl should be given by the preceptor to the one who shares his cell, or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could a bowl be procured for the one who shares my cell?’ If there is a robe for the preceptor ... if there is (another) requisite for the preceptor ... ‘How then could (another) requisite be procured for the one who shares my cell?’

8.12.3 “If the one who shares a cell becomes ill, having got up early he should give tooth-wood, he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conjei, having washed a vessel, conjei should be placed near him. When he has drunk the conjei, having given him water, having received the vessel, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, it should be put away. When the one who shares a cell has got up, the seat should be removed. If that place is soiled that place should be swept.

¹ From here to the end of Kd 18.12 is the same as Kd 1.26.

“If the one who shares a cell wishes to enter a village, his inner clothing should be given (to him), the inner clothing (that he is wearing) should be received from him, in return, the outer robes should be given (to him), having folded them (into two or four folds); having washed it, a bowl with water is to be given to him. Thinking: ‘He will be returning about now,’ he should make ready a seat, he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand; having gone to meet him, he should receive his bowl and robe, he should give back the inner clothing (given) in return, he should receive his inner clothing. If a robe is damp with perspiration, he should dry it for a short time in the sun’s warmth, but a robe should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should fold up the robe. When folding up the robe, having made the corners turn back four finger-breadths, he should fold up the robe, thinking: ‘Mind there is no crease in the middle’. The waistband should be placed in a fold (of the robe). If there is almsfood and the one who shares a cell wishes to eat, having given him water, almsfood should be placed near (him).

“He should offer the one who shares his cell drinking water. When he has eaten, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, having emptied out the water he should dry it for a short time in the sun’s warmth, but a bowl should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When laying aside a robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside. When the one who shares a cell has got up, the seat should be removed, the water for washing the feet, the foot-stool, the foot-stand should be put away. If that place comes to be soiled,

Kd 18.1

Kd 18.1

BD 5.31

Vin 2.2

that place should be swept.

“If the one who shares a cell wishes to bathe, he should prepare a bath. If he wants a cold (bath), he should prepare a cold one; if he wants a hot (bath), he should prepare a hot one. If the one who shares a cell wishes to enter a bathroom, he should knead chunam, he should moisten clay; taking a chair for the bathroom, having gone (close behind the one who shares a cell), having given him the chair for the bathroom, having received his robe, he should lay it to one side. He should give him the chunam, he should give him the clay. If he is able to do so he should enter the bathroom. When he is entering the bathroom, having smeared his face with clay, having covered himself front and back he should enter the bathroom.

“He should not sit down so as to encroach upon (the space intended for) monks who are elders. He should not keep newly ordained monks from a seat. He should make preparation for the one who shares a cell in the bathroom. When he is leaving the bathroom, taking the chair for the bathroom, having covered himself front and back, he should leave the bathroom. And he should make preparation in the water for the one who shares his cell. When he is bathing, having come out of the water first, having dried his own body, having put on his inner robe, he should wipe off the water from the limbs of the one who shares the cell, he should give him his inner clothing, he should give him his outer cloak; taking the chair for the bathroom, having come back first, he should make ready a seat, he should put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand. He should offer the one who shares a cell drinking-water.

“If the dwelling-place in which the one who shares a cell is staying is dirty, if he is able (to do so) he should clean it. When he is cleaning it, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side ... If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing. If dissatisfaction has arisen in the one who shares a cell, the preceptor should allay it or get another to allay it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If remorse ... the preceptor should dispel it or get another to dispel it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If wrong views have arisen in the one who shares a cell, the preceptor should dissuade him (from them) or get another to dissuade him (from them) or he should give him a talk on dhamma.

“If the one who shares a cell has committed an offence against an important rule ... the preceptor should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order rehabilitate the one who shares the cell?’

“If the Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against one who shares a cell ... thinking: ‘How then could the one who shares a cell conduct himself properly, be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order could revoke that (formal) act?’

“If the robe of one who shares a cell should be washed ... When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased. If the one who shares a cell becomes ill, he should tend him for as long as life lasts; he should wait (with him) until he recovers. This, monks, is the observance for preceptors towards those who share their cells and which should be observed by preceptors towards those who share their cells.”

The Second Portion for Repeating

ON DUTIES TO THE TEACHER

Now at that time pupils did not conduct themselves properly towards their teachers ... (as in Kd 18.11.1. Instead of preceptor read teacher; instead of one who shares a cell read pupil) ...

ON DUTIES TO THE STUDENT

Now at that time teachers did not conduct themselves properly towards their pupils ... (as in Kd 18.12.1 Instead of preceptor, one who shares his cell read teacher, pupil) ...

Told is the Eighth Section: that on Observances

IN THIS SECTION ARE FIFTY-FIVE ITEMS, FOURTEEN OBSERVANCES. THIS IS ITS KEY

With sandals and sunshades, heads muffled up, drinking water, did not greet, they did not ask, snake, the well behaved looked down upon,
/

He took off, sunshade, and over his shoulder, and unhurriedly, withdrawal, laying aside bowl and robe, and suitable, asked,¹ /

Should sprinkle,² and about washing, sandals with a dry and a damp³ (cloth), a senior, a newly ordained one should ask, and whether occupied, resorts, / Learners, privies, drinking water, washing,⁴ staff, agreement, thereupon⁵

the time, a moment, soiled, the ground-covering should be taken out, / Supports, mattress and squatting mat, and couch and chair, spittoon,⁶ reclining board, cobwebs, corners, coloured red, black, not treated,⁷ / And rubbish, ground covering, supports, couch and chair, mattress,⁸ piece of cloth to sit upon, spittoon,⁹ and reclining board, / Bowl and robe, and the ground, the edges away, the folds towards, from East, and from West, from the North, then from the South, / And cool, warm, by day, at night, and a cell, a porch, attendance- and fire-hall, and the custom in privies, / Water for drinking, for washing, and into pitchers of water for rinsing—

For the rhythm: an observance laid down for those incoming. / Neither a seat, nor water, nor meeting, nor drinking water either, they did not greet, they did not appoint,¹⁰ and the well behaved spread it about. /

And a seat for a senior, water, and having gone to meet, drinking water, sandals, on one side, and he should be greeted, should be appointed, /

Occupied, resorts and a learner, privy, drinking- and washing-water,¹¹ staff,¹² agreement, the time, if he is sitting down before one newly ordained,

/ He should greet, he should explain, the method is as below.

The observance for these resident ones was pointed out by the Leader of the Caravan. /

Those going away and wood, clay,¹³ having opened, not asking (for permission), and they were lost, and unguarded, and the well behaved ones looked down upon. /

¹ pucchitā. ² Oldenberg's text: asiñceyya; Siamese: āsiñci. ³ Oldenberg's text: all'; Siamese allen'. ⁴ paribhojaniya here abbreviated to pari. ⁵ Oldenberg's text: katikan tato; Siamese katikaṭṭhitam. ⁶ kheḷamallaka here abbreviated to mallaka. ⁷ Oldenberg: gerukā-kāla, akatā; Siamese: gerukā kālakākata. ⁸ Oldenberg: paṭipādakaṃ mañca-piṭham, / bhisi; Siamese: patipādakā mañcakaṃ / pitham bhisi. ⁹ kheḷamallaka here abbreviated to mallaka. ¹⁰ Oldenberg: paññape; Siamese: paññāpe. ¹¹ Oldenberg: bhojani; Siamese: bhojanam. ¹² Oldenberg: kattarā; Siamese: kattaram. ¹³ Oldenberg: matti ca; Siamese: mattikā.

Having packed away, having closed, having asked (for permission), so may he set out, monk or novice or park-attendant or lay follower, /

On stones, a heap, he should pack away, and he should close, if he is able,¹ or an effort, and just where it does not leak, /

If the whole² leaks—to a village, and just there in the open air,

“So the different things surely remain”: the observance for monks who are going away. /

They did not give thanks, through an elder, leaving alone, about four or five, wanting to relieve himself, he was fainting: these are the observances for those giving thanks. /

The group of six monks wrongly dressed and further wrongly clothed, and improperly, turning aside, encroaching on³ (the space intended for) elders, /

And newly ordained monks, outer cloaks, and the well behaved looked down upon, having dressed with the inner robe all round one for covering the three circles, waistband, one bundle, block, /

Not turning aside, properly clad, well-controlled, eyes cast down,⁴ lifting up the robes, with loud laughter, noise, and so the three swayings,⁵ /

Arms akimbo, muffled up, crouching, properly clad, well controlled, lifting up the robes, loud laughter,⁶ little noise, the three swayings,⁷ /

Arms akimbo, muffled up, and lolling, encroaching, not on a seat, having spared (he should) not, when water,⁸ having lowered, he should not splash, /

Receiver, neighbouring, outer cloak, and if cooked rice it should be received, curry, tit-bits, for all, and an equal level,⁹ /

Attentively, and thinking of the bowl,¹⁰ and on continuous almsround, equal curry, not from the top, coverings up, asking, captious-mindedly, /

Large, a round, door, whole hand, one should not talk,¹¹ ball, breaking up,

¹ Oldenberg: ussahati; Siamese: sace ussahati. ² Oldenberg: sabbe; Siamese: sace.

³ Oldenberg: anupakhajjane; Siamese: jjanam. ⁴ Oldenberg: -cakkhu; Siamese: cakkhunā.

⁵ pacālanā ... calā. ⁶ Oldenberg: ukkhittacittā, ujjhaggi; Siamese: okkhittukkhittā ujjhagghi. ⁷ pacālanā ... calā. ⁸ Oldenberg: na udake; Siamese: ca udake.

⁹ Oldenberg: samatitti; Siamese: samakanti. ¹⁰ Siamese here adds: samasūpañca titthikā / na tāva thero bhuñjeyya asampatte ca odane / sakkacāṃ pattasaññī ca sapadā- nam ca sūpakāṃ. ¹¹ Oldenberg: na byāhare; Siamese: na vohare.

cheeks, shaking, scattering lumps of boiled rice, /
 And then putting out the tongue, smacking the lips, making a hissing sound, licking the fingers, the bowl, the lips, accepting with what is soiled, / Until everyone,¹ when water,² having lowered, he should not splash, receiver, neighbouring, outer cloak, and having lowered on the ground, /
 With lumps of boiled rice, when returning, properly clad, crouching; this refectory-observance was laid down by the dhamma-king. / Wrongly dressed, improperly, and without deliberation,³ hastily, far, close, long, soon, here just those who walk for alms. /
 He may go properly clad,⁴ well controlled,⁵ his eyes cast down,⁶ lifting up the robes, with loud laughter, noise, and so the three swayings, / Arms akimbo, muffled up, crouching, and having considered, hastily, far, close, long, soon, a little seat, a spoon, /
 Or a dish and if she sets it out, having raised (and) having uncovered,⁷ (the alms) may be received, he should not look at, and that is about curries as before, /
 A monk should cover with the outer cloak, he should go properly clad,⁸ well controlled, and the eyes cast down, lifting up the robes, and with loud laughter, /
 Little noise, the three swayings, arms akimbo, muffled up, crouching, the first the seat, the refuse (tub), drinking water, washing water, the last if he so desires may eat, it may be thrown into, he should remove, / He should put away, he should sweep, if empty (and) depleted he should attend (to them) by a sign with the hand, he should not break into:⁹ and the observance for those who walk for alms. /
 Drinking water, washing water, fire, kindling wood and lunar mansions
 (and) quarters (and) thieves, thinking, “there is nothing” having thrashed (them), a bowl, on the shoulder, then the robe, /
 “Now,” having hung on the shoulder, the three circles, all round, as is the observance for those who walk for alms so are the meanings in that for forest-dwellers. /
 A bowl, on the shoulder, robe, on the head, and having put on, drinking water, washing water, fire, and also kindling wood, a staff, /

¹ Oldenberg: yāva na sabbe, udake; Siamese: na tāva yāva na sabbe. ² Oldenberg:
yāva na sabbe, udake; Siamese: na tāva yāva na sabbe. ³ Oldenberg: asallakkhe ca sa- hasā; Siamese: asallakkhetvā sāhasā. ⁴ Oldenberg: paṭicchannena; Siamese paṭiccha- nno va. ⁵ Oldenberg: susamvut’okkhittacakkhu; Siamese: saṃvut’okkhittacakkhunā.
⁶ Oldenberg: susamvut’okkhittacakkhu; Siamese: saṃvut’okkhittacakkhunā. ⁷ Oldenberg: paṇāmetvā; Siamese: paṇāmakā. ⁸ paṭicchanneva. ⁹ Oldenberg:
hatthivikāre, bhindeyya; Siamese: hatthakāre na bhindeyya.

Lunar mansions, or their positions, he should become skilled in the quarters:

the observance was laid down for these forest-dwellers by the Best of Teachers. /

In the open air, they were covered, and the well behaved looked down upon.

If a dwelling-place is soiled, first the bowl and robe, /

Mattress and squatting-mat, couch, and chair, spittoon, reclining board (and) window corners, red colouring, black, not treated, /

Rubbish, near monks, lodgings, dwelling-place, drinking water, near washing water, and to windward in the open space, /

To leeward, covering, supports and couch,¹ chair, mattress, piece of cloth to sit upon, spittoon, and reclining board, /

And bowl and robe on the ground, the edges away from, the fold towards, and the East, the West, the North, then the South, /

And cool and warm, by day (and) at night, and a cell, a porch, attendance- and fire-hall, a privy, drinking water, /

Pitcher of rinsing water, seniors, recitation (and) interrogation, study,² dhamma, and a light, he should (not) extinguish, he should not open, nor should he close, /

When the senior turns, he should not touch him even with a corner;

the Great Sage laid down this observance for lodgings. /

If they are being hindered, doorway, fainting, the well behaved look down upon,

he should throw out the ashes, bathroom, and flooring as before, /

Cell (and) porch, hall, chunam (and) clay (and) jar, face, in front, not (encroaching on) elders, nor³ newly ordained, if he is able, /

In front, above, a way, swampy, clay, a little chair, and having extinguished, he may depart:⁴ the observance for those in bathrooms. /

He did not rinse, according to seniority and in order, and he fell down, hastily, forcibly,⁵ groaning, toothwood, they relieved themselves, spitting, /

Rough, cesspool, hastily, forcibly, smacking, they left,⁶ outside and inside one should cough, a cord, and unhurriedly, /

¹ Oldenberg: mañce ca; Siamese: mañcakaṃ. ² Oldenberg: -paripucchanā, sajjhā, / dhammo, padīpaṇ ca vijjhāpe na vivare, na pi thake; Siamese: paripucchanā / sajjhā dhammo padīpaṇ ca na vivare na ca thake. / ³ Siamese omits na. ⁴ Oldenberg: vijjhāpetvā ca, pakkame; Siamese: vijjhāpetvā thaketvā ca. ⁵ Oldenberg reads uppajji for ubbhujitvā, and in the line below ubbhajji; Siamese ubbhujī in both places. ⁶ Oldenberg: sethena. At Kd 18.10.2 the corresponding word is sesenti. Siamese: sesakaṃ.

Hastily, forcibly, groaning,¹ toothwood, and relieving oneself, spitting, rough, and cesspool, privy shoes, /
Not too hastily, forcibly, shoes, smacking the lips, one should not leave, one should not² get rid of, dirty,³ and about the receptacle,⁴ /

Privy, plaster flooring, and cell, porch, and water in the pitcher for rinsing water: the observance in the privies are these. /

Sandals, toothwood, and water for rinsing the mouth, a seat, conje, water, having washed, he should remove, soiled, and village, /

Inner clothing, waistband, fold, a bowl with water, attendant, and precisely the three circles, all round, waistband, / Fold, having washed, attendant, not too far away, he should receive, while he is speaking, offence, going first, a seat, /

Water, (foot-) stool and stand, having gone to meet, inner clothing, in the sun, he laid aside, crease, in a fold, let him eat, he may place,⁵ Drinking water, water, lowered, for a moment, but he should not lay aside, bowl on the ground and robes, edges away, fold towards, /

He should remove, he should put away, and soiled, to bathe, cold, hot, bathroom, chunam, clay, behind, /

And chair, robe, chunam, clay, if he is able, face, front, elders, neither, and preparation, when leaving, /

Front, in the water, when bathing, having dressed, the preceptor, and the inner clothing, outer cloak, chair, and about a seat, /

Footstool and stand, drinking water, recitation, interrogation, if soiled he should clean it,⁶ first the bowl and robes /

Piece of cloth to sit upon and sheet, and the mattress and squatting mat, couch, chair, supports, spittoon, and the reclining board, /

Ground- (covering), cobwebs, windows, red, black, not treated, ground-covering, supports, couch, chair, mattress, /

Piece of cloth to sit upon and sheet, spittoon and reclining board, bowl and robe, from the East, and from the West, from the North, and then from the South,

/

And cool and warm, by day and night, and a cell, porch, attendance- and fire-hall, privy, drinking water, water for washing, /

Pitcher of water for rinsing, dissatisfaction remorse, and wrong view, important (rule),¹

¹ Oldenberg: sahasā ubbhajitvāna; Siamese: sahasā ubbhuji ṭhite. ² Siamese omits na. ³ Oldenberg: uhana, presumably for ūhatā of Kd 18.10.3; Siamese: ūhanā.

⁴ Oldenberg: pidharena ca; Siamese: piṭharena ca. ⁵ name, for upanāmetabbo at the end of Kd 18.11.4. ⁶ Oldenberg uklāpaṃ su sodheyya; Siamese: uklāp'ussahaṃ sodheyya.

the beginning, mānatta, rehabilitation, censure, guidance,² /

Banishment, reconciliation, and suspension, if it is carried out, he should wash, and he should make up, the dye, he should dye, turning it,
/

And bowl, and also robe, and a requisite, cutting off, service, commission, attendant, almsfood, entering, /

Nor to a cemetery, and also from a district, he should attend him for as long as life lasts;

this is the observance for one who shares a cell. These are for a preceptor: / Exhortation, instruction, recitation, interrogation, and bowl, robe, and requisite, ill, he should not be an attendant.³ /

These observances for preceptors are also so for teachers;

as are the observances for those who share a cell, so they are for pupils. /
Those observances for incoming ones, and again for resident ones, those going away, those giving thanks, in a refectory, those walking for almsfood, /

That observance for forest-dwellers, and also that for lodgings,
In a bathroom, a privy, and those for preceptors and those who share their cells, /

(As is) that observance for teachers, so is it for pupils.

Nineteen matters are spoken of in sixteen sections. /

Being imperfect in observance one does not perfect morality, Impure in morality, of poor wisdom, one knows not one-pointedness of mind, /

The mind wavering, not one-pointed, sees not dhamma rightly, not seeing true dhamma, one is not freed from ill. /

Being perfect in observance, one perfects morality too, pure in morality, with wisdom, one knows too one-pointedness of mind, /
The mind unwavering, one-pointed, rightly sees dhamma too, beholding true dhamma, one is freed from ill. /

Wherefore the watchful son of the Conqueror should fulfil the observance, the exhortation of the best of Buddhas—hence he will come to nibbāna. /

¹ Oldenberg ācamanaṃ anabhirati kukkucam diṭṭhi ca garu; Siamese: ācamana- anabhirati kukkucam diṭṭhikā garu. ² Oldenberg has niyasaka above, for nissaya.
Siamese niyassakam. Cf. also AN i.99 where niyassakamma should read nissayak-

³ Oldenberg reads na pacchāsamaṇo sāve; Siamese bhave.

19. SUSPENDING THE OBSERVANCE (UPOSATHAṬṬHĀPANA)

REQUESTING THE RECITATION OF THE PĀTIMOKKHA

19.1.1
5.330
At one time¹ the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Eastern Monastery in the long house of Migāra’s mother. Now at that time the Lord was sitting down surrounded by an Order of monks on an Observance day. Then, when the night was far spent, as the first watch was waning, the venerable Ānanda, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, the night is far spent, the first watch is waning; the Order of monks has been sitting down for a long time; Lord, let the Lord recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.”² When he had spoken thus the Lord became silent. And when the night was far spent, as the middle watch was waning, the venerable Ānanda a second time rising from his seat, having arranged ... spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, the night is far spent, the middle watch is waning; ... recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.” And a second time the Lord became silent. And when the night was far spent, as the last watch was waning, when the sun had risen and the night had a face of gladness,³ a third time did the venerable Ānanda, rising from his seat, having arranged ... speak thus to the Lord:

¹ The whole of this episode occurs also at AN iv.204ff., Ud 5.5. ² Quoted at Kh-a 114; and at DN-a 227-DN-a 228, and Vv-a 52, to “for a long time,” as an example of khaya, waning. ³ Cf. Kd 8.13.2; Ud 3.3.

“Lord, the night is far spent, the last watch is waning; the sun has risen, the night has a face of gladness; the Order of monks has been sitting down for a long time; Lord, let the Lord recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.”

“Ānanda, the assembly is not entirely pure.”¹

Then it occurred to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

“Now, on account of which individual did the Lord speak thus: ‘Ānanda, the assembly is not entirely pure?’” Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great with his mind compassed the minds of the entire Order of monks. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great saw that individual sitting in the midst of the Order of monks—of bad moral habit,² depraved in character, of impure and suspicious behaviour,³ of concealed actions,⁴ not a (true) recluse (although) pretending to be a (true) recluse, not a farer of the Brahma-faring (although) pretending to be a farer of the Brahma-faring, rotten within, filled with desire,⁵ filthy by nature; seeing him, he approached that individual, having approached, he spoke thus to that individual:

“Get up, your reverence, the Lord has seen you; for you there is no communion⁶ together with the monks.” When he had spoken thus that individual became silent. And a second time ... And a third time the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to that individual: “Get up, your reverence ... for you there is no communion together with the monks.” And a third time that individual became silent. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, having taken that individual by the arm, having thrust him out through the porch of the gateway, having shot the bolt,⁷ approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord I have thrust that individual out; the company is entirely

¹ I.e. there is some monk in it who has not confessed an offence which he has committed. ² For this set of epithets cf. AN i.108, AN i.126, AN ii.239, AN iv.201, AN i.205, Pp 27, Pp 36; Ud 52; SN iv.180–SN iv.181. ³ SN i.66, Thag 277; cf. Dh-p-a iii.485.

⁴ Snp 127. ⁵ Defined at Vin 4.214, Vin 4.221, Vin 4.233 (BD 3.161, BD 3.174, BD 3.196).

⁶ samvāsa. Cf. definition at Vin 4.315, and definition of “to be in communion” at Vin 4.138, Vin 4.214. Also see Bu-Pc 69. ⁷ sūciḡhaṭṭikam datvā, cf. Kd 15.14.3. This episode is referred to at Snp-a 312.

pure; Lord, let the Lord recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.”

“How strange, Moggallāna, how wonderful, Moggallāna, that that foolish man should have waited even until he was taken hold of by the arm.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks,¹ saying:

EIGHT WONDERFUL THINGS ABOUT THE GREAT OCEAN

“Monks, there are these eight strange and wonderful things about the great ocean,² from constantly having seen which *asuras*³ delight in the great ocean. What are the eight? The great ocean, monks, deepens gradually, slopes gradually, shelves gradually, with no abruptness like a precipice. And monks, that the great ocean deepens gradually, slopes gradually, shelves gradually with no abruptness like a precipice—this, monks, is the first strange and wonderful thing about the great ocean from constantly having seen which asuras delight in the great ocean.

“And again, monks, the great ocean is stable, it does not overflow its margins.⁴ And, monks, that the great ocean is stable, that it does not overflow its margins—this, monks, is the second strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, the great ocean does not associate with a dead body, a corpse. Whatever dead body, corpse there may be in the great ocean, that it just quickly forces ashore and pushes on to the dry land.⁵ That the great ocean, monks, does not associate with a dead body, a corpse ... this, monks, is the third strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, all the great rivers, that is to say the Ganges, ¹ At AN iv.198 this description of the ocean is ascribed to the asura chief, Pahārāda.

² As at AN iv.198–AN iv.204, AN iv.206–AN iv.208; Ud 53–Ud 56. ³ A class of mythical beings—not apparently here, as sometimes, shown as the enemies of the devas.

⁴ In ebbing and flowing, Vin-a 1287 says. ⁵ Cf. Mil 187, Mil 250.

the Jumna, the Aciravatī, the Sarabhū, the Mahī¹—these, on reaching the great ocean lose their former names and identities² and are reckoned simply as the great ocean. That all the great rivers ... this, monks, is the fourth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, those streams which in the world flow into the great ocean, and those showers from the sky which fall into it, yet is neither the emptiness nor the fullness of the great ocean affected by that. That those streams which in the world ... this, monks, is the fifth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, the great ocean has one taste, the taste of salt. That the great ocean, monks, has one taste ... this, monks, is the sixth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, the great ocean has many treasures,³ divers treasures; these treasures are there, that is to say: pearl,⁴ crystal, lapis lazuli, shell, quartz, coral, silver, gold, ruby, cat’s-eye. That the great ocean, monks, has many treasures ... this, monks, is the seventh strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, the great ocean is the abode of great beings; these beings are there: the timis, the timīṅgalas, the timitimīṅgalas, asuras,⁵ nāgas, gandhabbas. There are in the great ocean individualities⁶ a hundred *yojanas*⁷ (long),⁸ individualities two hundred ... three hundred ... four hundred ... five hundred yojanas (long). That the great ocean, monks, is the abode of great beings; that these beings are there: the timis ... individualities five hundred yojanas (long)—this, monks, is the eighth strange and wonderful thing about the great ocean from constantly having seen which asuras delight in the great ocean. These, monks, are the eight strange and wonderful things about the great ocean from constantly having seen which asuras delight in the great ocean.

¹ This list recurs at AN iv.101, AN v.22; SN ii.135, SN v.38; Mil 70, Mil 87, Mil 380; Vism 10. ² gotta, clan. Cf. Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.10.1,2; Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.8, Praśna Upaniṣad 6.5. ³ ratana. ⁴ See GS iv.137, notes. ⁵ See GS iv.137, n.11. ⁶ attabhāva. ⁷ See BD 2.90, n. 8. ⁸ Quoted Atthasālini 299.

EIGHT WONDERFUL THINGS ABOUT THIS DHAMMA AND VINAYA

19.1.4 “In exactly the same way, monks, in this dhamma and discipline there are eight strange and wonderful things from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline. What are the eight?

5.334 “Even,¹ monks, as the great ocean deepens gradually, slopes gradually, shelves gradually with no abruptness like a precipice, even so, monks, in this dhamma and discipline there is a gradual training,² a gradual doing,³ a gradual course,⁴ with no abruptness such as penetration of profound knowledge. And, monks, that in this dhamma and discipline there is a ... gradual course with no abruptness such as penetration of profound knowledge, this, monks, is the first strange and wonderful thing from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline.

2.239 “And even, monks, as the great ocean is stable and does not overflow its margins, even so, monks, whatever rule of training has been laid down by me for disciples, my disciples will not transgress it even for life’s sake. And that, monks, my disciples will not transgress even for life’s sake a rule of training laid down by me for disciples, this, monks, is the second strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as the great ocean does not associate with a dead body, a corpse, but whatever dead body, corpse there may be in the great ocean, that it just quickly forces ashore and pushes on to the dry land, even so, monks, whatever individual is of bad moral habit, of depraved character, of impure and suspicious behaviour, of concealed actions, not a (true) recluse (although) pretending to be a (true) recluse, not a farer of the Brahma-faring (although) pretending to be a farer of the Brahma-faring, rotten within, filled with desire, filthy by nature—the Order does not live in communion¹ with him, but having assembled quickly, suspends him; and although he is sitting in the midst of an Order of monks, yet he is far from the Order and the Order is far from him² ... this, monks, is the third strange and wonderful thing ...

¹ Quoted Kv 219. ² AN-a iv.111 says this is the “three trainings,” i.e. either in the higher moral habit, the higher mentality, the higher wisdom (as at AN i.234), or in moral habit, concentration, wisdom. For these three words, cf. MN i.479. MN iii.1; AN iv.201; Ud 54. ³ kiriya. AN-a iv.111 calls this the thirteen dhutaṅgas, ascetic practices (explained at Vism 59ff.). ⁴ AN-a iv.111 calls this: the seven (ways of) contemplating, the eighteen great (ways of) insight (Vism 628ff.), the thirty-eight categories of dependence, the thirty-seven things helpful to enlightenment.

“And even, monks, as those great rivers, that is to say the Ganges, the Jumna, the Aciravatī, the Sarabhū, the Mahī which, on reaching the great ocean, lose their former names and identities and are reckoned simply as the great ocean, even so, monks, (members of) these four castes: noble, brahmin, merchant and low, having gone forth from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, lose their former names and clans and are reckoned simply as recluses, sons of the Sakyans³ ... this, monks, is the fourth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as those streams which in the world flow into the great ocean and those showers which fall into it from the sky, yet not by that is either the emptiness or the fullness of the great ocean affected—even so, monks, even if many monks attain nibbāna in the nibbāna-condition in which no more groups are remaining,⁴ not by that is either the emptiness or the fullness of the nibbāna-condition affected ... this, monks, is the fifth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as the great ocean has one taste, the taste of salt, even so, monks, does this dhamma and discipline have one taste, the taste of freedom ... this, monks, is the sixth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as the great ocean has many treasures, divers treasures—these treasures are there, that is to say: pearl, crystal, lapis lazuli, shell, quartz, coral, silver, gold, ruby, cat’s-eye—even so, monks, does this dhamma and discipline have many treasures, divers treasures—these treasures are there, that is to say: the four arousings of mindfulness, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the seven links in awakening, the noble eightfold Way¹ ... this, monks, is the seventh strange and wonderful thing ...

¹ Sarivasati; a technical term when used of the Order; see note above, BD 5.331.

² Cf. It p.91. ³ On this term see BD 2, Introduction, p.xliv. ⁴ See GS iv.139, n. 4 and GS iv.320; also DN iii.135, It p.38 where the meaning of anupādisesanibbānadhātu is explained. See also Compendium of Buddhist Philosophy p.154: “That which bears its own intrinsic nature.” The groups are those of grasping.

“And even, monks, as the great ocean is the abode of great beings—these beings are there: timis, timingalas, timitimingalas, asuras, nāgas, gandhabbas, individualities a hundred yojanas (long) ... two hundred ... three hundred ... four hundred ... five hundred yojanas (long)—even so, monks, this dhamma and discipline is the abode of great beings—these beings are there: the stream-attainer, the one going along to the realisation of the fruit of stream-attainment, the once-returner, the one going along to the realisation of the fruit of once-returning, the non-returner, the one going along to the realisation of the fruit of non-returning, the perfected one, the one going along to perfection. And that, monks, this dhamma and discipline is the abode of great beings—these beings are there: the stream-attainer ... the one going along to perfection, this, monks, is the eighth strange and wonderful thing in this dhamma and discipline from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline. These, monks, are the eight strange and wonderful things in this dhamma and discipline from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline.”

Then the Lord, having known this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

“It rains hard on a covered thing,
It rains not hard on an open thing;
So open up the covered thing,

¹ MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p. 395, points out that the order of these terms sometimes varies.

Thus will it not rain hard on that.”¹

THOSE DESERVING TO HEAR THE PĀTIMOKKHA

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Now, I, monks, henceforth will not carry out the Observance, I will not recite the Pātimokkha; now you yourselves, monks, must henceforth carry out the Observance, must recite the Pātimokkha. It is not possible, monks, it cannot come to pass that the Truth-finder should carry out the Observance, should recite the Pātimokkha with an assembly that is not entirely pure. Nor, monks, should the Pātimokkha be heard by one who has an offence.² Whoever (such) should hear it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to suspend the Pātimokkha for him who, having an offence, hears the Pātimokkha.³ And thus, monks, should it be suspended:⁴ On an Observance day, whether it be the fourteenth or the fifteenth, when that individual is present this should be uttered in the midst of the Order: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The individual So-and-so has an offence; I am suspending the Pātimokkha for him, the Pātimokkha should not be recited when he is present’ — (thus) does the Pātimokkha become suspended.”

Now at that time the group of six monks,⁵ thinking: “No one knows about us,” listened to the Pātimokkha although they had offences. Monks who were elders, knowing the minds of others, told the monks: “So-and-so and So-and-so, your reverences, (belonging to) the group of six monks, thinking, ‘No one knows about us,’ listened to the Pātimokkha although they had offences.” The group of six monks heard it said that the monks who were elders, knowing the minds of others, had told the monks: “So-and-so and So-and-so ... listened to the Pātimokkha although they had offences.” These, thinking: “In case the well behaved monks suspend the Pātimokkha for us,” suspended first, without ground, without reason, the Pātimokkha for the pure monks who had no offences. These who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks suspend, without ground, without reason, the Pātimokkha for pure monks who have no offences?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks suspended, without ground, without reason, the Pātimokkha for pure monks who have no offences?”

¹ This verse occurs at Ud v.5, but not at AN iv.204 or AN iv.208. It is among the verses ascribed to Sirimaṇḍa, Thag 447. Vin-a 1287 observes (as is clear from the context) that the covered thing means “having fallen into an offence and concealing it one falls into another and a fresh offence; but disclosing it, one does not fall into another offence.” Cf. Ud-a 306, and also Thag-a ii.188. ² Cf. Kd 2.27.1. ³ Kd 11.5.1 says that it may not be suspended (thapeti) for a regular monk. ⁴ Cf. suspending the Invitation, Kd 4.16.2 which follows a similar course. ⁵ Cf. Kd 4.16.3.

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not, without ground, without reason, suspend the Pātimokkha for pure monks who have no offences. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

SETTING ASIDE THE PĀTIMOKKHA BY RULE AND NOT BY RULE

19.3.2

“Monks, one suspension of the Pātimokkha is not legally valid, one is legally valid; two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid, two are legally valid; three... four ... five ... six ... seven ... eight ... nine ... ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid, ten are legally valid.

19.3.3

“What is the one suspension of the Pātimokkha that is not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, this one suspension of the Pātimokkha is not legally valid.

5.338

“What is the one suspension of the Pātimokkha that is legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, this one suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

“What are the two suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits, these two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.

“What are the two suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from good habits, these two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.

“What are the three suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from right views, these three suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the three suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit ... from good habits ... from right views, these three suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the four suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit ... from good habits ... from right views, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from a right mode of livelihood, these four suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.

“What are the four suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, ... from good habits ... from right views, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from a right mode of livelihood, these four suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the five suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence of expiation ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence which ought to be confessed ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence of wrong-doing, these five suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the five suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... on a founded (charge of) an offence of wrong-doing, these five suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the six suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done,¹ if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has been done² ... on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done, these six suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the six suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... on a founded (charge of) falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done, these six suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the seven suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... of an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... of a grave offence ... of an offence of expiation ... of an offence which ought to be confessed ... of an offence of wrong-doing, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) an offence of wrong speech, these seven suspensions ... are not legally valid.

¹ akata. Vin-a 1288 says the falling away may or may not have been done by that individual. ² kata.

“What are the seven suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... on a founded (charge of) an offence of wrong speech, these seven suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the eight suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... of falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done ... of falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from a right mode of livelihood which has not been done ... which has been done, these eight suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the eight suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... of falling away from a right mode of livelihood which has not been done ... which has been done, these eight suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the nine suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done¹ ... on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done ... on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done, these nine suspensions ... not legally valid.

¹ katākatāya. Vin-a 1288 says “it is so called because (the one who is suspending) has chosen, gahetvā, both: done and not done” (presumably as his grounds for suspending, since falling away may have been done both by the individual whom he is suspending, and by another).

“What are the nine suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done ... on a founded (charge of) falling from good habits ... on a founded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done, these nine suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one who is defeated is not sitting in that assembly,¹ if talk on an offence involving defeat is still going forward,² if one who has disavowed the training is not sitting in that assembly, if talk on disavowing the training is still going forward, if he submits himself to a legally valid complete assembly,³ if he does not withdraw his acceptance⁴ (of a formal act settled) in a legally valid complete assembly, if talk on withdrawing acceptance (of a formal act settled) in a legally valid complete assembly is still going forward, if he is not seen, heard or suspected of falling away from moral habit, if he is not seen, heard or suspected of falling away from good habits, if he is not seen, heard or suspected of falling away from right views, these ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.

“What are the ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one who is defeated is sitting in that assembly, if talk on an offence involving defeat is not still going forward ... (as in above paragraph, but the opposite in each case) ... if he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from right views, these ten suspensions of the

¹ These clauses are explained in Kd 19.3.4 below. ² A monk cannot be legally suspended while talk on his case is still in progress. ³ dhammikarū sāmaggiṃ upeti. See Kd 10.5.13; Kd 10.6.2 (atthupeta, vyañjanupeta). ⁴ na paccādiyati. Vin-a 1288 says of paccādiyati (in the “legally valid” clause) it means that if he says the formal act should be earned out again, he withdraws his acceptance. But he who opens it up again falls into an offence of expiation. If he desires to find fault with a formal act while it is being carried out, and neither comes nor gives his consent, and protests if he has come, for this reason he falls into an offence of wrong-doing. (Cf. Bu-Pc 80.)

Pātimokkha are legally valid.

SETTING ASIDE THE PĀTIMOKKHA BY RULE

“How (can it be said that) one who is defeated is sitting in that assembly? This is a case, monks, where by reason of those properties,¹ by reason of those features, by reason of those signs by which there comes to be commission of an offence involving defeat a monk sees (another) monk committing an offence involving defeat; or it may be that that monk does not himself see a monk committing an offence involving defeat, but that another monk tells that monk: ‘The monk So-and-so, your reverence, is committing an offence involving defeat’; or it may be that that monk does not himself see a monk committing an offence involving defeat and that no other monk tells that monk: ‘The monk So-and-so, your reverence, is committing an offence involving defeat,’ but that he himself tells the monk: ‘I, your reverence, have committed an offence involving defeat.’ Monks, that monk if he so desires, on account of what he has seen, or has heard, or has suspected may, on an Observance day, whether it is the fourteenth or the fifteenth, utter in the midst of the Order when that individual is present: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This individual So-and-so is committing an offence involving defeat. I am suspending the Pātimokkha for him. The Pātimokkha should not be recited in his presence.’ This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid. When the Pātimokkha has been suspended for that monk, if the assembly removes itself on account of any one of the ten dangers²—the danger from kings or ... thieves or ... fire or ... water or ... human beings or ... non-human beings or ... beasts of prey or ... creeping things or because of danger to life or because of danger to the Brahma-faring—monks, that monk, if he so desires, may either in that residence or in another residence, utter in the midst of the Order in the presence of that individual: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The talk on the individual So-and-so’s offence involving ¹ As at Vin 3.27. ² See rule at Kd 2.15.4.

5.343 defeat was still going forward; that matter is not decided. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may decide this matter.’ If he succeeds thus, that is good. If he does not succeed, he should, on an Observance day, whether the fourteenth or the fifteenth, utter in the midst of the Order and in the presence of that individual: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The talk on the individual So-and-so’s offence involving defeat was still going forward; that matter is not decided. I am suspending the Pātimokkha for him, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in his presence.’ This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

19.3.5 “How (can it be said that) one who has disavowed the training is sitting in that assembly? This is a case, monks ... (the same as Kd 19.3.4, reading disavowed the training instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

2.245 ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

19.3.6 “How (can it be said that) he does not submit himself to a legally valid complete assembly? This is a case, monks ... (the same as Kd 19.3.4, reading does not submit himself to a legally valid complete assembly instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

2.246 ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

19.3.7 “How (can it be said that) he withdraws his acceptance (of a formal act settled) in a legally valid complete assembly? This is a case, monks, ... (the same as Kd 19.3.4 reading withdraws his acceptance of a formal act settled in a legally valid complete assembly instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

19.3.8 “How (can it be said that) he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from moral habit? This is a case, monks, ... (the same as Kd 19.3.4 reading seen, heard or suspected of falling away from moral habit instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

19.3.9 “How (can it be said that) he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from good habits? This is a case, monks, ... (see Kd 19.3.8) ...

2.247 “How (can it be said that) he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from right views? This is a case, monks, ... (see Kd 19.3.8) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid. These ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.”

The First Portion for Recital

FACTORS FOR UNDERTAKING ON ONE'S OWN BEHALF

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf,¹ endowed with how many qualities is the undertaking that he may undertake on his own behalf?”

“Upāli, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf, the undertaking that he may undertake on his own behalf is endowed with five qualities. Upāli, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf, he should consider this: ‘That undertaking which I wish to undertake on my own behalf, is it the right time to undertake this undertaking on my own behalf, or not?’ If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘It is a wrong time² to undertake this undertaking on my own behalf, not a right time,’ Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘It is a right time to undertake this undertaking on my own behalf, not a wrong time,’ Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: ‘That undertaking which I wish to undertake on my own behalf, is this undertaking on my own behalf about a true thing, or not?’ If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘That under-taking on my own behalf is about an untrue thing, not a true thing,' Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering he knows thus: 'That undertaking on my own behalf is about a true thing, not an untrue thing,' Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: 'That undertaking which I wish to undertake on my own behalf, is that undertaking connected with the goal, or not?' If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: 'This undertaking on my own behalf is unconnected with the goal,¹ not connected with it,' Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. 5.345 But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: 'This undertaking on my own behalf is connected with the goal, not unconnected with it.' Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: 'Will I, undertaking this undertaking on my own behalf, attract² monks who are comrades and associates to my side in accordance with dhamma, in accordance with discipline, or not?' If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: 'I, undertaking this undertaking on my own behalf, will not attract monks who are comrades and associates to my side in accordance with dhamma, in accordance with discipline,' Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. But, if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: 'I, undertaking this undertaking on my own behalf, will attract monks who are comrades and associates to my side in accordance with dhamma, in accordance with discipline,' Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: 'From my having undertaken this undertaking on my own behalf, will there be for the Order from that source strife, quarrel, dispute, contention, schism in the Order, dissension in the Order, altercation in the Order, differences in the Order,³ or not?' If, Upāli, while this monk is considering, he knows thus: 'From my having undertaken this undertaking on my own behalf, there will be for the Order from that source strife ... differences in the Order,' Upāli, that undertaking should not be undertaken on his own behalf. But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘From my having undertaken this undertaking on my own behalf, there will not be for the Order from that source strife ... differences in the Order,’ Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf may be undertaken. Thus, Upāli, if an undertaking on one’s own behalf is undertaken when it is endowed with these five qualities, later it will be no cause for remorse.”

¹ attādānaṃ ādātukāmena. Vin-a 1288 says “here a monk wishing to search (or purify, sodhetu) the teaching—whatever legal question he undertakes on his own behalf (or, appropriates to himself, attanā ādiyati), that is called attādāna.” ² Vin-a 1288 says a wrong time means when there is fear of kings, of thieves, of a scarcity of food, or if it is the rains-season.

¹ Vin-a 1288: it leads to danger to life, danger to the Brahma-faring. ² labhissāmi.

³ List as at Kd 10.1.6, Kd 10.5.13; Kd 17.5.1.

THINGS TO BE REVIEWED BY A REPROVER

“Lord, if a monk is reproving,¹ willing to reprove another, when he has considered how many states within himself may he reprove the other?”

“Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, when he has considered five states within himself may he reprove the other. Upāli, when a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now, am I quite pure in bodily conduct,² am I possessed of pure bodily conduct, flawless, faultless? Is this state found in me, or not? ‘If, Upāli, this monk is not quite pure in bodily conduct, is not possessed of bodily conduct that is quite pure, flawless, faultless, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, train yourself as to body’—thus will those say to him.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now, am I quite pure in the conduct of speech, am I possessed of conduct in speech that is quite pure, flawless, faultless? Is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, that monk is not quite pure in the conduct of speech ... ‘Please do you, venerable one, train yourself as to speech’—thus will those say to him.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now is a mind of loving-kindness, without malice towards my fellow Brahma-farers, established in me? Is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, a mind of loving-kindness, without malice towards his fellow Brahma-farers, is not established in the monk, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, establish a mind of loving-kindness towards your fellow Brahma-farers’ — thus those will say to him.

¹ Cf. AN v.79ff., addressed to “monks.” ² Cf. MN ii.113.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now, am I one who has heard much, an expert in the heard, a storehouse of the heard? Those things which are lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending, and which, with the spirit, with the letter, declare the Brahma-faring utterly fulfilled, wholly purified — are such things much heard by me, learnt by heart, repeated out loud, pondered upon, carefully attended to, well penetrated by vision?’¹ Now, is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, the monk has not heard much ... if such things have not been ... well penetrated by vision, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, master the tradition’² — there will be those who speak thus to him.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now,³ are both the Pātimokkhas properly handed down⁴ to me in detail, properly sectioned, properly regulated, properly investigated clause by clause, as to the linguistic form? Is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, the two Pātimokkhas are not properly handed down to the monk in detail ... as to the linguistic form, and if they say: ‘Now where, your reverence, was this spoken by the Lord?’⁵ and if questioned thus he is not able to explain, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, master discipline’ — there will be those who speak thus to him. Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, when he has considered these five states within himself, he may reprove the other.

¹ Cf. Kd 14.14.19. ² āgama; here in opposition to vinaya, see next clause. On āgatāgama, one to whom the tradition has been handed down, see BD 3.71, n. 1.

³ As at Vin 4.51 (BD 2.266, where see notes), and above Kd 14.14.19. ⁴ āgatāni; cf. āgatāgama and suttāgata at e.g. Vin 4.144 (BD 3.43, n. 5). ⁵ Vin-a 1289 explains, “in which town was this rule of training spoken by the Lord?” — thus making “where” refer to locality and not to context.

THINGS TO BE ESTABLISHED BY A REPROVER

“Lord, if a monk is reproving,¹ willing to reprove another, having caused how many states to be set up within himself, may he reprove the other?”

“Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, having caused five states to be set up within himself, may he reprove the other. If he thinks, ‘I will speak at a right time, not at a wrong time;² I will speak about fact³ not about what is not fact; I will speak with gentleness, not with harshness; I will speak about what is connected with the goal, not about what is unconnected with the goal I will speak with a mind of loving-kindness, not with inner hatred.’ Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, having made these five states to be set up within himself, he may reprove the other.”

ON CONNECTED WITH THE REPROVER AND THE REPROVED

“Lord, in how many ways may remorse be caused in a monk who reproves according to what is not the rule?”

“Upāli, in five ways⁴ may remorse be caused in a monk who reproves according to what is not the rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reproved at a wrong time, not at a right time—you have need for remorse.⁵ The venerable one reproved about what is not fact, not about what is fact—you have need for remorse. The venerable one reproved with harshness, not with gentleness ... with what is unconnected with the goal, not with what is connected with the goal ... with inner hatred, not with a mind of loving-kindness—you have need for remorse.’ Upāli, in these five ways may remorse be caused in a monk who reprovves according to what is not the rule. What is the reason for this? To the end that no other monk might think that one might be reprovved about what is not fact.”

¹ Cf. AN iii.196, where this passage is put into the mouth of Sāriputta, AN v.81 (addressed to monks). The five recur at DN iii.236. Cf. also MN i.95-. ² Cf. MN I.126, AN iii.243. Vin-a 1289 explains “one monk having obtained leave from another (to reprove him), when he is reproving him speaks at a right time. But reproving him in the midst of an Order or a group, in a hut where tickets and conjeys are distributed, in a quadrangular building, when he is walking for alms, on a road, on a seat or in a hall, when he is among his supporters, or at the moment of the Invitation—this is called at a wrong time.” ³ bhūtena, about what has happened. Vin-a 1290 explains by taccha, what is true, real, justified. ⁴ Cf. AN iii.197. ⁵ Here presumably the reprover is being spoken to.

19.5.4 “But, Lord, in how many ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to what is not the rule?”

19.5.5 “Upāli, in five ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to what is not the rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reprovved at a wrong time, not at a right time—you have no need for remorse.’¹ The venerable one reprovved ... with inner hatred, not with a mind of loving-kindness—you have no need for remorse.’ Upāli, in these five ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to what is not the rule.”

19.5.5 “Lord, in how many ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who reprovves according to rule?”

5.349 “In five ways,² Upāli, may no remorse be caused in a monk who reprovves according to rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reprovved at a right time, not at a wrong time—you have no need for remorse. The venerable one reprovved ... not with inner hatred, but with a mind of loving-kindness—you have no need for remorse’. In these five ways, Upāli, may no remorse be caused in a monk who reprovves according to rule. What is the reason? To the end that another monk should think that one should be reprovved about what is fact.”

19.5.6 “But, Lord, in how many ways may remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to rule?”

“In five ways, Upāli, may remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reprovved at a right time, not at a wrong time—you have need for remorse. The venerable one reprovved ... not with inner hatred, but with a mind of loving-kindness—you have need for remorse’. Upāli, in these five ways may remorse be caused in a monk who has been reproved according to the rule.”

¹ Here the one reprovved is being spoken to. ² Cf. AN iii.198.

“Lord, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, having attended to how many states within himself may he reprove the other?”

“Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, having attended to five states within himself, he may reprove the other: compassion, seeking welfare, sympathy, removal of offences, aiming at discipline. Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, having attended to these five states within himself, he may reprove the other.”

“But, Lord, in how many mental objects should there be support for a monk who has been reproved?”

“Upāli, there should be support in two mental objects for a monk who has been reproved: in truth and in being imperturbable.”¹

Told is the Ninth Section: that on suspending the Pātimokkha

IN THIS SECTION THERE ARE THIRTY ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

On an Observance so long as a depraved monk does not depart, Urged off² by Moggallāna, a wonder, in the conqueror’s instruction, /
Deepens and gradual training, fixed (and) do not transgress, (with) a corpse (and) the Order suspends, streams (and) they lose, / Streams (and) they attain nibbāna, and the one taste is freedom, many (and) dhamma and discipline too,
(great) beings and the eight ariyan men:³ /

Having made it like the ocean, he tells of excellence⁴ in the teaching.

Pātimokkha on an Observance day, “no one knows about us,” /

“In case,” they looked down upon.

One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, and nine and ten. /

(One of) moral habit, good habits, right views and mode of livelihood—the four disciples, defeat and entailing a Formal Meeting, of expiation,

¹ akuppa, being free from anger, immovable. Cf. AN iii.198, which slightly elaborates the thoughts a reproved monk might have. ² niccuddo. Should this be nicchuddho (from nicchubhati) as in Sinhalese reading? Oldenberg suggests nicchuddo = nicchudito. Siamese edition reads nicuttho with variant reading nicchuddo.

³ The ariyan men are those who follow Gotama’s teachings, his disciples. The “eight” are the classes of those who attain stream-winning, once-returning, no return and arahantship and the fruits of these four ways. ⁴ guṇaṃ. Sinhalese reads guṇā.

that ought to be confessed, / Wrong-doing among the fivefold divisions as they are,
 and falling away from moral habit and good habits, and with what has not been done and has been done¹ in the six divisions as they are, /
 And about defeat and entailing a Formal Meeting, a grave offence and one of expiation and likewise one that ought to be confessed and one of wrong-doing and one of wrong speech, / Falling away from moral habit and good habits and falling away from right views and mode of livelihood, and those eight dones and not dones with one as to moral habit, good habits, right views, /
 Also not dones and dones and likewise the done and not done are likewise spoken of as ninefold by the system² in accordance with fact, / Defeated, still going forward and likewise one who has disavowed, he submits, he withdraws acceptance, talk on withdrawing acceptance and whoever / falls away from moral habit and good habits, and likewise as to falling away from right views, seen, heard, suspected, the tenfold, this he should know. /
 A monk sees a monk, and another tells what he has seen,³ a pure one tells him of it himself:⁴ he suspends the Pātimokkha. /
 If it removes itself on account of a danger—kings, thieves, fire, water and human beings and non-human beings and beasts of prey and creeping things, to life, to the Brahma (faring)—/
 Because of a certain one of the ten, or as to one among the others, and he should know just what is legally valid, what is not legally valid as it accords with the way. /
 The right time (and) according to fact (and) connected with the goal,
 “I will attract,” “There will be,”
 Conduct of body and speech, loving-kindness, great learning,⁵ both. /
 He should reprove at the right time, about fact, with gentleness,

¹ Sinhalese and Siamese read, more correctly, akatāya katāya ca for Oldenberg’s text’s akatā katāya ca. ² ñāyato, Sinhalese edition reading jānatā. ³ Text: vipass’ añño cārocati; Sinhalese edition: añño cārocayā taṃ; Siamese edition: añño cārocayāti taṃ. ⁴ Text: taṃ suddheva tassa akkhāti. Oldenberg suggests at Vin 2.326 taṃ sv’ eva tassa akkhāti. Sinhalese and Siamese editions read suddho va tassa akkhāti. ⁵ bāhusaccam. Oldenberg suggests at Vin 2.326 bāhusuccam. But bāhusacca = bahussuta at e.g. Kd 19.5.1. The word also occurs at MN i.45; AN i.38 (bahu- should here read bāhu-), AN ii.218; Vin 3.10; Kp p.3. It is explained at MN-a iii.156 = Khu-a 134 as bahussutabhāva, the condition of having heard much.

about the goal,¹ with loving-kindness.²

As a speech should dispel remorse caused by what is not the rule /

It dispels the remorse of one who reproves or who is reprovved according to rule.

Compassion, seeking welfare, sympathy, removal, aiming at—/

The conduct for one reproving is explained³ by the Self-awakened One.

And the proper course for the reprovved one is in the truth as well as in being imperturbable.

Vin 2.2

¹ Sinhalese edition reads attamettana for Oldenberg's and Siamese edition's atthamettana. ² Sinhalese edition reads attamettana for Oldenberg's and Siamese edition's atthamettana. ³ pakāsītā in Sinhalese and Siamese editions, and as suggested by Oldenberg, Vin 2.326, instead of text's pakāsitaṃ.

20. NUNS (BHIKKHUNĪ)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

THE STORY OF MAHĀPAJĀPATĪ GOTAMĪ

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery.¹ Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, it were well that women should obtain the going forth from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

“Be careful, Gotami, of the going forth of women from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.” And a second time ... And a third time did the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great speak thus to the Lord: “Lord, it were well ...”

“Be careful, Gotami, of the going forth of women from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, thinking: “The Lord does not allow women to go forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder,” afflicted, grieved, with a tearful face and crying, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him.

¹ Down to end of Kd 20.1 occurs also at AN iv.274–AN iv.279.

Then the Lord having stayed at Kapilavatthu for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Vesālī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Vesālī. The Lord stayed there in Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Gabled Hall. Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, having had her hair cut off, having donned saffron robes, set out for Vesālī with several Sakyan women, and in due course approached Vesālī, the Great Grove, the Gabled Hall. Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, with tearful face, and crying, stood outside the porch of the gateway. The venerable Ānanda saw the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, standing outside the porch of the gateway, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, with tearful face and crying; seeing her, he spoke thus to the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great:

“Why are you, Gotami, standing ... and crying?”

“It is because, honoured Ānanda, the Lord does not allow the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

“Well now, Gotami, stay¹ here a moment,² until I have asked the Lord for the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, this Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, is standing outside the porch of the gateway, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, with tearful face and crying, and saying that the Lord does not allow the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder. It were well, Lord, if women might obtain the going forth from home ... by the Truth-finder.”

“Be careful, Ānanda, of the going forth of women from home ... by the Truth-finder.” And a second time ... And a third time the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “It were well, Lord, if women might obtain the going forth ... proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”¹

¹ hohi. ² Not in Aṅguttara version.

“Be careful, Ānanda, of the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.” Then the venerable Ānanda, thinking: “The Lord does not allow the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder. Suppose now that I, by some other method, should ask the Lord for the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.” Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

“Now, Lord, are women, having gone forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, able to realise the fruit of stream-attainment or the fruit of once-returning or the fruit of non-returning or perfection?”

“Women, Ānanda, having gone forth ... are able to realise ... perfection.”

“If, Lord, women, having gone forth ... are able to realise ... perfection—and, Lord, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, was of great service: she was the Lord’s aunt, foster-mother, nurse, giver of milk, for when the Lord’s mother passed away she suckled him²—it were well, Lord, that women should obtain the going forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

EIGHT IMPORTANT RULES

20.1.4

“If, Ānanda, the Gotamid, Pajāpati the Great, accepts eight important rules,¹ that may be ordination² for her:

1. “A nun who has been ordained (even) for a century must greet respectfully, rise up from her seat, salute with joined palms, do proper homage to a monk ordained but that day. And this rule is to be honoured, respected, revered, venerated, never to be transgressed during her life.
2. “A nun must not spend the rains in a residence where there is no monk. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
3. “Every half month a nun should desire two things from the Order of monks: the asking (as to the date) of the Observance day, and the coming for the exhortation. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
4. “After the rains a nun must ‘invite’ before both Orders in respect of three matters: what was seen, what was heard, what was suspected. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
5. “A nun, offending against an important rule, must undergo mānatta (discipline) for half a month before both Orders. This rule too must be honoured ... during her life.
6. “When, as a probationer, she has trained in the six rules for two years, she should seek ordination from both Orders. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
7. “A monk must not be abused or reviled in any way by a nun. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.

BD 53

¹ See Vin 2.289 where Ānanda was charged at the Council of Rājagaha with having persuaded Gotama to admit women to the Order, thus causing its decay. ² See MN iii.253. ¹ garudhammā. See BD 2.266, n.11. Besides at AN iv.276, these rules are given at Vin 4.51 (see BD 2.268–BD 2.269 for notes). ² AN-a iv.134 says “that may be her going forth as well as (her) ordination.” She would not therefore have to pass two years as a probationer, and this practice will no doubt have been introduced later, after an Order of nuns had been in being for some time.

8. “From today admonition of monks by nuns is forbidden, admonition of nuns by monks is not forbidden. This rule too is to be honoured, respected, revered, venerated, never to be transgressed during her life.

“If, Ānanda, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, accepts these eight important rules, that may be ordination for her.”

Then the venerable Ānanda, having learnt the eight important rules from the Lord, approached the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great; having approached, he spoke thus to the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great:

“If you, Gotami, will accept eight important rules, that will be the ordination for you: a nun who has been ordained (even) for a century ... From today admonition of monks by nuns is forbidden ... never to be transgressed during your life. If you, Gotami, will accept these eight important rules, that will be the ordination for you.”

“Even,¹ honoured Ānanda, as a woman or a man when young, of tender years, and fond of ornaments, having washed (himself and his) head, having obtained a garland of lotus flowers or a garland of jasmine flowers or a garland of some sweet-scented creeper, having taken it with both hands, should place it on top of his head—even so do I, honoured Ānanda, accept these eight important rules never to be transgressed during my life.”

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord: having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the eight important rules were accepted by the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great.”

“If, Ānanda, women had not obtained the going forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, the Brahma-faring, Ānanda, would have lasted long, true dhamma would have endured for a thousand years. But since, Ānanda, women have gone forth ... in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, now, Ānanda, the Brahma-faring will not last long, true dhamma will endure only for five hundred years.

¹ Besides at AN iv.278 this simile occurs at MN i.32, and the first part at Vin 3.68 (see BD 1.117, n. for notes).

“Even, Ānanda, as those households which have many women and few men easily fall a prey to robbers, to pot-thieves,¹ even so, Ānanda in whatever dhamma and discipline women obtain the going forth from home into homelessness, that Brahma-faring will not last long.

“Even, Ānanda, as when the disease known as mildew² attacks a whole field of rice that field of rice does not last long, even so, Ānanda, in whatever dhamma and discipline women obtain the going forth ... that Brahma-faring will not last long.

“Even, Ānanda, as when the disease known as red rust³ attacks a whole field of sugar-cane, that field of sugar-cane does not last long, even so, Ānanda, in whatever dhamma and discipline ... that Brahma-faring will not last long.

“Even, Ānanda, as a man,⁴ looking forward, may build a dyke to a great reservoir so that the water may not overflow, even so, Ānanda, were the eight important rules for nuns laid down by me, looking forward, not to be transgressed during their life.”

Told are the Eight Important Rules for Nuns

ALLOWANCE FOR THE ORDINATION OF NUNS

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the Lord:

“Now, what line of conduct, Lord, should I follow in regard to these Sakyan women?” Then the Lord, gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, with talk on dhamma. Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ kumbhatthenaka. Vin-a 1291 says “having lit a light in a pot, by its light they search others’ houses for booty.” AN-a iv.136 is the same, and SN-a ii.223 very similar. The simile occurs also at SN-a ii.264. ² setaṭṭhika, “white-as-bones.” See BD 1.11, n. 4. GS iv.185, n. 2 gives explanation of AN-a iv.136 (= Vin-a 1291) on above: some insect bores the stem, so that the head of the paddy is unable to get the sap. ³ mañjeṭṭhika. Vin-a 1291 explains that the ends of the sugar canes become red; also AN-a iv.136.

⁴ Cf. like similes at MN iii.96, AN iii.28.

“I allow, monks, nuns to be ordained by monks.”¹

Then these nuns spoke thus to the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great: “The lady is not-ordained, neither are we ordained, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: nuns should be ordained by monks.”

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Honoured Ānanda, these nuns spoke to me thus: ‘The lady is not ordained, neither are we ordained, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: nuns should be ordained by monks’.”

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus: ‘Honoured Ānanda, these nuns spoke to me thus ... nuns should be ordained by monks’.”

“At the time, Ānanda, when the eight important rules were accepted by the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, that was her ordination.”

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “I, honoured Ānanda, am asking one boon from the Lord: It were well, Lord, if the Lord would allow greeting, standing up for salutation and the proper duties between monks and nuns according to seniority.”

¹ Cf. the sixth important rule above. Also see BD 3, Introduction, p. xlviff.

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus: ‘I, honoured Ānanda, am asking one boon ... according to seniority’.”

“This is impossible, Ānanda, it cannot come to pass, that the Truth-finder should allow greeting, standing up for, salutation and the proper duties between monks and nuns according to seniority. Ānanda, these followers of other sects, although liable to poor guardianship, will not carry out greeting, standing up for, salutation and proper duties towards women, so how should the Truth-finder allow greeting ... and proper duties towards women?” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one should not carry out greeting, rising up for salutation and proper duties towards women.¹ Whoever should carry out (one of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, those rules of training for nuns which are in common with those for monks,² what line of conduct should we, Lord, follow in regard to these rules of training?”

“Those rules of training for nuns, Gotami, which are in common with those for monks, as the monks train themselves, so should you train yourselves in these rules of training.”

“Those rules of training for nuns, Lord, which are not in common with those for monks, what line of conduct should we, Lord, follow in regard to these rules of training?”

¹ At Kd 16.6.5 women are among those not to be greeted. ² See BD 3 Introduction, p. xxxiif., BD 3 Introduction, p. xxxviiif.

“Those rules of training for nuns, Gotami, which are not in common with those for monks, train yourselves in the rules of training according as they are laid down.”

20.5.1 Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the Lord:¹ “Lord, it were well if the Lord would teach me dhamma in brief so that I, having heard the Lord’s dhamma, might live alone, aloof, zealous, ardent, self-resolute.”

2.259 “Whatever are the states,² of which you, Gotami, may know: these states lead to passion, not to passionlessness, they lead to bondage, not to the absence of bondage, they lead to the piling up (of rebirth), not to the absence of piling up, they lead to wanting much, not to wanting little, they lead to discontent, not to contentment, they lead to sociability, not to solitude, they lead to indolence, not to the putting forth of energy, they lead to difficulty in supporting oneself, not to ease in supporting oneself—you should know definitely, Gotami: this is not dhamma, this is not discipline, this is not the Teacher’s instruction. But whatever are the states of which you, Gotami, may know: these states lead to passionlessness, not to passion ... (the opposite of the preceding) ... they lead to ease in supporting oneself, not to difficulty in supporting oneself—you should know definitely, Gotami: this is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction.”³

20.6.1 Now at that time the Pātimokkha was not recited to nuns. They told this matter to the Lord.⁴ He said: “I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha to the nuns.” Then it occurred to the nuns: “Now, by whom should the Pātimokkha be recited to nuns?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow monks, the Pātimokkha to be recited to nuns by monks."

¹ As at AN iv.280. ² So AN-a iv.137 (on AN iv.280). ³ Vin-a 1292 and AN-a iv.137 say that on account of this exhortation, Pajāpatī attained arahantship. ⁴ Usually the nuns approach the Lord only through the mediation of the monks. Here it would appear as if the monks had themselves observed that the nuns were not hearing the Pātimokkha and reported the matter to the Lord on their own initiative.

BD 530

Now at that time monks, having approached a nunnery, recited the Pātimokkha to nuns.¹ People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "These are their wives, these are their mistresses; now they will take their pleasure together." Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited to nuns by monks. Whoever should recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, the Pātimokkha to be recited to nuns by nuns."

The nuns did not know how to recite the Pātimokkha. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: 'The Pātimokkha should be recited thus'."

Now at that time nuns did not confess² offences. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, an offence should not be not confessed by a nun. Whoever should not confess it, there is an offence of wrong-doing." The nuns did not know how to confess offences. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: 'An offence should be confessed thus'."

Kd 20.6

Then it occurred to monks: "Now, by whom should nuns' offences be acknowledged?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks to acknowledge nuns' offences through monks."

Vin 2.2

Now at that time nuns, having (each) seen a monk on a carriage-road and in a cul-de-sac and at cross-roads,³ having (each) laid down her bowl on the ground, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, confessed an offence. People ... spread it about, saying: “These are their wives, these are their mistresses; having treated them contemptuously during the night now they are asking for forgiveness.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns’ offences should not be acknowledged by monks. Whoever should acknowledge (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, nuns’ offences to be acknowledged by nuns.” The nuns did not know how to acknowledge offences. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: ‘An offence should be acknowledged thus’.”

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc 23 where the modest monks complain that monks go to the nuns' quarters to exhort them. ² paṭikaronti. ³ Cf. Nuns' Bi-Pc 14. These three words are defined at Vin 4.271 (BD 3.268); see also Vin 4.176 in definition of "among the houses."

Now at that time (formal) acts¹ were not carried out for nuns. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a (formal) act to be carried out for nuns.” Then it occurred to monks: ‘Now, by whom should (formal) acts for nuns be carried out?’ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, (formal) acts for nuns to be carried out by monks.”

Now at that time nuns on whose behalf (formal) acts had been carried out,² having (each) seen a monk on a carriage-road and in a cul-de-sac and at cross-roads, having (each) laid down her bowl on the ground, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, asked forgiveness³ thinking, “Surely it should be done thus.” As before⁴ people ... spread it about, saying: “These are their wives, these are their mistresses; having treated them contemptuously during the night now they are asking for forgiveness.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a (formal) act on behalf of nuns should not be carried out by monks. Whoever should (so) carry one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, nuns to carry out (formal) acts on behalf of the nuns.” Nuns did not know how (formal) acts should be carried out. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: ‘A (formal) act should be carried out thus’.”

¹ Vin-a 1292 says “acts of censure and so on, and also the sevenfold formal acts.” The former number five, as at Vin 1.49. The legal questions amount to seven, as at Vin 4.207, and probably these are meant. ² katakammā. ³ Vin-a 1292 says, “saying, ‘we will not act in such a way again’.” ⁴ Above in Kd 20.6.2

Now at that time nuns, in the midst of an Order,¹ striving, quarrelling, falling into disputes wounding one another with the weapons of the tongue,² were not able to settle that legal question. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to settle nuns’ legal questions by monks.”

Now at that time monks were settling a legal question for nuns, but as that legal question was being investigated there were to be seen both nuns who were entitled to take part in a (formal) act³ and those who had committed an offence.⁴ The nuns spoke thus: “It were well, honoured sirs, if the ladies themselves⁵ could carry out (formal) acts for nuns, if the ladies themselves could acknowledge an offence of nuns, but it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘Nuns’ legal questions should be settled by monks’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Cf. Vin 1.341, MN iii.152. ² mukhasattihi vitudantā, not “got to blows” as at Vinaya Texts iii.333, but “inflicting wounds with the mouth.” ³ kammappattāya as at Kd 9.3.5, but perhaps here, as nuns were not yet entitled to take part in formal acts, meaning “had fallen into the need for having a formal act carried out on their account”. There are two variant readings, see Vin 2.327. ⁴ āpattigāminiyo. ⁵ ayyā va. The nuns are not asking the monks to do these things, as made out at Vinaya Texts iii.333, but are hoping to get the Lord’s decree altered.

“I allow you, monks, having cancelled¹ the carrying out by monks of nuns’ (formal) acts, to give it into the charge of nuns to carry out nuns’ (formal) acts by nuns; having cancelled (the acknowledgement) by monks of nuns’ offences, to give it into the charge of nuns to acknowledge nuns’ offences by nuns.”

20.8.1
5.363
Now at that time the nun who was the pupil of the nun Upalavaṇṇā had followed after the Lord for seven years mastering discipline, but because she was of confused mindfulness, what she had learnt she forgot. That nun heard it said that the Lord wished to come to Sāvaththī. Then it occurred to that nun: “For seven years I have followed the Lord mastering discipline, but because I am of confused mindfulness, what I have learnt is forgotten. Hard it is for a woman to follow after a teacher for as long as her life lasts. What line of conduct should be followed by me?” Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. The nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, discipline to be taught to nuns by monks.”

The First Portion for Repeating

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

20.9.1
Then the Lord, having stayed in Vesālī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvaththī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvaththī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvaththī in the Jeta

¹ ropetvā. Ropeti can mean to direct towards, also to cancel, and to pass off. Pali-English Dictionary favours the latter. Vinaya Texts iii.334 has “set on foot.” Commentary reads āropetvā (with variant reading ropetvā), which means: to bring about, to get ready; to tell, to show, etc. Vin-a 1292 says “saying, ‘this formal act among those of censure and so on, against whom is it to be carried out?’ having explained (aropetva) it thus, he says ‘Now you carry it out yourselves’—it should be given into the charge of. But if a certain one was explained and they carry out another, (monks) saying: ‘They are carrying out a formal act of guidance (niyasakamma for nissayak-), against one deserving a formal act of censure,’ here, according to what is said, they show what should be carried out.”

Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks sprinkled nuns with muddy water, thinking: "Perhaps they may be attracted¹ to us." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, nuns should not be sprinkled with muddy water by monks. Whoever should (so) sprinkle them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to inflict a penalty² on that monk." Then it occurred to monks: "Now, how is the penalty to be inflicted?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, that monk is to be made one who is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns."

Now at that time the group of six monks, having uncovered their bodies ... thighs ... private parts, showed them to nuns; they offended³ nuns, they associated with⁴ nuns, thinking: "Perhaps they may be attracted to us." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, a monk, having uncovered his body ... thighs ... private parts should not show them to nuns, he should not offend nuns, he should not associate together with nuns. Whoever should (so) associate, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to inflict a penalty on that monk." Then it occurred to monks: ... (as in above paragraph) ... "Monks, that monk is to be made one who is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns."

BD 5.3

Now at that time the group of six nuns sprinkled monks with muddy water ... (repeat Kd 20.9.1 down to "I allow you, monks, to inflict a penalty on that nun.") Then it occurred to the monks: "Now how should the penalty be inflicted?" They told this matter to the ¹ sārajjeyyūm. Cf. sārajjati at Kd 15.3.1. ² daṇḍakamma, as at Vin 1.75, Vin 1.76, Vin 1.84. ³ obhāsanti, explained at Vin-a 1292 as asaddhammena obhāsenti. See also Vin 3.128, and Buddhaghosa's remarks, given at BD 1.216, n. 2. ⁴ sampayojenti. Vin-a 1292 says men "associated with" nuns according to what is not true dhamma (or in a wrong way, asaddhammena). Cf. Kd 11.5 (at the end).

Kd 20.9

Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition.”¹ When the prohibition was made they did not comply with it. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to suspend exhortation (for her²).”

Now at that time the group of six nuns, having uncovered their bodies ... their breasts ... their thighs ... their private parts, showed them to monks ... “I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition.” When the prohibition was made they did not comply with it. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to suspend exhortation (for her).”

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, is it allowable to carry out Observance together with a nun whose exhortation has been suspended, or is it not allowable?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, Observance should not be carried out together with a nun whose exhortation has been suspended so long as that legal question is not settled.”

Now at that time the venerable Upāli, having suspended exhortation, set out on tour. Nuns looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the master Upāli, having suspended exhortation, set out on tour?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having suspended exhortation, one should not set out on tour. Whoever should (thus) set out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ āvāraṇa. Vin-a 1292 says this is hindering them from entering a dwelling-place. Cf. the word at Vin 1.84, where it is the daṇḍakamma, the penalty imposed on novices and preventing them from entering a monastery. ² Vin-a 1293 says “here it means that not having gone to a nunnery (the exhortation) may be suspended, but the nuns who have come for exhortation should be told, ‘This nun is impure, she has an offence; I am suspending exhortation for her, do not carry out Observance with her’.”

Now at that time ignorant, inexperienced (monks) suspended exhortation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, exhortation should not be suspended by an ignorant, inexperienced (monk). Whoever (such) should suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks suspended exhortation without ground, without reason. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, exhortation should not be suspended without ground, without reason. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time, monks, having suspended exhortation, did not give a decision.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having suspended exhortation, you should not not give a decision. Whoever should not give (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time nuns did not go for exhortation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not not go for exhortation. Whoever should not go, should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

Now at that time the entire Order of nuns went for exhortation. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “These are their wives, these are their mistresses, now they will take their pleasure together.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the entire Order of nuns should not go for exhortation. If it should go thus, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, four or five nuns to go for exhortation.”

¹ I.e. on the matter for which exhortation was suspended. ² Nuns’ Bi-Pc 58.

Now at that time four or five nuns went for exhortation. As before, people ... spread it about, saying: "These are their wives ... now they will take their pleasure together." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, four or five nuns should not go (together) for exhortation. If they should go thus, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow, monks, two or three nuns to go (together) for exhortation: having approached one monk, having (each one) arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured his feet, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, they should speak to him thus: 'Master, the Order of nuns honours the feet of the Order of monks, and asks about (the right time for) coming for exhortation; may the Order of nuns, master, hear what is (the right time for) coming for exhortation.' It should be said by the one who recites the Pātimokkha: 'Is there any monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns?' If there is some monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns, it should be said by the one who recites the Pātimokkha: 'The monk So-and-so is agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns; let the Order of nuns approach him.' If there is not some monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns, the one who recites the Pātimokkha should say: 'Which venerable one is able to exhort the nuns?' If some one is able to exhort the nuns and if he is endowed with the eight qualities,¹ having gathered together, they should be told: 'The monk So-and-so is agreed upon as the exhorter of the nuns; let the Order of nuns approach him.' If no one is able to exhort the nuns, the one who recites the Pātimokkha should say: 'There is no monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns. Let the Order of nuns strive on with friendliness'."²

Now at that time monks did not undertake the exhortation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the exhortation should not not be undertaken. Whoever should not undertake it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ See Vin 4.51 (BD 2.265ff.). ² pāsādikena sampādetu; Vinaya Texts iii.339 has "may the Bhikkhuni-saṅgha obtain its desire in peace," thus deriving "in peace," pāsādikena, from pasādeti. But their desire was to hear the exhortation. As this was impossible, they were advised to do the best they could without it. Cf. appamādena sampādettha. Here the notion is probably that the nuns, even without the exhortation, should labour on, strive themselves, peacefully and in friendliness with one another.

Now at that time a certain monk was ignorant; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am ignorant. How can I undertake the exhortation?” “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘The exhortation of nuns should be undertaken by monks’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, excepting an ignorant one, to undertake the exhortation through the others.”

Now at that time a certain monk was ill; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am ill. How can I undertake the exhortation?” “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘Except for an ignorant one, the exhortation should be undertaken through the others’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, excepting an ignorant one, excepting an ill one, to undertake the exhortation through the others.”

Now at that time a certain monk was setting out on a journey; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am setting out on a journey. How can I undertake the exhortation?” “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was laid down by the Lord: ‘Except for an ignorant one, except for an ill one, the exhortation should be undertaken through the others’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, excepting an ignorant one, excepting an ill one, excepting one setting out on a journey, to undertake the exhortation through others.”

Now at that time a certain monk was staying in a forest; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am staying in the forest. How can I undertake the exhortation?” They said: “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘Except for an ignorant one, except for an ill one, except for one setting out on a journey, the exhortation should be undertaken through the others’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow you to undertake the exhortation through a monk who is a forest-dweller and (for him) to make a rendezvous,¹ saying, ‘I will perform² it here’.”

Now at that time monks, having undertaken the exhortation, did not announce it.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the exhortation should not not be announced. Who-ever should not announce it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

5.368
Now at that time monks, having undertaken the exhortation did not come.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one should not not come for the exhortation. Whoever should not come for it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

2.266
Now at that time nuns did not go to the rendezvous. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not not go to the rendezvous. Whoever should not go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

0.10.1
Now at that time nuns wore long waistbands out of which they arranged flounces.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not wear long waistbands. Whoever should wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a nun (to have) a waistband going once round (the waist). And a flounce should not be arranged out of this. Whoever should arrange one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ saṅketa. See BD 1.88, BD 1.135 where “the making of a rendezvous,” saṅketakamma is defined. ² paṭiharissāmi. ³ These remaining clauses refer, I think, only to monks who are forest-dwellers. ⁴ na paccāharati. Table of contents: na paccāgacchanti.

Now at that time the nuns arranged flounces out of strips of bamboo ... of strips of leather ... of strips of woven cloth² ... out of plaited woven cloth ... of fringed woven cloth ... of strips of cloth³ ... of plaited cloth ... of fringed cloth ... of plaited thread ... of fringed thread. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, flounces of strips of bamboo should not be arranged by nuns, nor flounces of strips of leather ... nor should flounces of fringed thread be arranged. Whoever should arrange (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time nuns had their loins rubbed with a cow’s leg bone,⁴ they had their loins massaged with a cow’s jaw-bone,⁵ they had their forearms⁶ massaged, they had the backs of their hands

¹ teh’eva pāsuke namenti. P(h)āsukā is a rib; nameti, to wield, to bend; Vin-a 1293 says “like householders’ daughters, they fasten them so as to arrange a flounce out of the solid cloth (thanapaṭakena, variant reading ghanapaṭakena) of the waistband.” On wrong waistbands worn by monks see Kd 15.29.2. ² dussapaṭṭena. Vin-a 1293 explains dussa by setavaththa, white cloth. ³ coḷa. Vin-a 1293 says that this is the coḷa (cotton cloth) of the kāsāva, the saffron robes. He thus apparently seeks to discriminate between dussa, as the material out of which householders’ cloths are made, and coḷa, as that out of which monks’ robes are made. ⁴ aṭṭhilla. Pali-English Dictionary says this is more likely to be Sanskrit aṣṭhīla, a round pebble or stone. Vin-a 1293 calls it gojaṅghaṭṭika, which would seem to fit in with the gohanuka of the next item. ⁵ gohanuka. ⁶ On hattha see BD 2, Introduction, p.li. Vin-a 1293 says, “having had their arms massaged, at the tip, aggabāham kottāpetvā, they make designs with peacocks’ feathers and so on.” This would not necessarily mean “tattoo marks” as at Vinaya Texts iii.341, n. 7.

massaged, they had their calves¹ massaged ... the tops of their feet ... their thighs ... their faces massaged, they had their gums massaged. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not have their loins rubbed with a cow’s leg-bone, they should not have their loins massaged with a cow’s jaw-bone, they should not have their forearms massaged ... they should not have their gums massaged. Whoever should (so) have herself massaged, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

0.10.3
2.267
Now at that time the group of six nuns² smeared their faces, rubbed their faces (with ointment³), painted their faces with chunam, marked their faces with red arsenic, painted their bodies, painted their faces, painted their bodies and faces. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not smear their faces ... should not paint their bodies and faces. Whoever should do (any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

0.10.4
5.370
Now at that time the group of six nuns made (ointment marks) at the corners of their eyes,⁴ they made distinguishing marks (on their foreheads),⁵ they looked out from a window,⁶ they stood in the light,⁷ they had dancing performed,⁸ they supported courtesans,⁹

¹ pāda. Vin-a 1293 says jaṅgha. ² Cf. Kd 15.2.5, of the group of six monks.
³ Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc 90, Bi-Pc 91. ⁴ avaṅgaṃ karonti, so explained at Vin-a 1293.
⁵ visesakam karonti. Vin-a 1293 explains gaṇḍappadesa vicitrasaṅṭhānam visesakam karonti. ⁶ olokanakena oloketi. Vin-a 1293 says they looked out at the road (vīthi), having opened the window, vātapāna (on which see BD 2.259, n. 1). ⁷ Vin-a 1293 says, having opened the door, they stand showing half the body. ⁸ sanaccam kārapenti. Nuns should not go to see dancing, Nuns’ Bi-Pc 10. Vin-a 1293 says they had a dancing festival held, naṭasamajjam kārenti. ⁹ vesim vuttḥāpentī. Vesī may be a courtesan or a low-class woman. Vin-a 1293 explains by gaṇikā, a prostitute. Vuttḥāpeti can also mean to cause to raise, to remove; and it is the regular word used, especially in the Nuns’ Pācittiyas, for nuns ordaining nuns. Vin-a does not comment on it here.

they set up a tavern,¹ they set up a slaughter-house,² they offered (things) for sale in a shop,³ they engaged in usury,⁴ they engaged in trade, they kept slaves,⁵ they kept slave women, they kept servants, they kept servant women, they kept animals, they dealt in greens and leaves,⁶ they carried a piece of felt⁷ (for a razor). People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, nuns should not make (ointment marks) at the corners of their eyes ... nor should they carry a piece of felt (for a razor). Whoever should carry (one), there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

Now at that time the group of six nuns wore robes that were all dark green,⁸ they wore robes that were all yellow, they wore robes that were all red, they wore robes that were all crimson, they wore robes that were all black, they wore robes that were dyed all brownish-yellow, they wore robes that were dyed all reddish-yellow, they wore robes with borders that were not cut up, they wore robes with long borders, they wore robes with borders of flowers, they wore robes with borders of snakes’ hoods,⁹ they wore jackets, they wore (garments made of) the Tirīṭṭa tree. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Vin-a 1293 says that they sold strong drink. Cf. AN iii.208, where five trades not to be carried on by lay followers are enumerated. ² Vin-a 1293 says that they sold meat. ³ Vin-a 1293 says that they offered for sale (pasārenti, as at Vin 2.291) various and divers goods in a shop. ⁴ vaḍḍhi, profit, interest (on money, especially on loans); cf. DN-a 212; and Ja v.436. It was a Nissaggiya for monks (and nuns) to have money, Bu-NP 18. ⁵ dāsaṃ upaṭṭhāpenti. Vin-a 1293 says, “having chosen (or taken, gahetvā) a slave, they had a service done to themselves by him. And it is the same with women slaves and the rest.” ⁶ haritakapaṇṇikāṃ pakiṇanti. Vin-a 1293 reading haritakapattiyāṃ, with variant reading haritakapattikāṃ, says that they deal in greens, haritaka, as well as in ripe things, pakka (variant reading pakkika) and that they offered various things for sale in a shop. ⁷ namataka. See Kd 15.11.1, Kd 15.27.3. ⁸ As at Kd 8.29 for the group of six monks, except that for monks veṭhana, turbans, is added at the end. For notes see BD 4.438. ⁹ phaṇa. Siamese edition reads phala, fruits.

“Monks, robes that are all dark green should not be worn by nuns ... (garments made of) the Tirīṭa tree should not be worn. Whoever should wear (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain nun as she was passing away, spoke thus: “After I am gone, let my requisites be for the Order.” Monks and nuns who were there disputed, saying: “They are for us,” “They are for us.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, if a nun as she is passing away, should speak thus, ‘After I am gone, let my requisites be for the Order,’ in that case the Order of monks is not the owner, but they are for the Order of nuns. Monks, if a probationer ... if a woman novice, passing away ... the Order of monks is not the owner, but they are for the Order of nuns. Monks, if a monk as he is passing away, should speak thus ... the Order of nuns is not the owner, but they are for the Order of monks. Monks, if a novice ... if a lay-follower ... if a woman lay-follower ... if anyone else as he is passing away should speak thus, ‘After I am gone, let my requisites be for the Order,’ in that case the Order of nuns is not the owner, but they are for the Order of monks.”¹

Now at that time a certain woman who had formerly been a Mallian had gone forth among the nuns. She, having seen a feeble monk on a carriage road, having given him a blow with the edge of her shoulder, toppled him over. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can a nun give a monk a blow?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a blow should not be given to a monk by a nun. Whoever should give (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”² I allow, monks, that a nun, having seen a monk, should make way for him having stepped aside while (still) at a distance.”

¹ Vin-a 1294 explains that the five kinds of co-religionists (monks, nuns, probationers, male and female novices) cannot make a bequest as they like, for their things are the Order's and so their gifts at the time of death take no effect. Householders' bequests, on the other hand, do take effect. ² Cf. Bu-Pc 74 where it is an offence of expiation for a monk to give another a blow.

Now at that time a certain woman whose husband had gone away from home became with child by a lover.¹ She, having caused abortion, spoke thus to a nun dependent for alms on (her) family: “Come, lady, take away this foetus in a bowl.” Then that nun, having placed that foetus in a bowl, having covered it with her outer cloak, went away. Now at that time an undertaking had been made by a certain monk who walked for almsfood: “I will not partake of the first almsfood I receive without having given (of it) to a monk or a nun.” Then that monk, having seen that nun, spoke thus: “Come, sister, accept almsfood.”

“No, master,” she said. And a second time ... And a third time ... “No, master,” she said.

“I made an undertaking, sister, that I will not partake of the first almsfood that I receive without having given (of it) to a monk or a nun. Come, sister, accept almsfood.” Then that nun, being pressed by that monk, having pulled out her bowl, showed him, saying: “You see, master, a foetus in the bowl, but do not tell anyone.” Then that monk looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this nun take away a foetus in a bowl?” Then this monk told this matter to the monks. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this nun take away a foetus in a bowl?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a foetus should not be taken away in a bowl by a nun. Whoever should take one away, there is an offence of wrong doing. I allow, monks, when a nun has seen a monk, having pulled out her bowl, to show it to him.”

Now at that time the group of six nuns, having seen a monk, having turned (their bowls) upside down,² showed the bases of the bowls. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the group of six nuns, having seen a monk, having turned (their bowls) upside down, show the bases of the bowls?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns having seen a monk, should not show (him) the base of a bowl, having turned it upside down. I allow, monks, a nun who has seen a monk to show (him) her bowl, having set it upright, and whatever food there is in the bowl should be offered to the monk.”

¹ Cf. Vin 3.83. ² parivattetvā.

0.14.1 Now at that time a membrum virile came to be thrown away on a carriage road in Sāvattihī,¹ and nuns were looking at it.² People made an uproar and those nuns were ashamed. Then these nuns, having returned to the nunnery, told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns look at a membrum virile?” Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not look at a membrum virile. Whoever should look at one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

0.15.1
2.270 Now at that time people gave food to monks, the monks gave it to nuns. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs give to others what was given them for their own enjoyment? It is as though we do not know how to make a gift.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not give to others what was given you for your own enjoyment. Whoever should (so) give, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time food for the monks was (too) abundant. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give it to an Order.” There was an even greater abundance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, also to give away what belongs to an individual.”³

Now at that time the food for monks that was stored⁴ was (too) abundant. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make use of a store of food for monks, the monks having offered it to nuns.”¹

¹ Cf. Mil 124. ² sakkaccaṃ upanijjhāyati, as at Vin 1.193. ³ I.e. probably food specially given to different monks. Cf. puggalika at Kd 6.39, Kd 20.24. ⁴ sannidhikataṃ āmisarī. Cf. Bu-Pc 38, and see BD 2.339 for notes.

(The same repeated but reading nun for monk and vice versa).

Now at that time lodgings for monks were (too) abundant; the nuns had none.² The nuns sent a messenger to the monks, saying: “It were good, honoured sirs, if the masters would give us lodgings temporarily.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give lodgings to nuns temporarily.”

Now at that time menstruating nuns sat down and lay down on stuffed couches and stuffed chairs;³ the lodgings were soiled with blood. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not sit down or lie down on stuffed couches and stuffed chairs. Whoever should (so) sit lie down, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a household robe.”⁴ The household robe was soiled with blood. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a pin and a little cloth.”⁵ The little cloth fell down.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, having tied it with a thread, to tie it round the thighs.” The thread broke. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, a loin-cloth, a hip-string.”⁷

¹ bhikkhunihi bhikkhūhi paṭiggahāpetvā. Vin-a 1294 says, having accepted yesterday, the food that was set aside having been offered today by monks may be made use of by nuns. ² Or perhaps, not enough, na hoti. ³ Cf. Kd 16.2.7. ⁴ āvasathacivara. See Nuns’ Bi-Pc 47. ⁵ āṇicolaka. Vinaya Texts iii.348, n. 1 says “āṇi must here be ‘that part of the leg immediately above the knee, the front of the thigh,’ cf. Böhlingk-Roth, s.v. No. 2.” I think, however, two things must be meant, āṇi and colaka, or the next sentence would have repeated both, instead of only colaka. The point is that a “pin” was too insecure, and so “thread” was tried. Āṇi is a usual word for peg or pin. ⁶ nipphaṭati. Cf. the word at Vin 2.151 where it appears to mean to fall out or to fall in. Here it may imply to fall away from the pin. ⁷ saṁvelliyaṁ kaṭisuttakaṁ. Saṁvelliya forbidden to monks at Kd 15.29.5; kaṭisuttaka at Kd 15.2.1.

5.375 Now at that time the group of six nuns wore a hip-string the whole time. People ... spread it about, saying: "Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord He said: "Monks, nuns are not to wear a hip-string the whole time. Whoever should (so) wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a hip-string when they are menstruating."

The Second Portion for Repeating

THIRD RECITATION SECTION

0.17.1 Now at that time ordained women were to be seen without sexual characteristics and who were defective in sex and bloodless and with stagnant blood and who were always dressed and dripping and deformed and female eunuchs and man-like women and those whose sexuality was indistinct and those who were hermaphrodites.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"I allow you, monks, to question a woman who is being ordained about twenty-four things that are stumbling-blocks. And thus, monks, should she be questioned: 'You are not without sexual characteristics? ... You are not a hermaphrodite? Have you diseases like this:² leprosy, boils, eczema, consumption, epilepsy? Are you a human being? Are you a woman? Are you a free woman? Are you without debts? You are not in royal service? Are you allowed by your mother and father, by your husband?³ Have you completed twenty years of age?⁴ Are you complete as to bowl and robe? What is your name? What is the name of your woman proposer?'"⁵

0.17.2 Now at that time monks asked nuns about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, ordination in the Order of monks after she has been ordained on the one side, and has cleared herself (in regard to the stumbling-blocks) in the Order of nuns.”

¹ Same list occurs at Vin 3.129 in definition of "he abuses". Cf. the examination of male candidates for ordination at Kd 1.76. ² Cf. Kd 1.76-Kd 1.77 as far as to end of 17 below. ³ See Nuns' Bi-Pc 80. ⁴ See Nuns' Bi-Pc 71-Bi-Pc 73. ⁵ pavattinī. See Nuns' Bi-Pc 69, and BD 3.377 where pavattinī is defined as upajjhā, woman preceptor.

Now¹ at that time nuns asked those wishing for ordination, but who were not instructed, about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow them, monks, having instructed first, afterwards to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks.”

They instructed just there in the midst of the Order. As before, those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow them, monks, having instructed aside, to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks in the midst of the Order. And thus, monks, should she be instructed: First, she should be invited to choose a woman preceptor;² having invited her to choose a woman preceptor, a bowl and robes should be pointed out to her (with the words): ‘This is a bowl for you, this is an outer cloak, this is an upper robe, this is an inner robe, this is a vest,³ this is a bathing-cloth;⁴ go and stand in such and such a place’.”

Ignorant, inexperienced (nuns) instructed them. Those wishing for ordination, but who were not instructed, were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, they should not be instructed by ignorant, inexperienced (nuns). Whoever (such) should instruct them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to instruct by means of an experienced, competent (nun).”

¹ Cf. Vin 1.93f. for the questions put to monks on their ordination. ² upajjhā.

³ samkacchikā, cf. Vin 4.345. This and the bathing cloak make up the “five robes” for nuns, mentioned, e.g. at Vin 4.282 (Nuns’ Bi-Pc 24, Bi-Pc 25). ⁴ udakasāṭikā. One of the boons which Visākhā asked for at Vin 1.293 was that of bestowing bathing cloths on the Order of nuns; allowed at Vin 1.294. Their proper measurements are laid down at Vin 4.279.

Those who were not agreed upon instructed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, they should not be instructed by one who is not agreed upon. Whoever (such) should instruct them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to instruct by means of one who is agreed upon. And thus, monks, should she be agreed upon: oneself may be agreed upon by oneself, or another may be agreed upon by another. And how is oneself to be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, I could instruct So-and-so.’ Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself. And how is another to be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, So-and-so could instruct So-and-so.’ Thus may another be agreed upon by another.

“The nun who is agreed upon, having approached the one who wishes for ordination, should speak thus to her: ‘Listen, So-and-so. This is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking). When I am asking you in the midst of the Order about what is, you should say: “It is,” if it is so; you should say: “It is not,” if it is not so. Do not be at a loss, do not be abashed. I will ask you thus: “You are not without sexual characteristics? ... What is the name of your woman proposer?”’

“They arrived together. They should not arrive together. The instructor having arrived first, the Order should be informed (by her): ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She has been instructed by me. If it seems right to the Order, let So-and-so come.’ She should be told: ‘Come.’ Having made her arrange her upper robe over one shoulder, having made her honour the nuns' feet, having made her sit down on her haunches, having made her salute with joined palms, she should be made to ask for ordination, saying: 'Ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination. Ladies, may the Order raise me up out of compassion. And a second time, ladies ... And a third time, ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination. Ladies, may the Order raise me up out of compassion.'

"The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, I could ask So-and-so about the things that are stumbling-blocks. Listen, So-and-so, this is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking). I am asking you about what is. You should say, "It is," if it is so; you should say, "It is not," if it is not so. You are not without sexual characteristics? ... What is the name of your woman proposer?'

"The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She is quite pure in regard to the things which are stumbling-blocks, she is complete as to bowl and robes. So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain So-and-so through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. The Order is ordaining So-and-so through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. If the ordination of So-and-so through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so, is pleasing to the ladies, they should be silent: she to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, ... should speak. So-and-so is ordained by the Order through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand

Kd 20.1

BD 5,3

Kd 20.1

0.17.8
this.’”

2.274
5.379
“Taking her at once, having approached the Order of monks, having made her arrange her upper robe over one shoulder, having made her honour the monks’ feet, having made her sit down on her haunches, having made her salute with joined palms, she should be made to ask for ordination, saying: ‘I, the lady So-and-so, wish for ordination through the lady So-and-so, I am ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns. I am pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks). Ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination. Ladies, may the Order raise me up out of compassion. I, the lady So-and-so ... am pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks). And a second time ... I, the lady So-and-so ... am pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks.) And a third time, ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination Ladies, may the Order raise me up out of compassion.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination through So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns, she is pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks). So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination ... through the woman proposer So-and-so. The Order is ordaining So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. If the ordination of So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me ... should speak. So-and-so is ordained by the Order through the woman proposer So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

The shadow should be measured at once, the length of the season should be explained, the portion of the day should be explained, the formula should be explained, the nuns should be told: “Explain the three resources¹ to her and the eight things which are not to be done.”²

Now at that time nuns being uncertain as to seats in a refectory let the time go by.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, eight nuns (to be seated) according to seniority, the rest as they come in.” Now at that time nuns, thinking: ‘It is allowed by the Lord that eight nuns (may be seated) according to seniority, the rest as they come in,’ everywhere reserved⁴ (seats) just for eight nuns according to seniority, for the rest as they come in. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, (seats) in a refectory for eight nuns according to seniority, for the rest as they come in. Nowhere else should (a seat) be reserved according to seniority. Whoever should reserve (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time nuns did not invite.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not not invite. Whoever should not invite should be dealt with according to the rule.”⁶ Now at that time nuns, having invited among themselves, did not invite in an Order of monks. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns, having invited among themselves, should not not invite in an Order of monks. Whoever should not invite should be dealt with according to the rule.”⁷

Now at that time nuns, inviting (only) on the one side (of the Order) together with monks, made an uproar. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not invite (only) on the one side together with monks. Whoever should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Four resources for monks, see Kd 1.77. But the third, forest-dwelling, is forbidden to nuns at Kd 20.23. ² At Kd 1.78 there are four akaraniyaṇi for monks which correspond to their four Pārājikas. The nuns, however, have eight Pārājikas (see BD 3, Introduction, p. xxxff.) and there is no doubt that reference is here being made to these. ³ Vin-a 1294 says “making one get up, making another sit down, they let the right time for eating go by.” The right time for this is before midday, see Vin 4.86. Vin 4.166 (the wrong time). ⁴ paṭibāhati, as at Kd 16.6.4, Kd 16.7. ⁵ See Nuns’ Bi-Pc 57, and BD 3.354 for further references. ⁶ Nuns’ Bi-Pc 57. ⁷ Nuns’ Bi-Pc 57.

Now at that time nuns, inviting before the meal, let the (right) time¹ go by. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, to invite after a meal.” Inviting after a meal, they came to be at a wrong time.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, having invited (among themselves) one day, to invite the Order of monks the following day.”

Now at that time the entire Order of nuns, while inviting, created a disturbance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, to agree upon one experienced, competent nun to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. And thus, monks, should she be agreed upon: First, a nun should be asked; having asked her, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the nun So-and-so to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the nun So-and-so to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. If the agreement upon the nun So-and-so to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns is pleasing to the ladies, they should be silent; she to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The nun So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. It is pleasing to the Order. Therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

“That nun who has been agreed upon, taking the Order of nuns (with her), having approached the Order of monks, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks’ feet, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘The Order of nuns, masters, is inviting the Order of monks in respect of what has been seen, heard, or suspected. Masters, let the Order of monks speak to the Order of nuns out of compassion and they, seeing (the offence), will make amends. And a second time, masters ... And a third time, masters, the Order of nuns is inviting the Order of monks ... will make amends’.¹

¹ See above, BD 5,379, n. 3. ² I.e. for inviting in the Order of monks, as the context shows.

Now at that time nuns suspended the Observance for monks, they suspended the Invitation, they issued commands, they set up authority,² they asked for leave, they reprovved, they made to remember.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a monk’s Observance is not to be suspended by a nun: even if it is suspended, it is not (really) suspended, and for her who suspends it there is an offence of wrong-doing. The Invitation should not be suspended: even if it is suspended it is not (really) suspended, and for her who suspends it there is an offence of wrong-doing. Commands should not be issued: even if issued they are not (really) issued, and for her who issues them there is an offence of wrong-doing. Authority should not be set up: even if set up it is not (really) set up, and for her who sets it up there is an offence of wrong-doing. Leave should not be asked for: even if asked for it is not (really) asked for, and for her who asks there is an offence of wrong-doing. She should not reprove: the one reprovved is not (really) reprovved and for her who reprovves there is an offence of wrong-doing. She should not make to remember: the one made to remember is not (really) made to remember, and for her who makes to remember there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks suspended the Observance for nuns ... (as above) ... they made to remember. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow you to suspend through a monk a nun’s Observance: and if it is suspended it is properly suspended, and there is no offence for the one who suspends it ... to make to remember: and if she is made to remember she is properly made to remember, and there is no offence for the one who makes her remember.”

¹ Cf. Kd 4.1.14 ² It would be preferable to read anuvādam paṭṭhapenti instead of anuvādam ṭhapenti; cf. Kd 11.5. ³ Cf. Kd 11.5.

0.21.1 Now at that time the group of six nuns went in a vehicle,¹ both in one that had a bull in the middle yoked with cows, and in one that had a cow in the middle yoked with bulls. People ... spread it about, saying: “As at the festival of the Ganges and the Mahī.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a nun should not go in a vehicle. Whoever should go in one should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

Now at that time a certain nun came to be ill; she was not able to go on foot. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a vehicle for (a nun) who is ill.” Then it occurred to nuns: “Now, (should the vehicle be) yoked with cows or yoked with bulls?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a handcart yoked with a cow, yoked with a bull.”

2.277
5:383 Now at that time a certain nun became exceedingly uncomfortable owing to the jolting of a vehicle. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a palanquin, a sedan-chair.”³

0.22.1 Now at that time the courtesan Aḍḍhakāsī⁴ had gone forth among the nuns. She was anxious to go to Sāvattthī, thinking, ‘I will be ordained in the Lord’s presence.’ Men of abandoned life heard it said that the courtesan Aḍḍhakāsī was anxious to go to Sāvattthī and they beset the way. But the courtesan Aḍḍhakāsī heard it said that the men of abandoned life were besetting the way and she sent a messenger to the Lord saying: “Even¹ I am anxious for ordination. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to ordain even through a messenger.”²

¹ Cf. Kd 5.9.4–Kd 5.10.3, and also Nuns’ Bi-Pc 85. ² Nuns’ Bi-Pc 85. ³ pāṭaṅkim. Vin-a 1295 says paṭapoṭalikam, variant reading patapoṭṭalikam, cf. Vin-a 1085. ⁴ Her verses at Thig.25, Thig.26. Cf. aḍḍhakāsika at Kd 8.2.

They ordained through a messenger who was a monk. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not ordain through a messenger who is a monk. Whoever should (so) ordain there is an offence of wrong-doing.” They ordained through a messenger who was a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... through a messenger who was an ignorant, inexperienced (woman). “Monks, you should not ordain through a messenger who is an ignorant, inexperienced (woman). Whoever should (so) ordain there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through a messenger who is an experienced, competent nun.

“That nun who is the messenger, having approached the Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks’ feet, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak to it thus: ‘The lady So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side, in the Order of nuns, and is pure;³ she is not coming only on account of some danger. The lady So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination; may the Order out of compassion⁴ raise up that lady. The lady So-and-so ... is not coming on account of some danger. And a second time the lady So-and-so is asking the Order ... raise up that lady. The lady So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns, and is pure; she is not coming only on account of some danger. And a third time the lady So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination; may the Order out of compassion raise up that lady.’

The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns and is pure; she is not coming only on account of some danger. So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through So-and-so ... So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer So-and-so. The Order is ordaining So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. If the ordination of So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.' The shadow should be measured at once,¹ the length of the season should be explained, the portion of the day should be explained, the formula should be explained, the nuns should be told: 'Explain the three resources to her and the eight things which are not to be done'."

¹ Oldenberg has hi, Thig-a 31 pi. ² It was probably usual for a nun to be ordained through an Order of not less than ten persons, as it was for monks, Kd 1.31.2; Kd 9.4.1. Vin-a 1295 says “ordination through a messenger existed on account of any one of the ten dangers.” Here, danger from human beings. ³ As to the stumbling-blocks. Cf. use of visuddhā at Kd 20.17.2. ⁴ Cf. Kd 1.76.8.

Now at that time nuns were staying in a forest; men of abandoned life seduced them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, nuns should not stay in a forest. Whoever should stay (in one) there is an offence of wrong-doing."²

Now at that time a storeroom³ came to be given to an Order of nuns by a lay-follower. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a storeroom." The storeroom was not enough.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a dwelling."⁵

¹ As at Kd 20.17.8. ² Cf. Kd 20.17.8, n.. ³ uddosita. See BD 3.177, n. 2; also BD 2.16, n. 2. Vin-a 1295 here again explains by bhaṇḍasālā, a hall for goods. ⁴ na sammati, as at Kd 15.13.3. Vin-a 1295 explains by nappahoti, did not suffice. ⁵ upassaya; here Vin-a 1295 says ghara, a house.

The dwelling was not enough. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, building operations.”¹ The building operations were not enough. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to build even what belongs to an individual.”²

Now at that time a certain woman had gone forth among the nuns when she was already pregnant, and after she had gone forth she was delivered of a child.³ Then it occurred to that nun: “Now what line of conduct should be followed by me in regard to this boy?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow her, monks, to look after him until he attains to years of discretion.”⁴ Then it occurred to that nun: ‘It is not possible for me to live alone,⁵ nor is it possible for another nun to live with a boy. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?’ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, having agreed upon one nun, to give her to that nun as a companion.⁶ And thus, monks, should she be agreed upon: First, that nun should be asked; having asked her, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. If it is pleasing to the Order, the Order may agree upon the nun So-and-so as companion to the nun So-and-so. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the nun So-and-so as companion to the nun So-and-so. If the agreement upon the nun So-and-so as companion to the nun So-and-so is pleasing to the ladies, they should be silent; she to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The nun So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order as companion to the nun So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Then it occurred to that nun who was the companion: ‘Now what line of conduct should be followed by me in regard to this boy?’ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, to behave in regard to that boy exactly as they would behave to another man, except for sleeping under the same roof.”¹

¹ navakamma, here probably more than “repairs.” Vin-a 1295 says “I allow you to carry out building operations for nuns for the sake of the Order.” ² puggalikaṃ kāturaṃ, or, even for individuals. Buddhaghosa has no note. Cf. the word at Kd 20.15.1.

³ At Nuns’ Bi-Pc 61 it is an offence to ordain a pregnant woman, but it is not an offence for the one who ordains her if she thinks that she is not pregnant. ⁴ Vin-a 1295 says until he is able to eat and wash himself properly. ⁵ Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Ss 3, Nuns’ Bi-Pc 14. ⁶ Cf. BD 3.190, BD 3.267, BD 3.323, BD 3.357, BD 3.360.

0.25.3
Now at that time a certain nun who had fallen into an offence against an important rule, was undergoing mānatta.² Then it occurred to that nun: “It is neither possible for me to live alone, nor is it possible for another nun to live with me. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks having agreed upon one nun, to give her to that nun as a companion. And thus, monks, should she be agreed upon: ... (as in Kd 20.26.1) ‘... Thus do I understand this..’”

0.26.1
Now at that time a certain nun, having disavowed the training,³ left the Order;⁴ having come back again she asked the nuns for ordination. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there is no disavowal of the training by a nun, but in so far as she is one who leaves the Order,⁵ she is in consequence not a nun.”

0.26.2
5:38
Now at that time a certain nun, wearing the saffron robes, went over to the fold of a sect;⁶ having come back again she asked the nuns for ordination. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, whatever nun, wearing the saffron robes, goes over to the fold of a sect, on coming back should not be ordained.”⁷

¹ Vin-a 1295 says excepting only a sleeping place in the same house, sahāgāraseyya-mattarū. But, it adds, the mother is able to lie down and having put the child on her breast to wash it, make it drink, feed it and adorn it. ² Cf. the 5th and 8th important rules at Kd 20.1.4. Also on mānatta see Kd 12.6.1. ³ On this state of dissatisfaction see Vin 3.24–Vin 3.28. ⁴ vibbhami. This, and disavowing the training, occur at e.g. Kd 2.22.3. ⁵ vibbhantā. Vin-a 1295 says if, leaving the Order at her own pleasure and approval, having clothed herself in white clothes, she is thus not a nun, but this is not through disavowing the training. ⁶ tittihāyatanarū samkama, as at Vin 1.69, where there is a similar rule for monks. ⁷ Vin-a 1295 says not only should she not be ordained, but she cannot even obtain the “going forth.”

Now at that time nuns being scrupulous, did not consent to greeting by men, to their cutting (their) hair, to their cutting (their) nails, to their dressing a sore. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, to consent to (these actions).”¹

Now at that time nuns were sitting down cross-legged,² consenting to the touch of heels.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not sit down cross-legged. Whoever should (so) sit down, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain nun was ill. There was no comfort for her if she was not cross-legged. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, the half cross-legged (posture)⁴ for nuns.”

Now at that time nuns relieved themselves in a privy; the group of six nuns caused abortion there. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not relieve themselves in a privy. Whoever should do so there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to relieve themselves where it is open underneath, covered on top.”⁵

¹ See Nuns’ Bi-Pj 8 It would seem as if these things were permissible if neither party were filled with desire. ² pallaṅkena nisīdanti. Vin-a 1296 says pallaṅkaṅ ābhujjitva nisīdanti. So probably pallaṅka does not mean “divan” here as it does at Vin 4.299, see BD 3.271, n. 3. ³ pañhisamphassa. Not at all clear whose heels were touching, but probably the nuns’ next on either side. Pallaṅkena may have double meaning of sitting down cross-legged and sitting down “divan-wise,” i.e. sitting down cross-legged and in a row. It was probably disturbing to meditation if heels touched, hence the prohibition. ⁴ aḍḍhapallaṅka. Vin-a 1296 says the pallaṅka is made having drawn in one foot (only and leaving the other straight out). Of course, if pallaṅka is taken as divan, aḍḍhapallaṅka must be half a divan—Vinaya Texts iii.367, n. 2 says “probably a cushion.” ⁵ The idea is that there should be no privacy. Cf. Kd 18.9, Kd 18.10.

Now at that time nuns bathed with chunam. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe with chunam. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, the red powder of rice husks and clay.”¹

Now at that time nuns bathed with scented clay. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe with scented clay.² Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, them, monks, ordinary clay.”

Now at that time nuns, bathing in a bathroom, created a disturbance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe in a bathroom. Whoever should bathe (in one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time nuns bathed against the stream consenting to the touch of the current.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe against the stream. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time nuns bathed not at a ford; men of abandoned life seduced them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe not at a ford. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ kukkusaṃ mattikaṃ. Vin-a 1296 explains by saying, kuṇḍakaṅ c’eva mattikaṅ ca, the red powder of rice husks as well as clay. Both these were allowed to monks for building operations. Kd 16.3.1. ² Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc 88, Bi-Pc 89. ³ dhārāsamphassa.

Now at that time nuns bathed at a ford for men. People ... spread it about, saying, “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe at a ford for men. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them monks, to bathe at a ford for women.”¹

The Third Portion for Repeating

Told is the Tenth Section: that on Nuns

IN THIS SECTION ARE A HUNDRED AND SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

The Gotamid asked for the going forth, the Truthfinder did not allow it, from Kapilavatthu the Leader went to Vesālī. /

Covered with dust² she made it known to Ānanda in the porch.

Saying: “Is she able?” he asked about the method; saying,

“(She was your) mother” and “(your) nurse.” /

A century and that day, no monk, desiring,

Invitation, important rules, two years, not abusing, /

Complying with these eight rules for exhortation³ during her life.

Acceptance of the important rules—that is the ordination for her. /

A thousand years to only five (hundred) by the similes of the pot-thieves, mildew, red-rust:⁴ thus an injury to what is true dhamma. /

May, looking forward,⁵ build a dyke; again it is the stability of what is true dhamma.

To be ordained, the lady, greeting according to seniority, /

Will not carry out like this, in common and not in common, about exhortation, and about the Pātimokkha, “now, by whom?”, to a nunnery, /

If they do not know he explains, and they do not confess,⁶ through a monk, to acknowledge through a monk, acknowledgement through a nun, /

He explained, (formal) act, by a monk, they looked down on, or by a nun, to explain, and to quarrel, having cancelled, and about Uppala-(vaṇṇā), /

¹ mahilātitthe. On nuns bathing see also Vin 1.293, Vin 4.259. Vin 4.278. ² Siamese edition reads rajokiṇṇā, as suggested at Vin 2.328; Sinhalese edition rajokiṇṇena.

³ Oldenberg’s text and Sinhalese read ovāden’ aṭṭha te dhammā; Siamese edition ovaṭo ca aṭṭha dhammā (with variant reading as text). ⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read mañjēṭṭhikā (Sinhalese reading -ka) for Oldenberg’s mañcaṭṭhika-.

⁵ Oldenberg: pā eva, probably for paṭigacc’ eva of Kd 20.1.6. But Sinhalese edition reads ālim bandheyy’ upamāhi, and Siamese pālim bandheyy’ upamāhi, with variant readings as in Oldenberg. ⁶ Here karonti, for paṭikaronti.

In Sāvattḥī, muddy water, did not greet, bodies and thighs and private parts and the group offended and associated with, /
Not to be greeted is the penalty, for nuns likewise again, and the prohibition, exhortation, is it allowable? he went away, / Ignorant, without ground, decision, exhortation, an Order of five, two or three, they did not undertake, ignorant ones, ill, setting out on a journey, /

Forest-dwellers, they did not announce, and they did not come back, long, bamboo and leather, and woven cloth, plaited, and fringed,
And plaited cloth, and fringed, and plaited thread, (and) fringed, / Cow's leg-bone, cow's jaw-bone, backs of the hands, likewise the feet,¹ thighs (and) faces, gums, smearing, rubbing (and) with chunam, /
They marked,² and painting the body, painting the face, likewise the two, ointment marks (and) distinguishing marks, from a window, in the light, and about dancing, /

2.282 Courtesan, tavern, slaughter-house, a shop, usury, trade, they kept slaves, women slaves, servants, servant women, / Animals, and greens, they carried pieces of felt, robes that were dark green, yellow, red, crimson, that were black, / Brownish-yellow, reddish-yellow, not cut up, and long, and if they should wear (robes) with (borders) of flowers, snakes' hoods,³ jackets, as well as (garments made of the) Tirīṭa tree. /

5.391 If a nun, after she has gone, on a probationer, on a woman novice bestows her requisites, it is the (Order of) nuns that is the owner. /
If a woman lay-follower on a monk, on a novice, on a lay-follower, and on others is bestowing her requisites, the (Order of) monks is the owner. /

About a Mallian (woman), foetus, base of the bowl, membrum and concerning food,
and abundant, even greater, food that was stored, /
As for monks below, do likewise for nuns, lodgings, menstruating, was soiled, and cloth and pin,⁴ /
They broke, and all the time, there were to be seen:
beginning with women without sexual characteristics, those defective in sex, bloodless, just the same for those with stagnant

¹ Sinhalese, pādam; Oldenberg: pari; Siamese padam as suggested at Vin 2.328.

² Oldenberg: lañchenti; Sinhalese: lañchanti; Siamese: lañcenti. ³ pala here, instead of phaṇa of Kd 20.10.5. Sinhalese and Siamese read phala. ⁴ Oldenberg: paṭāni ca. Vin 2.329 suggests patati ca, "and it fell down," evidently to replace nip-phaṭati of Kd 20.16.2. But I prefer to take it as a substitute for ānicolaka (on which see note, BD 5.374 above). For paṭa is also a word for "cloth"; thus the compound paṭāni supports my view that āni and colaka are words for two separate items.

blood, /

Always dressed, dripping, deformed, women eunuchs, man-like women, and those of indistinct sexuality, and those who were hermaphrodites, /

Beginning with those defective in sexual characteristics and going as far as hermaphrodites.

This is from the abbreviation below: leprosy, boils, eczema and /

Consumption, epilepsy, are you a human woman? and a free woman?
without debts (and) not in the royal service and allowed (and) twenty, / Complete, and what name and that of your woman proposer?:

having asked about twenty-four stumbling-blocks, there is ordination. /
They were at a loss, instructed, and likewise in the midst of the Order, a woman preceptor should be chosen,¹ outer cloak, inner and upper robes,
And vest (and) bathing cloth having explained them they may be used,² ignorant ones, not agreed on, on one side, if she asks, questioned about the stumbling-blocks, /

Ordained on one side, likewise again in the Order of monks, the shadow, the season, the day and formula, the three resources, /
The eight things not to be done, the right time, or everywhere eight, nuns did not invite, and the Order of monks likewise, /

Disturbance, before the meal, and at the wrong time, disturbance,
Observance, Invitation, commands, authority, /

Leave, reproved, made to remember: objected to by the great Sage.

Just as monks, so nuns: allowed by the great Sage (was) /

A vehicle, and ill (and) yoked, jolting vehicle, Aḍḍhakāsika, monk, probationer, novice, woman novice and ignorant (woman), /

In a forest, a store-room by a lay-follower, a dwelling, the building operations were not enough, pregnant, alone, /

And sleeping under the same roof, against an important rule, and having disavowed, went over to the fold of,

greeting and hair and nails and treating a sore,³ /

Cross-legged, and ill, privy, with chunam, scented clay, in a bathroom, against the stream, not at a ford, and at one for men, /

The Great Gotamid asked and also judiciously did Ānanda.

There were four assemblies for going forth in the dispensation of the Conqueror. /

For the sake of arousing emotion for what is true dhamma and for awakening

it was taught thus by the Awakened One, as medicine for a disease. /

Other women also, recognised thus in what is true dhamma, nurture the everlasting state¹ where, having gone, they grieve not.

¹ upajjhā gāha. ² pesaye. ³ vakakammannā should probably read vaṇa (paṭi) kammanāṃ as at Kd 20.27.1, Sinhalese and Siamese editions.

¹ accuta ṭhāna, the place not deceased from, not passed away from, not fallen from.

21. (RECITATION WITH) FIVE HUNDRED (PAÑCASATA)

ORIGIN OF THE COUNCIL

Then¹ the venerable Kassapa the Great addressed the monks, saying: “Once upon a time, your reverences, I was going along the high-road from Pāvā to Kusināra together with a large Order of monks, with at least five hundred monks.² Then I, your reverences, stepping aside from the way, sat down at the root of a certain tree. Now at that time a certain Naked Ascetic, having picked up a flower of the Coral Tree³ at Kusināra, was going along the high-road to Pāvā. Then I, your reverences, saw that Naked Ascetic coming in the distance, and seeing him I spoke thus to him: ‘Do you, your reverence not know about our Teacher?’ He said: ‘Yes, I know, your reverence, the recluse Gotama attained nibbāna a week ago. Because of that I picked up this flower of the Coral Tree.’

“Your reverences, of those monks who were not passionless, some, stretching forth their arms, wailed, they fell down hurting themselves, they reeled backwards and forwards, saying: ‘Too soon has the Lord attained nibbāna, too soon has the Well-farer attained nibbāna, too soon has the Eye in the World disappeared.’ But those monks who were passionless, these, mindful, circumspect, bore it, saying: ‘Impermanent are compounded things—what is here possible because of this?

¹ Cf. DN ii.962 ² Quoted at Kh-a 91, Vin-a 5. ³ mandārava. Cf. DN ii.137; Erythrina fulgens. A tree growing only in heaven. If its flowers were found on the earth something special must have happened. Not the same as the Pāricchattaka, also a celestial coral-tree, of which there were five.

“Then I, your reverences, spoke thus to these monks: ‘Enough, your reverences, do not grieve, do not lament, for has it not already been explained by the Lord: ‘Of every single thing that is dear and beloved there is variation, separation, becoming otherwise. What is here possible, your reverences, because of this: that whatever is born, has become, is composite, is liable to dissolution? Indeed, thinking: ‘Let not that be dissolved’—such a situation does not exist”¹

“Then at that time, your reverences,² one named Subhadda, who had gone forth when old, was sitting in that assembly. Then your reverences, Subhadda who had gone forth when old spoke thus to these monks: ‘Enough, your reverences, do not grieve, do not lament, we are well rid of this great recluse. We were worried when he said: “This is allowable to you, this is not allowable to you.” But now we will be able to do as we like and we won’t do what we don’t like’.

“Come, let us, your reverences, chant dhamma and discipline before what is not dhamma shines out and dhamma is withheld, before what is not discipline shines out and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not-dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble, before those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”³

“Well then, honoured sir, let the elder select monks.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great selected five hundred perfected ones, less one. Monks spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Great:⁴

“Honoured sir, this Ānanda, although he is still a learner, could not be one to follow a wrong course through desire, anger, delusion, fear; and he has mastered much dhamma and discipline under the Lord. Well, now, honoured sir, let the elder select the venerable Ānanda as well.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great selected the venerable Ānanda as well.

¹ Also at DN ii.118. ² At DN ii.162 the Subhadda incident is placed before the speech which here precedes it. At DN-a 599 he is identified with the barber of Ātuma who went forth when old, and who, as told at Vin 1.249, was angry when Gotama refused to accept the meal he had prepared. The above incident was his revenge. ³ As at Kd 22.1.7. Quoted at DN-a 3,602, Vin-a 6. ⁴ Quoted at DN-a 5, Kh-a 92, Vin-a 7.

Then it occurred to the monks who were elders:¹ “Now, where should we chant dhamma and discipline?” Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “There is great resort for alms at Rājagaha and lodgings are abundant. Suppose that we, spending the rains at Rājagaha, should chant dhamma and discipline (there), and that no other monks were to come up to Rājagaha for the rains.”²

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying: “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon these five hundred monks to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks. This is the motion. Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon these five hundred monks to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks. If the agreement upon these five hundred monks to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks, is pleasing to the venerable ones you should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. These five hundred monks are agreed upon by the Order to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and (it is agreed) that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus, do I understand this.”

Then the monks who were elders went to Rājagaha to chant dhamma and discipline.³ Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “Now, repairs to broken and dilapidated parts were praised by the Lord. Come, let us during the first month, make repairs to the broken and dilapidated parts; having assembled in the middle month, we will chant dhamma and discipline.” Then the monks who were elders made repairs to the broken and dilapidated parts during the first month.

¹ Quoted at DN-a 5, Vin-a 7. ² The elders did not want others to take part in the Council; but if they came they would have to so as to render valid the proceedings. For had only part of an assembly or Order present there taken part in them, the proceedings would have been invalid for they would have been carried out by an incomplete assembly, vagga. ³ Some of this paragraph quoted at DN-a 8.

21.1.6

5.396

Then the venerable Ānanda, thinking:¹ “Tomorrow is the assembly. Now it is not suitable in me that I, being (only) a learner, should go to the assembly,” and having passed much of that night in mindfulness as to body, when the night was nearly spent thinking: “I will lie down,” he inclined his body, but (before) his head had touched the mattress and while his feet were free from the ground—in that interval his mind was freed from the cankers with no residuum (for rebirth) remaining. Then the venerable Ānanda, being a perfected one, went to the assembly.²

21.1.7

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying:³ “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order I could question Upāli on discipline.” Then the venerable Upāli informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, questioned on discipline by the venerable Kassapa the Great, could answer.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great spoke thus to the venerable Upāli: “Where,⁴ reverend Upāli, was the first offence involving defeat laid down?”

“At Vesālī, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

“Regarding Sudinna the Kalandaka.”

“On what subject?”

“On sexual intercourse.”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the first offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him as to the ¹ Cf. DN-a 9–10, which differs somewhat. ² Quoted at DN-a 10. ³ Quoted DN-a 11.

⁴ Quoted at DN-a 12, Vin-a 30.

individual¹ and he questioned him as to what was laid down and he questioned him as to what was further laid down² and he questioned him as to what was an offence and he questioned him as to what was no offence.³

“Then, reverend Upāli, where was the second offence involving defeat laid down?”

“In Rājagaha, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

“Regarding Dhaniya, the potter’s son.”

“On what subject?”

“On taking what is not given.”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the second offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him ... as to what was no offence.

“Then, reverend Upāli, where was the third offence involving defeat laid down?”

“At Vesālī, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

“Regarding several monks.”

“On what subject?”

“On human beings.”⁴

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the third offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him ... as to what was no offence.

“Then, reverend Upāli, where was the fourth offence involving defeat laid down?”

“At Vesālī, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

¹ These first three questions are quoted at Vin-a 30. ² anupaññatti; the additions made to the rule that was laid down, the paññatti, after it had been first laid down. Cf. Vin 5.2. ³ These are the cases mentioned after the Old Commentary’s explanations of the words of the rules. ⁴ manussaviggaha. “Depriving of life” is to be understood.

“Regarding the monks on the banks of the Vaggumudā.”

“On what subject?”

“On conditions of further-men.”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the fourth offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him as to ... what was no offence. In this same way he questioned him about both the disciplines.¹ Constantly questioned, the venerable Upāli answered.²

21.1.8

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me.³ If it seems right to the Order, I could question Ānanda about dhamma.” Then the venerable Ānanda informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, questioned on dhamma by the venerable Kassapa the Great, could answer.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:⁴

5.398

“Where, reverend Ānanda, was the Brahmajāla⁵ spoken?”

“Honoured sir, between Rājagaha and Nālandā in the royal rest-house at Ambalaṭṭhikā.”

“With whom?”

“Suppiya the wanderer and Brahmadata the brahmin youth.”⁶ Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Ānanda as to the provenance of the Brahmajāla and he questioned him as to the individual(s).

“But where, reverend Ānanda, was the Sāmaññaphala⁷ spoken?”⁸

“In Rājagaha, honoured sir, in Jīvaka’s mango grove.”

“With whom?”

“With Ajātasattu, the son of the Videhan (lady).”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable

¹ I.e. that for monks and that for nuns. ² Quoted at DN-a 12. ³ Quoted at DN-a 13. ⁴ Quoted at DN-a 14. ⁵ The first Suttanta in the Dīgha. ⁶ Here both Vin-a 16 and DN-a 14 add: “On what subject?” “On praise and not praise.” ⁷ The second Suttanta in the Dīgha. ⁸ Quoted at Vin-a 16. After this sentence DN-a 14 proceeds differently.

Ānanda as to the provenance of the Sāmaññaphala and he questioned him as to the individual. In this same way he questioned him about the five Nikāyas. Constantly questioned, the venerable Ānanda answered.

ON THE LESSER AND MINOR TRAINING RULES

Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the monks who were elders: “The Lord, honoured sirs, spoke thus to me at the time of his attaining nibbāna: ‘If the Order, Ānanda, after my death is willing, the lesser and minor rules of training¹ may be abolished’.”²

“But did you, reverend Ānanda, ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’”

“No, I, honoured sirs, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’”

Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat, except for the rules for the thirteen offences entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the two undetermined offences, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the thirty offences of expiation involving forfeiture, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the ninety-two offences of expiation, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the four offences which ought to be confessed, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.”

¹ See BD 3, Introduction, p. x and Bu-Pc 72, especially BD 3.41 where see n. 1 for further references; also see Questions of King Milinda i.202f. ² DN ii.154.

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying: “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. There are rules of training for us which affect householders, and householders know concerning us: ‘This is certainly allowable for the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, this is certainly not allowable.’ If we were to abolish the lesser and minor rules of training there would be those who would say: ‘At the time of his cremation¹ a rule of training had been laid down by the recluse Gotama for disciples; while the Teacher was amongst them these trained themselves in the rules of training, but since the Teacher has attained nibbāna among them, they do not now train themselves in the rules of training.’ If it seems right to the Order, the Order should not lay down what has not been laid down, nor should it abolish what has been laid down. It should proceed in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down.² This is the motion.³ Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. There are rules of training for us ... ‘... these do not now train themselves in the rules of training.’ The Order is not laying down what has not been laid down, nor is it abolishing what has been laid down. It is proceeding in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down. If the not laying down of what has not been laid down, if the not abolishing of what has been laid down, if the proceeding in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down are pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom they are not pleasing should speak. The Order is not laying down what has not been laid down, it is not abolishing what has been laid down, it is proceeding in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

Then the monks who were elders spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “This, reverend Ānanda, is an offence of wrong-doing for you, in that you did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’ Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ dhūmakālikam, as at Kd 16.17.1. ² Cf. Vin 3.231 \(Bu-NP 15.1.2\). ³ This speech of Kassapa’s, as far as here, is quoted at DN-a 592.

“I, honoured sirs, out of unmindfulness, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’ I do not see that as an offence of wrong-doing,¹ yet even out of faith in the venerable ones I confess that as an offence of wrong-doing.”

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you sewed the Lord’s cloth for the rains² after having stepped on it. Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

“But I, honoured sirs, not out of disrespect, sewed the Lord’s cloth for the rains after having stepped on it. I do not see ... but even out of faith in the venerable ones I confess that as an offence of wrong-doing.”

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you had the Lord’s body first of all honoured by women; because these were weeping, the Lord’s body was defiled by tears. Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

“But I, honoured sirs, thinking: ‘Do not let these be (here) at a wrong time,³ had the Lord’s body honoured first of all by women. I do not see that as an offence of wrong-doing ... but even out of faith ...”

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you,⁴ (although) a broad hint was being given, a palpable sign was being made, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘Let the Lord remain for a (full) lifespan,⁵ let the well-farer remain for a (full) lifespan for the welfare of the many-folk, for the happiness of the many-folk, out of compassion for the world, for the good, the welfare, the happiness of devas and mankind.’ Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Cf. Kd 10.1.8 ² vassikasāṭhikā, see BD 2.134, n. 1. Defined at Vin 4.173 (BD 3.99).

³ mā yimā vikāle ahesum̐. Vin-a 1297 explains by mā imāsaṃ vikāle gamanāni ahesum̐, do not let there be comings of these at a wrong time. ⁴ Cf.

AN iv.309–AN iv.310, DN ii.103, DN ii.115, SN v.259, Ud 62. ⁵ kappa. See GS iv.206, n. AN-a iv.149 = SN-a iii.251 = Ud-a 323 calls it āyukappa, and say whatever is the length of men’s life at this and that time, bringing that to the full, let him remain.

“But I, honoured sirs, because my mind was obsessed¹ with Māra, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘Let the Lord remain ... the happiness of devas and mankind.’ I do not see ... out of faith ...”

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you made an effort for the going forth of women in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.² Confess this offence of wrong-doing.”

“But I, honoured sirs, made an effort for the going forth of women in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, thinking: ‘This Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great,³ is the Lord’s aunt, foster-mother, nurse, giver of milk, for when the Lord’s mother passed away, she suckled him.’ I do not see that as an offence of wrong-doing, but even out of faith in the venerable ones I confess that as an offence of wrong-doing.”

21.1.11
Now at that time the venerable Purāṇa was walking on almstour in the Southern Hills together with a large Order of monks, with at least five hundred monks. Then the venerable Purāṇa, having stayed in the Southern Hills for as long as he found suiting, after the monks who were elders had chanted dhamma and discipline, 2.290
, approached Rājagaha, the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels’ feeding place, and the monks who were elders; having approached, having exchanged friendly greetings with the monks who were elders, he 5.402 sat down at a respectful distance. The monks who were elders spoke thus to the venerable Purāṇa as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

“Reverend Purāṇa, dhamma and discipline have been chanted by monks who are elders. Submit yourself⁴ to this chanting.”

“Your reverences, well chanted by the elders are dhamma and discipline, but in that way that I heard it in the Lord’s presence, that I received it in his presence, in that same way will I bear it in mind.”

¹ As at Vin 4.94, Vin 4.229. ² Above, Kd 20.1. ³ As at Kd 20.13; MN iii.253. ⁴ up-ehi, as at Kd 19.3.3 (towards the end).

ON THE HIGHER PENALTY

Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the monks who were elders: “Honoured sirs, the Lord, at the time of attaining nibbāna, spoke thus to me: ‘Well now, Ānanda, after I am gone, let the Order enjoin the higher penalty¹ for the monk Channa.’”²

“But did you, reverend Ānanda, ask the Lord: ‘But what, Lord, is the higher penalty?’”

“I, honoured sirs, did ask the Lord: ‘But what, Lord, is the higher penalty?’ He said, ‘Ānanda, Channa may say whatever he likes to monks, but the monk Channa must neither be spoken to, nor exhorted nor instructed by monks.’”³

“Well then, reverend Ānanda, do you yourself enjoin the higher penalty on the monk Channa.”

“But how can I, honoured sirs, enjoin the higher penalty on the monk Channa? That monk is fierce and rough.”

“Well then, reverend Ānanda, go along together with many monks.”

“Very well, honoured sirs,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered these monks in assent, having, together with a large Order of monks, with at least five hundred monks, disembarked at Kosambī from a boat going upstream,⁴ sat down at the root of a certain tree not far from King Udena’s⁵ pleasure grove.

Now at that time King Udena was amusing himself in his pleasure grove together with his concubines. Then King Udena’s concubines heard:⁶ “It is said that our teacher, master Ānanda, is sitting at the root of a certain tree not far from the pleasure grove.” Then King Udena’s concubines spoke thus to King Udena: “Sire, they say that our teacher ... not far from the pleasure grove. We, sire, want to see master Ānanda.”

¹ brahmadāṇḍa. ² As at DN ii.154. See BD 2.230, BD 2.257, BD 2.393, BD 3.36 for further references to Channa’s misdoings. It is not clear whether this penalty was imposed because he had taken the nun’s part in a dispute with monks, or because he had repeatedly reviled Sāriputta and Moggallāna, as appears from Dhpa ii.110–Dhp-a ii.112, where also other details are to be found. Cf. also Thag-a i.166.

³ Cf. AN ii.113 where it is said that this is destruction, vaḍḍha, in the *ariya*n discipline: when a monk is to be neither spoken to, exhorted nor instructed by the Truthfinder or by his fellow Brahma-farers. ⁴ ujjavanikāya, cf. Vin 4.65. ⁵ King of Kosambī. ⁶ Cf. Kd 21.1.13–Kd 21.1.14 with Ja ii.23–Ja ii.24 where Ānanda receives another thousand robes.

“Well then, do you see the recluse Ānanda.” Then King Udena’s concubines approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, they sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Ānanda gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted King Udena’s concubines with talk on dhamma as they were sitting down at a respectful distance. Then King Udena’s concubines, gladdened ... delighted by the venerable Ānanda with talk on dhamma, bestowed five hundred inner robes on the venerable Ānanda. Then King Udena’s concubines, pleased with the venerable Ānanda’s words, having thanked him, rising from their seats, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, having kept their right sides towards him, approached King Udena.

King Udena saw the concubines coming in the distance; seeing them he spoke thus to the concubines: “Did you see the recluse Ānanda?”

“We, sire, did see master Ānanda.”

“But did not you give anything to the recluse Ānanda?”

“We gave, sire, five hundred inner robes to master Ānanda.”

King Udena looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this recluse Ānanda accept so many robes? Will the recluse Ānanda set up trade in woven cloth or will he offer (them) for sale in a shop?”¹ Then King Udena approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the venerable Ānanda; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King Udena spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

“Did not our concubines come here, good² Ānanda?”

“Your concubines did come here, your majesty.”

“Did they not give anything to the honourable³ Ānanda?”

¹ paṅṅāhikasālaṃ pasāressati. Cf. Kd 20.10.4, āpaṇaṃ pasārenti. ² bho. ³ bhoto.

“They gave me five hundred inner robes, your majesty.”

“But what can you, honourable¹ Ānanda, do with so many robes?”

“I will share them, your majesty, with those monks whose robes are worn thin.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those old robes that are worn thin?”

“We will make them into upper coverings,² your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those upper coverings that are old?”

“We will make these into mattress coverings, your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those mattress coverings that are old?”

“We will make them into ground coverings, your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those ground coverings that are old?”

“We will make them into foot-wipers, your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those foot-wipers that are old?”

“We will make them into dusters, your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those dusters that are old?”

“Having torn them into shreds, your majesty, having kneaded them with mud, we will smear a plaster-flooring.”

Then King Udena, thinking: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, use everything in an orderly way and do not let things go to waste,”³ bestowed even another five hundred woven cloths on the venerable Ānanda. Therefore this was the first time that a thousand robes had accrued to the venerable Ānanda as an alms of robes.

Then the venerable Ānanda approached Ghosita’s monastery; having approached, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then the venerable Channa approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, he sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the venerable Channa as he was sitting down at a respectful distance: “The higher penalty has been enjoined on you, reverend Channa, by the Order.”

¹ bhavaṃ. ² uttaratharaṇa. ³ sabbeva yoniso upanenti na kulāvaṃ gamenti. Vin-a 1297 says the meaning of na kulāvaṃ gamenti is na koṭṭhake gopenti, they do not keep them in a storeroom.

“But what, honoured Ānanda, is the higher penalty?”

“You, reverend Channa, may say what you please to the monks, but you must neither be spoken to nor exhorted nor instructed by the monks.”

Saying: “Am I not, honoured Ānanda, destroyed because I may be neither spoken to nor exhorted nor instructed by the monks?” he fell down fainting at that very place. Then the venerable Channa, being troubled about the higher penalty, being ashamed of it, loathing it,¹ dwelling alone, aloof, zealous, ardent, self-resolute, having soon realised here and now by his own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, entering on it, abided in it and he understood: “Destroyed is (individual) birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, now there is no more of being this or that.” And so the venerable Channa became another of the perfected ones. Then the venerable Channa, having attained perfection, approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Honoured Ānanda, now revoke the higher penalty for me.”

“From the moment that you, reverend Channa, realised perfection, from that moment the higher penalty was revoked for you.”

Now because five hundred monks—not one more, not one less—were at this chanting of the discipline, this chanting of the discipline is in consequence called ‘that of the Five Hundred’.²

Told is the Eleventh Section: that on the Five Hundred

IN THIS SECTION ARE TWENTY-THREE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

¹ As at Vin 1.86f. ² Cf. Kd 22.2.9.

When the Self-enlightened One had attained nibbāna the elder called Kassapa addressed a group of monks on preserving what is true dhamma, /
On the high-road from Pāvā, what was declared by Subhadda, we will chant true dhamma, before what is not-dhamma shines forth, /
And he selected Ānanda also for the one in the five hundred less one spending the rains¹ in chanting dhamma and discipline in the best of resorts. /
He asked Upāli about discipline, the wise Ānanda about the Suttantas:
disciples of the Conqueror chanted the three Piṭakas. /
The lesser and minor, various, in conformity with and according to what was laid down, he did not ask, having stepped on, he caused to honour, and he did not request, / the going forth of women: out of faith they are offences of wrong-doing for me.
Purāṇa, and the higher penalty, the concubines with Udena, /
So many, and worn thin, upper coverings, mattresses, ground coverings, foot-wipers, dusters, kneading with mud, a thousand robes accrued for the first time to the one called Ānanda. / Threatened with the higher penalty he attained the fourfold truth.
The five hundred having mastered:
therefore it is called (the Chanting) of the Five Hundred.

Vin 2.2

Vin 2.2

¹ Text: vassanto, Sinhalese and Siamese: vasanto.

22. (RECITATION WITH) SEVEN HUNDRED (SATTASATA)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

Now at that time, a century after the Lord had attained nibbāna, monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī¹ promulgated ten points at Vesālī, saying:

1. “The practice concerning a horn for salt² is allowable;
2. the practice as to two finger-breadths is allowable;
3. the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ is allowable;
4. the practice concerning residences is allowable;
5. the practice concerning assent is allowable;
6. the practice concerning what is customary is allowable;
7. the practice concerning unchurned butter-milk is allowable;
8. it is allowable to drink unfermented toddy;
9. a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border is allowable;
10. gold and silver are allowable.”

Now at that time the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā,³ walking on tour among the Vajjis, arrived at Vesālī.⁴ Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, stayed there at Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Hall of the Gabled Roof. Now at that time the monks who were ¹ As at Kd 17.4.1. ² The terms of the ten points are explained below, Kd 22.1.10; Kd 22.2.8. ³ I take this parent to be his mother. This Yasa is mentioned at DN-a 525; Mbvs.96; Mbvs.iv.57. ⁴ This passage is quoted at Vin-a i.34.

Vajjis of Vesālī, having on that Observance day filled a bronze pot with water, having set it in the midst of the Order of monks, spoke thus to lay-followers of Vesālī who came: “Give, sirs, a *kahāpaṇa*¹ for the Order and half a *pāda*² and a stamped māsaka;³ there will be something to be done for the Order in respect of requisites.”

When they had spoken thus, the venerable Yasa,⁴ the son of Kākaṇḍakā, spoke thus to the lay-followers of Vesālī: “Do not, sirs, give kahāpaṇas and stamped māsakas to the Order: gold and silver are not allowable to recluses, sons of the Sakyans.⁵ The recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not consent (to accept) gold and silver, the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not receive gold and silver, the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not use jewels and refined gold,⁶ they have done with gold and silver.”⁷ Then the lay-followers of Vesālī, being spoken to thus by the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, nevertheless gave kahāpaṇas ... and stamped māsakas to the Order. Then the monks who were Vajjis or Vesālī, having towards the end of that night arranged those gold coins,⁸ distributed portions according to the number of monks.⁹ Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī spoke thus to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā:

“This portion of gold coins is for you, reverend Yasa.”

“I have no need of a portion of gold coins, sirs, I do not consent (to accept) gold coins.”

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, saying: “This reverend Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is reviling and abusing¹⁰ lay-followers

¹ See BD 1.29, n., and BD 1.71, n. 2. ² On pāda, see BD 1.71, n. 2. Although the reading above is aḍḍham pi pādam pi, as though aḍḍha and pāda were separate mediums of exchange, in taking the phrase as meaning “half a pāda” I am following Vv-a 77=Dhp-a iii.108 which gives the descending line: kahāpaṇa, aḍḍhapāda, māsaka. Vinaya Texts iii.387 takes aḍḍha as half a kahāpaṇa, but the justification for its being half a pāda is greater. ³ See BD 1.72, n. 1, and Vin-a 689 where it is said that some māsakas have figures stamped on them. ⁴ For the ten points and the Yasa episode see also Mahāvamsa iv.9ff., Dīpavamsa iv.45ff., Dīpavamsa v.23; Vin-a i.33ff. ⁵ Bu-NP 18. ⁶ suvaṇṇa. On this and hirañña see BD 1.28, n. ⁷ All these phrases occur at SN iv.325 as above; the last two are also used at MN ii.51 in respect of the potter. ⁸ hirañña. ⁹ bhikkhaggena. Cf. seyyaggena, vihāraggena and parivenaggena at Kd 16.11.3. ¹⁰ Both these terms are defined at Vin 4.309. They occur also at Vin 4.52. who are faithful and believing; come, let us carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation¹ for him,” carried out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā spoke thus to the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī:

“It was laid down by the Lord, your reverences, that a companion messenger should be given to a monk for whom a (formal) act of reconciliation has been carried out.² Your reverences, give me a monk as companion messenger.”

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, having agreed upon one monk, gave him to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, as a companion messenger. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, having entered Vesālī together with the monk who was his companion messenger, spoke thus to the lay-followers of Vesālī:

“It is said that I revile and abuse the venerable lay-followers³ who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma; in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, in that I speak of discipline as discipline.

“Friends, the Lord was once staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. There, friends, the Lord addressed the monks, saying: ‘Monks,⁴ there are these four stains of the moon and the sun, stained by which stains the moon and the sun burn not, shine not, blaze not. What are the four? Dense cloud, monks, is a stain of the moon and the sun, stained by which stain the moon and the sun ... blaze not. A snow-cloud⁵ ... Smoke and dust ... Rāhu,⁶ monks, is a stain of the moon and the sun, stained by which stain the moon and the sun burn not, shine not, blaze not. These, monks, are the four stains of the moon and the sun, stained by which stains the moon and the sun burn not, shine not, blaze not.

“Even so, monks, there are four stains of recluses and brahmins, stained by which stains some recluses and brahmins burn not, shine not, blaze not. What are the four? There are, monks, some recluses and brahmins who drink fermented liquor, who drink spirits,¹ abstaining not from drinking fermented liquor and spirits. This, monks, is the first stain of recluses and brahmins, stained by which stain some recluses and brahmins burn not, shine not, blaze not. And again, monks, some recluses and brahmins indulge in sexual intercourse,² abstaining not from sexual intercourse. This, monks, is the second stain ... And again, monks, some recluses and brahmins consent (to accept) gold and silver abstaining not from accepting gold and silver.³ This, monks, is the third stain ... And again, monks, some recluses and brahmins earn a living by a wrong mode of livelihood, abstaining not from a wrong mode of livelihood.⁴ This, monks, is the fourth stain, stained by which stain some recluses and brahmins ... blaze not. These, monks, are the four stains of recluses and brahmins, stained by which stains some recluses and brahmins burn not, shine not, blaze not.' Friends, the Lord said this; the Well-farer having said this, the Teacher further spoke thus:

¹ paṭisāraṇīyakamma. See Kd 11.18.5. ² Kd 11.22.2. ³ āyasmante upāsake. ⁴ As at AN ii.53. Cf. Mil 273. ⁵ mahikā; at AN ii.53, mahiyā. Vin-a 1297 says it is a snow-cloud (himavatāhākā) at the time of snow-fall. ⁶ He figures in the Indian myth of eclipses. See SN i.50, SN i.51 where the Moon and Sun devas were seized by Rāhu; they both invoked Gotama’s aid, and he told Rāhu to set the devas free.

“Some recluses⁵ and brahmins are stained
By lust and ill-will. Clothed in ignorance,
Beings delight in pleasure-giving shapes;
Liquor fermented and distilled they drink;
They follow sexual lust; by folly blinded
Some recluses and brahmins take gifts
Of gold and silver and live wrongfully.

“These are called “stains” by the Awakened One,
The kinsman of the Sun. Tainted by these
Some recluses and brahmins burn not,
They shine not, tarnished, dust-soiled, utter fools,

¹ See Bu-Pc 51. ² See Bu-Pj 1. ³ See Bu-NP 18, and DN i.5 ⁴ At DN i.9–DN i.12 many wrong modes of livelihood are enumerated. ⁵ I follow translation at GS ii.62–63, except that in the first line I have “stained” (Vinaya: parikkiliṭṭhā) instead of “snared” (Aṅguttara: paṭikkīṭṭhā), and in the last line I have “take on again-becoming” instead of “reap rebirth.”

Shrouded in darkness; slaves of craving they,
Led by the cord of craving, and they swell
The dreadful charnel-field¹ and take on again-becoming.’

“It is for speaking thus that it is said that I am reviling and abusing the venerable lay followers who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma, in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, and in that I speak of discipline as discipline.

“Friends, the Lord was once staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place. Now at that time,² friends, in the king’s private quarters this conversation arose among the king’s assembly as they were gathered together and sitting down: ‘Gold and silver are allowable for the recluses, sons of the Sakyans; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans consent (to accept) gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans receive gold and silver.’ Now at that time, friends, a village headman, Maṇicūḷaka, was sitting down in that assembly. Then, friends, Maṇicūḷaka, the village headman, spoke thus to that assembly: ‘Do not, masters, speak thus. Gold and silver are not allowable to recluses, sons of the Sakyans; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not consent (to accept) gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not receive gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not use gold and silver, they have done with gold and silver.’ And, friends, Maṇicūḷaka, the village headman, was able to convince that assembly. Then, friends, Maṇicūḷaka the village headman, having convinced that assembly approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Maṇicūḷaka the village headman, spoke thus to the Lord: ‘Now, Lord, in the king’s private quarters ...³ I was able, Lord, to convince that assembly. I

¹ vaḍḍhenti kaṭasim̐. Cf. Ud 6.8 icc’ ete ubho antā kaṭasivaḍḍhanā kaṭasiyo ditṭhī vaḍḍhenti; also Thig.502 kaṭasim̐ vaḍḍhente; and the line above, from “they swell” to the end, with Thag 456 which however for our ādiyanti (take on) reads ācinanti (accumulate). ² As at SN iv.325. ³ The whole is repeated in the text.

hope¹ that I, Lord, maintaining thus, am one who asserts (fairly) what has been affirmed, and am not misrepresenting the Lord by what is not fact, but am maintaining a doctrine which conforms to his doctrine, and that no one who is a fellow dhamma-man, a holder of (his) views, comes to a position incurring blame.’

“Certainly you, village headman, maintaining thus, are one who asserts (fairly) what I have affirmed, and are not misrepresenting me by what is not fact, but are maintaining a doctrine which conforms to my doctrine, and no one who is a fellow dhamma-man, a holder of (my) views, comes to a position incurring blame. For, village headman, gold and silver are not allowable to recluses, sons of the Sakyans; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not consent (to accept) gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not receive gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not use gold and silver, they have done with gold and silver. To whoever, village headman, gold and silver are allowable to him also are allowable the five strands of sense-pleasures; to whoever the five strands of sense-pleasures are allowable, certainly you may understand, village headman, (this to be) not the dhamma of recluses,² not the dhamma of sons of the Sakyans. Although I, village headman, spoke thus: Grass may be looked about for by one who needs grass; wood may be looked about for by one who needs wood; a wagon may be looked about for by one who needs a wagon; a man may be looked about for by one who needs a man³—yet I, village headman, have never said in any way that gold and silver may be consented to or looked about for.’ It is for speaking thus that it is said that I am reviling and abusing venerable lay-followers who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma, in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, in that I speak of discipline as discipline.

“Once, friends, when the Lord was in Rājagaha, as before, he objected in connection with Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, to gold and silver and laid down a rule of training.¹ It is for speaking thus that it is said that I am reviling and abusing venerable lay-followers who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma, in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, in that I speak of discipline as discipline.”

¹ This speech occurs in almost identical terms at Kd 6.31.4; see also SN iii.6, SN iv.51, SN iv.340, SN iv.381; AN i.161; cf. AN ii.31, AN iii.4, DN i.161. ² samañadhamma, recluses’ dhamma, mentioned also at AN iii.371. ³ The Mañicūla-sutta of SN iv.325–SN iv.327 stops here.

When he had spoken thus the lay-followers of Vesālī spoke thus to Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā: “Honoured sir, master Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is alone a recluse, a son of the Sakyans; these, one and all, are not recluses, not sons of the Sakyans. Honoured sir, let master Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, stay in Vesālī and we will make an effort in regard to the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick.”

Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, having convinced the lay-followers of Vesālī, went to a monastery together with the monk who was his companion messenger.

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī asked the monk who was the companion messenger, saying: “Your reverence, have the lay-followers of Vesālī been asked for forgiveness by Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā?”

“Your reverences, evil has been done to us; Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is alone regarded as² a recluse, a son of the Sakyans; we, one and all, are regarded as not recluses, not sons of the Sakyans.”

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, saying: “Your reverences, this Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, not agreed upon by us, has given information³ to householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension⁴ against him.” And these gathered together desirous of carrying out a (formal) act of suspension against him. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, having risen above the ground, reappeared at Kosambī. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, sent a messenger to the monks of Pāvā¹ and (to those) of the southern region of Avanti,² saying:

¹ See Bu-NP 18. ² kata, literally made. ³ pakāseti. Cf. Kd 17.3.2ff. ⁴ ukkhepaniyakamma. See Kd 11.25.

“Let the venerable ones come, we must attend to this legal question before what is not dhamma shines forth and dhamma is withheld, (before) what is not discipline shines forth and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble, (before) those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”³

Now at that time the venerable Sambhūta,⁴ a wearer of coarse hempen cloth,⁵ was staying on Ahogaṅgā mountain slope. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, approached Ahogaṅgā mountain slope and the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, spoke thus to the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth:

“Honoured sir, these monks, Vajjis of Vesālī, are promulgating ten points:⁶ the practice concerning a horn for salt is allowable; the practice as to two finger-breadths is allowable; the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ is allowable; the practice concerning residences is allowable; the practice concerning assent is allowable; the practice concerning what is customary is allowable; the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk is allowable; it is allowable to drink unfermented toddy; a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border is allowable; gold and silver are allowable. Come, honoured sir, we must attend to this legal question before what is not dhamma shines forth and dhamma is withheld, (before) what is not discipline shines forth and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble, (before) those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”

¹ Mentioned at Vin 1.253, and called there and above Pāṭheyyakā. See BD 4.351, n. Vin-a 1105 calls Pāṭheyyam (variant reading Pāveyyam) a kingdom to the west of Kosala, which will no doubt account for the “western country” of Vinaya Texts iii.394. ² See Vin 1.195ff. ³ As at Kd 11.1.1. ⁴ Verses at Thag 291–Thag 294. See Thag-a ii.122ff. Mentioned with Sālha, Revata, and Yasa as Ānanda’s pupils, Vin-a 34f. ⁵ sāṇavāsīn. On sāṇa see BD 2.143, n. 3. ⁶ As at Kd 22.1.1.

“Very well, your reverence,” the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, answered the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā in assent. Then as many as sixty monks of Pāvā, all forest-dwellers, all almsmen, all rag-robe wearers, all wearers of the three robes,¹ one and all men perfected,² gathered together on Ahogaṅgā mountain slope; and as many as eighty-eight monks of the southern region of Avantī, mostly forest-dwellers, mostly almsmen, mostly rag-robe wearers, mostly wearers of the three robes, and one and all men perfected, gathered together on Ahogaṅgā mountain slope.

Then as these monks who were elders were considering, it occurred to them: “Now, this legal question is hard and troublesome. How can we acquire a faction through which we could be stronger in regard to this legal question?” Now at that time the venerable Revata³ was staying in Soreyya. He had heard much, he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down, he was an expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the headings; wise, experienced, clever; conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training.⁴ Then it occurred to the monks who were elders:

“This venerable Revata is staying in Soreyya. He has heard much ... desirous of training. If we could acquire the venerable Revata for the faction, thus could we be stronger in regard to this legal question.”

Then the venerable Revata, through the condition of deva-like hearing which was purified, surpassing that of men, heard these monks who were elders as they were considering. And having heard them, it occurred to him: “This legal question is hard and troublesome, yet it is not suitable for me to hold back from a legal question like this. But these monks are coming now. I will get no comfort crowded up by them. Suppose that I should go away beforehand?’

¹ For references to these four ascetic practices see notes at BD 4.351. ² They are not called this at Vin 1.253. ³ See Mahāvamsa iv.57, Mahāvamsa iv.60; cf. Dīpavamsa iv.49, Vin-a i.33f. ⁴ Stock, as at Vin 1.127, Vin 2.8; cf. AN i.117, AN ii.147, AN iii.179.

Then the venerable Revata went from Soreyya to Saṃkassa. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Soreyya, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “The venerable Revata has gone to Saṃkassa.” Then the venerable Revata went from Saṃkasato Kaṇṇakujja. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Saṃkassa, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Kaṇṇakujja.” Then the venerable Revata went from Kaṇṇakujja to Udumbara. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Kaṇṇakujja, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Udumbara.” Then the venerable Revata went from Udumbara to Aggaḷapura. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Udumbara, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Aggaḷapura.” Then the venerable Revata went from Aggaḷapura to Sahajāti. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Aggaḷapura, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Sahajāti.” Then the monks who were elders met the venerable Revata at Sahajāti.

Then the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, spoke thus to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā: “Your reverence, this venerable Revata has heard much, he is one to whom the tradition has been handed down, he is an expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the headings; wise, experienced, clever; conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. If we were to ask the venerable Revata a question, the venerable Revata would be capable of spending a whole night over just the one question. But now the venerable Revata will call upon a monk who is a pupil and a plain-song repeater.¹ Do you, when that monk has completed the plain-song intonation, having approached the venerable Revata, ask him about these ten points.”

¹ sarabhāṇaka. See note above, BD 5.146.

“Very well, honoured sir,” the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, answered the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, in assent. Then the venerable Revata called upon the monk who was a pupil and a plain-song repeater. Then when that monk had completed the plain-song intonation, the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, approached the venerable Revata; having approached, having greeted the venerable Revata, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, spoke thus to the venerable Revata:

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning a horn for salt allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning a horn for salt?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to carry about salt in a horn, thinking, ‘I will enjoy whatever may be unsalted?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning two finger-breadths allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning two finger-breadths?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to eat a meal at the wrong time when the shadow has passed beyond two finger-breadths?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning ‘among the villages?’”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking, ‘I will go now among the villages,’ having eaten, being satisfied, to eat a meal that is not left over?”¹

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning residences allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning residences?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for several residences belonging to the same boundary to carry out various Observances?”

¹ See Bu-Pc 35, and BD 2.328.

“Your reverences, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning assent allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning assent?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for an incomplete Order to carry out a (formal) act, thinking, ‘We will advise monks who arrive?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning what is customary¹ allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning what is customary?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking, ‘This is habitually done² by my preceptor, this is habitually done by my teacher,’ to conduct oneself according to that?”

“Your reverence, the practice concerning what is customary is sometimes allowable, sometimes not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning unchurned buttermilk?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, having eaten, being satisfied, to drink whatever is milk that is not left over but which has passed the stage of being milk (although) it has not arrived at the stage of being curds?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink unfermented toddy?”

“What, your reverence, is this toddy?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink whatever is fermented liquor³ (but) which has not fermented and has not arrived at the stage of being strong drink?”⁴

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

¹ āciṇṇakappa. Cf. Vin 1.79 (Kd 1.51.1). Dīpavaṃsa 4.47, Dīpavaṃsa 5.18. ² ajjhāciṇṇa, as at Kd 14.5.1. ³ surā. Cf. Bu-Pc 51. ⁴ majja. See BD 2.385, n. 1.

“Honoured sir, is a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border¹ allowable?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, are gold and silver allowable?”

“Your reverence, they are not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, these monks who are Vajjis of Vesālī are promulgating these ten points in Vesālī. Come, honoured sir, we must attend to this legal question before what is not dhamma shines forth and dhamma is withheld, (before) what is not discipline shines forth and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble (before) those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”

“Very well, your reverence,” the venerable Revata answered the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā in assent.

The First Portion for Repeating

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

The monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī heard: “They say that Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is willing to attend to this legal question, is looking about for a faction, and they say that he is acquiring a faction.” Then it occurred to the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī: “This legal question is hard and troublesome. How could we acquire a faction through which we could be stronger in regard to this legal question?” Then it occurred to the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī: “This venerable Revata is one who has heard much, one to whom the tradition has been handed down, he is expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the headings; he is wise, experienced, clever; conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. If we could acquire the venerable Revata for the faction, thus could we be stronger in regard to this legal question.”

¹ Cf. definition at Vin 3.232, Vin 4.123, Vin 4.171. See BD 2.87, n. 5.

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī prepared abundant requisites for recluses—bowls and robes and pieces of cloth to sit upon and needle-cases and waistbands and strainers and regulation water-pots. Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, taking these requisites of recluses, went in a boat upstream¹ to Sahājati; having disembarked from the boat, they participated in a meal at the root of a certain tree.

Then as the venerable Sālha² was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Which now are the speakers of dhamma—the monks from the East or those from Pāvā?” Then as the venerable Sālha was considering dhamma and discipline it occurred to him: “The monks from the East are not speakers of dhamma; the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma.” Then a certain devatā of the Pure Abodes, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind of the venerable Sālha, as a strong man might stretch out his bent back arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so, vanishing from the devas of the Pure Abodes, did she appear before the venerable Sālha. Then that devatā spoke thus to the venerable Sālha: “It is right, honoured Sālha, the monks from the East are not speakers of dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma. Well then, revered Sālha, stand firm according to dhamma.”³

“Both formerly and now I, devatā, have stood firm according to dhamma. Nevertheless I am not making known my views until I may be agreed upon in regard to this legal question.”

Then those monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, taking those requisites for recluses, approached the venerable Revata; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Revata: “Honoured sir, let the Order accept these requisites for recluses—bowls and robes and pieces of cloth to sit upon and needle-cases and waistbands and strainers and regulation water-pots.”

He said: “No, your reverences, I am complete as to the three robes” (for) he did not want to accept. Now at that time a monk named Uttara, of twenty years' standing was the venerable Revata's attendant. Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī approached the venerable Uttara; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Uttara: "Let the venerable Uttara accept these requisites for recluses—bowls and ... regulation water-pots."

¹ ujjavimsu. ² Ānanda’s pupil, Vin-a 34–Vin-a 35. ³ Or, according to the rule, yathādharmo tathā tiṭṭhāhi. Cf. Mahāvamsa iv.29 dhamme tiṭṭha, stand firm in dhamma.

He said: "No, your reverences, I am complete as to the three robes," (for) he did not want to accept. They said: "Reverend Uttara, people used to bring requisites for recluses to the Lord. If the Lord accepted them, they were glad; but if the Lord did not accept them, they brought them to the venerable Ānanda, saying: 'Honoured sir, let the elder accept these requisites for recluses, thus will this (gift) be as though accepted by the Lord.' Let the venerable Uttara accept these requisites of recluses, thus will this (gift) be as though accepted by the elder."

Then the venerable Uttara, being pressed by the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, took one robe, saying: "Let the reverend ones tell me what they have need of."

"Let the venerable Uttara say this much to the elder: 'Honoured sir, let the elder say this much in the midst of the Order: Awakened Ones, Lords, arise in the Eastern districts, the monks from the East are speakers of dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of what is not dhamma'."

"Very well, your reverences," and the venerable Uttara, having answered the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī in assent, approached the venerable Revata; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Revata: "Honoured sir, let the elder say this much in the midst of the Order: Awakened Ones, Lords, arise in the Eastern districts, the monks from the East are speakers of dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of what is not dhamma."

Saying: "You, monk, are inciting me to what is not dhamma," the elder dismissed¹ the venerable Uttara. Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī spoke thus to the venerable Uttara: "What, reverend ¹ paṇāmesi. Cf. Kd 1.27.2 where this word is used of the formal dismissal by a preceptor of the one who shares his cell. See also Mahāvamsa iv.30.

Uttara, did the elder say?”

“Evil has been done to us, your reverences. Saying, ‘You, monk, are inciting me to what is not dhamma,’ the elder dismissed me.”

“Are not you, your reverence, a senior of twenty years’ standing?”

“Yes, your reverences.”

“Then we shall take up guidance under (you as) teacher.”¹

Then the Order assembled wishing to investigate that legal question. The venerable Revata informed the Order, saying: “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. If we were to settle that legal question here, it might be that the monks who had taken it up originally might open it up for a further (formal) act.² If it seems right to the Order, let the Order settle this legal question wherever this legal question arose.”

Then the monks who were elders went to Vesālī willing to investigate that legal question. Now at that time Sabbakāmin³ was the name of an elder of the Order, (the oldest) on earth;⁴ it was a hundred and twenty years since his ordination; he had shared the cell of the venerable Ānanda, and he was staying at Vesālī. Then the venerable Revata spoke thus to the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth: “I, your reverence, am going up to the dwelling-place where the venerable Sabbākamin is staying. Do you, having gone up early to the venerable Sabbākamin, ask him about these ten points.”

“Very well, honoured sir,” the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, answered the venerable Revata in assent. Then the venerable Revata went up to that dwelling place where the venerable Sabbakāmin was staying. A lodging was made ready for the venerable Sabbakāmin in an inner room, and one for the venerable

¹ garunissaya. Garu no doubt = guru. On nissaya see Kd 1.73. ² See Bu-Pc 63.

³ Psalms of the Bretheren p.226, n. 1 suggests that the Sabbakāma of the Theragāthā is the same as the Sabbakāmin of Vinaya Dictionary of Pali Proper Names identifies the two. Called Sabbakāmin at Vin-a i.34. He took a vow to purify the teaching of some Buddha in a birth during the time of Padumuttara Buddha. ⁴ pathavyā saṅghathero.

Revata on the veranda of the inner room. Then the venerable Revata, thinking: “I This elder is old, but he is not lying down,” did not lie down to sleep. The venerable Sabbakāmin, thinking: “This incoming monk is tired, but he is not lying down,” did not lie down to sleep.

Then at the end of the night towards dawn, the venerable Sabbakāmin spoke thus to the venerable Revata: “Because of what abiding do you, dear,¹ abide now in the fullness thereof?”

“Because of abiding in loving-kindness, do I, honoured sir, abide now in the fullness thereof.”

“They say that you, dear, because of abiding in friendship² now abide in the fullness thereof. This abiding in friendship, beloved, this is loving-kindness.”

“Formerly, honoured sir, when I was a householder loving-kindness was practised by me, and because of that abiding in loving-kindness I now abide in the fullness thereof, and moreover perfection was attained by me long ago. Honoured sir, because of what abiding does the elder now abide in the fullness thereof?”

“Because of abiding in (the concept of) emptiness³ do I, beloved, now abide in the fullness thereof.”

“They say that the elder, honoured sir, because of the abiding of great men⁴ now abides in the fullness thereof. This abiding of great men, honoured sir, this is (the concept of) emptiness.”⁵

¹ bhummi, a term of affection, says Vin-a 1298. ² kullaka. Vin-a 1298 explains by uttāna, stretched; clear. Kullaka is probably derived from kaulya = Pali kulla, belonging to the family, and possibly meaning that loving-kindness has been extended to others and that they have been suffused with his loving-kindness of mind.

³ suññatāvihāra. Cf. MN iii.104, MN iii.294. MN-a v.105 explains as abiding in the attainment of the fruit of emptiness—or phala-samāpatti may mean “sustained fruition”; therefore “as abiding in the sustained fruition of emptiness.” On suññatā see especially Buddhist Psychological Ethics, p. 91, n. 2; Atthasālinī 221–Atthasālinī 225; Kv iii.2. At Atthasālinī 221 it is said that suññatā is applied to the purification formula, that it is a name of the transcendental Way, and that when one sees the sankhāras as “void” of self this insight is called suññatā. “Voidness” or “Emptiness” is the usual translation of suññatā, and must remain until something better is found.

⁴ mahāpurisavihāra. Cf. MN iii.294. MN-a v.106 explains as the abiding of great men: buddhas, individual buddhas, tathāgatas and great disciples. ⁵ This phrase occurs at MN iii.294.

“Formerly, beloved, when I was a householder emptiness was practised by me, and because of that abiding in emptiness I now abide in the fullness thereof, and moreover perfection was attained by me long ago.”

Then¹ this chance talk of the monks who were elders was interrupted, because the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, arrived there. Then the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, approached the venerable Sabbakāmin; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sabbakāmin, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, spoke thus to the venerable Sabbakāmin:

“Honoured sir, these monks who are Vajjis of Vesālī are promulgating ten points: the practice concerning a horn for salt is allowable ... gold and silver are allowable. Honoured sir, much dhamma, and discipline has been mastered² by the elder at the feet³ of a preceptor. As, honoured sir, the elder was considering dhamma and discipline, what occurred to him? Who are the speakers of dhamma—the monks from the East or those of Pāvā?”

“By you too, your reverence, has much dhamma and discipline been mastered at the feet of a preceptor. As you, your reverence, were considering dhamma and discipline, what occurred to you? Who are the speakers of dhamma—the monks from the East or those of Pāvā?”

“As I, honoured sir, was considering dhamma and discipline, this occurred to me: ‘the monks from the East are speakers of what is not dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma.’ Nevertheless I am not making known my views until I am agreed upon in regard to this legal question.”

“As I too, your reverence, was considering dhamma and discipline, this occurred to me: the monks from the East are speakers of what is not dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma. Nevertheless I am not making known my views until I am agreed upon in regard to this legal question.”

¹ carahi, as at Vin 2.292. ² As at Kd 21.1.2. ³ mūle.

22.2.7

Then the Order assembled, willing to investigate that legal question. But while they were investigating that legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. Then the venerable Revata informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may settle this legal question by means of a referendum.”¹ He selected four monks from the East, four monks from Pāvā—of the Eastern monks the venerable Sabbakāmin and the venerable Sālha and the venerable Khujjasobhita² and the venerable Vāsabhagāmika; of the monks from Pāvā the venerable Revata and the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, and the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, and the venerable Sumana.³ Then the venerable Revata informed the Order, saying:

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question ... was the meaning clear. The Order is agreeing upon the four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. If the agreement upon the four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā to settle this legal question by means of a referendum is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā are agreed upon by the Order to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

¹ Cf. Kd 14.14.19 where the proceeding to be used in such an emergency as arose and is recorded in subsequent sentence above, is laid down. ² Probably not to be identified with the thera of the same name at Thag 234, as perhaps suggested at Mahāvamsa iv.57. ³ Names given at Vin-a i.34–Vin-a i.35; but there classified by reason of their being cell-sharers of Ānanda or Anuruddha. Cf. Mahāvamsa iv.47–Mahāvamsa iv.49.

BD 5.4

Now at that time Ajita was the name of a monk of ten years' standing; he was a reciter of the Pātimokkha for the Order. Then the Order further agreed upon the venerable Ajita as appointer of seats for the monks who were elders.¹ Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “Now where should we settle this legal question?” Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “This Vālika monastery² is pleasing, with little noise, with little disturbance. Suppose that we should settle this legal question in Vālika monastery?” Then the monks who were elders went to Vālika monastery, willing to investigate that legal question.

Vin 2.3

Then the venerable Revata informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I can ask the venerable Sabbakāmin about discipline.” Then the venerable Sabbakāmin informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, questioned about discipline by the venerable Revata, can answer.” Then the venerable Revata spoke thus to the venerable Sabbakāmin:

Kd 22.2

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning a horn for salt allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning a horn for salt?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to carry about salt in a horn, thinking: ‘I will enjoy whatever may be unsalted?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“In Sāvattihī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”³

¹ Elders were allowed to sit down while the Pātimokkha was being recited. ² See also Mahāvamsa iv.50; but Dīpavamsa v.29 says the Ten Points were settled at the Gabled Hall (Vesāli). ³ Bu-Pc 38.

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating what has been stored.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This first point, investigated by the Order, this is a point that is against dhamma, against discipline, not of the Teacher’s instruction. This is the first (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning two finger-breadths allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning two finger-breadths?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to eat a meal at the wrong time if the shadow has passed beyond two finger-breadths?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Rājagaha, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating at the wrong time.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This second point ... This is the second (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ allowable?”

What, your reverence, is this practice concerning ‘among the villages’?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking: ‘I will go now among the villages,’ having eaten, being satisfied, to eat a meal that is not left over?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Sāvattihī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”²

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating what is not left over.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This third point ... This is the third (voting-) ticket that I cast.

¹ Bu-Pc 37. ² Bu-Pc 35.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning residences allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning residences?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for several residences belonging to the same boundary to carry out various Observances?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“In Rājagaha, in what is connected with the Observance.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

An offence of wrong-doing for going beyond discipline.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This fourth point ... This is the fourth (voting-) ticket that I cast.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning assent allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is the practice concerning assent?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for an incomplete Order to carry out a (formal) act, thinking: ‘We will advise monks who arrive?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“In a matter of discipline on things pertaining to (the monks of) Campā.”²

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of wrong-doing for going beyond discipline.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This fifth point ... This is the fifth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning what is customary allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning what is customary?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking: ‘This is what is habitually done by my preceptor, this is what is habitually done by my teacher,’ to conduct oneself according to that?”

“Your reverence, the practice concerning what is customary is sometimes allowable, sometimes not allowable.”

¹ Kd 2.8.3. Uposathasamīyutta; samīyutta here being used, as noted at Vinaya Texts iii.410, n. 2 for khandhaka, section. ² Kd 9.3.5. Campeyyake vinayavatthusmiri. Vin-a 1299 here explains that this matter of discipline is handed down in the Campeyyakkhandhaka.

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This sixth point ... This is the sixth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable having eaten, being satisfied, to drink whatever is milk that is not left over but which has passed the stage of being milk (although) it has not arrived at the stage of being curds?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Sāvattthī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating what was not left over.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This seventh point ... This is the seventh (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink unfermented toddy?”

“What, your reverence, is this unfermented toddy?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink whatever is fermented liquor, but which has not fermented and has not arrived at the stage of being strong drink?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Kosambī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”²

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for drinking fermented liquor and spirits.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This eighth point ... This is the eighth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border allowable?”

¹ Bu-Pc 35. ² Bu-Pc 51.

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Sāvattḥī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation involving cutting down.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This ninth point ... This is the ninth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, are gold and silver allowable?”

“Your reverence, they are not allowable.”

“Where were they objected to?”

“At Rājagaha, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”²

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for accepting gold and silver.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This tenth point, investigated by the Order, this is a matter that is against dhamma, against discipline, not of the Teacher’s instruction. This is the tenth (voting-) ticket that I cast. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These ten points, investigated by the Order, these are matters that are against dhamma, against discipline, not of the Teacher’s instruction.”

“This legal question, your reverence, is concluded, and being settled is well settled. Nevertheless you, your reverence, may also question me in the midst of the Order³ on these ten points in order to convince these monks.”⁴

So the venerable Revata also questioned the venerable Sabbakāmin in the midst of the Order on these ten points, and the venerable Sabbakāmin, being questioned, answered.

Now because⁵ seven hundred monks—not one less and not one more—were at this chanting of the discipline, this chanting of the discipline is called “that of the Seven Hundred.”⁶

Told is the Twelfth Section: that on the Seven Hundred.

¹ Bu-Pc 89. ² Bu-NP 18 ³ Not only, that is, before the special committee.

⁴ bhikkhūnaṃ saññattiyā; cf. Kd 14.14.26, Kd 17.4.1; also Kd 17.3.14. ⁵ Quoted at Vin-a i.34.

⁶ Cf. Kd 21.1.16, the Five Hundred. This second recital, that of the Seven Hundred, is also called the Recital of Yasatthera at AN-a ii.10 = MN-a iv.114.

IN THIS SECTION ARE TWENTY-FIVE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

Ten points, having filled, formal act, entered with a messenger, the four, and on gold (and silver) again¹ and Kosambī, the monks of Pāvā, /
The way to Soreyya, Saṃkāsa, Kaṇṇakujja, Udumbara, and Sahamjāti,² he called upon, he heard, “How could we?” / Bowl (and) they went in a boat upstream,³ he was in private,⁴ they used to bring this teacher (and) the Order and Vesālī, loving-kindness, the Order, referendum.

Told is the Lesser Division.⁵

¹ Oldenberg’s text and Siamese and Sinhalese editions read puna rūpañ ca. Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.330) antepurañ ca (see Kd 22.1.4), but I think it may be an abbreviation for jātarūparajata, the subject of Kd 22.1.4, Kd 22.1.5. ² Oldenberg’s text: Sahamjāti ca, majjhesi, assosi; Sinhalese edition: Aggaḷaṃ Sahajātāṃ ca assosi; Siamese edition: as Oldenberg’s text but reading Sahajātīm. Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.330) ajjhesi (in place of majjhesi). The verb in Kd 22.1.10 is ajjhesissati. ³ Oldenberg’s text: sa ujjī. Sinhalese edition ujjavī. ⁴ Oldenberg’s text: dūraho pi udā-massa / dārukaṃ, saṅgho; Sinhalese and Siamese editions: raho’ si upanām’ āyam garusaṅgho. ⁵ Here ends Oldenberg’s Vol. II.